An Advertisement to the Reader concerning this large and exact Table, much wanted and desired in the First and Second, and now annexed to the Third and Fourth Impression of this Book.

HOW well it is observed, That Humane Industry cannot begin and finish any thing at one and the same time, this famous Book may be an instance; whose first Edition was but the Monogram, and rude draught, to a more exact Composure; the second adding much Matter and Method to the first; and the third and fourth adding Matter, Method, and a most exact and full Table of both, to the second; containing all the Provinces, Kingdoms, States, Principalities, Continents, Isles, Promontories, Isthmus's, Seas, Rivers, Havens, Mirt-Towns, Cities, Strong-holds, with their Longitudes, Latitudes, Situations, Plantations, Inhabitants, Ancient and Modern Names; and the Book and Page where they are satisfactorily discoursed of.

A Table (that notwithstanding every Methodical Book, such as this is, its own Index: Every great Memory, like that of Cæsar, carrieth a Table of all Books, in his Brain; and every hopeful Student makes his own Table to all Classical Authors) that carrieth with it its own Commendation. 1. To those that have not time to read Books, but Indexes. 2. To those that have not patience to go through the whole Body, and yet curiosity to observe the Remarkable parts of Geography. 3. To those that would recollect what they have forgotten of their reading. 4. To those that upon any emergent occasion, would see the Situation, Rivers, Havens, Strong-holds, Garrisons, Longitudes, Latitudes, Commodities, Products, Curiosities, Inhabitants, Genius, Condition, and History of any place in the World. 5. To those that read any Ancient or Modern Histories, or other Authors, and would be satisfied in the Scene of the Actions they read of, and the situation of the places there mentioned. 6. To those that aiming at exactness this way, would compare all the Ancient and Modern Geographers. And 7. To all the Perusers of this Book that complained of the intolerable defects of former Tables and Indexes; of which number, the Learned Compiler of this Table, who drew it up for his own satisfaction, and publisheth it for the Publick, is one who wisheth others as much benefit in the easie way of Perusing it, as he had in the more toilsome way of Collecting it.

The Matter added to this Impression, is much; and all under the Author's own hand, not long before he died; putting to it (as he said truly to his Friend that was with him in the perusal of it) his last band.

T O T H E R E A D E R,

IT is a great complaint with many, That they want time, either to undertake great matters, or to accomplish those they have undertaken: Whereas it is more truly affirmed by Seneca, that we do not so much want, as waste it: Non parum temporis habemus, sed multum perdimus, as that Author hath it. We trifle out too much of our precious time, as he well observeth, Aut male agendo, aut nihil agendo, aut aliud agendo; either in doing ill, or nothing, or else things impertinent: and then cry out, that we want things convenient to perform those duties which are expected from us in our several places. Nor have we only time enough to spend, but some time to spare; some privacies and retreats from business; some breathing fits from the affairs of our Vocations: and even of them (those times of leisure and recess) we are to render an account, in Cato's judgment: Otti reddendam rationem judicabat Cato, as we read in Tullie. In which account, as all men generally are concerned, so am I interested therein as much as any. For being, by the unhappiness of my Destiny, or the infelicity of the Times, deprived of my Preferences, and divested of my Ministerial Function, (as to the ordinary and publick exercise thereof) I cannot chuse but say, I have leisure enough; the opportunity of spending more idle hours (if I were so minded) than I ever expected or desired. And though, perhaps, I could have spent those times of leisure which the change of my affairs hath given me, with greater benefit to my self, and more to the advantage of my private fortunes: yet that of Cato did so over-balance me, that I was willing to do somewhat which might witness to ensuing times, how I had passed away those hours, and employed that leisure. And when I was considering of some particulars within the compass of my power, and answerable to that small stock of Books which I had recruited, (mine own being taken from me, and disposed of, contrary unto publick Order) I was requested by some friends, of no common quality, to review my Geography; to make it more compleat and useful to an English Reader: my vacancy from business, used by them as an Argument to induce me to it. A motion looked on, when first made, with neglect enough; my desuetude from those younger Studies, my great want of Books, the sad complexion of the times, and the unhandsom entertainment which my Endeavors for the Publick had lately met with, seeming sufficient to dissuade me from the Undertaking. Little encouragement, God wot, to write Books for others, when I could not be permitted to enjoy my own; or to employ my self in order to a publick service, when not alone my private Fortunes, but the publick Patrimony of the Church, was destroyed and dissipated. But afterwards, being pressed unto it by some Members of Parliament, whom I found loth to be denied, and by some others of great Rank, but such different Interesses, that I wondered how they could all center upon the same Proposal: I thought it, at the last, a more Christian duty, to satisfy the honest desires of so many men, than to sacrifice any longer to my own privacy and retiredness, to which I had intended to devote my self. So I resolved to venture on it, though well I saw that my condition in so doing might be resembled unto that of the Israelites in the Land of Egypt; of whom the Task-masters did expect the full tale of Bricks, and yet denied them their accustomed allowance of straw and stubble. My case, in this, not much unlike unto that of the Duke of Alva; Who being under the displeasure of the King of Spain, in quality of a Prisoner, without the least assurance of recovering the King's favour, or his own liberty; and yet employed, in that Conjunction, for the conquest of Portugal, was wont to say, That he was sent to Conquer Kingdoms with his Fetters on.

And here I cannot but remember a pretty accident which befel me in the Month of January, An. 1640, at what time it had been my ill fortune to suffer under some misapprehensions which had been entertain'd against me, and to be before the Committee for the Courts of Justice, on the complaint of Mr. Pryane, then newly return'd from his confinement, and in great credit with the Vulgar. Heard by them; I confess, I was, with a great deal of ingenuous patience; but most despitigfully reviled and persecuted with excessive both noise and violence, by such as thronged about the doors of that Committee, to expect the issue: it being as natural to many weak and inconsiderate men, though on different ends, by Wicliff, and some others in the Ages since; who have driven on their private projects under the colour and pretence of a Reformation. Episcopacy, as it was coeval with the Church of CHRIST, so was it the best and strongest Buttreffs in that Sacred Building. Thewalking or subverting of which Primitive Order, did either prostitute the Church to the Lust and Tyranny of that proud Ullurper, or expose the Patrimony thereof unto spoyl and rapine; or finally, subject it to the Anarchy and licentiousness of Heterodoxies, and confused Opinions. But I fear I have digressed too far in this speculation.

As a Geographer, I have been punctual and exact in giving unto every Province its peculiar bounds, in laying out their several Land-marks, tracing the course of most of the principal Rivers, and setting forth the situation and estate of the chiefest Towns, and did once think of beautifying the Work with as many Maps as the several States and Kingdoms which are here described. But upon further consideration, how much it would encrease the Book both in bulk and price, and consequently make it of less publick use than I did intend it, I laid by those thoughts, and rested satisfied with the adding of four Maps for the four parts of the World: by which the Reader may discern how each Country lies unto the other, though he find not each particular Province, and much less all the Towns and Cities which are here expressed: and on the other side, may meet with many Towns of inferior note, which are here omitted. And herein I have took some pains in searching out the first Inhabitants of each several Country, as far as I could see by the light of Letters, or go by probable Conjectures, in finding out the place of such ancient Cities as are now decayed, not easily visible in their Ruins; and adding to such Cities as are now in being (if of any Antiquity) their Original Names. As this was necessary to the understanding of the Histories of those elder times, as the knowledge of the present names is to the more delightful reading of our Modern Stories. And though I have not pretermitted any Town of note, fit to be specified and inscribed on in a Work of this nature; yet would I not have the Reader look for such a punctual enumeration and description of them, as he may meet withal in those who have written the Choreography of some Country only; or think himself disappointed in his expectation, if he find not here the situation and affairs of each Town of War, or the Quartering place of every Company or Troop of Soldiers, which are presented to him in the Weekly News-books. In all Countries there are many places which either by the advantage of their situation, or some present exigency of affairs, are fortified and made Towns of War; or otherwise remarkable for some signal Battel, in these late bustles and commotions of the Christian World; of which no notice hath been taken in former times, and consequently not within the compass of this Discourse: and yet perhaps may grow as famous and considerable in the times to come, as many of the mightier Cities now decayed and ruined. He that shall think the Work imperfect (though I confess it, to be nothing but imperfections) for some deficiencies in this kind, may be likened to the Country-fellow in Arifophanes, (if my memory fail not) who picked a great quarrel with the Map, because he could not find where his own Farm stood. And such a Country customer I did meet with once, a servant of my elder brother's, sent by him with some Horses to Oxon, to bring me and a friend of mine unto his Houle. Who having lost his way, as we passed through the Forrest of Witchwood, and not able to recover any beaten Track, did very earnestly intreat me to lead the way, till I had brought him past the Woods, to the open Fields. Which when I had refused to do, as I had good reason; alledging, that I never had been there before, and therefore that I could not tell which way to lead him: That's strange, said he; I have heard my old Master, your Father, say, That you made a Book of all the World's; and cannot you find your way out of the wood? Which being spoken out of an honest simplicity, not out of any pretence to wit, or the least thought of putting a blunt jest upon me, occasioned a great deal of merriment for a long time after: but I hope to meet with no such Readers. The greatness of the Bulk, and consequently of the Price, makes me somewhat confident, that none but men of Judgment and Understanding will peruse these Papers: and such as they, will look for no more particulars, than the nature of a general Discourse will fitly bear. Perfection and Exactness is to be expected in each kind of Science, as is observed by Aristotle in his second Book of his Ethicks, ἐν ὅσῳ ἡ περὶ ἀρετῆς, πῶς ἐκείνηται, as far forth as the condition of the Argument may be capable of it. And so much if I have attained unto, is all which can with reason be expected from me. To look for more, were as improper and absurd, (in the words of Aristotle) as for an Artist to expect Tropes of Rhetoric from a Mathematician, or Demonstrations from an Orator.

Lastly, as an Historian, I have traced the affairs of each several Country, from the first Inhabitants thereof, (such as the Latines call, Aborigines, and the Greeks, Ἀυτοχθόνες) till these later times. Which that I might be sure to do on a good foundation, I have took more than common care, to settle all the first Adventurers (after the proud attempt at Babel) in their right Plantations; and that too in the way of an Introduction, that I might the better know where I was to find them, and to go on with their Affairs with with the less disturbance. The rest of their Occurrences, I have summed into so short an Abstract, as may be useful to the Learned, in the way of a Remembrancer; to the less-knowing man in the way of a Tutor: Brevity, in this kind, I have much endeavoured; but so as to avoid all obscurity also. Nor have I only kept my self to the story of Kingdoms, or the greater Signeuries, Estates or Nations, which are or have been of the greatest consideration in the sway of the World: but looked on the Estates of such Dukes, Earls, and inferior Princes, as in their times have had the Government of those parts which gave Title to them; whose Actions and Successions are distinctly specified, and all such Alterations noted, as have hapned either in the ruin of such Estates, or the transferring of them from one Houle to another. The Catalogues and Successions of which Royal and Illustrious Families, I have drawn down unto the year 1648. towards the expiring of which year, I began to set my self upon this Employment. And there I fix, as on the top of some dreadful Precipice, which one can neither venture down without danger, nor look down without horror. Some things there are of such a nature, that either to speak of them, or to hold our peace, is alike unsafe. In such a case it is best to keep at a distance. For though truth be the best Mistress which a man can serve, (Magis amica veritas, said the great Philosopher) yet it is well observed withal, that if a man follow her too close at the heels, she may chance to kick out his teeth for his labour.

In this regard, as also out of that compassionate affection which a true Englishman ought to bear his native Country, although in my approaches towards these present times, I have took notice, in some other places, of such battles, sieges, and successes, in the chances of War, as have hapned in these later days: I have forbore to take the least notice of those Tragedies of Blood and Death which have been lately acted on the Stage of England. I cannot but with grief confess, that I might find variety of this kind enough, in the late Wars amongst our selves: in which there have been more pitched-fields, more strong pieces taken, more notable travellies of State, and exploits of War, than all the World can parallel in an equal time. But I have too much English bowels to please my self in the recital, or to look back on those unfortunate adventures, which I should rather chuse to cover with the Ait of Oblivion, or bury in the grave of perpetual silence. How gladly I could have recorded these exploits of War, had they been exercised on a Subject more proper for them, my willingness to take notice, upon all occasions, of the Actions and Achievements of the English Nation, will bear witness for me. But the employing of that Valour against our selves, as if not to be conquered, but by one another, strikes such horror in me, that I cannot think thereof, without much afflictment; nor intimate thus much of it, without great reluctancies. I fear it may be said too truly of our late embroilments, as the Historian of the Civil-Wars betwixt Cæsar and Pompey, Causa hujus Belli eadem que omnium nimia felicitas; that they were principally occasioned by a surfeit of too much felicity. But if we were grown weary of our own prosperities; and that prayer and passage in the publick Liturgy (Give peace in our time, O Lord) did not relish with us: How happy had it been if we had found some other Field to have tried our Valour in? And made some Foreign Country that Aeldama, which so fatally was made at home; The dishonour which we suffered in the Isle of Rhee, when beat thence ingloriously by the French, the forcible and long detention of the Palatinate, by the power of the Spaniard; the barbarous Butchery at Amboyna; and the beating up of the Spanish Fleet within the protection of our Castles, by those of Holland; the infolencies of the Scots; and the Rebellions of the Irish, might well have stirred some indignation in an English breast. And had we fought upon those scores, or on none but them, our Victories had deserved the honour of a solemn Triumph, denied by the old Roman Laws to a Civil-war: But our infelicity (as it seems) was like that of Rome, in following those unnatural Wars with such animosities; when the unrevenged death of Cæssar, the blood of so many thousand of their slaughtered Citizens, and the shameful loss of so many of the Roman Ensigns, should rather have invited them to the conquest of the Parthian Empire. Of which, thus feelingly the Poet

*Cumque superba foret Babylon ipsianda Trophaus,
Bella quæ plebsuit, nullo habitura Triumphos,*

(constrain'd
And when proud Babylon should have been
To give us back our Ensigns lately gain'd:
We rather chose such Quarrels to pursue,
For which no Triumph could be justly due.

But such is the condition and vicissitude of human affairs, that there is nothing permanent, and much less of certainty. The greatest Monarchies of the World, the Babylonian, Persian, Grecian, Roman, have all had their peries, nothing remaining of them now, but the name and memory. And what is now become of those mighty Cities of the East, Ninive, Babylon, Ecbatana, Susa, with the rest mentioned in the Scriptures, and in Classical Authors? Are not their very Ruines now become invisible? Where are the puissant Families of the Achæmenides of Persia, the Selæucæ of Syria, the Pharaohs and Ptolomies of Egypt, the Cæsars of Italy, the Merovingians and Carolingians of the Realm of France, and the Plantagenets of

of England? Are they not all extinct and gone, not to be found but by the benefit of story, and some ancient Monuments? And if it be so, as it is, with the greatest Monarchies, the most mighty Cities of the World, we must not think that smaller Kingdoms and Estates can either be so evenly balanced, or so surely founded, as not to be obnoxious also to the same vicissitudes. And, being that saying of Opratus is most undoubtedly true, Ecclesia est in Republica, that the Church is but a part of the Commonwealth, we must not hope to find it in a better posture than the Civil-State in which it is, and under the protection whereof it subsists and flourisheth. The Church must needs miscarry in the ruin of the Civil-State; and may miscarry, many times, although the Civil-State receive no such alterations. Compared, for this reason, to the Moon, by the ancient Fathers who had observed her in her Prime, in her Encraces, and her Full; and finally, had not only seen her in the Wane also, but sometimes too under some horrible Eclipses. Which various condition of the Militant Church, the Scriptures and succeeding Stories have set forth so fully, that there need no better nor no clearer demonstrations of it. The Ark of God taken by the Philistines, the Temple destroyed by the Chaldeans, and profaned by the Syrians, the Apostacy of ten Tribes at once from the Law of their God, and the extermination of the other two in a short time after, abundantly declare the frail condition and estate of the Jewish Church. And find we not the same for the Christian also, in the removing of the Candlestick from the Asian Churches; and making them, together with those of Greece and Egypt, and all the flourishing Churches in the East and South, to languish and decay remedilessly under the merciless encroachments of the Turks and Saracens? He must be more than blind that sees not, more savage than those mercies men, that grieves not at their sad condition: but a dead Member, at the most, of Christ's Mystical Body, who feels not in himself the lussing of those wretched Christians.

If now we look into the causes of that desolation which hath hapned in the Civil-State of those mighty Empires; to what can we impute it, but their crying sins? the pride of the Babylonians, the Efficacy of the Perfians, the Luxury of the Greeks; and such an aggregation of Vices amongst the Romans (or Western Christians) before the breaking in of the barbarous Nations, that they were grown a scandal unto Christianity. In nobis paritur Christus opprobrium, in nobis paritur lex Christiana maledictio, as the devout Salvian then complained. Thus also in reference to the Church, did not the Idolaters of the ten Tribes hasten in the Assyrians? The shedding of the Blood of so many Prophets by the other two, as much accelerate the coming in of the Chaldeans first, and the Romans afterwards? Do we not find the Arianism of the Eastern Churches to usher in the inundation of the Saracens; the Donatism of the South, to have set open a wide Door to let in the Vandals? Did not the Saxons follow on the heels of Pelagianism, as soon almost as entertained amongst the Britains? If so, as most undoubtedly it was in the days of old, why should we think but that the Superstitions and Corruptions of the Church of Rome, the Sacrilege and Faction of the Churches of the Reformation shall at the last receive the like Retribution? Or that the Divine Justice is so fast asleep, that our sins must cry as loud as the Priests of Isaac did unto their god, before it be awakened by us? Assuredly, we are no less sinners than any of those on whom the Tower of the Divine vengeance hath so heavily fallen; whose blood the Pilates of all Ages have mingled with their solemn and religious sacrifices: and therefore have no cause to hope, but that unless we do repent, we shall likewise perish.

The serious consideration of all these particulars, hath made those alterations both in Church and State, which have hapned here amongst our selves, the less strange unto me. For, in these any of these things, wherof it may be said, Ecce hoc est novum, behold this is new? Eccl. 1. 10. Have they not been already in the times before us? Do we not find it positively affirm'd by the wisest man that ever was, That which hath been, is now; and that which is to be, hath already been; Nilul enim novum est sub sole, for there is no new thing under the Sun. Eccl. 1. 3, 10, and 1. 11. And though I cannot tell what effect the reading of this following Book may produce in others, yet I can warrantably say thus much of myself. That the observation of the fall of so many great and puissant Empires, the extirpation of so many mighty and renowned Families, the desolation of so many flourishing Christian Churches, as the composing of this Book did present me with, (though formerly no strangers to me in the course of my Studies) did more conduce to the full humbling of my Soul under the mighty hand of God, than either the sense of my own Misfortunes, or any other moral consideration which had come before me. And I could wish, the Reader may receive so much benefit by it, (besides the profit and delight which Books of this nature carry with them) that the Mighty man may learn hereby, not to glory in his greatest Strength, nor the Wise to glory in his Wisdom, or in the cunning carrying on of his great Designs. Let the great Leaders of these times in the Art of War, consider the sad ends of Joab, the General of David's Forces; and of Belshazzar, the Commander of Justinian's Armies: wherof the one was slain ingloriously at the Horns of the Altar, after all his Services; the other forced to beg his bread at the Gates of the Temple. Let the great Masters of Wit, and State-craft, have before their eyes the unsuccessful ends of Achitophel, the Oracle of the times he lived in; and of Cesar Borgia, propoed by Machiavel, for the Patern of a Politick Prince: of which, the one laid violent hands upon himself, because his Counsel was not followed; the other, after the default of his Projects, and a long imprisonment to boot, forced to flee his Country, and slain obscurely in an Ambush. Let all men lay unto their hearts the ebbs and floods, those alterations and vicissitudes, to which all Humane Power is subject; the slippery Foundations of that Might and Greatness which is not laid upon the Principles of Justice, and regulated by the Maxims of Christian Piety; and, that even those which have dominion over others, have a God too, above themselves, to whom they are to render an account of all their Actions. Not such a God as that of Lewis the 11th of France; of whom it is reported, that he wore a Lead Medal in his Bonnet, in the form of a Crucifix: which, when he had caused any man to be killed, whom he feared or hated, he would take into his hands, and kiss it, desiring it to pardon him that one Murder more, and it should be the last which he would commit. Such mockeries as these may be well put on a Leaden god; but the God of Heaven and Earth, will not be so mocked: who being totus oculus, and totum lumen, as the Father calleth him, can easily discern our intents and purposes, notwithstanding those disguises which are put upon them; and see the nakedness of sin in its ugliest shape, though apparelled with the Fig-leaves of the best pretences, which the self-deceiving Wit of Man can patch up together. God is the same God now, as in former times, Primum ad extremum similis sibi, Yesterday, and to day, and the same for ever; and will not put up those affronts which the Impieties of men do afflict him with: though in regard of his great patience, and long-suffering, they may flatter their poor Souls, and say, Tu, God doth not see it.

Lastly, I am to tell the Reader, that I have now no other Passion than himself, to whom to dedicate this Work, and from whom to receive protection and encouragement in it. The time was when I might have said with Seneca, Unus mihi erat pro Populo, that one Man was to me instead of all men: the Powers of all the People being virtually united in him. But now, as the case stands, I must be fain to invert those words, Populus mihi est pro uno; the body of the Nation is to me, in this respect as the Head before. Unto them therefore I present it, and that not improperly: A General survey of all the World, the Government, Affairs, and Successes of it, requiring a more general Patron than particular Traçates. But because all the People in the Body Collective have not abilities to read, and much less to judge; and that many of those who can do both, may neither have the list nor leisure to peruse these Papers: I look on the Nobility, Clergy, Gentry, as their Representatives in this kind; to whose favourable and ingenious acceptance I submit the same. Which if I can attain unto, it is all I aim at. And it will be no small comfort to me in the midst of so many sorrows as are round about me, that I have been useful to the publick, or added any thing by my Studies unto the Honour and Content of the English Nation: whose peace and happiness is heartily commended to Almighty God, by

THY first prest Grapes did yield approved Wine,
Such as did praise it self; yet to endure
Our Approbation, thou dost here refuse
Those former Fruits; and, for our better Cheer, Present it us with a pure and stronger Vine:
Left, else, some curious taste might in dispute
If so, What needs my second Buth? 'Tis Waste.

Tis well thy choice Minerva merits this,
This Ivis Garland, everlasting green;
Which, like the Mules Cap, proportion'd it,
Whereat thou drink'st, wherein their Liquors been.
Nor wouldst thou scape the Lash of Nemesis,
If, with Diogenes, thou shouldst refuse
To let the thirsty drink there-hence. 'Twere News.

Thy Book's an Ark, which all the World contains;
And well may bear a short Encomion.
'Tis slender Meed; yet who such Pay disdains?
Good Wine may have a Buth, though it need none.
Nor let these Lines of mine seem partial strains.
Thy Work ingenious is, and Virtue's Broad,
Like it, incestible with due praise. 'Tis Good.

GENERAL INTRODUCTION
To the following WORK:

Containing the Creation of the World by Almighty God, and the Plantation of the same by the Sons of Men; the necessary use of History and Geography, as well for understanding the Affairs of the Ages past, as for converse and correspondence with the Nations present; together with a brief view of some General Præcognita which necessarily are required unto the Knowledge of each.

WITH great both Piety and Prudence did the Apostles in their Summary of the Christian Faith, join our Belief in God the Father Almighty, with that clause or Article of making or Creating the Heaven and Earth. For as the name of Father doth imply a making (It not be thy Father which hath made thee? saith the Prophet Isa. 44. 20.) Who but an Almighty Father could by his mere Word without any pre-existent Matter, create that goodly Edifice of Heaven and Earth, which we behold with so much wonder and applause? A work so full of wonder to the ancient Gentiles, that some of them made the World a God. Vit illum (i.e. Deum) mundum vocare? non falleris as it is in Seneca: others more rationally conceiving God to be the Soul of the World, as giving animation or beginning to it. And though they erred, as well in making the World a God, as God to be the Soul of the World, yet might they very well have said as one since hath done, That the World is nothing else but God unfolded and manifested in the Creature. Nihil aliud mundus universus, quam Deus explicatus, as Cyprianus a late Cardinal hath it. For certainly the special motives which did induce God unto this great work, were a desire and purpose to manifest his Power, to exercise his Providence, and declare his Goodness. Not that God needed to have made the World in regard of Himself, for the World we know was made in the beginning of Time, but God is Infinite and Eternal before all Times; but that it seemed good to Him to create it last, as a thing most conducive to his praise and glory; the Heavens declaring the glory of God, and the Earth shewing his bounteous work, saith the Royal Psalmist. Some, measuring the God of Heaven by their own affections, and finding nothing so agreeable to their own dispositions as to be in company, conceive that God being at last weary of his own Solitude, did create the World, that he might have the company of the Angels in Heaven, and make a start into the Earth (when he saw occasion) to recreate himself with the Sons of Men. Que beata esse solitudo quæ? What happiness (saith Her- tensius) can there be in Solitude? To which Lactantius, Lib. 1. Cap. 7. not being furnished with a better, doth return this Answer; That God cannot be said to be alone; babet enim Ministros quos vocamus Nuncios, as having the society of the Angels. But then Lactantius must suppose that the Angels were co-eternal with God himself, which were to make all Gods, and no God at all; or else his Answer is no Answer, as to that Objection. How much more oppositely might he have thus replied unto Hortensius. That the supreme contentment possible to Almighty God is by reflecting on Himself, and in Himself contemplating in his own infinite glories; which being co-eternal with Himself, even from all Eternity, he needed no more company before the World was made, than he hath done since. Lactantius being himself a man of a very great reading (though indeed a better Humanitan than Divine) could not but know these sweet delights which a man habited in Learning takes in Contemplation, and the good society he hath of his own dear thoughts, when he is most retired from the sight of men. And if the wife Gentile could affirm so truly, Nonquam minus solus quare cum solus esset, that he was never less alone than when he was by himself, what need can any rational man suppose in Almighty God, of having more company than Himself, to delight himself in? If this suffice not for an Answer to that needless question, What God did before he made the World; let him take that of Augustine on the like occasion: who being troubled with the like curious and impertinent Caption, is said to have returned this Answer; Fabricasse inferos curiosus, that he made Hell for all such troublesome and idle Questioners. Which resolution of that Father is by Sabinus, a late Dutch Poet, moulded into this handsome Epigram.

*Dum Christum Libyci Pater Augustinus in oris
Asserit, & peragit munus in æde fiamus
Dum miranda refert populo primordia mundi
Egit docuit verbo cuncta creata Dei:
Impius alijugit, verbisq; procatibus, Afer,
Ergo Opificem rerum quid facibus? ait
Aut, Quibus interitus falletur tempora curis, Mandus adhuc mundum cum fabricatus erat?*

*Presul ad hac Libycus, Fabricavit tartara, dixit,
His quoq; feruati talia mente iuauit.*

Which may be Enlarged in these words:

When Reverend Anfin did in Africk preach,
And in Gods House the ruder people teach,
As he the Worlds Creation prophesied and taught
That God made all things by his Word, of note:
A few Swain upstarting needs would know,
How God before that did his time bestow:
And what to spend his thoughts upon, he had,
When neither Heaven, nor Earth, nor Seas were made:
To which the Father tartly thus; He then
Made Hell for thee, and such audacious men.

But not to spend more time in answering, so vain a caption, suffice it us to know, that it pleased God at last when it seemed best unto his infinite and eternal wisdom, to create the World, and all things visible and invisible in the same contained. A time it had, in which it first began to be, which before was not: This Möses calls Principium a beginning simply. In the beginning, God created the heaven and the earth, in the first words of the Book of Genesis: which is all one as if he had said, the Heaven and Earth had a beginning; or that this unformed Matter or Chaos which he entailed there by the name of Heaven and Earth, was the beginning or first draught of those feveral things which after were created in their proper times; that is to say, the first in order of time, because made before them, not in order of causality, as the causes of them, Calum et terra, in principio, (i.e.) ante omnia facta sunt, with Simon Petrus in his Sermon on S. John's Gospel. So that whether we do expound those words, that the Heaven and Earth had a beginning; or that Möses by these words did mean, that out of that Matter which he calls Heaven and Earth, as out of the beginning, or first matter, all things were created, it comes all to one, because it is thereby acknowledged that the first Matter was created by Almighty God, and therefore of necessity to have a beginning. And to this truth we have not only the authority and consent of Scripture, but of the greatest part of the old Philosophers; guided thereto by this impossibility in nature, that any visible work, whether it be natural or artificial, should either give it self a being, or have that being, which it hath from no cause precedent. For from that Principle Truly arising very rightly in his most excellent Book De natura Deorum, that as a man coming into a goodly house, in which he found nothing but Rats and Mice, could not conceive that either the house had built it self, or had no other maker but those Rats and Mice which were nested in it, so neither can it be imagined, that either this World should be eternal, or a self-existence; or was composed by any natural Agent of what sort soever. And this is that which is more briefly and expressly said by the Apple, viz. That every house is built by some man, but he that builds all things is God, Heb. 3.4. It is true, that Ariflate being a very great enquirer into the works of Nature, conceiv'd the World to be eternal; and yet not always constant unto that opinion. But then it is as true withal that there was something else that inclined him to it, than a mere admiration of the works of Nature. Democritus and some others had been of opinion, that the World was made in the beginning, fortissimè atomorum concurfusibus, by the accidental union or conjunction of those several parcels, of which the Universe consisted;
and that man himself was but solutioria elementorum concreta, a voluntary mixture of all the Elements, as Mim-tula had observed out of their Writings. To which absurd opinion (as it was no better) though it found a general imbracement amongst many of the old Philosophers, when Ariflate knew not how to submit his most exquisite judgment; and yet was defective of such further light, as might more fully have instructed him in its true Original: he rather chose to grant, the World to be eternal, than to be made of such ridiculous, and unfound, though eternal Atoms. Et maluit hanc pulchram mundi faciem ab eterno esse, quam aliquando ex æterna deformitate emissa-Valefius in his Book of Sacra Philosophia fo pleads the case in his behalf; and I think him for it: who am (I must confess) a great friend of Ariflate's, whom more account for the Precursor of our Saviour Christ in rebus na-turalibus, as John the Baptist was in divinis.

Nor doth the Scripture and the light of Reason tell us only this, that the whole World had a beginning; but, by the help of Scripture, and the works of some Learned men, we are able to point out the time when it did begin; or to compute how many years it is precisely from the first beginning, without any notable difference in the calculation. For though it be most truly said, Citius inter Horologios quam Chronologios; that Clocks may sooner be agreed than Chronologers, yet most Chronologers in this point come near one another, that the difference is scarce observable. From the beginning of the World to the Birth of Christ, in the account of Berosus, are 39 58 years; 3945 in the computation of the Genevians 3960 in the alcem of Lantier; and 3963 in the calculation of Melancholons: between whom and Berosus (being the least and the greatest) there is but 35 years difference, which in so long a course of time can be no great matter. Now if unto the Calculation made by Berosus, which I conceive to be the truest, we add 1648 since the Birth of Christ, the total of time since the World Creation, will be 5576 years, neither more nor less. A thing which I the rather have inscribed on, because that from this Epoche or Era of the World's Creation, we shall compute the times of King Kings and Princes, as reigned and flourished in the World before the Incarnation of our Lord and Saviour.

It being then resolved as a thing undoubted, that God made the World, and that He made it in such time as Himself pleased; let us next look upon the matter and the method which he pursued the Divine Majesty to make use of in this wondrous work.

First, for the matter, out of which all things were created, I take it, as before was said, to be that which Möses in the first words of Genesis calls the Heaven and the Earth, because they were lo in potentia; but after taught us more explicitly, that that which he calleth Earth, was inani & vacua, without form and void; and that which he calleth Heaven was but an overall of darkness, or rendra super faciem abyss, as the vulgar read it. Of which Chaos or confused Mess we thusargued in Osid, who questionless had herein consulted with the works of Möses, before his time communicated to the learned Genities:

*Ante mare & terras & quod tegit omnia Cælum, Unus erat toto natura vultus in Orbe,
Quem dixere Chaos, rudis indigestaque moles,
Nec quicquam nisi pondus iners, congestaque eodem
Non bene junctarum discordia semina rerum, &c.*
Which I shall Enlarge from G. S. with some little change.
Before the Earth, the Sea, and Heaven were framed,
One face had Nature which they Chaos named;
An indigested lump, a barren load,
Where jarring seeds of things ill-join'd abode.
No Sun as yet with light the World adorns,
Nor new Moon had repair'd her waning horns:
Nor hung the self-poiz'd Earth in thin Air plac'd,
Nor had the Ocean the vast Shores embrac'd.

Earth

Earth, Sea, and Air, all mixt; the Earth unfitable,
The Air was dark, the Sea unavigable:
No certain form to any one affign'd;
This, that refists; for in one body join'd
The cold and heat, the dry and humid light,
The soft and hard, the heavy with the light.

Out of this Chaos or first matter, did God raise the World according to those several parts and lineaments which we see it in, not as out of any pre-existent matter which was made before, and had not God for the Author or first Maker of it; but as the first preparatory matter which himself had made, including in the same potentially both the form and matter of the whole Creation, except the Soul of man only, which God breathed into him. And therefore it is truly said, that God made all things out of nothing; not out of nothing as the matter out of which it was made, for then that nothing must be something; but as the terminus à quo, in giving them a real and corporal being which before they had not, and did then first begin to have by the mere force and efficacy of his powerful Word. And though it be a Maxim in the Schools of Philosophy, Ex nihilo nil fit, that nothing can be made of nothing; that every thing which hath a being doth require some matter which must be pre-existent to it, yet this must either be condemned for erroneous Doctrine in the Chair of Divinity, or else be limited and restrained to Natural Agents which cannot go beyond the Sphere of their own activity, Invisible and supernatural Agents are not tied to Rules, no not in the production of the works of Nature; though Nature, constituted and established in a certain course, work every thing by line and measure as a certain Rule. And so it was with God in the Worlds Creation; he did not only make the World, but he made it out of nothing, by his word alone: Disit & facta sunt, He spake the word and they were made, faith the royal Psalms, Psal. 33. 9. There went no greater pains nor matter to the whole Creation, but a Disit Deus: And this not only said by Möses, but by David too, Verbo Domini firmati sunt Cæli, & spiritus oris eius omnis virtus orbis, v. 6. i.e. By the Word of the Lord were the Heavens made, and all the Hosts thereof by the breath of his mouth. In which it is to be observed, that though the Creation of the World be generally ascribed to God the Father, yet both the Son and the Holy Ghost had their parts therein; Verbo Domini, by the word of the Lord were the Heavens made, faith the Prophet David. In the beginning was the Word, all things were made by him, and without him was nothing made, faith S. John the Apple. The Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters, faith Möses in the Book of the Law: Et spiritus oris ejus operetur by the breath (or Spirit) of his mouth were all the Hosts of Heaven created, faith David in the Book of Psalms, Made by his Word, and yet not made together in one instant of time. In the first day, he laid the foundation; and no more; in the five next, he raised the building; and this he did, to teach us men deliberation, in our words and actions; and to set forth withal unto us, both his Power and Wisdom. His Power he manifested in the Method of the whole Creation, in that he did produce what effects he pleased, without the help of natural causes; as giving Light unto the World before he had created either Sun or Moon; making the Earth fruitful, and to bring forth Plants, without the influence or motion of the Heavenly bodies. And for his Wisdom he expresed it in as high a degree, in that he did not create the very Beasts of the field before he had provided them of food and sufficient herbage; nor made man after his own Image, before he had finished all the rest of his works, fitted his House, and furnished it with all things necessary both for life and pleasures.

But all things being fitted and prepared for him, at last comes Man into the World: and he doth make his entrance with a greater pomp than any of the rest of the Creatures which were before him. They came in with no other Ceremony, than a Disit Deus; but in the Workmanship of Man, there was a Consultation held by the blessed Trinity. It is there, Faciamus Hominem, Let us make man; each Person contributing somewhat (as it were) to his composition. For God the Father as the chief Workman, or principal Agent, gave him form and
Image. The Son, who is the living and eternal Word, gave him voice or speech, that so he might be able to fetter Gods praises. The Holy Ghost, the Lord and giver of Life, (as the Nicene Fathers truly call him) breathing into his nostrils the breath of Life, whereby he became a living Spirit. In this one Creation, was amass'd whatever thing was excellent in the whole Creation; the quantity or substance of Inanimate Creatures, the life of Plants, the sense of Beasts, the understanding of Angels. In this one Creature d<sup>d</sup>. God flew the excellency of his power and wisdom, in presenting on him his own Image; and giving him dominion over all the works of his own Image;
which Image of God they look for in a very wrong place, who hope to find it in mans Body, though of a gallant composition, and erected structure. The Heathen Orator was able in this point to inform some erroneous Christians. Ad Divinum imaginem propius accedit humana virtus quam figura, Man doth approach more near to the Image of God, in the endowments of his Mind, than in the structure of his Body, as divinely Cæcero. And as for that dominion which God gave him over the works of his hands, the Patent is at large laid down in the first of Genesis. For God no sooner said, Faciamus Hominem, Let us make man after our own Image, but presently he adds this Charter of Supreme Authority, And let him have dominion over the Fishes of the Sea, and over the Fowls of the Air, and over the Cattle, and over all the Earth. A more particular explication of those several points, whereas that Image and this Power do conflict especially, I shall not take upon me or endeavour now; as being not of this place and purpose: Which only is to shew, that as man in the very act of his Creation participated more of the Divine Image, than all other Creatures; so was he by Gods favour grant encoined with a larger power, than any of the rest could pretend unto. Man, though made lower than the Angels, is in this above them; that all the Creatures of the World were made to be his servants, and to attend upon his pleasure. And yet this great and mighty Prince, this general Lord of all the World, and the Creatures in it (letting aside the dignity of his first Creation) doth come into the world in a worse condition, than any of the Creatures which were made to serve him, naked, and impotent, and speechless, without use of reason; neither of power to help himself, or ask help of others. Whereof Lactantius, in my mind, gives a very good reason, who telleth us, that God sends man into the world, nudum & incertum, naked, and weak, and undefended against all violence and dangers; whereas all Creatures else, vestita indumentis naturalibus & armata sunt, are naturally both armed and clothed, and able to relieve themselves. And this he doth unto this end, that man being naturally destitute of those outward helps, might make use of his inward faculties of judgment, wit and understanding, in furnishing himself with that which he wants by nature. For herunto the first original of all Manufactures and mechanic Arts is to be referred

referred, as is most plain and evident from the Book of God, in which we see, that presently upon the procreation of Mankind, Abel betook himself to keeping sheep, and Cain to husbandry; Tubal to handle the Harp, Organ, and such Musical Instruments; and Tubal Cain to work upon Brass and Iron, two metals very necessary to most kind of Trades. The like may be supposed in all other Myriads and Arts of Living, though there be no other Expressions of them in those early days; except it be the Art of Building, or the Carpenter's Trade, which no question is as old as any, as by the building of Cain's City, and Noah's Ark is most clearly evidenced. God made the World, and fitted it with all things necessary for the life of man, leaving man to provide himself of such additions as rather serve for comforts and conveniences in the way of his living, than the necessities of his life.

Here then we have the works of God, and the works of men to be considered, in pursuit of our present Argument. The works of God, in shadowing the Earth with Trees and Forests, interlacing it with Crystal streams, and capacious Rivers; enriching it with fruitful and delicious Vales, adorning it with rocky Mountains, and flocking both the Hills and Vales with all sorts of Cattle. But nothing more sets forth the Power and Wisdom of Almighty God, as it relates to these particulars, than that most admirable intermixture of Want with Plenty, whereby he hath united all the parts of the World in a continual Traffick and Commerce with one another: some Countries being destitute of those Commodities, with which others abound, and being plentiful in those, which the others want. Inasmuch that as in the body of man, that Micromes, or little World, the Head cannot live, that it hath no need of the Foot, nor the Foot of the Hand, nor other members of the rest: neither in the Body of the World, can Europe live by Asia, or Spain to England, have no need of your Commodities or am not wanting in those things, whereof thou boastest an abundance. Something there is in every Country which may be spared to supply the defect of others; and are accordingly vented in the way of Merchandise: Of which, thus Du-Bartas in his Colonies,

Hence come our Sugars from Canary Isles;
From Candie, Currants, Muscadels, and Oyls.
From the Molucces Spices: Balfamum
From Egypt: Odours from Arabia come.
From India Gems, rich Drugs, and Ivory;
From Syria, Mummie, black, red Ebony
From bewitching Chuse; from Peru, Pearls and Gold;
From Russia Furs to keep the rich from cold.
From Florence, Silks from Spain, Fruit, Saffron, Sack
From Denmark, Amber Cordage, Firre, and Wax,
From France and Flanders, Linnen, Wood, and Wine;
From Holland Hops; Horse from the banks of Rhine.
From England, Wool. All lands, as God directs,
To the Worlds treasure pay their sundry tributes.

This, as Du-Bartas speaks of the present times, fo questions is the same, or the like Commerce held good in the first Ages of the Worlds Creation; God furnishing all Countries from the first beginning with some staple Commodities, for the benefit of themselves and others; for the maintaining of that intercourse between Nation and Nation, which makes them link the closer in the bonds of Amity. And to this end also serve those several Manufactures wherewith some Countries do abound in respect of others; but looked on, in the present Book, as the works of men. And of this kind also are the several Politics and forms of Government. For, though all Magistracy in it itself be from God originally, and that the Monarchical form comes nearest to the Government used by God himself: yet being that some Politie are merely but humane inventions, all Government or Magistracy is called an Ordinance of man in holy Scripture, 1 Pet. 2. 13. But those particular works of men, which are the most considerable part of our present subject, are Castles, Towns, and Cities of most eminent note, which thrive and prosper in the World, according as they do partake of those Conveniences, which conduce most to their Magnificence and Greatness. Of these Bacon gives us many (relation being had to the time he lived in) but of those many we shall touch upon the principal only, passing by those of lesser note, as pleasantness of Site, fruitfulness of Soil, salubrity of Air, and such like obvious Observations. First then, there is required to the Magnificence and Splendor of Cities, a Navigable River, or some such easy passage by Sea, which will bring thither a continual concourse and trade of Merchants; as at Venice, London, Amsterdam. Secondly, some Staple Manufactures or Commodities, which will draw the like resort of Merchants, though the convenience of Sea or Rivers invite them not; as in Nuremberg in Germany, a dry Town, but mightily Traded. Thirdly, the Palace of the Prince; For, ubi Imperator, ibi Roma, where the Court is, there will be a continual concourse of Nobles, Gentry, Merchants, and all sorts of Trades: And by this means, Madrid, not long since a poor beggarly Village, is grown the most populous City in all Spain. Fourthly, the Residence of the Nobility, beautified with City with stately and magnificent Buildings; which makes the Cities of Italy so much excel ours in England; their Nobles dwelling in the Cities, and ours for the most part in their Country-houses. Fifthly, the Seats or Tribunals of Justice, on which both Advocates and Clients are to give attendance; as in the Parliamentary Cities in France, and Spire in Germany. Sixthly, Universities and Schools of Learning, to which the Youth from all parts are to make resort; which hath been long the chief cause of the flourishing of Oxford, Cambridge, Bononia in Italy, and other Cities of good note beyond the Seas. Seventhly, Immunity from Tolls and Taxes; most men being most desirous to inhabit there, where their In-comme will be greatest, their Privileges largest, and their Disburments least: So Naples, Florence, Venice, having been desolated by Plagues, were again suddenly re-peopled, by granting large Immunities to all comers-in. And last of all, the opinion of Sanctity, either for the Reliques of Saints, or some noted Shrines, or the residence of some famous man, or the Seat of Religion, is not the least Adamant which draws people to it, to the great enrichment of some Cities. And to this, Rome it self can give us two most pregnant evidences: The one in reference to the Popes, and these latter times; that famous Town not otherwise subsisting now, than by the constant residence of the Popes and Cardinals; whose absence while the Papal See was kept at Avignon, had made it over-grown with Bricks and Brambles, and buried it almost in its own bad ruins. The other, in the person of Tim Livius the Historian; to see which man there came so many from the Coasts of France and Spain, that St. Hierom elegantly saith, Quos ad sui contemplationem Roma non traxerat, omnia hujus hominis fide perduxit: qui jam urbem tantam ingressi, aliud extra Urbem querunt.

Such are the causes of the Greatness and Magnificence of Cities, when they are once built; none of all which might possibly be looked at by the first builders of Cities,

I mean by Cain before the Flood, and by Nimrod after, who aimed more at the love of Empire, and self preservation, than at the general good of Mankind, or the particular wealth of those amongst whom they lived. Of Cain it is affirmed expressly in the Book of God, That being possessed with this fear, that every one that found him would lay hands upon him and slay him, in revenge of the blood of Abel; He builded a City and called it by the name of his (Enoch Gen. 4. 17. Builded a City? For what reason? To fortifie and secure himself against all revenge, as the Text doth intimate; or thereby to oppress his Neighbours, as Josephus witnesseth. Neither was this the only City of the first Ages, though none but this be mentioned in the Book of God. That which the Scripture saith of Tubal, that he was the Father of such as dwell in Tents, and of such as have Cattle; that is to say, he was the first of those which lived upon Pasturage, and followed their Cattle up and down with their moveable Tents, not having any certain home or habitations, as the wild Arabes now, and the ancient Nomades is proof sufficient, that the residue of all Mankind lived a more civil kind of life in their Towns and Villages. And if Pomponius Mela in that of any credit (as in these things, I think he is) be will inform us, that the City of Tippa was built before the Flood; that the King, thereof was named Cinax; and that his name, and the name of his brother Phibes, together with the Grounds and Principles of their Religion, were found graven upon certain Altars of stone. But whether this be so, or not, certain it is, that as well Canaan in the West, whercon Joseph stood, as the Land of Nod on the East side of Paradise, where Cain built his City, were peopled long before the Flood; and so were most of the other parts of the World besides. And if well peopled in all, or most parts thereof, no doubt but they had Villages and Towns, yea and Cities too, as well for necessary habitations as for strength and safety. Now that the World was thoroughly peopled before the Flood, seems clear to me by that great and universal Deluge, which God was pleased to bring upon the Face of all the Earth: For what need all the Earth be buried in that Sea of waters, if all the Earth had not been peopled, and all the people of it guilty of oppression, in the sight of God? Besides, it is expressed in the holy Scripture, that in the time of Abraham, who lived about 250 years after the Flood in the largest account, and 200 in the shortest; there were Kings of Egypt, and of the Philistines, Kings of the Canaanites, of Shinar, Elafar, Elan, and of the Nations who questioned; that their Lands well peopled: that both Chaldea, and Mesopotamia, in the time of Abraham had their several Cities as Ur in the one, and Haran, or Charan, in the other; and that Damascus the chief City of Syria was then founded also: Not to say any thing of the building of Babel, Erech, Accad, and Chalneh in the Land of Shinar (or Babylonia) nor of the building of Ninive, Refes, Rebath, and Chalab in the Land of Affria, mention whereof is made in the 10. of Genesis. And it is found in good and credible Authors, that Ninus the third Affrian Monarch (who lived before the birth of Abraham) having subdued the Kings of Media and Armenia invaded Babylonia with an Army of 1700000 Foot, and 200000 Horse, and 4000 armed Chariots; and was encountered by Zoroaster the King thereof with an Army of four hundred thousand. The credulity wherof, it is were disputed, might be affirmed by the like numerous Army brought by Xerxes against the Greeks, though in times long after following. And if we will give credit unto Diodorus Siculus, who voucheth Ctesia for his Author, Semiramis, the Wife of Ninus, invaded India with an Army of three Millions of men and upwards; and yet was over-matched, and slain by an Indian King. If then within the space of four hundred years, we find the Eastern parts to be so well planted, to many Kings possessed of their regal Thrones, and many of them able to impress such infinite Armies, why may we not conclude, that in the course of 1656 years (for so long it was from the Creation to the Flood) the whole World was inhabited and planted in all parts thereof; especially considering the long lives of men, amounting to eight hundred, or nine hundred years; and consequently the long time they had to apply themselves to the act of Generation. And though I have no certain ground for it in the Book of God, yet I am eager to be of Mercator's opinion; who placing the 16 Dynasties of the Kings of Egypt (where Enchiridion begins to calculate the Egyptian times) at the first planting of that Country by the Sons of Noah; reckoneth the former fifteen to have been before the Flood, and to reach very near the times of the first Creation. That Misraim the Son of Han was possessed of Egypt within two hundred years after the Flood, is a truth undoubted. Nor see I any cause to doubt, but that in the like space of time from the first Creation it might be planted also by the Sons of Adam: considering, as we ought to do, that in the Infancy of the World, when the bodies of men were most perfect, and of greatest vigour, they observed no degree of Kindred or Conganguinity; nor tied themselves so strictly to one woman, as they should have done. And for the names of all the Kings of those several Dynasties, either they might be left engraven upon Pillars, such as that of Seb; or upon Altars of stone, as in those of Tippa; or Misraim might have them, by Tradition from the hands of Noah; and so deliver them by tale unto his posterity: the Egyptians being generally very good Herodots, and standing very much on their own Antiquity. And if this may be said of Egypt (as for my part I see no reason but it may) then may the like be said of all Countries else, that they had their several Kings and Rulers, and set-Forms of Government; the Fathers of Families in those times, having the command and sovereignty over all that defended of them. Nor make I any question of it, but they had several Languages and Mans of Speech, as well as the Dialects and pronunciation in the holy Scripture, that in the time of Abraham, who lived about 250 years after the Flood in the largest account, and 200 in the shortest; there were Kings of Egypt, and of the Philistines, Kings of the Canaanites, of Shinar, Elafar, Elan, and of the Nations who questioned; that their Lands well peopled: that both Chaldea, and Mesopotamia, in the time of Abraham had their several Cities as Ur in the one, and Haran, or Charan, in the other; and that Damascus the chief City of Syria was then founded also: Not to say any thing of the building of Babel, Erech, Accad, and Chalneh in the Land of Shinar (or Babylonia) nor of the building of Ninive, Refes, Rebath, and Chalab in the Land of Affria, mention whereof is made in the 10. of Genesis. novus fides necessitate compulsi, that they were driven by necessity to seek new dwellings, the necessity of providing victuals for themselves and their Families, being as strong a motive unto such diffusions, as the Confusion of Tongues was afterwards. The difference is, that that which such necessity would have done in long tract of time, the confusion of Tongues did in an instant: not only making those proud Builders to give over the finishing of the Tower which they had begun; but to unite themselves with such, whose language came most near to that which themselves were Masters of. It was high time, no question, to desist from this proud Attempt, when the Labourer understood not what the Workman called for, but brought him things quite contrary to his expectation. But because some Plantations had no reference to the Confusion of Tongues; but were made before it, or on the fending out of such Colonies as were nearest to the place where the Ark did rest, I think it not amiss to resolve that question touching the settling of the Ark, on which the Plantations of the East have so great dependence. All that the Scripture telleth us of, is, that the Ark rested on the Mountains of Ararat: but where those Mountains are, that it telleth us not. I know Josaphus and some other of more emin. at note (but such as ground themselves upon his authority) affirm, those Mountains of Ararat to be the hills of Armenia. Which they do chiefly on these Reasons: First, because Armenia is called Ararat in the Book of God, as it is confessedly; and secondly, because of an old Tradition, current amongst the Berossus, and some others of the ancient Writers cited by Josaphus, affirming, that on the Gordian Mountains in Armenia major, some of the reliques of the Ark were remaining in their times and used as a preervative against Inchantments. Which notwithstanding, I incline rather to the opinion of Goropius Becanus (who amongst many strange whimsies broached some notable truths) by whom the Ark is said to rest on the top of Mount Caucasus in the Confines of Tartary, Persia, and India. His Arguments are many, but I look on two as of greatest consequence: the first whereof is grounded upon evident reason; the second on plain Text of Scripture. That which is grounded upon reason, is, the exceeding populousity of those Eastern Countries, into which none of those by whom the World was planted after the Confusion of Languages, are yet reported to have travelled with their several Colonies; by any who have took pains in this discovery. Those infinite numbers which Strabo speaks of, one (and but one of many) of the Kings of the Indians brought into the field against Semiramis; and the vast army of Zoroaster the King of Babylonia, conducted out of that one Province against Ninus; are proof enough, that those Countries were of an elder Plantation, than to be a second or third Castling of some other Savans settled in Persia, or Assyria after the Confusion. For Ninus, who was the Husband of Semiramis, was but the Grandchild of Nimrod; and I must needs look upon it, as a thing impossible, that those vast Armies which Semiramis was able to raise out of all her Dominions, should be encountered by one King with an equal force, and that of his own Subjects only; if that one King, and those his Subjects had been some late Colony of those new Plantations, and not possessed of a Country peopled and inhabited before that Confusion. Nor was it but upon some good ground, that the Scythians (who inhabited on the North of Mount Caucasus) were generally esteemed the most ancient Nation in the World; and carried it away from the Egyptians, Phrygians, and all other Competitors with this publick Verdict, Scythiarum gens semper antiquissima: which ground could be no other, but the neighbourhood of the Ark unto them (though perhaps that ground long since forgotten, was not stood upon) and the dwelling of Noah and his children near the place of the Ark till numbers, and necessity compelled them to enlarge their Borders. And in the enlarging of their Borders, I shall make no question, but that such parts as lay nearest, were peopled and possessed before those which lay further off; according to the method of Plantations in all Ages since. This, though it be to me a convincing Argument, yet it falls short of that which comes from the Text it self, both in authority and weight; where it is said of the heads of those several Families which afterwards joyned together in the building of Babel that, As they went from the East, they found a Plain in the Land of Shinaar, and there they abode. Gen. 11. 2. If then they came from the East to the Land of Shinaar, as the Text faith plainly that they did; it might well be, that they came from those parts of Asia, on the South of Caucasus, which lie East of Shinaar, though somewhat bending to the North; impossible they should come from the Gordian Mountains in the greater Armenia (supposed to be the Hills which the Ark did rest on) which lie not only full North of Shinaar, but many degrees unto the West. For Babylonia, or Shinaar, is situated in the Latitude of 35, and the Longitude of 79 and 80. The Latitude of the Gordian Mountains, in 41, and their Longitude in 75. By which account those Mountains are 6 Degrees more Northwards, and 5 Degrees more Westwards than the Land of Shinaar: by no means to be reckoned on the East of that Valley, except we make Mesra (whose hand God guided in his Books) to speak God knows what, or, in plain terms, to speak plain non-sense. And though the Scripture be so clear, that it needs no commentary, yet the perplexities I find amongst those of the other opinion, in fitting out of the authority of so plain a Text, do add in my conceit some moment and weight unto it. For some will have the Mountains of Ararat to be indeed on the North of the Land of Shinaar; but with some bending towards the East; which were it true, as nothing is more truly false, Mesra had never told us that they came from the East; but from some Countys of the North, which lay towards the East. Others will have a double progress of the heads of those several Families: First, from the Mountains of Ararat, or the Plains of Armenia, to the Fields of Assyria, and Syriana; and secondly, from thence to the Land of Shinaar. But of this first journey, there is no quidam, not so much as any one syllable in all the Scripture; besides the needfuliness of making them go so far about, and to cross over the great Rivers Euphrates and Tigris; whereas they had a shorter, and an easier passage. Capellus, singular by himself quarrelous, with the Translation (received without dispute by all other Critics) and will not have not Hebræi Kedem, to be rendered East, but to signify that Region, whatsoever it was, which was inhabited by Kedem the son of Ismael, of whom we find mention, Gen. 25. 15. But then, besides his quarrel with all other Translations, he supposeth a former progress from the Mountains of Ararat to that Land of Kedem; and consequently falleth into a part of the Error before rectified, Bochartus finding (if not fancying) that the Assyrians called all those parts of their Empire beyond Tygris, the Eastern, and those on this side of it, the Western; would thence conclude, that these Heads may be said by Mesra to have come from the East, because they came from one of the Eastern Provinces of the Assyrian Empire.

Every

Every way faulty in this point: For, besides that the greatest part of Armenia lieth on the North of Tygris, and the least part of it on the West, and therefore not within the compass of the Eastern Provinces; and that Bochartus hath not proved (nor indeed can prove) that this division was in use in the time of Mesra; we may as rationally conclude, and with less absurdity, that the first Inhabitants of Britania, might have been said by Ammianus Marcellinus, or any Writer of that time, to come out of the West (though he well knew they came from Gaul, which is plainly East of it) because Gaul in his time was a Province of the West parts of the Empire.

Having thus fortified our opinion both with Scripture and Reason, the Arguments produced against us will be easily answered. For though Armenia be granted to be the Country of Ararat; yet the Mountains of Ararat may extend beyond the Country. That mighty Ridge of Mountains which beginning in Asia the left, run as far as India (by the Ancients commonly called Mount Taurus) might very well be called by Mesra the Mountains of Ararat, because that was the first Country of the greater Asia by which they passed; and where they were of greater note than they had been formerly. Just as the Adriatick Sea took that name from Adria, then the chief Port of it, though it washed many Shores besides: Or as some Hills with us are called Matevra Hills, because they are highest near that Village, though they extend themselves into other Neighbourhoods. And as for the Authority of Tradition, and the Testimony of humane Writers, which (as before was said) are brought in for an help, touching some Reliques of the Ark to be seen on the Gordian Mountains; I look upon it as an Argument of no weight at all. For first Berossus (followed herein by all the rest) reports it only on the ground of uncertain hear-say; which is a weak foundation for so heavy a cause to rely upon. Secondly, to balance the Authority of Berossus (if of any credit in this case) we have the testimony and authority of Porcius Cato, as ancient almost as he, affirming positively, In Scythia Sagarenatum esse mortale genus, that Mankind was repaired in that part of Scythia, which after was possessed by the Sacans; and they, we know, dwelt in those parts of Scythia which lay next to Babylonia, a Province of the Persian Empire, and not far from the branches of Mount Caucasus. And Thirdly, unto one Tradition to oppose another; those of Mount Caucasus do aver, that a large Vineyard in Margiana, near the foot of that Mountain, was of Noah's Plantation: Of which we shall speak more when we come to Tartary.

It is now time I should go forwards with the Builders of Babel, and their wide diffusions; for whom it was high time, to comfort themselves with such as they could understand; the necessity of discourse and conference on that fatal Adventure, making them lay aside their old acquaintances, and joyn themselves to others of their own new Language. I know that many Learned men according to the number of names laid down in the tenth of Gen. being 70, have made so many Languages to have been spoken upon that Confusion: And that of those, 26 being the Posterity of Sem, dispersed themselves about Asia the greater, 30 others of the loins of Cham, peopled Africa, Arabia, and Syria; and that the 14 which remain, being the issue of Japheth, withdrew themselves towards Europe, and the lesser Asia. But this, as to the number of Languages, I take to be but a vain conceit; though many, more improbable, have passed for current. It being plain, that Canaan and his Sons, eleven in all, had but one Language amongst them, which was the Hebrew, or the Language of the Land of Canaan.

And as for Jethan and his Sons, being 13 in number, considering that he was the younger brother of Phaleg, in whose time this Confusion hapned; it is most probable, and avowed for a certain truth, that either none of them were born, or, if they were, yet they were all of them too young to have an hand in the design for the building of the Tower of Babel; and consequently could not be within the curse of confounded Languages. So, here is near a third part of the seventy to be taken off, as possibly might all the Sons of Misraim be, if it were worth the while to inflict upon it. This then I take but for a fancy. And as for that, of the dispersion into the said three parts of the (then) known World, I take it to be true enough in long tract of time; but false enough, if understood of any present separation of the Sons of Noah into parts so far remote and distant from one another. For what needed any such remote Plantations be, as long as they had room enough to live one near another, and to enjoy that civil intercourse, and mutual society which the nature of Mankind doth most delight in? And therefore I conceive it to be far more probable, that they who met together for the building of Babel, joining themselves to men of the same Language with them, did first sit down upon the places near the Valley of Shinaar: and from thence propagated and dispersed themselves into further Countries, as either the necessity of providing of Victuals, or seeking better and more fruitful habitations for themselves and theirs; or the desire of being out of the reach of some potent Neighbours, who sought they found too heavy for their necks to bear, did enforce them to it. And being so settled to their minds, the addition of a few more years brought the like necessity of sending Colonies further off, as they grew more or less populous in their generations: It being in Plantations of Men, as in that of Bees, amongst whom one Savans sends out another, that begets a Castling, till the whole ground or Garden grow too small to hold them. For thus (to seek no further for an instance of it) the Gauls first planted Britania, the Britains Ireland, the Irish Scotland, and the Illes. Thus the Helvetians finding their old dwellings both too barren to sustain, and to narrow to contain their multitudes, angustias se suae habere arbitantes, as in Cæsar's Commentaries, intended to plant themselves in Gaul. And thus the Syrians and Phœnicians flying the dreadful sword of Jehonab the Son of Nim, fought them out dwellings further off from the present danger, whereof we shall speak more in its proper place. On the like motives and inducements did the first people after the Flood, dilubrate and disperse themselves into several parts, as their posterities have done since, and will do to the end of the World, in all probability: Giving their own names, or some names of their own inventing, upon the Countries planted or discovered by them. And though the length, and continuing nature of time, hath either changed or sworn out the names imposed by the first Adventurers, I mean the first Planters after the Flood; yet all the four Rivers of Antiquity are not so defaced, but that some Nations and Cities have preserved the memory of their first Founders and true Parents. In the discovery whereof, as Josaphus in his Book of Jewish Antiquities did first lead the way, and gave good light to those who have travelled in it, so a more notable proficiency hath been made therein by Junius in his Notes on the tenth of Genesis, Sir Walter Ralegh in his excellent History, and lately by Bochartus a French Writer in his Book called Geographia Sacra. Out of whose learned labours, and some Animadversions of mine own, I shall here lay forth what concerning the Plantation of the World by the Sons of Noah's, leaving the more exact and punctual description description of it unto the History of those several Lands and Countries which were planted by them.

First therefore to begin with the posterity of Sem, as those who fixed themselves in Asia, without wandering further, we find Sem to have had five Sons, that is to say, Elam, Assur, Arphaxad, Lud, and Aram; of whom there is no illue on Record in holy Scripture, but only of Arphaxad and Arms, and of these two there are four Sons given to Arms, viz. Uz, Hul, Gether, and Mefib, and but one to Arphaxad, which was Selah. To Selah was born Heber, to Heber, Phaleg, the Ancestor of Abraham, and Yektan the Father of those thirteen sons, whose names we shall rehearse hereafter, if occasion be. From Elam who is first named, did descend the Elamites, a people bordering on the Mediterranean, and therefore oft-times joyn'd together in the Scriptures, as, Go up, O Elam, Beftige, O Media, Efa. 2. 2. And all the Kings of Elam, all the Kings of the Medes, Jer. 25. 25. And in the second of the Alis, Partians, and Medes, and Elamites, march in rank and file, as being Nations bordering upon one another. The principal City of this people was called Elymais, mention whereof is made in the second of Maceab. 6. 2. sufficiently famous for the rich and magnificent Temple which was there consecrated to Diana. A City seated on the Banks of the River Euleus, and neighbouring close to Sufiana, which therefore is sometimes included in the name of Elam, as Dan. 8. 2. T-wa (faith he) in the Palace of Sufa, in the Province of Elam: where Elam is not taken for the Province of the Elamites only, but as it gave denomination to all those Nations which they after malter'd. The second Son of Sem is Assur of whom there is no question made amongst the Learned, but that he was the father of the Assyrians, called Assures in some old Greek Writers: Not of the whole people of that great and unwise Empire, who sometimes generally pass by the name of Assyrians; but of the people of Assyria strictly and properly so called, as it denoteth the Country about Ninive (the Regal City of that Empire) which after was called Adiabene. Iuxta hunc circumitum Adiabene, Assyria pristin temporibus vocata, as in Amianus Marcellinus, Lib. 35. Arphaxad comes next after Assur, and him Josephus makes to be the Father of the Chaldeans, called anciently Arphaxadai, if he tells us true. But others tell us, and that more probable perhaps, that he planted in that part the Assyria which was first called Arphaxitis, afterwards Arphaxitis; by which name it occurs in the Tables of Pholomy. Lud the fourth son is generally said to be the Father of the Lydians, a people of Asia the less; the names of Lud, and Lydi (or Avdy) as the Grecians call them) being much alike. And it is possible enough that some of the posterity of this Lud might afterwards settle in those parts, and call the Country by the name of Lud, their common Ancestor: as the posterity of Abraham took unto themselves the name of Hebreus from Heber, one of the Progenitors of their Father Abraham. But that Lud should in person go so far from the rest of the Sons of Sem, I cannot easily imagine. For, Aram the fifth and last (as they stand in order of the Text) lets himself down close by his Brethren in the Land of Syria, which in the Hebrew is called Aram, and from thence the name of Aramites was given to the Inhabitants of it. Of which, and of the several Provinces which were hence denominated, we shall hereafter speak more fully, when we come to Syria. Only take now this testimony and acknowledgment from the pen of Strabo. Quos non Syros vocamus, ipsi Syri Aramensis, et Aramensis vocant. Those (faith he) which we now call Syrians, do call themselves Aramensis, or Aramenians. In, and about the same parts, did the four sons of Aram fix themselves and their Families: Uz in that part of

Syria which is called Syria Damascena, or Aram Damascenica; the building of the great City of Damascus being generally ascribed unto him: and the Land of Uz, bordering South upon Damascus, taking denomination from him. The like did Hul, or Chul, the next son of Aram, whom both Josephus and S. Hieronim settle in Armenia, or Armenia, as in Strabo: and that not improbably, considering that there is a Region in Armenia, which Stephanus calls Chalobetene; and divers Cities in that tract, which still preserve the Radicals of Hul, or Chul, as Cholus, Cholnata, Cholimann, Colpa, and Colana, whence mention is made in the Tables of Pholomy. For, Gether, the third son of Aram; it is not yet agreed on where to find his dwelling. Josephus, contrary to all reason, placeth him in Bedria and Mercer, withas little, in Coria, a Province of the lesser Asia, and Acanania of Greece. Justin sets him down in the Province of Cassitis, and Scleus, near his Father Aram; where Pholomy placeth Gindarus, and the Nations called by Pliny, Gindarus: Bochartus on the banks of the River Contritus which divides Armenia from the Carduchi, as it is in Xenophon. Which River, if it were called originally Gether, as he conjectured it might be, the contrivance were at an end. But being that we find in Pholomy, a City of Armenia (which bordereth on Armenia) called Getera, and a River of the same Country called Getera; I see no cause why we should seek further for the seat of Gether; though the Greek Copies (more subject to corruption in the times of ignorance, than the Latin were) instead of Getera read Gagera. But if this be too far to let him, we shall find Mus or Mefib, the last Son, planted nearer hand, even in the Northern parts of Syria, towards Mesopotamia, near the Hill called Mefius: at the foot whereof there is a people, which Stephanus called Mefenis; and thereabouts a River, which in Xenophon is named Mefia. Both which do evidently declare from what root they come.

Come we next to the second branch of the house of Sem, derived from Arphaxad; whom we left settled in the Region of Arphaxitis, in, or near Assyria. Not far from which, in Sufiana, a Province of the Persian Empire there is a City of chief note called Sela; mention of which is made both in Pholomy's Tables; and the 23. Book of Amianus Marcellinus. Add unto this the authority of Eusebius Antiochenus, who briefly thus, Σελα δὲ ὁ Σουφίανος, The People of Sufiana came from Sela. But this I conceive, must be understood only of that part of this people, which lived in and about the City of Sela, and not of the whole Nation of the Sufians, or Sufenis, which borrowed their denomination from another root. To Sela was born Heber, from whom the people of the Hebræi, or Hebreus, do derive their name. And to him Phaleg his first born, who in all probability gave name to the Town called Phalg, situate on the River Euphrates, not far from Selucia: Mention whereof is made by Stephanus in his Book de Urribus, and by Pholomy in his Geography; where it is placed right on the banks of Euphrates, where the River Chabarus mingles waters with it; but there corruptly called Phalg, instead of Phalg.

But the great increase of Sem's posterity came by Jektan, the second Son of Eber, the Father of no fewer than thirteen Sons, whose names are on record in the tenth of Genesis, where it is said, that their dwelling was from Media, as thou goest to Sephar, a Mount in the East. And here I must crave leave to differ from Bochartus, who hath thought Jektan and his Sons into a little corner of Arabia Felix, where I can find no room for them, and calls them to place them. For being that Chus the Son of Cham, and the Chiefs of his posterity, eight in number, were planted in Arabia, as himself confesseth, it it must needs be, that they had spread themselves over all the Country, before any of the sons of Jektan were of age sufficient to be the Fathers of Families, and lead Colonies thither. Jektan is credibly supposed not to have been born when such of Noah's posterity as are mentioned Gen. 10. dispersed themselves into new Plantations; but it is evident from the Text, that none of his children were then born, if their Father were. And this Bochartus doth acknowledge in two several places. First, granting that neither Phaleg, nor Jektan were present at the building of Babel, multo minus Jektanis filii post aliquos annos genti; much less the sons of Jektan begot many years after; Lib. 1. c. 16. And secondly, affirming that Jektan and his children came not within the curfew of Confounded Languages, quia nondum erant genti, because then unborn, C. 15. Hereupon I conclude it to be very improbable that Jektan and his children should find room in the best parts of Arabia Felix, which Chus and his posterity had inhabited long before. And as it is improbable that the sons of Chus would plant themselves in the worst part of the Country for so many Ages, and leave the best and richest of it for some new adventures: So it is impossible that the sons of Jektan should either be removed to far from the rest of the house of Arphaxad, who were all planted on the East of the River Tygris, as was before shew'd; or that they should be able, had they been so minded, to break through the whole Countries of the Assyrians, Chusites, and other Nations, to come unto the utmost corners of Arabia Felix. He that believes they did, or could, must have a stronger Faith than mine; but it shall never conduce any thing to his justification. Nor am I moved at all at that which seems to me to be his weightiest Argument, namely, that the Arabians, particularly Joseph Ben Abdallahi, and Mahomet Ben Jacob, two of their chief Writers affirm, that Jektan was the Founder of their Tongue and Nation; no more than I am moved to think that the Saracens are derived from Sara the Wife, and not from Hagar the Concubine and servant of Abraham; because that people do report it for their greater glory.

And for the several Nations of Arabia Felix, whose original he ascribes to the sons of Jektan, I see so many transpositions of Syllables, alterations even of Radical Letters, such and so many wrested Originations, as by the like liberty of making quidlibet ex quolibet, it were no difficult matter to find place for them in any Country whatsoever. For how extorted and unnatural are the derivations of the Albani from Almoda, of the Manite from Abimail, of the Joharite from Johab? How impossible is it that Jareth should give name to the file which Pholomy call Nuege, Isidore, Insula Teracoma or Ac-Sipitrum, as the Latins hath it, that is to say, the Isle of Hank, from the abundance of Hank which were there bred: There being another Island of the same name near unto Sardinia (so called for the self same reason) and a Town called Jerax in Hannoniæ a Region of Egypt, to which Jareth might as well lay claim (if that would carry it) as to this Teracoma, or Ac-Sipitrum, in the Gulf of Arabia? How improbable that Ophir should give name to Uphre, a poor Isle of the Red Sea, Obal to Sinus Aualiter in Aethiopia, on the other side of that Gulf? Or that Diela must be fixed in Arabia, for no other reason, but because the word signifieth a Palm-tree, of which that Country yields good plenty, as if some other Countries did not yield as much? These and some other reasons hereafter following have made me bold to differ from that learned man in this particular, whose industry and abilities I do otherwise honour; and rather to look for Jektan, and his sons in the East part of the World, where the Scriptures place them; than in the South (with reference to the Wilderness, or Land of Madian, in one of which the Book of Genesis was written) where Bochartus placeth them. Yet so far I must yield to that learned man, that some of the Descendants of Jektan in long tract of time, moved with the rarities of the place, might come from India, and plant themselves upon the Sea-Coasts of Arabia Felix; as the Arabians at this day, moved with the Wealth and Trade of India, have possessed themselves of many of the Ports and pieces on the Shores thereof.

Now the Text telleth us of the Sons of Jektan, that their dwelling was from Media, as thou goest to Sephar, a Mount of the East; so that by these two boundaries, Media and Sephar, their habitation must be found. I know, Bochartus would have Mefia to be Mefia, a noted Port, Town on the South-west of Arabia Felix, and Sephar to be the City of Sephar in the South-east of that Country; that City giving name to some Mount adjoining. But being they both lie directly South of the place in which Mefib wrote, I cannot see how this position can agree with the word of Scripture; and therefore we must look for both in some other place. And first to find out Mefia, we need go no further than Bochartus himself, who maketh Mefib; the last of the Sons of Aram, the Son of Sem (according to the general opinion of most Writers else) to be planted in the Mountainous tracts of Mesopotamia, from him called Mont Mefius, more of which before. And then for Sephar, which the Text calleth a Mount of the East; it is to be the Southern part of Mount Imau, by Pholomy named Bitagi, by the Moderns Gates extending from Mount Caucasus to the Cape Comari in the higher India, as Ptolema a right learned man doth conceive it to be; We have without more difficulty found out the dwellings of the sons of Jektan according to the bounds laid down in holy Scripture. But for fear this may not satisfy, for want of some Seconds to Ptolema (if Truth needs a Second) we have Siphare a City of Asia, directly East from Mont Mefius, or the dwellings of Mefib; both in the East parts of the World, with reference unto the place in which Mefib writ: Mont Mefius being placed by Pholomy in the 74 degree of Longitude, and the 37 of Latitude; and Siphare 36 degrees more toward the East, but with no more than two degrees of Latitude super-added to it. And this agreeth to the position assigned to the sons of Jektan by Josephus, Eusebius, and S. Hierome the emendation of Bochartus coming in to help. It is affirmed by Josephus that the Jokanites possessed all that Tract, ὅσοι Κασπίου ποταμοῦ τὴν βόρρην, καὶ τὴν ἀνατολὴν ὅσως τὴν ἑσπέρην, which lieth about Caspian a River of India, together with such parts of Syria as did border near it. These words being borrowed from Josephus both by Eusebius and S. Hierome the first intendment of Syria reads Syria, and the other Jeria, but neither rightly: there being no such places in the world as Jeria; and Syria & Seria (or the Country of the Seres) lying too far off to border on Caspian a River of India; Bochartus therefore helps them out, conceiving (I think right enough) that for Syria we should there read Asia, and withal granting, as he may, that Asia in the largest latitude and extent thereof, comprehending Parapamisiu & Arachosia, extended as far Eastward as the River Caspian. So that we have found out a dwelling for the sons of Jektan, betwixt Mont Mefius & Siphare, a Town of Asia; which probably might give name to some Mount adjoining, as Sephar by Bochartus is supposed to do to some of the Arabian hills bordering near unto it. And as these situations do agree exactly with the meaning of those ancient Writers, so it is also very suitable to the other Plantations of the sons of Arphaxad. For this I look on as a matter out of all dispute, that Phaleg and Jektan being both too young to go upon any new Adventures, when so many of the residue of Noah's posterity removed toward Shinar: kept themselves under the tuition of their Grandfather Noah; or at least wandered not from the Plantation of their Father Arphaxad: till Joktan's Sons being grown to be Fathers of Families, were forced to call about for new habitations. And when necessity compelled them to seek new seats, I would fain know why they should think of making a themselves a way to Arabia Felix, through Countries peopled and possessed a long time before, when they had Elbow-room enough on the East of Tygris, and the unpeopled Countries of some parts of India lay to near at hand.

Nor want we as good evidence and as little forced for some of their Plantations in the Eastern parts, as Bocharius hath fancied for them in Arabia: For Almodena might probably be the Founder of Almodena, the Metropolis of Mesopotamia, not far from Mefia or Mus Mafius the Western Boundary: and Jarab of the Nation of the Arachians inhabiting near Siphara the Eastern limit, aligned unto the Sons of Joktan. With what an easy change might Obai or Chobai be supposed to be the Father of the Cabulites or Paropamisians Hidaram of the Orites an Indian people near unto the other? But these North-Eastern parts being peopled, or not very pleasant, how many of the Sons of Joktan that we find in the Southern parts of India? Bocharius himself confesseth that the Land of Opbir (another of the Sons of Joktan) was a part of India; but whether Sumatra, Teprehon, or Arachia Cherifensis, I dispute not here. Like evidence there is for Saba, remembrances of whose name are found in Sabalalla one of the mouths of the River Indus, Sabana, a City of the Golden Cherifensis, a River in the same tract named Sabanu, and a City called Saba: besides the whole Nation of the Saba mentioned by Dionysius in his Periegesis. And though some late Critics read it Siba instead of Saba, (as that there was an Indian Nation called Siba is confessed on all sides): yet seeing Egyptians find the Saba in this Country also, I cannot fee but that there should be room enough in India for both people to dwell in. For Abimail another of the Sons of Joktan, we find more evident footsteps of him in the Mali or Malian Indian people, in Malata & Maliba two Towns of India, in Malum an Indian Mountain, and finally in Malai Colan a Promontory of Aurea Cherifensis than in the Manite of Bocharius. For if Abimail signify the Father of the Mali, as he saith it doth, he was more like to be the Father of the Mali commonly and literally so called, whom we find in India, than that we should be forced to look for them in the Manite, or look for the Manite in the house of Abimail. Idia must be planted in Arabia Felix for no better reason, than because the word signifieth a Palm, whereof there is plenty in that Country: I doubt not but to find as many Palms to plant by amongst the Indians, as Bocharius doth among the Arabians. And finally, if Chabarmaveb, or Charamaitis an Arabian Region, have such resemblance to the name of Chabarmaveb, as to take that Appellation from him, as Bocharius telleth us it did: we may conclude with equal, if not better reason, that the Chadramaitis an Indian people, created upon the mouth of the River Indus, upon whose fountains some of the residue of his Brethren had their habitations, had their first Original from that Chabarmaveb. For Havilah or Chavilah the Antients especially fit him in the Indies also, not far from Saba and Opbir two of his Brethren: to whose authority I submit, because I find a Province in the Golden Cherifensis, called the Kingdom of Aou, and thought to be so called from this very man. And I conceive the like also of the rest of the Joktanites whose habitations might be found in India, or near Mefia and Sepha, if one would take that liberty of Criticizing, altering and transposing letters, as Bocharius doth, only to fix them in a place where they never were. Suffice it that this short Essay may inform the Reader, that Bocharius was too confident a lover of his own opinion, where he affirms, Nec locum alium Sephar nominis, nec illa posterum Joktan in Aria aut India vestigia jam perspicere: that is to say, that there is no such place as Sephar, nor any track or footsteps of the Sons of Joktan to be found in Aria, or the Indies. The contrary whereof is too clearly evidenced.

These were the Generations and dispersions of the Sons of Sem, contracted in a narrower compass than either the posterity of Cham or Japhet: of whom the first, besides the great footing which he had in Assyria, did possess all Africa, and the other, besides his share in the greater Asia, filled almost all the lesser Asia, and the whole Continent of Europe with the Isles thereof, with his fruitful Progeny. And first beginning with Cham, we find him the Father of four Sons, that is to say, Cafis, Misram, Phut, and Canaan: of which, only Phut the third Son hath no issue assigned him. To Cafis the eldest Son were born Saba and Havilah, and Sabab, Nimrod, Sabecha, and Raamah, who was the Father of Sheba and Dedan. And unto Misram the second Son were born Ludim, and Ananim, Lehabim, Naphthum, Pabsum, Caphorim, and Cafubim, who was the Father of Philistim. Of Canaan and his issue we shall speak hereafter. In the mean time we will dispose of these first branches of the flock of Cham, beginning first with Chus the eldest, and so descending to the rest of this first Line. And first for Chus, though it be generally said both by the Greek and Jewish Writers, that he was the Father of the Aethiops in the heart of Africa; yet upon better search he is found to have gone no further than Arabia, possessing himself of a good part of that which is called Petraea, and some part of Arabia Felix. For whereas Zippora the wife of Mofes, was daughter unto Jethro the Priest or Prince of Madian Exod. 2. v. 16 and yet is called an Aethiopian woman, in the 12 of Num. v. 1. It must needs be, that by Aethiopian in the last place, must be meant an Arabian: for Madian doubtless was a City of Arabia near unto the Red Sea, as is apparent by Josephus for the Jews, Pliny for the Grecians, and S. Hierom for the Latine Writers. But we shall canvass this more thoroughly in its proper place: the strength of reason serving for a supplement of that one defect, which is, that there is no remainder of the name of Chus in any of the Cities, Provinces, Counties, Hills or Rivers of that Country, by which his planting there might be made more evident. Sheba, the eldest Son of Chus, fell himself down on the shores of the Red Sea, as near his Father as he could; becoming the Original of the great and wealthy Nation of the Saba: he to the much celebrated City of Saba, memorable for abundance of the best Frankincense, being their Metropolis or head City. A Nation seated in the most Southern part of this Peninsula, (viz. in Solomon's time to that famous Lady called in the old Testament from her Country, the Queen of Sheba;) and in the new Testament from the situation of it, the Queen of the South: the holy Spirit in both places giving her an ample and remarkable testimony.

For Havilah or Chavilah the second of the Sons of Chus most probable it is that he possessed himself of that part of Arabia, which lay nearest unto Babylonia, and that he gave name to that Land of Havilah, which the River Pison is said to encompass, Gen. 2. 21. Some footsteps of his name remain in the Chauloteis Erastotiles, the Chauloteis of Strabo Antiochus, but more plainly in the Chavilae of Pliny: being all three but one people, though thus diversely named, and all of them planted towards the Persian Gulf, and so to Babylon. On the same shore of the Persian Gulf, we are to look for Sabia the third Son of Chus, where Pliny informs us of a City called Saphia, and of an Island in the same Gulf called Sophia also, from whence in probability some of this people might pass over into Persia, on the other side of the Gulf, and there give names to the Sabaei, which by the transposition of the letter T, are by Pliny called the Stabaei. That Nimrod the fourth Son of Chus did first plant himself in Babylonia, the Scripture is so plain and positive, that nothing need be added to it. Of Sabtea the fifth Son, I confess I can find no track in any of the ancient Authors. For why we should admit of so great a change, as first, of Binto M, and then of Tinto D, (which could not easily be done by very careless Transcribers) and so find Stabaea in Semidacea, a City or Country of the Carmenians on the Persian side of the Gulf, I can see no reason: And therefore rather chuse to mingle him and his Posterity with the Son of Sabia, and the children of his brother Regma, all planted on the same shore of the Persian Gulf. For that Regma (our English Bibles call him Raama) was settled on the banks of the Bay of Persia, hath good authority, that there is no dispute to be made of that: Pliny placing there the City of Regma (Regma it is called in the Latin Translation) by which name it occurth in Stephanus also in his Book De Urbibus, Kas. viij. cap. 1 for Tigridis uolam. And Regma, or the Persian Gulf, as his words there are. And not far from thence we are to look for his Son Sheba; both being joynted together in the Book of God; and both there are said to bulic and employ themselves in the Trade of Merchandizing; The Merchants of Sheba and Raamah (saith the Text) they were they Merchants; they occupied in the Fair with chief of all Spices, and with all precious Stones, and Gold, Ezek. 27. 22. So that the Nations of the Sabaean, though descended at the first from several Parents inhabited the lower parts of Arabia Felix from one Sea to the other; as evidently appeareth by those words of Pliny: where he informeth us most truly, that the Sabaean, an Arabian people, well known for their abundance of Frankincense, ad utraque maria peritis gentibus habitare, had spread themselves over all the Country, even from the Red Sea to the Gulf of Persia. Finally, in the same track we find Dedan the other Son of Regma, and the last of all the Sons of Chus: there being on the mouth of the Persian Gulf (but not on the Arabian Coast thereof) not only a City, but a Province called by the name of Dedan which both Orcinus, and some other late Geographers do take notice of. And more than so, the Prophet Ezekiel joyns him with his brother Sheba, and makes them both to follow the same Trade of Merchandizing; The men of Dedan were they Merchants, Chap. 27. 15. Sheba and Dedan, and the Merchants of Tarshish, Chap. 38. 13. They brought the borns of Ivory, and Ebony, saith the Prophet in the former Text.

The head of the next house of the race of Cham, was Misram, the second Son, of whom it is generally affirmed, that leaving his elder brother Chus and his posterity, in the rich and delectable Countries of Arabia Felix, and the next parts to Babylonia, or the land of Shinar, he went with his own Son and his Brother Phut, into Africa, and there planted Egypt. Of this there is no question amongst the Learned, though all the tracks and footsteps of Misram be quite worn out: unless any thing of it were preserved in the word Misri, by which the Egyptians anciently called the first Month in the year; or in that of Misre, by which name the Arabians call Egypt, to this day: But because Egypt is called Misraim in the Hebrew Bibles, that only is sufficient without further evidence. And therefore leaving him in Egypt, let us look after his Son Ludim, whom he sent to people Aethiopia, the next Country to him. For that this Ludim, was the Father of those Aethiops; many good reasons are alleged. First, from the Text of Elsiah, Chap. 66. v. 10, and Jer. 46. 9. where Lud is said to be very skilful in drawing the bow; which agrees punctually with the Character given unto the Aethiops by Strabo, Herodotus, Diodorus Siculus, and others of the ancient Writers. Secondly, from the joyning of the children or people of Ludim with those of Phut, in the place of Elsiah before cited: which Phut may very probably be the City which the Grecians call Phyle, situate not far from Syene, on the very borders of Aethiopia, and antiently inhabited both by the Aethiops; and Egyptians, as Strabo, and some others of the Antients witness. Thirdly, from the conjunction of the Children of Lud or Ludim, with those of Chus, on the Gulf of Arabia, and those of Phut, or Lybians, on the other side of Mount Atlas, both next neighbours to them; as in Ezek. 30. 5, and that of Jer. above mentioned; (where our English very strangely rendereth Ludim by the name of Lydians) which dwell too far off both from Chus and Phut, to be joyned together in one action. But of this, more than enough already; the arguments being so strong, and so most demonstrative. I go on therefore to the next, only observing by the way, that the Aethiops mentioned in the Texts of our English Bibles, are not those of Africa; but the Chusites of Arabia Felix; our Translators always rendering Chus by Aethiopia. The Assyrians, who come next, I know not where to find, or in what place to look for them, unless they were the same with the Amantes of Solinus, and the Hammaites or Pliny, a people seated on the Sea-side near the greater Syria, to which the neighbourhood of the Lebanim may give some countenance; who seem to be the same with the people of Libya, a Province seated betwixt Egypt and Cyrenica, and were called Libyegypsi by the old Geographers, to differentiate them from the Inhabitants of the greater Lybia, whereof more hereafter. For the Naphthum, I am also at a loss, unless we find them somewhere in Cyrenica; and that some remnant of the name be in Aphid famm, which occurs in Pliny. But for the Tarshishim, I think no question need be made, but that they were the people of that Province of Egypt, which in divers places of the Scripture is called Pabais, as Els. 11. 11. Jer. 44. 1. Ezek. 29. 14. and seems to be that part of Egypt which is called Thebes, where Pliny placeth Pabais, an In-land Town not far from Thebes. (And Pardus the Greek or Sepaguntin term that, which in the Hebrew is called Pabais.)

Hitherto we have found the Nations which descended from the Sons of Misram, in Egypt, and the Countries adjoining to it. And there, or thereabouts, we are to look for Caphorim, and Cafubim, the two Sons remaining. I know there hath been great pains taken to find the Cafubim in Colchis, and the Caphorim in Cappadocia, or Pontus, not far from Trabzon, where notwithstanding there is no track of the names remaining. But this being so far off from Egypt, in, and near which both Misram himself, and all the rest of his Sons were planted, I can by no means yield to it, though to content such learned men as would fain have it so. I think it possible enough that some of the Egyptians in succeeding times, moved with the Fame of that great wealth which Colchis was supposed to yield to some Adventurers; might leave their native soil to inhabit there. And therefore I think rather, with the learned Junius, that the Cafubim were first planted in the Region of Caffinis (not far from Damata, a chief Town of Egypt) which retains somewhat of the name; and so doth Coprus, an old City of Egypt,

Egypt,

Egypt, of the name of Cophetum. Or if it did not, as it doth, why the name of Cophet, which at this day is given to the Christians of Egypt, may not be thought to have its first rise from Cophetum, rather than that they are to be called quasi Ægyptii, correctly for Ægyptii, I must needs say I am not fatisfied. Besides, it being clear in Scripture, that the Cafubim and Cophetum dwelt near together, and that the Philistini are said to defend from Cafubim, if Cafubim should go for Colchis, and Cophetum for Cappadocia, we must first carry them I know not how far off from the rest of their Brethren, against the method of all Plantations; and then bring the Philistini back again from Colchis, to find a dwelling on the borders of the land of Egypt, from whence their Ancestors and Allies were so far remote. Whereas by settling these two Nations amongst the rest of their Brethren, the journey of the Philistini unto Canaan, and settling themselves in the possessions of the Avim (a Canaanish people) whom they had subdued, Deut. 2. 25. is both easy and natural. But before we follow these Philistini further in their new Plantation amongst the Canaanites, we will first see what became of Phut, the third son of Cham. And if we guide ourselves in this Labyrinth by the clew of Antiquity, we shall find him settled West of his Brother Misraim, and to the Atlantic Ocean, the Lake of Trismis paring their Dominions. Some Relicks of the name there were in the time of Japheth, who telleth us of a River of Mauritania, which in his time retained the name of Phut: Pliny makes mention of it, also Plutarch takes notice of a River in those parts called Phutib, which comes very near it. And so doth Ildore Origin. l. 2. But St. Hieron in my mind puts it out of doubt, whose words I shall put down, and to leave Africa; Phut Lybia, a quo & Mauritania fluxit usque ad presens Phut dicitur, omnique circa eam Regi Phytensis cuius res multi Scriptores tam Graecum quam Latini testes sunt. Where we have not only a River, but a Province of the name of Phut, and many ancient Writers both Greek and Latin called to witness to it.

And now we should proceed to Canaan and his Sons (eleven in all) being the fourth and last branch of the house of Cham. But being they all kept together in or near the land of Canaan, we shall find him there; or meet with them in such Plantations and Colonies as they sent abroad, under the title of Phenicians. And therefore go we next to Japhet, whose Tons God promised to enlarge, as indeed he did; spreading his branches over Europe, the lesser Asia, and a great part of the greater Asia. To him were born seven Sons in all, that is to say, Gomer and Magog, Madai and Javan, Tubal Mefech, and Thyras: Of which the issue of two only are upon record, viz. Afchenaz, Kipthah, and Togarmah, the Sons of Gomer; Elifha, Tarfifh, Kittim, and Dodanim, the Sons of Javan. And first for Gomer and his Sons, the first possessed themselves of convenient dwellings in the greater and the lesser Asia: Gomer himself first planting in the mountainous places of Albania, where the Mountains called Immerius long retained his name; and after changing that unpleasant and unfruitful dwelling for the Plains of Phrygia, in which the City Cimmeris, in the days of Pliny, did preserve his memory. For that the posterity and people of Gomer, called at first Cimmerians, came to take the name of Immerians, as of Ciniri afterwards, is generally agreed upon amongst the Learned. Now then, as Gomer fixt himself in the greater Asia, so did his eldest son Afchenaz in Phrygia minor, and the Country of Troas, spreading himself a long upon the Hellepont, and those Greecish Seas, as far as Bithynia. In all which places there were left some memory of this Plantation. For in Bithynia there is a

Bay called Sinus Afcanius, together with a River and a Lake of the same name also. And in the lesser Phrygia, and the Country of Troas, there was both a City and a Province adjoining, anciently known by the name of Afcania, and the Afcanie itself also on the coast of the Ægean. Nor is it any thing unlikely, but that in honour of this Afchenaz, the Kings and great men of those parts, took the name of Afcanius. Of which name, besides Afcanius the son of Aeneas, we find a King mentioned in the second of Homer's Iliads, which came unto the aid of Priamus at the siege of Troy. In the same quarters of the World we find Ripath ally, the founder of the Riphet, a people dwelling in the East parts of Bithynia, and spreading also over Paphlagonia: In both which Provinces there are some remnants of his name to be found amongst the Antients. For, besides that Josephus faith expressly, that the Paphlagonians anciently were called Riphet, there is mention in Apollonius's Argonauticks of the River Rhebeus, which rising in Bithynia, emptieth it self into the Pontus Euxinus; and of Paphlagonia, of which River Pliny also doth inform us: and Stephanus doth not only acquaint us with the River it self, but tells us also of a Region of the same name, and of a people thereabout, which are called Rhebeati. Nor need we look much further, to find out the seat of Togarmah, the third son of Gomer, whom the Prophet Ezekiel not only joyneth with his Father as two neighbouring Nations, but makes both of them to lie Northwards of Judea; Gomer and all his bands, the hosts of Togarmah in the North quarters, and all his bands, cap. 38. 6. So that they do not gudge amiss, who place Togarmah and his Progeny in Cappadocia: a Country not only bordering near to the Plantations of Gomer, and lying on the North of the land of Canaan, but very well stocked with an excellent breed of Mules and Horses, as Strabo testifieth in the eleventh Book of his Geography; with which commodities they traded at the Fairs of Tyre, as the same Prophet tells us of them, Chap. 27. 14. But for a more evident proof of this, that Togarmah's dwelling must be found in Cappadocia, we must first know that the Greek Translators call him generally by the name of Togarmas; and then, that anciently there was a people in Cappadocia and Galatia, whom Strabo calls Trocmi, and Tully Trogmii, by Stephanus they are named Trocmi, and Trogmades in the Council of Chalcedon, in which Cyriacus Bishop of the Trogradensis (Kie-Koiois Enionon & Tegryndian) is often mentioned.

Having thus done with Gomer, and the sons of Gomer, we will next pursue the rest of the sons of Japhet, except Javan only, whom with his four sons we will keep together. And the next son of Japhet is Magog, concerning whom there hath been much dispute and difference amongst our Antiquaries, some making him the Father of the Scythians, and some of the Goths and others finally of the Tartars: all of them thinking that such terrible names as Gog and Magog, could not belong to any but such terrible Nations. And possible enough it is, that some of his posterity in succeeding times, finding their own fates too narrow for them, might remove further Northwards, and be the founders of some Scythian and Tartarian Nation; but that Magog himself in his first Plantation, should wander to far out of the way from the rest of his Brethren, when he had elbow-room enough amongst them, I cannot easily imagine. When therefore I find a Region in Stephanus called Gogareus, between Iberia and Colchis; and read in Pliny, that the City of Cata-Syria, which the Greecians call Hierapolis, was by the Syrians themselves called Magog: I shall not trouble my self to look for Magog any where else, than in those Countries where they have left such evident

Land-

Land-marks to discern themselves by. But this we shall the better see by looking out the dwellings of his two brethren, Mefech and Tubal, who being joyned together with Gog and Magog, Ezek. 38. 2. and 39. 1. are very unlike to have their dwellings far abroad: or that they could concur in any publick Action against the Jews, according to the scope and purpose of the holy Prophet. Now it is probable (if not more) that Mefech, whom the Antients named Mefech, seated himself on the North and North-East of Syria, in the confines of Colchis and Armenia, and so unto the Caspian or Hyrcanian Sea. For all along that Track runs a ridge of Hills, which Pliny, Polony, and Pomponius Mela call Montes Melchici, differentiating Colchis from Armenia, and both from Iberia; and so make like to be the dwelling of Mefech or Mefech, and to take denomination from him. And this I am the rather induced to think, because Tubal, whom the Scriptures generally joyn together with Mefech, is by most Writers said to have settled himself in Iberia, the next Province to it. Josephus also telling us, that anciently the Iberi were called Tubethi, though called Iberians afterwards on some new occasion. And hereto the constant tradition of the Spaniards gives some good authority, who boast of their descent from Tubal, which cannot otherwise be granted, than as they were a Colony of these Iberians, from whence the Continent of Spain was once called Iberia; and where one of the principal Rivers is still called Iberus. For Madai, the third Son of Japhet, it is most plain by the authority of Scripture (were there no proof else) that he was the Father of the Medes; who in the book of Daniel, and that of Hefter, are represented to us by no other name than that of Madai.

Thus having took a view of those who fixt themselves in either, or in both the Asia's; let us look on Thyras, Javan, and the Sons of Javan, who not contented with their dwellings in the lesser Asia, filled all Europe by degrees with their numerous progenies. And first beginning with Javan as the Elder Brother, most Authors make him the Original of those Greek Nations which pass under the general names of Ionians; and there is very good ground for the assertion, considering that the Greek Translators of the Bible instead of Javan, read Yavan, and that all those who elsewhere ordinarily are called Ionians, are by Homer, one of the ancientest of the Greeks, named Ionians. Now Javan and Yavan sound so like each other, that one may very well conclude, that they were the same. A name not only proper to the Albanians, and their Colchians, (though probable enough first belonging to them of Antica) but comprehending also the Bactrians and Acheans also; yea, and extending also into Macedonia, as appears Dan. 8. 21. where Alexander the Great, in the Hebrew is called King of Javan, which we English Grecia. Nor do we much dissent Javan from the rest of that flock, by carrying him cross the Seas into another part of the World; for he might go along with Gomer in his second Plantation; and, leaving him well settled in the greater Phrygia, and his Son Afchenaz in the lesser; might then with very little trouble (and no improbability at all) pass over the Hellepont, and plant himself in Attica, called at first Ionica, faith Plutarch in the life of Thucydides. Or if any one notwithstanding conceive this for too great a leap, and will rather think with Hecataeus, that the Ionians came out of Asia into Greece (as Strabo cites him to that purpose) I shall not much contend against that opinion; so it be also granted on the other side, that Javan, not having room enough on the shores of Asia, passed over into Greece as a Land uncoccupied. With Javan went Elifha his eldest Son, the Father of the Eoles, or Eoli- ans, on the Afion side, as Josephus hath it; and the Founder of Elys in Peloponnesus, and Planter of the Greecian Isles, which by the Prophet Ezekiel 27. 7. are called the Isles of Elifha. And it agrees exceedingly well with the Isles of Greece, what by the Prophet is affirmed of the Isles of Elifha; namely, that the Inhabitants thereof did trade to Tyre with Blow and Purple in which some of the Greecian Isles were fuch excellent Artifices, that Carpaphus had the name of Porphyrie, and Cibira was called Tlo-pugosoa, only from the abundance of Purple, which he had amongst them. Not to say any thing of Coos, Nisyros, and Gyarus, and some other of the Cyclades, renowned in good Authors, for that Commodity.

A shorter Journey, but withal a far shorter Territory, fell to the lot of Tarfifh the second Son; whom Javan, when he travelled further upon new discoveries, left settled in Cilicia, a Province of the lesser Asia, where either he, or some of his Posterity, in honour of him, built the City of Tarfis, the principal City of that Province. For that Tarfis in those early days should go into Spain, and there build Tartessus, I take to be a strange (if not idle) Romance; that Tome being built by the Phenicians many Ages after, without relation unto Tarfis, or his memory either. What Voyages or Plantations those of Cilicia or Tarfis made in times succeeding, as I now here find, so it is not material to my present purpose; which principally is to settle the Sons of Noah in their first habitations. On therefore unto Cittim, the third Son of Javan, whom Josephus setteth first in the life of Cyprus, where he finds a City called Cittim, the birth-place of Zeno the Stoick, thence furnished Kittius. Josephus is herein followed by St. Hieron in his Notes on Genesis, in whole time (as Pinius telleth in his Comment on Ezekiel) the Town of Cittim was still standing; so do Eubathius in his Hexameron, and divers others. The Author of the Book of Maccabees sets him further off, giving the name of Cittim unto Macedonia. After that (saith the Author) Alexander the Son of Philip, went forth of the land of Chethim, and then Darius King of the Persians and Medes, Cap. 1. 1. And after in the 8. Chapter of the same Book, verf. 5. Persius King of Macedonia is called King of the Cittim. But this doth no way contradict that of his first planting in Cyprus, where it is very probable that he made his dwelling for a time, by reason of the neighbourhood of his Brother Tarfifh (Cilicia) and the City of Tarfis lying near unto it. But finding in time that Island to be either too barren, or too small for his people; and that the other parts both of Greece and Asia were taken up already by the first Adventurers, he might finally fix himself, or some of his posterity, in Macedonia, as a spare place which no body could lay claim unto. That either he or any of his Sons did plant first in Italy, which I see Bochartus would fain have, were against the method of Plantations; and he must give them wings to fly that conveyeth them thither, when as yet Mankind was not taught the use of shipping, or not accustomed at least to make long voyages. But that in course of time, as the World grew fuller, and that Greece was not able to contain its multitudes, some of the race of Cittim might pass over into Italy, the passage thither from some of the Ports of Greece being short and ealie, I am apt enough to believe, and in its proper place shall declare my self for it. Nor can I otherwise agree with him, as concerning Dodanim, whom amongst all right and reason he hath placed in Gaul; making the River Rodanus, one of the principal of that Country, to be named of him; when the Greecians, mistaking the letter Daleth for that of Reph (as indeed the letters are so like, that one may may very easily be mistook for the other) most commonly present unto us by the name of Rhodomini. Admitting which, it is more proper, in my mind, to settle Rhodomini for a while in the life of Rhoda, lying so near the dwellings of his other brethren, till wandering room for the increase of his posterity in so small an Island, he might coast along the shores of Peloponnesus, and fix himself finally in Epirus by his Brother Eliphas, where in the Province of the Malassians, we shall find a City called Dodona, without any such mixture or change of letters, as before is mentioned. For that the three fourth parts of Europe in respect of Asia, should be planted all at once by the sons of Javan, is so incredible an imagination, that he must have a very strong fancy or be of very light belief, which can entertain it. Finally as for Thyras the last son of Japhet, having accompanied his brother Javan to the shores of Asia, and seeing him passed over the Seas to Greece, he took the opportunity of the next Strait or Fretum (since called Thracicus Rhiphorus) and fixed himself in Thrace, which Country he gave name unto, as most Writers tell us. Nor want there such apparent footprints of the name of Thyras, besides the name of Thracia (as some spell the word) which may add good authority to this general testimony; there being both a River and an Haven-town not far from Byzantium, which Phry, Pulony and Mila call Atbyras; a River and Town called Tyrus in the Province of Media, bordering next to Thrace, whereof most of all the old Geographers have taken notice; and finally the Thracians calling their God, Mars, by the name of Thyras. Not to say any thing of Tereus, Theraps, and some others of the Kings of Thrace, whose names come very near unto that of Thyras, as the founder of their Nation.

This have we seen the several Generations and Dispersions of the Sons of Noah, so far forth as their names are registered in holy Scripture: these being the Heads and Leaders of those several Tribes which joyntly together in the project of the building of Babel, and afterwards dispersed themselves, as before was shewn. But that no more than these (I mean heads of Families) descended in so long a time from the loyns of Noah, that they should have towards the new peopling of the world in an hundred years (for so long it must be at least from the Flood to the building of Babel) no more than sixteen Sons in all; and ten of those sixteen good childless also to the grave, is not a thing to be imagined. Nor is it to be thought, that all the people which were born since the Flood till then, could meet together at one place as by infpiration; or being met, would join together in a work of so little profit; or, that if Noah or Son had been there amongst them, they would not have diffused them from that foolish enterprise. And therefore I should rather be of their opinion, which think that Noah fixed himself in those parts, which lay nearest to the place where the Ark took land: and having planted as far Eastward as he thought convenient, sent out the surplusage of his people under the Conduct of one or more of these Undertakers; directing them perhaps to the land of Shinar, where himself had dwelt before the Flood. Where being come, and destitute of graver and more sober counsels, they fell upon that vain attempt, which became their ruin; and made them scatter and disperse themselves into so many Companies. For in my mind Sir Walter Ralegh pleads the point exceeding strongly, that it must needs be that Noah was settled in the East, and had well peopled all those parts which lay nearest to him, before he sent his Troop abroad upon new discoveries. For being it is expressly said in holy Scripture, that as they went from the East, they found a plain in the Land of Shinar; it must needs follow without controversy, that they came from the East Countries into Shinar or Babylonia and not from that part of Armenia, (as the vulgar opinion is) which lay North thereof. Now that the Countries whence they came were not left utterly desolate upon this remove, but very sufficiently provided both of men and Cities, appeareth by those huge Armies which Zoroaster the King of Bactria, and Staurobates a King of the Indians, were able to bring into the field. Of whom the first being invaded by Ninus the Assyrian Monarch, encountered him with an Army of 400000 fighting men; the other on the like occasion out-vied Semiramis for numbers: and yet her Army did consist, as we read in Diodes Siculus, of three millions and a half of men, besides 10000 armed Waggon; whereof if we believe but the third part, it may serve to prove that the East must needs be planted before this Expedition towards Babylonia. For considering that Ninus the husband of Semiramis was but the third in descent from Nimrod, (that is to say, the son of Belus, the son of Nimrod) it had been a most impossible thing that such a vast increase should be made only out of Colonies in so short a time, as needs must be between the planting of the Countries before specified, and these two great actions; unless God raised them out of stones, or by some such miracle, to abate the pride of these tyrants over other Nations. Without a miracle of this nature (which I conceive no wise man would expect to find) it is, I say, a thing impossible that Staurobates should exceed Semiramis in number of men, as Diodes saith he did; he being but a Calling of a second Swarm, and the great Commanders of that part of the world from whence he came upon a second or a third Plantation. Add unto this, that those who have recorded the Acts of Alexander the Great, assure us that he found more Cities, and sumptuousness in that little Kingdom of Perus, which lay side by side to the East of the River Indus, than in all his other travels and undertakings: And this may serve instead of a further evidence, that the East Countries were not planted after this dispersion, but built, and peopled, and reduced under forms of Government, as soon as any in the World. Nor know I elsewhere to find either Noah himself, or Son and Japhet, unless they flaid behind with their Father Noah, or were disposed of by themselves in their several quarters: there being none of those, though most diligent men, who have writ of the Plantations of the World upon this dispersion, that either speak of any Nations planted by them, or of their settling in the Colonies of any one of their descendants. Which is to me a very strong Argument that they came not with the rest to the Plains of Shinar, but tarried still in those Habitations wherein God had placed them.

Against this I can see but two Objections of any moments; one from the Text, the other from an old Tradition amongst the Jews. That from the Text is gathered from those words of Moses, when having made his Catalogue of the Families of the Sons of Noah, he adds, And by these were the Nations divided in the Earth, after the Flood. Gen. x. v. ult. But these words, as I take it, do relate only unto that division which was made upon occasion of the Confusion of Languages, when they were forced to give over their work, and fort themselves into several Companies: and not to such Plantations as were made before: who being all of one tongue, though in divers dwellings, could not be looked upon as several and divided Nations. For the Tradition of the Jews, 'tis this, that from the beginning of the World to the building of Babel, that language which in after-times was called the Hebrew, was the common language of Mankind; and that it did continue uncorrupt in the house of Eber; (whence it had the name) because he joynted not with the rest in that proud and ungodly undertaking. Hence it may possibly be objected, that if there were any others of the off-spring of Noah, which came not with the rest to the Plains of Shinar, and consequently had no hand in that vain attempt, they could not come within the curse of Confused Languages, but mult needs speak the Hebrew Tongue, as well as those descended of the Loins of Eber. But against this Tradition, and the consequences of it, there are some things to be objected. For first it is but a Tradition, and therefore of no sure foundation to build upon. And secondly, it is such a Tradition as holds no good coherence with the truth or story; it being a most clear and demonstrative truth, that the Hebrew Tongue was not the Language which Abraham brought with him out of Chaldea and Mesopotamia, but that which he found spoken in the Land of Canaan at his coming thither, to which both he and his Posterity did conform themselves. Or had it been the Language of Eber, as they say it was, (but most undoubtedly was not) yet, thirdly, had this been a privilege conferred on Eber, that he and his Posterity should speak the Original Language without alteration or corruption, it must have been extended to all those of the house of Jacob, which descended from him; as also to the house of Laban in Padan-Aram, and to the Mediterranean and Ammonites as the seed of Lot; and finally to the Phoenicians and Idumians, descended of Abraham and Eliu; and not be limited and confined only to the house of Jacob. Either all these must be partakers of so great a privilege, because their Father Eber had obtained it for himself and his; or else it was not such a privilege, or given so universally and incommunicably to the house of Eber, as they say it was. So the Tradition falls to ground, as to this particular. And then admitting it for true, that those who staid behind with Noah spake the same Language which was common to the Fathers before the Flood, (be it the Hebrew, or what else soever it was) I see no reason to the contrary, but that it might in time be branched into several Languages or Dialects of the same one Language, by the commerce and intercourse which they had with Nations of a different speech; as well as those of Judab, in so short a time as the Captivity of Babylon, had lost the purity of that Language which they so much brag of, and could not understand their own Bibles at their coming home, but by an Interpreter. Of which see Neb. 5. 7, 8.

But to proceed: On this dispersion of the Families of the Sons of Noah, it came to pass, that though they all descended from one common Root, yet by the situations of their several dwellings, they came to be of several tempers and affections; in which they were so different from one another, that it might seem they had been made at first out of several Principles, and not at all derived from one common Parent. Of which thus Du Bartas.

O how full of Wonders strange, in Nature!
Sith in each Climate, not alone in stature,
Strength, colour, hair's; but that men differ do,
Both in their humours, and their manners too.
The Northern man is fair, the Southern foul;
That white, this black; that smiler, and this dour.
Thou' one's blith and frolicke, th' other stout and forward;
Th' one's full of courage, th' other a fearful coward, &c.

The ground or reason of which difference is to be attributed to the different tempers of those Countries in which they live, and to the different influences of the Heavenly Bodies on those several Countries which do continue still the same, though many times the Countries do shift and change their old Inhabitants. Hinc illa ex antiqua viis, et patria forte darunt, que sunt in libris gentes, aut commendant aut notant, laith a Modern but ridiculous Author. Two or three evidences of this truth will make it clear and evident to a practical judgment, which otherwise might appear obscure in the search of causes. Plinius hath told us of the Gauls, Primum corum impetio esse majorem quam virorum; secundum minorem quam feminarum. Which is the same which Rob. Dalingus hath told us of the Modern French, that be vigorous as action like Thunder, and ends in a smoke. De viri Gallorum subita ingenia, laith Cesar of the ancient Gauls: and I believe the present French are altogether as rash and hair-brain'd, as the other were. Gallia fœcunda Canisiorum, was part of the Character of the Gauls in the time of Juvenal, and it is told us of the French by some late Observers, that there are commonly more Lawtrials amongst them in one year, than have been in England since the Conquest. And yet the old Gauls in a manner are wholly rooted out of the Country, the several Nations of Franks, Burgundians, Britans, Normans, and Gals, being in possession of that several dwelling. Thus also it is said by Tacitus of the ancient Germani, Diem noctemque continuare potando, nulli obprobrium; it was no disgrace to any, to spend the whole day and night in drinking; and more than so, De jugendis affinitatibus, de bello deique et pace, in conviviis consultare; that they consulted over their Cups of their weighty business. Since which time though all Germany hath shifted almost all her old Inhabitants, and taken in new Colonies of Saxons, Avars, Thuringians, Danes, Slaves, Huns, Saxons, and other Nations; yet still those ill customs are as much in use amongst them, as ever formerly. To go a little further off: The old Philosopher Anacharsis tells us of the ancient Grecians, that at the beginning of their Feasts they used little Goblets, καλὰ ποτήρια δὲν μεγάλων πινάκων, and greater towards the end, when they were almost drunken: which custom still remains amongst them, as G. Sander observeth, notwithstanding the great length of time, and all the other changes of fate and people, which have happened since. I shall not speak here of the effeminateness of the Affrick, or the cruelty or implacableness of the African Nations, being as great now as in any of the former times, notwithstanding the great and numerous Plantations of the Greeks, Romans, Parthians, Saracens, Turks, and Tartars, successively, and respectively in the several Countries. And therefore I conclude this point in these words of Barclay, Heret usque in omni gentis sui quædam inconvicta, que hominibus pro condicione terrarum in quibus nasci consuevit, sua fata diviserit.

Nor is this all the consequent of this dispersion of the Families of the Sons of Noah; the separation of their persons producing, first, an alteration of affections, and that engendering natural Animosity: which secondly by their several interferences and Reasons of State, hath left almost no people without some such enemy which doth particularly & perversely cross them in all their Councils. Concerning which, take here the Observation of that notable Statesman and Historian, Philip de Comines: which though it be with reference to the Merdians of his own time. yet it may be accommodated generally to all States and Ages. "In rebus humanis ita comparation est, ut nullus fore sit populus quem non alius aliquis extorqueat, &c. It is (saith he) so ordered in the state of humane affairs, that there is almost no Nation without a more particular Enemy. The English are enemies to the French, the Scots to the English, the Portuguese to the King invertebrate hatred against the Spaniards. The Princes of Italy enjoy great possessions without any good title; but are continually oppoled by the more potent Cities of Venice, Florence, Genoa, and Lucca. The Aragonian Kings of Naples, have found perpetual Enemies of the Dukes of Anjou; as have the Dukes of Milan, of the house of Orleans. The Princes of Italy, and the Florentines, have a ditch at Venice; as the States of Genoa, and Sienna, have against the Florentines. In Germany the animosities have been great and of long continuance, between the Houses of Austria, and Bavaria; the hatred grown beyond all hopes of reconciliation which is between the Switzers, and the Austrian Family. The Dukes of Cleve, and Guick, are always upon ill terms with their Neighbours of Gelderland; and in the North, the Cities on the Baltic Seas have their continual quarrels with the Kings of Denmark. Nor are the enmities any thing less, if they be not greater, which are discernable amongst the people of Asia and Africa, than those that are above remembered. So far and to this purpose faith that notable and judicious Writer.

The consideration of which points, if there were no other, were of it self sufficient to show the necessary use of History and Geography, as well for the understanding the affairs of the Ages past, as for commerce and correspondence with the Nations present. For had no History been written in the former times, in what dull ignorance had we lived of all those occurrences which do so much concern the whole state of Mankind, and are our principal directors in Life and Action? in which respect the Orator must truly call it, Magistram vitam. For upon the credit of this History, the examples of our Ancestors, the grounds of civil prudence, and the fames of men do most especially depend. And certainly to draw back the mind to the contemplation of Matters long ago passed; to search out with diligence, and to deliver with faith, freedom, and the life of expression, such things as are found out on a diligent search; to represent unto our eyes the changes of Times, the Characters of Persons, the uncertainties of Councils, and the Conveyances of Actions, the subtilties of Pretensions, and the Secrets of State; must of necessity be a work of as publick use, as it is of great both pains and judgment. Besides, it gives a kind of eternity to all such men, who by their Councils or Achievements have deserved nobly of those Kingdoms, and Commonwealths, wherein they lived. And thereupon the Orator doth not only call it, Magistram vitam, but Lucem veritatis, Titem temporis, Notitiam vestigia, & Vite memoriam. According to which Character I find these Verses set before a Chronicle of some Kings of England (more worth than all the Book besides.)

For though in these days Miracles be fled,
Yet this shall of good Historicks be said,
They call back time that's past, and give life to the dead.

Nor want there other motives to endear unto us the use of History, besides the light it gives unto all the remarkable Actions of preceding times; and the eternity (if I may say so) which it conferreth on the Affairs themselves, by the preservation of their names from the ruins of time, and the pit of Oblivion. For first, it directeth men to Virtue, and deters them from Vice, by shewing forth the glorious memories of virtuous men and the ill favour which is left behind men of ungodly life; and especially keeps persons of most eminent place from letting loose the reins unto all licentiousness, by representing to their consideration, That all their Actions shall be laid open one day to the view of the Vulgar. Secondly, it hath been a principal Conserver of most Arts and Sciences, by keeping on Record the Dictates and Opinions of so many of the old Philosophers; out of which, a perfect body of Philosophy, and others of the Liberal Arts hath been collected and digested. Thirdly, it is the best School-master in the Art of War, and teacher of Stratagems; and in that can practically afford more punctual directions, than can be otherwise obtained; and is withal the best Assistant to the Statesman or Politician, who from hence draw their Observations and Conclusions; and become thereby fervent to their Prince and Country, though never travelled more than amongst their Books. So Archimedes in his study, and Demosthenes in his Orators Gown, endangered more the enemies of their several Countries, than the Athenians, or Syracusans, did by dint of Sword. And last of all, besides these civil benefits and considerations, and the great help which it affords in the way of discourse; there is no particular branch of knowledge more useful for the true and perfect understanding of holy Scripture, than that of Ecclesiastical and Profane History; or which gives clearer light to many dark passages thereof, especially in the Prophetical Writings of either Testament.

This, as it shews the necessary use and benefit which redounds from History, so doth it serve to offer in that commendation which belongs to the study of Geography also; without some knowledge wherein, the study of History is neither so pleasant, nor so profitable, as a judicious Reader would desire to have it. 'Tis true, Geography without History hath life and motion, but very unstable, and at random; but History without Geography, like a dead carcass, hath neither life, nor motion at all, or moves at least but slowly on the understanding. For what delight or satisfaction can any man receive from the reading of Story, without he know somewhat of the places, and the conditions of the people, which are therein mentioned? In which regard Ammius Marcellinus the Historian, hath deserved very well of all his Readers, premising to the Actions of every Country some brief Description of the place and chief Towns therein. For though the greatness of the Action doth enable and adorn the place; yet it is the knowledge of the place, which adds delight and satisfaction unto the reading of the Story, which conveys it to us. History therefore and Geography, like the two Fires or Meteors, which Philosophers call Cæter and Fulgor, if joined together, crown our reading with delight and profit; if parted, threaten both with a certain shipwreck; and are like two Sisters dearly loving, not without pity (I had almost said impiety) to be kept asunder. So as that which Sir Philip Sidney said of Argalus and Parthenia,

Her being was in him alone,
And he not being, he was none;

may be as justly said of History and Geography, as of those two Lovers. And yet this is not all the benefit which redounds from the study of Geography, which is exceeding useful to the reading of the holy Scriptures, as in discovering the situation of Paradise, the bounds and borders of those Countries which are therein mentioned; especially with relation to the travels of the Patriarchs, Prophets, Evangelists and Apostles, yea of Christ himself not otherwise to be comprehended and understood, but by the help of Geographical Tables and descriptions. Besides this, it is useful to most sorts of men, as to Astronomers, who are hereby informed of the different appearances of Stars in several Countries; their several influences and aspects, their rising and setting, according to different Horizons. Secondly, to Physicians, who are hereby acquainted with the different temper of mens bodies, according to the Climes they live in; the nature and growth of many Simples, and Medicinal Drugs, whereof every Country under Heaven hath some more natural and proper to it self, than to any others. Thirdly, to States-men, who from hence draw their knowledge of the nature and disposition of those people with whom they are to negotiate; the bounds and borders both of their own Kingdoms, and the Neighbouring Countries, with the extent of their respective Dominions by Sea and Land; without the exact knowledge of which, there would be a perpetual Seminary of Wars and discord. Fourthly, to Merchants, Mariners, and Souldiers; the several Profounders of which kinds of life, find nothing more necessary for them in their several callings, than a competent knowledge in Geography; which presents to them many notable advantages, both for their profit and contentment. Finally, by the study of Geography, a man that hath not opportunity nor means of travelling, may with as much benefit, but far less danger and expence, acquaint himself with the particular descriptions of Kingdoms, Provinces, Cities, Towns and Castles, with all things considerable in the same, together with the customs, manners, and dispositions of all Foreign Nations; and that too in as full a manner, as if he had survey'd the one, and observed the other, by a personal visit of the places represented to him.

Such is the necessary use which men of ingenious studies, and professions, do, and may make of History and Geography. In the course of their callings and employments. And there are some things also necessary to the knowledge of each, that we may study them with the greater benefit and contentment. To History, it is only requisite that it be defined, distinguished from such writings as do seem to challenge the name of Histories; and that somewhat be premised of those several Epistles, from which all people do begin their computations. But to Geography it is needful not only that we do define it, but that we explicate those Terms, or second Notions, which are not obvious to the understanding of every Reader. First then for History, if we consult the name or Quid nominis of it, it is derived ἱστορία ἵστω, ὅς ἑ. ἰ. videre; and therefore properly doth signify a relation of such remarkable Actions at which the Author was an Eye-witness, if not an Agent, Apud veteres enim (saith Hydore) nemo scriberebat Historiam, nisi qui interfuisse, & ea que scribenda essent videret. But now the customary use of the word hath taught it a more ample signification. History being defined to be A Perfect Relation of all Occurrences observable, happening in the State whereof it is written, described by the Motives, Pretences, Consultations, Speeches and Events; a special case being had both of Time and Place.

As for the writings which do challenge the name of History, but indeed are really distinguished from it, they are Commentaries, Annals, Diaries, or Journals, and Chronologies. First, Commentaries set down only a naked continuance of Events and Actions, without the Motives and designs, the Councils, Speeches, Occasions and Pretences of butcheries. So that Cæsar with more modesty than true propriety of speech, applied the name of Commentaries to the best History in the World, A History commended by King James to his Son Prince Henry, above all other profane Authors, both for the sweet flowing of the stile, and the worthiness of the matter it self. For Theseus ever (saith he) been of this opinion, that, of all Ethnick Emperors or great Captains, he hath farthest exceeded both in his practice and in his precepts, for Martial affairs. Which makes me the more wonder at the strange and unjust censure of Justin Lipsius who calls them Nudum & simplicem narrationem, for being intitled Commentaries, they do (saith he) not polliceri præter nomen; with pride and arrogance enough. 2. For Annals next; they are a bare recital only of the Actions happening every year, without regard had to the causes and pretences, or any of the ingredients required in History. So that Tacitus had no other Reason to give the name of Annals to his excellent Work, than that it is distinguished by the years of the Consul. Otherwise there is no great difference as unto the matter between an History and an Annal, the subject of them both being matter of State; and not such trivial things as Triumphs, Pageants, and such like, which stand not with the gravity and authority of Historical Annals: betwixt which and a Diary, the same Tacitus (speaking of some magnificent Structures which were built that year) doth make this difference, Res idestres Annalibus, talia diurnis Urbis aut mandant, that matters of the greater moment were committed to Annals; and unto Diaries the Acts and Accidents of a meaner nature. 3. But Diaries, besides this difference in point of matter are distinguished from Annals also in point of time; a Diary or Journal, as the name imports, containing the Actions of each day, of which kind was the Chronicle called for by Absarturus, in which the Actions of his Court were referred to Journals, and in the which he found the relation of the treason intended against him by his Eunuchs. And of this kind was that of King Edward the sixth, mentioned in the History of his life, by Sir John Hayward. 4. Last of all for Chronologies; they are only bare supputations of times, with some brief touch upon the Actions therein happening, such as are those of Eusebius, Ptolemy, Calvisius, and Helvicus; of which last I dare give that testimony which Paterculus affords to Ovidius, that he is perfectissimus in forma operis sui; though he and all the rest are debtors to Eusebius for the incredible pains taken by him in his excellent Chronicon. Out of these four, as out of the four Elements, the Quintessence of History is extracted: borrowing from Annals time, from Diaries and Commentaries matter, from Chronologies content of time and co-stancy of Princes; and thereto adding of her own all such other Ornaments in which these four are found defective.

That which remains to premise somewhat of those several Epochs, from whence particular State, Nations and People, make their computations. These have been very different in former times, according to the several occasions took in several Countries. The Jews had several Epochs peculiar to themselves alone, and one in common with their Neighbours. Those which they had amongst themselves were first from the Creation of the World, or the beginning of time; Secondly from the universal Deluge, which hapned, A. M. 1656. Thirdly, from the Confusion of Tongues, A. M. 1786. Fourthly, from Abrahams journey out of Chaldea into Canaan, A. M. 2021. Fifthly, from their deliverance out of Egypt, A. M. 2453. Sixthly, from the first year of Jubilee, A. M. 2499. Seventhly, from the building of Solomons Temple, A. M. 2932. And lastly, from the Captivity of Babylon, A. M. 3368. That which they had common with other Nations, was the Æra or Epoch of the victory of the Greeks, which took beginning on the first Victory which Selencus had against Antigonus, which was in A. M. 3367. An Account much used by the Jews, Chaldeans, Syrians, and other Nations of the East.

But the Chaldeans also had their own Epochæ or Accounts, reckoning their time from the first year of Nabonnassar (Salmassar he is called in Scripture) which began 438 years before this of Selenus, mult tant in A.M. 3201. Next for the Grecians, they reckon'd a long while by Olympiads, the first of which is placed in the year of the World, 3174 (of which more hereafter.) But this Account perishing under the Constantinopolitans, they reckon'd after by Inditions (an account devised by Justinian) every Indition containing 15 years, the first beginning A.Chr. 513. which amongst Chronologers is still used. The Romans reckon'd first from the foundation of their City, which was A.M. 3-13. and afterwards from the sixteenth year of Augustus his Empire, (being that which is properly called the Roman Æra) A.M. 3936. An account used by the Spaniards (where it still began) till the reign of Pedro the fourth of Aragon, who abrogated it in his Dominions, A.Chr. 1350. followed therein by John the first of Castile, An. 1383. and then at last by the King of Portugal also, 1415. The Christians generally do reckon from the birth of CHRIST, but this they did not use till the year 600. following in the mean time the Account of the Empire. And finally the Mahometans begin their Hegira (for so they call the time of their Computation) from the flight of their Prophet Mahomet from Mecæ, when he was driven thence by the Phylaræ, which happened A.Chr. 617. Of these we shall make use generally but of two alone, those namely of the Worlds Creation, and our Saviours Birth; and of the building of Rome, and the flight of Mahomet, in things that do relate to those several States.

Next for Geography we will first define it, and after explicate such terms or second notions, as are not obvious to the understanding of every Reader. First for the definition of it, it is said by Ptolemy to be a description of the whole Earth, or the whole Earth imitated by writing and delineation, with all other things generally annexed unto it. ἡ γῆς οὐρανὸς αἰσθητὴ καὶ ἀκίνητος (and not ἀκίνητος, as it is commonly but corruptly read) τὸ καὶ ἀκίνητος τὸν τὸν οὐρανὸν διὰ τὸ μὴ εἶναι αὐτὸν ἀκίνητον, as his own words are. In which we look not on the Earth simply as it is an Element, for so it belongeth to Philosophy; but as it is a Spherical body proportionably composed of Earth and Water, and so it is the subject of Geography.

First for the Earth which is the first part of this body, it is affirmed by the best Writers to be 21600 miles in compass, which is demonstrable enough. For being there are in every degree of the greater Circles 360 degrees, every degree being reckon'd at 60 miles: let 360 be multiplied by 60 and the Product will be 21600 as before is said. So that if it were possible to make a path round about the Earth, an able Footman going constantly 24 miles a day, would compass it in 900 days.

The Earth is divided. In respect of men, into the right hand and the left; In respect of it self, into parts Real and Imaginary.

To Poets which turn their faces towards the Fortunate Islands (so memorized and chanted by them) which are situated in the West; the North is the right hand, and the South the left.

To the Angers of old, and in our days to Priests and men in holy Orders, who usually in their Sacrifices and divine Oblations, convert themselves unto the East, the South is the right hand, and the North the left.

To Astronomers, who turn their faces towards the South, because that way the motions of the Planets may be best observed, the West is the right hand, and the East the left.

Finally, to Geographers, who, by reason they have fo much to do with the Elevation of the Pole, do turn their face towards the North; the East is the right hand, and the West the left.

The Real parts of the Earth are divided commonly into Continents, Islands.

A Continent is a great quantity of Land, not separated by any Sea from the rest of the World, as the whole Continent of Europe, Asia, Africa, or the Continents of France, Spain, Germany.

An Island is a part of Earth inclosed round about with some Sea or other; as the life of Britain, with the Ocean; the life of Sicily, with the Mediterranean; and therefore in Latine it is called Insula, because it is situate in fals, as some derive it.

Touching the Continents I have nothing in general to enlarge, till we come to the particular Geography and description of them. But for Islands (leaving the description of their being, or not being before the Flood) there are four cases to which they may be thought to owe their Origin. 1. An Earthquake, which works two ways towards their production: First, when by it one part of a Country is forcibly torn away from the other; and so Ægeæ was divided from the rest of Attica; and secondly when some vehement wind or vapour being shut up in such parts of the Earth as be under the Sea, raiseth the Earth above the Water; whereunto the Original of most of those Islands, which are far remote from any part of the Continent, is probably to be referred.

2. Great Rivers at their entry into the Sea carry with them abundance of gravel, dirt, and weeds; which, if the Sea be not the more working, will in time settle to an Island. So the Corn which Tarquinius sowed in the Campus Martius, being cut down by the people and cast into Tiber, settled together, and made the Holy Island. So the River Abelarus caused the Echinades, as we shall more at large declare; and so the Island of Loanda in the Kingdom of Congo, is said to have been made out of the Sands of the Ocean, and the Mire of the great River Lanza, call into a heap, and at last formed into an Island.

3. The Sea violently beating on some small Illands, weareth it through, and turneth the Peninsulas into a complete Ile. Thus was Sicily divided from Italy, Cyprus from Syria, England from France, and Wight from the rest of England. And 4. sometimes as it catcheth and worketh on some places, so it voluntarily laveth and abandoneth others, which in some time grow to be Islands, and firm land under foot. So it is thought the Iles of Zealand have been once part of the main Sea; and Vesputius proveth it, because that the Husbandmen in tilling and manuring the ground, find sometimes Anchors here and there fixt, but very often the bones of huge and great fishes, which could by no accident come hither. To these kind of Islands, Pythagoras in Ovid alluding, saith,

Vidi falsas ex æquore terras,
Et procul à pelago conche jacere marine,
Et vetus inventa est in montibus anchora somnis.

Of have I seen that earth, which once I knew
Part of the Sea; for that a man might view
Huge shells of Fishes in the upland ground;
And on the Mountain-tops old Anchors found.

As concerning the situation of Islands, whether commodious or not, this is my judgment. I find in Machiavel, that for a City whole people cover no Empire but their own Towns, a barren place is better than a fruitful; because in such feats they are compelled to work work and labour, by which they are freed from idleness, and by consequence from riotousness; but for a City whose Inhabitants desire to enlarge their Confines, fertile place was rather to be chosen than a sterile, as being more able to nourish multitudes of people. The like I say of Islands. If a Prince desire rather to keep than augment his Dominions, no place fitter for his abode than an Island; as being by it self and nature sufficiently defensible. But if a King be minded to add continually to his Empire, an Island is no fit feat for him; because partly by the uncertainty of Winds and Seas, partly by the longfomness of the ways, he is not so well able to supply and keep such forces as he hath on the Continent. An example hereof is England, which hath even to admiration repelled the most puissant Monarch of Europe; but for the causes above mentioned, cannot those any of her winnings on the firm land, though the hath attempted and achiev'd as many glorious exploits, as any Country in the World.

The Continent and Island are sub-divided into Peninsulas, Islands, Peninsulas.

Peninsula quasi pons Insula, is a tract of land, which being almost encompassed round by water, is joyned to the firm land by some little Isthmus as Peloponessus, Taurica, and Peruana.

Isthmus is that narrow neck of land, which joyneth the Peninsula to the Continent; as the Straights of Darien in America, and of Corinth in Greece.

Promontorium, is a high Mountain which shooteth it self into the Sea, the utmost end of which is called a Fore-land, or Cape, as the Cape of good Hope in Africa; Cape Comari in India, &c.

The Imaginary parts of the Earth are such which not being at all in the Earth, must yet be supposed to be so, for the better teaching and learning this Science; and are certain Circles going about the Earth, unfixable to them in Heaven, in nature.

These Circles are either the Greater, or Lesser: in both which, there are 360 Degrees, which in the greater Circles are greater than those in the lesser; and every Degree in the greater is 60 miles.

The greater Circles are either Immutables, as the Æquator. Mutable as the Horizon, Meridian.

The Æquator is a great Circle going round about the Terrestrial Globe from East to West. It passeth through Habessus, Immata, Gizius, &c. The use of it is to show the Latitude of any Town, Promontory, &c. Now the Latitude is the distance of a place South or North from the Æquator, or middle of the World; and must be measured on the Globe by the Degrees in the Meridian.

The Meridian is a great Circle rounding the Earth from Pole to Pole. There are many Meridians, according to the divers places in which a man liveth; but the chief and first Meridian passeth through the Island St. Michael, one of the Azores. The use of it is to show the Longitude of any place. Now the Longitude of a City, Cape, &c. is the distance of it East and West from the first Meridian, and is usually measured on the Globe by the Degrees of the Æquator.

The Horizon is a great Circle, designing so great a space of the earth, as a quick light can ken in an open field. The use of it is to discern the divers risings and settings of the Stars.

The lesser Circles either are noted with some name, as Tropic, of Cancer, Capricorn, Polar, either Arctic, Antarctic. Noted with no distinct name, and are the Parallels.

The Tropic of Cancer (so called of the Celestial Sign Cancer) is distant from the Æquinoctial 23 Degrees Northward, and passeth through Barbary, India, China, and Nova Hispania.

The Tropic of Capricorn, equally distant from the Æquator Southward, passeth through Æthiopia inferior, and the middle of Peruana. And this is to be observed in these Tropicks, that when the Sun is in the Tropic of Cancer, our days are at the longest; and when he is gone back to the Tropic of Capricorn, the days are at the shortest. The first they call the Summer, the last they call the Winter Solstice; the first happening on, or about St. Barnabas day in June; the last on, or about St. Lucia day in December.

The Arctic Circle (so called for that it is correspondent to the Constellation in Heaven called the Bear, in Greek, Arctos) is distant from the Tropic of Cancer 45 Degrees, and passeth through Norway, Moscovy, Tartary, &c.

The Antarctic (so called because opposite to the other) is as much distant from the Tropic of Capricorn, and passeth through Terra Australis Incognita. The use of these four Circles is to describe the Zones.

The Zones are spaces of Earth included betwixt two of the latter nominated Circles. They are in number five, one over-hot, two over-cold, and two temperate.

The over-hot, or Torrid Zone, is betwixt the two Tropicks, continually scorched with the presence of the Sun.

The two over-cold, or Frigid Zones, are situate between the two Polar Circles, and the very Poles; continually wanting the neighbourhood of the Sun.

The two Temperate Zones, are betwixt the Tropic of Cancer, and the Arctic; and twixt the Tropic of Capricorn, and the Antarctic Circles, enjoying an indifferency between heat and cold; so that the parts next the Torrid Zone are the hotter, and the parts next the Frigid Zone are the colder.

These five Zones are disposed according to the order of the Zones in Heaven; of which thus Ovid Metam. 1.

Vixit due dextra calum, totidemq; finis
Parte fecant Zones, quinta est ardentior illis
Sis uno inclusum numero digitumq; eodem
Cura Dei totidemq; plage tellure prenumat.
Quarum que media est, non est habilitabilis ætas;
Nix regit alta duas: totidem inter utramq; levavit,
Temperata; dedit, mixta cum frigore flamma.

And as two Zones do cut the Heavens right-side, And likewise other two the left divide,
The middle in heat exceeding all the rest;
Even so it seem'd to the Creator best,
That this our World should thus be divided be,
That with the Heavens in Zonas it might agree;
The middle in heat, the outward more excel
In Snow and Ice, scarce fit for men to dwell.
Betwixt these two Extremes, two more are fixt,
Where heat with cold indifferently is mixt.

The Parallels, called also Æquidistant, circle the Earth from East to West, and are commonly ten Degrees asunder: Such are the Parallels which are fit down in our Maps and Globes. But there are another sort of Parallels, two of which go to a Climæ. These are called Artificial Parallels, because they show the difference of the Artificial days; and are of an unequal breadth, as we shall see in the Table following. The use of these lesser Parallels is to show the Climæ.

Now a Climæ, or Climata, is a space of the Earth contained betwixt three Parallels, the middlemost whereof divided it into two equal parts: serving for setting out the length and shortness of the days in every Country. For under the Æquator the days are of the full length of 12 hours; but afterwards they encrease the length of half an hour for every Climate, till they come to the length of 24 hours, without night at all; which length attained, they encrease no more by hours, but by weeks and months, till they come to the length of half a year. So that we are to reckon 24 Climates Northward, and as many Southward; Those Northward known by the proper name of the place or City over which the middle Parallel of the Climate doth pass, as Dia Merocis, Dia Sienæ, &c. Those on the South by the same names, with the condition of Anti-Dia-Sienæ, Anti-Dia-Merocis, &c. 'Tis true, the ancient Geographers made but eleven Climates in all; at the most but nine. Nor needed they to add more, as the cause flows with them; the extent of the habitable World towards each of the Poles, not being so fully known to them, as it is to us.

And here, because those Climates are not of equal breadth or extent of Latitude, but grow narrower and narrower towards each Pole; in which regard, it is impossible to describe them under any Rule: I have thought fit to add this ensuing Table, partly framed out of the Commentaries of Clavius on the works of Joh. de Sacro Bosco, and partly out of Huet's Book, Of the use of the Globes. The whole divided into 7 Columns. In the first whereof is shewed what Climates are inhabited by the Amphiscii, Periscii, and Heteroscii, which terms we shall anon expound in the second, is set down the number of the Climates themselves; In the third the number of the Parallels; In the fourth, the length of the days in Summer; In the fifth, the distance of every Climate and Parallels from the Equator; In the seventh, the name of the Town or place, through which the middlemost of the three Parallels doth pass in this manner following.

Here followeth the Table of the Climes.

A second use of these Parallels and other Circles; is for distinction of men in their several dwellings, who are (according as they are treated of in Geography) divided in respect of their shadows into Amphiscii, Periscii, Heteroscii; and in respect of their site and position, into Antiaci, Periaci, and Antipodes. 1. Amphiscii are such as dwell between the two Tropicks; so called, because their shadows are both ways; sometimes (when the Sun is North) to the South; sometimes (when the Sun is South) to the North.

2. Periscii are such as dwell beyond the Polar Circles so called, because their shadows are on all sides of them. 3. Heteroscii are such as dwell in either of the two temperate Zones; so called, because their shadows reach but one way; viz. in our Zone, to the North only; as in the other, to the South only.

4. Antiaci are such as dwell under the same Meridian, and the same Latitude or Parallel equally distant from the Equator; the one Northward, the other Southward: the days in both places being of a length; but the Summer of the one, being the others Winter.

5. Periaci are such as dwell in the same Parallel, on the same side of the Equator, how distant soever they be East and West; the season of the year, and the length of days being to both alike; but the ones midnight, being the others noon.

6. Antipodes are such as dwell feet to feet, so as a right line drawn from the one unto the other, passeth from North to South, through the Center of the World. These are distant 180 degrees, which is half the compass of the Earth. They differ in all things, as seasons of the year, length of days, rising and setting of the Sun, with the like. A matter reckoned for ridiculous, and impossible (if not somewhat worse) in the former times, that Boniface Archbishop of Metz hapning to see a Tractate written by Virgilius Bishop of Salzburg, touching the Antipodes; and not knowing what damnable Doctrine might be couched under that strange name, made complaint first to the Duke of Bohemia, and after to Pope Zachary, An. 745. By whom the poor Bishop (unfortunately only in being learned in such a time of ignorance) was condemned of Heretic. But Boniface might the rather be excused, in regard that many of his betters fell also on the self-same error. For venerable Bede, a man whose Book Arch. B. Boniface was not worthy to carry, effeminate the opinion touching the Antipodes, to be no better than a Fable; neg. enim Antipodatum ullatenus est fabulæ accomodandum assensur, in his Book de Ratione temporum, cap. 22. And yet the marvel is the less, considering that he lived in the darkest times of the Church, when the state of Learning was in its declination; when S. Augustine and Lactantius, and some others of the Ancient Writers, who lived when learning was at the very height, condemn this point of the Antipodes, for an incredible ridiculous Fable: whose words I could put down at large, did I think it necessary. So that we of these Ages have very good cause (to use the words of the late L. Verulam) to congratulate the present times, in that the World in these our days, have through-light made in it, after a wonderful manner; whereby we clearly see those things, which either were unknown, or but blindly guessed at by the Ancients.

But to proceed, the second part of the Terrrestrial Globe is the Water, which making but one Globe with the Earth, is yet higher than it. This appears, first, because it is a body not so heavy; Secondly, it is observed by Saylor that their Ships move faster to the shore than from it; whereof no reason can be given but the height of the water above the land. Thirdly, to such as stand on the shore, the Sea seems to swell into the form of a round hill, till it puts a bound upon our sight. Now that the Sea hovering thus over and above the Earth, doth not overwhelm it, must be ascribed only to His Power and Providence, who, both made the waters to stand on a heap, who both set them a bound that they should not pass, nor turn again to cover the Earth. The other allusions and properties of the Sea, as motion, saltness, and the like, I willingly omit, as belonging rather to Philosophers, than this present Argument.

The Sea or Water is divided into 1. Oceana, 2. Mare, 3. Fretum, 4. Sinus, 5. Lacus, 6. Flumina.

Of which and other Waters thus said Ovid in his Metamorphosis.

*Tum freta diffudit, rapidisq; tumscere ventis
Jussit, & ambire circumdare littora terras.
Addidit & Fontes, & Stagna immensa, Lacusq; Flumina; obliqui cunctis decedunt ripis, &c.*

Which may be Englished to this purpose.

He spread the Seas, which then he did command
To swell with winds, and compass round the Land:
To those he adds Springs, Ponds, and Lakes immense,
And Rivers, which their winding Borders fence.
Of these not few Earths thirstily pass devour,
The rest their streams into the Ocean pour:
When in that liquid Plain with trees Wave,
The foamy Cliffs instead of Banks they lave.

Here the Climates are accounted by the number, from 60 Degrees 33 Minutes where the day is 14 Hours unto the Pole is left at 90 Degrees, where the artificial day is six months.

These Climates are supposed to pass by divers Islands within the Arctic Circle as Greenland, Island, Greenland, wherein, as yet, for the narrowness of these Climates coming near together, and the uncertainty of observation, no special places have been assigned as to the other.

And

And for Oceanus, the Ocean, is that general Collection of all waters, which encompasseth the Earth on every side. A point which Ovid hath determined right enough, but laugh't at by Herodotus in the former times; who counted it a gross absurdity for any man to relate or write, that the Earth was round, or encompass'd about with the main Ocean. But Modern Navigations have found that to be true, which he held ridiculous; and which the most learned in those times knew rather by conjecture than by demonstration. Nor were those Ages so acquainted with those ebbs and flowings of the Ocean, and all those other Seas and Rivers which have intercourse with it, as the meanest Sailor at the present. The natural causes of the which seeming so full of difficulty to the bulk of the Ancients, Experience hath taught us to ascribe wholly to the Moon, at whose Full and Prime the Tides are ever highest, and the Sea most furious. For as soon as the Moon cometh forth from under our Horizon, the Sea beginneth to swell, and floweth towards the East, (as it were to wait upon her, or bear her company) till she come unto the height of our Meridian: after which till her setting or Western fall, the Sea abateth or decreaseth, which we call the Ebb. And when she passeth out of our Horizon towards the Antipodes, the Ocean begins to swell till the height of Midnight, and coming towards our Hemisphere doth again abate. In brief, from the New Moon till the first quarter the Sea decreaseth; from the first quarter to the full it is said to spring: from the full to the last quarter it is said to nepe, and from the last quarter to the prime it springs again. As for the uncertainty of the Tides, varying every day, it is not so perplexed and intricate, but that they which live on the Banks or Shores thereof know well when to look for it; the next days Tide coming for the most part, one hour ten minutes after the time it hapned on the day fore-going.

2. Mare, the Sea, is a part of the main Ocean, to which we cannot come but through some Fretum, or Straight; as Mare Mediterræneum. And it takes name, First, either from the adjacent shore, as Mare Adriaticum, from the City of Adria; Mare Tyrrhenum, from the Coast of Tuscan: Or, Secondly, from the first Discoverer, as Mare Magellanicum, from Magellanus, who first found it; Or, Thirdly, from some remarkable Accident, as Mare Icarium, from the drowning of Icarus, the son of Dædalus.

3. Fretum, a Straight is a part of the Ocean, penned within narrow bounds, and opening a way into some Sea, or out of some Sea into the Ocean, as the Straight of Hellespont, Gibraltar, Fretum Davis, &c.

4. Sinus, a Creek or Bay, is a Sea contained within a crooked or circling shore, wherewith it is almost environed; as Sinus Persicus, Corinthiacus, &c. and this is sometimes called a Gulf, as the Gulf of Lepanto.

5. Lacus, a Lake, is a great body or collection of waters, which hath no visible intercourse with the Sea, or influx into it; as the Lake of Thyrasium in Italy; the Lacus Asphaltites, or the Dead Sea, in the Land of Canaan. And of this kind properly is the Mare Caspium, though by reason of the greatness of it, it is called a Sea.

6. Fluvius, or Fluxus, is a Watercourse continually running, wherby it distinguisheth from Stagnum, or a standing Pool, issuing from some Spring or Lake, and emptying it self into some part of the Sea or some other great River; the mouth or out-let of which is called Osium. Tiberis aque longe Osia, as the Poet hath it. These are conceived in the Earth, and derive both their birth and continual subsistence from the Air; which, piercing the open cracks or Chasms of the Earth, and congealed by the stream cold of that Element, dissolves into water (as we see the Air in winter-nights to be melted into a pearly dew, sticking on our glass windows;) and being grown to some quantity, will (like Hannibal in the Alps) either find a way, or make a way to vent its superfluity. Which beginning is seconded by the Ocean, which running through the hidden passages of the Earth, joineth it self with this aerial vapour, and continueth the begun current. This Sea-water (though in it self of a salt and brackish favour, yet passing through divers windings and turnings of the Earth, is deprived of all unpleasantness, and by how much the spring-heads of Rivers are remote from the Sea, by so much usually are their waters affected with a delightful relish. Rivers having thus entered themselves into a good course, are never without the assistance of neighbouring springs and waters; by whose addition they augment their streams, till they dischannel themselves into the Sea. Now there is of Rivers a treble use: First, that out of them Drink may be afforded to man and beast; Secondly, that running through the Earth, as blood through the body, by interlacing it, and sometimes overwhelming it, it might make the Earth able to produce those fruits which are necessary for the life of man. The last use of Rivers, is, easiness and speediness of conduct; and hereto are required four conditions: First the depth, because deep waters sustain the bigger burdens, and on them navigation is more safe. Secondly, pleasantsness, whereby the passage is easie both with the stream and against it: wheras in Rivers of a violent current or such as fall down by great Locks or Cataracts, the sailing or rowing up the waters is as dangerous as laborious. Thirdly, the thickness of the water; for by how much the more slimy and gross a water is, by so much can it carry the heavier burdens. So Tiber, a River of more fame than depth, or breadth, is better for navigation, by reason of its fitness, than the pure and thin waters of the large and excellent River Nilus. Fourthly, the broadness of the Channel, that Ships and other Vessels may conveniently wind and turn, and give way to exultation. Some of the old Philosophers reputed this conduct so dangerous that one of them being asked whether he thought the living or the dead were the greater number, would not declare himself, because he knew not in which rank to place such as were at Sea. And Cato Major thought that men never committed greater folly in their lives than in venturing to go by water, when they might have gone by land. I am none of that Sect, yet I cannot but hold with him that said, Dulcissima est ambulatio prope aquas, navigatio juxta terram.

The chief Rivers of Europe, are Danubius, and the Rhene; of Africa, Nilus, and Niger; of Asia, Ganges, and Euphrates; of America, Oreoque, and Maraguan. Of which and others, more in its proper place.

Thus have we gone over these particulars both of Earth and Water, which are considerable in Geography, and come within the compass of those Annexaries of each which Plolomy calleth τὰ ἀνναξάρια: And having so done, may discover where the difference lieth between Geography and Chorography; which to some men, not rightly looking into the nature of both, seem to be the same. For howsoever a Chorographer doth describe a Country by the bounds, Rivers, Hills, and most notable Cities; yet it is still but the description of some place or Country, and not of the whole Earth universally, which is the proper work of a Geographer. So that Chorography distinguisheth from Geography as a part from the whole: that being as Plolomy doth very handsomely express it, like the painting of an eye or an ear, or some other member; this, as the picturing of the head, or whole body of Man. But Geography in its full latitude comprehendeth not Chorography only, but Topography and Hydrography also.

Of these the last is the delineation of the Sea by its several Names, Ports, Promontories, Creeks, and other affections; as also of great Lakes and Rivers: which is most necessary for the use of Mariners, and is best done by Petrus de Medius, Peter Nonnius in his Regula Artu Navi gaudi, and Johannes Aurigarius in his Speculum Nauticum; the chief Writers in the Art of Pilotage.

2. Topography is the description of some particular place or City; of which kind was the Book of Stephanus, πνεῦμα ὕψους, or of Urbibus, among the Antients; and the Theatrum Urbium written by Brutus in these latter times; Strabo Book of the Survey of London, the French Antiquities de Paris, and such as these. And of this kind is the description of the Vale of Tempe, in the greater Ortelius; and those of the Elysian fields, the gardens of Alicious, and the Hesperides in the ancient Poets.

3. Chorography (as before was said) is the exact description of some Kingdom, Country, or particular Province of the same; unless this last may fall more properly under the notion of Topography. Of this kind the description of the several climes of Greece written by Pausanias, is of most use and reputation of all the Antients; as that of Camden Clarendon, for the Isle of Britain; of Leuis Guicciardine, for the Low-Countries; Leander for Italy, &c. are amongst the Modern.

4. Geography, finally is an aggregate of all these together, borrowing from Hydrography the description of Seas and Waters; from Topography, that of Towns, Cities, and particular places; and from Chorography, the delineations of Regions, Provinces and Kingdoms, which brought into body, make up that Portraiture or Picture of the whole Earth, and every considerable part thereof in writing; which, according to Ptolomy's definition before-mentioned, is properly and truly called Geography. In the advancement of which studies, those which have took most pains, with the greatest benefit to Posterity, are the said Ptolomy, Pliny, and Strabo for the elder times;

Mercator, Mazinus, and Ortelius, for the later Ages. Of which the two first lived in the times of Antonius Pius, the Roman Emperor, An. Chr. 141. or thereabouts; the other in the reign of Tiberius Caesar, the unworthy Successor of Augustus: the three last flourishing in the days of our Fathers, about some 80 years ago.

Thus have I briefly summed up those general Præconia, which I conceive are necessary to the knowledge and understanding as well of History as of Geography. Out of which two compounded and intermixt, ariseth that universal Comprehension of Natural and Civil story, which by a proper and distinct name may be termed Cosmography. And this may well be reckoned amongst mixed stories; for it hath from Natural History or Geography, the Regions themselves, together with their Sites, and several Commodities; from Civil History, Habitations, Governments, and Manners; and from the Mathematick, the Climates and Configurations of the Heavens, under which the Coasts and Quarters of the World do lie. Of the Utility and Excellency of which study I need say no more, than what hath been already spoken of the several parts, whereof this is only the Result, desiring pardon of the Reader, that I have Challenged these imperfect and unworthy Papers by so noble a name; which I desire they may deserve, though I fear they will not. However I will give the venture, and make as speedy and as profitable a discovery, as the times enable me, of the whole World, and the most observable things therein; according to the best light which the reading of Histories and Geographical discourses hath supplied me with; beseeching him who made the World, and ordereth all the Governments and Affairs thereof as to him seems best, to blefs me in the undertaking; and furnish me with fit Abilities both of strength and judgment to go through with it. Iste enim est qui operatur in nobis & velle & perficere; as the Scripture hath it: And so on in God's name.

OF THE WORLD: And First of EUROPE.

OF the Creation of the World by Almighty God, and the Plantation of the same by the Sons of Men, sufficient hath been spoken already. We are to look upon it now, as perfected and peopled in all parts thereof, but all those parts united into one Compositum; called therefore by the Græcians, Tò Πᾶν, and Tὸ ὅλον, because the Summa Totalis, and general comprehension of all things existent. In which respect 'tis called by the Latins, Universum, a native of multitude, but of a multitude united (Universi qui in uno loco versantur, say the old Grammarians.) The great body of the World, like the body of Man, though it have many parts and members, is but one body only. A body of so perfect and exact a form, of so complete a Symmetry in respect of the particular parts, and all those parts so beautified and adorned by the God of Nature; that from the elegancy and beauties of it, it was called Kόσμος: by the Græcians, and Mundus by the Latins, both names declaring the Composure of it to be full of Ornament; and all those Ornaments conducting Mankind to the knowledge of God. For (as the Christian Advocate reasoneth very strongly,) as he which comes into an house, and seeth all things in it ordered in a beautiful and comely order; utrisque præesse crederet Dominum, &c. must needs conceive, both that the house had some wife Lord and Master who had so contrived it, and that such Lord and Master of it was of more worth and excellency than the house and furniture: So (saith he) whosoever doth observe the most eminent beauties of the Heaven and Earth, must needs conceive there is some great and more glorious power who did first create it; disposing of all things therein in such excellent manner.

This Contemplation, together with the notions of a Deity, which naturally are ingrafted in the soul of man; hath trained up all men in the practice of some Religion, though few (comparatively) so happy as to be practised in the true. For though the knowledge and worship of the true God, by reason of some accussions in America, and the Indies, be more generally diffused than in former times; yet is the least part of the World possessed by them who make profession of that Worship. For dividing the whole World into thirty parts, it hath been found by such as have laboured in this search, that nineteen of them are inhabited by Idolaters, who either know no God at all, or worship stocks and stones for gods, even the work of mens hands. Of the 11 parts which are remaining, six are possessed by Jews, Turks, and Saracens; who though they have the knowledge of the God that made them, yet abnegating, or not worshipping the Lord that brought them, they have no part or portion in the true Religion. Then for the five which are behind, two are conceived to be of the Greek Communion, the other three being divided betwixt those of the Church of Rome, and such as otherwise differing in some opinions, pass generally by the name of Protestant or Reformed Churches. Which as it sheweth how small a portion of the World is possessed by Christians, who only (though not all of them) have reason to pretend to the true Religion: So doth it shew (I note this only by the way) how fallily those of Rome make multitude of Professors to be a sign of the True Church; as correspond unto that sign. Faulty, alike both in the Position and the Application. For if the multitude of Professors be a sign of the Church, the true Church should be found rather amongst the Heathens or Mahumetans, than amongst the Christians: or if they do restrain their meaning (as I hope they do) to those who make profession of the Christian faith: those of the Greek Communion, possessing two whole parts of five, will be found more numerous than the members of the Church of Rome, though possibly of less esteem in the eye of the World. So infinitely vain was that brag of Bellarmino (though otherwise more modest than the rest of the  Jesuits) affirming positively and expressly, Romanam Ecclesiam universum plane orbem possidere, &c. That the Church of Rome is fully of as large a latitude as the World it self. This I have noted by the way, intending to take a more special notice of the state of Religion in the several Provinces of the World, to which now I hasten; permitting first this scheme of those several parts, into which it doth now stand divided.

The World is divided into two parts; unknown, or not fully discovered; and is divided commonly into Borealis and Australis: the last taking up the Southern Continent; the other lying on the North of Europe and America; whereof we shall say somewhat at the end of this Work.

Known, either { Europe.
Anciently, as { Asia.
                    { Africa.
                    { Late, as America.

Europe is joyned to Asia, by that space of Earth which is between the heads of Tanis and India; Asia is joyned to Africa, by the Egyptian Silima; India is divided (as most conjecture from all of them. Europe is separated from Asia, by a line drawn from the Bay of St. Nicolas, to the head of Tanis, from thence by that River it self all the length of his course; then by Palus Meotis, the Euasine Sea, the Thracian Bosphorus, the Propontis, the Hellspont, and the Egeean. Asia is parted from Africa by the Red-Sea, or Gulf of Arabia; and Africa from Europe by the Mediterranean. Africa is greater than Europe, Asia than Africa, America than Asia.

They which have entertained a fancy of resembling every Country to things more obvious to the sight and understanding, have likened Europe to a Dragon; the head of which they make to be Spain; the two wings Italy and Denmark. In like manner they have been curiously impudent, in resembling France to a Lozenge or Rhomboides; Belgium to a Lion; Britain to an Ax; Ireland to an Egg; Peloponnesus to a Plantane leaf; Spain to an Ox-hide spread on the ground; Italy (which indeed holdeth best proportion) to a mans Leg; with divers the like Phantasies of a capricious brain; these Countries no more resembling them, than pictures made when painting was in her infancy, under which they were fain to write, This is a Lion, and this is a Whale, for fear the spectators might have taken one for a Cock, and the other for a Cat.

EUROPE, though the least (as being in length but 2800, in breadth but 1200 miles) is yet of most renown amongst us. First, because of the temperate of the Air, and fertility of the soyl; Secondly, from the study of Arts, both ingenious and mechanical; Thirdly, because of the Roman and Greek Monarchies; Fourthly, from the purity and sincerity of the Christian Faith; Fifthly, because we dwell in it, and so first place it.

EUROPE is generally said to be called from Europa, the daughter of Agenor, King of the Phœnicians, brought thence by Jupiter (as the Poets feign) in the shape of a Bull; or as some Histories say, by a Cretan Captain named Taurus: as others in a ship whose back had the portraiture of a Bull upon it. But why the bringing of that Lady into the Isle of Crete, should give denomination to the whole Continent of Europe, whereof that Island is so inconsiderable, and so small a part. I must confesse I see no reason. Georgius Beccanus, who holds the High Dutch to be primitive language, which was spoke in Paradise, and loves to fetch all names from thence, not thinking it convenient, that Europe being first inhabited by Gomerians or Cimbrians, should be beholding to the Grecians for its name; will have it called Europa, quasi Ver-hop, by the transposition of the two last letters; Ver signifying excellent, and hop a multitude (whence we use to say, as much, as hop) because Europe contains a multitude of excellent people. And on the other side, Eu-bar-barus, a French Writer, loving as much to bring all names from the Phœnician or Punic tongue, will have it called Europe from Ur-appa, which signifieth in that language, a beautiful Countenance, because the Europeans much excell'd the Africans in whiteness of skin, and clearness of complexion. But in my mind Herodotus hath best determined of the controversy, who telleth us plainly, Οὐκ οἶδεν τὸ εὐρωπαϊκόν, ἑστὶν οὐκ ὀνόμαζεν, &c. That it is utterly unknown, both whence it had the name of Europe, and who first called it so. And yet considering there is a Province in Thrace called Europe, (whereof most heretofore) why might not the Africans give the name of Europe to this part of the World, according to the name of that Province which lay nearest to them? as the Romans did the name of Africa to the other part of the World, after the name of that particular Province or part thereof, which they first brought under their obedience? Or as the Europeans gave the name of Asia, to the greatest of the three known parts of the World; which properly and originally belonged unto Asia Minor (as it since was called;) or rather to those parts thereof which lay next to Greece; as shall be shewn hereafter in convenient place.

The first inhabitants of Europe, as hath been shewn in part already, and shall be shewn more fully in its proper place, were the Sons of Japhet; amongst whom, as the Scripture telleth us, The Isles of the Gentiles were divided, Gen. 10. 5. which includes all the Continent of Europe, and the Isles adjoining. For besides, that it is compassed about with the Cyclades and other Isles in the Seas of Greece, together with the Isles of Candy, Sicily, Sardinia, Corsica, the Isles of Britain and Zealand, with their young ones adjacent; Europe it self was formerly taken for an Island; as being invironed round with water, saving where it is joyned on the North-East to Asia the great, which very few of the Antients were acquainted with. And what are the great Countries of Anatolia, Greece, Spain, and Italy, all which did fall to the posterity of Japhet, but to many Peninsulæ, or Peninsulæ, invironed almost round with one Sea or other? Nor was the name and memory of Japhet so much forgotten by the Children which descended of him; but that the Greeks, who were the first of their European Plantations, retained it a long time in their Japhetic, whom they make to be the son of Calm and Terra, and the father of the wife Promethius, whom Ovid therefore calleth Janus Iapetus, in the first Book of his Metamorphosis. So that we see how punctually the first part of Gods blessing was fulfilled upon him; which was, that he would enlarge the borders of Japhet, Gen. 9. 27. The second part thereof, that he should dwell in the Tents of Sem, though it was long before it came to the accomplishment, yet it came at last; and that both in the literal and mystical sense. First, in the literal, when the posterity of Japhet, both Greek and Romans, made themselves Masters of Judea, or the Land of Canaan, and the Eastern parts, promised to, and possessed by, the seed of Sem: Next in the mystical, when God was pleased to break down the partition-wall, and to incorporate the Gentiles of the house of Japhet, into the body of the Church: which for a long time was restrained to the Line of Sem.

Europe may be considered as it stands divided into the Continent, and the Islands: the Continent lying all together; the Islands as they are dispersed in the Greek, Egean, Cretan and Ionian Seas, the Adriatic and the Mediterranean, and in the British and Northern Ocean. But in this work we shall discover them, and discourse of them in this following order, dividing Europe into 1. Italy, 2. the Alps, 3. France, 4. Spain, 5. Britain, 6. Belgium, 7. Germany, 8. Denmark, 9. Switzerland, 10. Russia, 11. Poland, 12. Hungary, 13. Scalonia, 14. Dacia, and 15. Greece; and speak of the several Islands, as they relate to some or other of these greater Countries.

In all which Countries and Islands belonging to them, besides the Latine Tongue which is now rather Scholastic, than National, and besides the Italian, French, and Spanish, being but so many corruptions of the Latine; and besides the English which is a Compound of Dutch, Latine, and French; there are in all fourteen Mother Tongues, which owe nothing at all to the Roman; that is to say, 1. Irish, spoken in Ireland, and the West of Scotland; 2. British, or Welsh, in Wales, and some parts of Cornwall; 3. Cantabrian, or Basquish, in Biscay, about the Pyrenean Hills, and near to the Cantabrian Ocean; 4. Arabick, in the Mountains of Granada, called Alpujarras; 5. Finnick, in Finland and Lapland, Provinces of the Crown of Sweden; 6. Dutch, (though with different Dialects) in Germany, Belgium, Denmark, Norway, Switzerland, 7. Caucasian, which the East-Frislanders (or Caucasians) speak amongst themselves, though to strangers they speak the Common Dutch; 8. Slavonick, in Slavonia,

Poland, Hungary, and almost all the parts of the Turkish Empire; 9. Illyrian, on the East side of Syria, and the Isle of Veggie; 10. Greek, in most Provinces and Isles of Greece, by the Greeks themselves; 11. Hungarian, and 12. Epiratike in the mountainous places of those Countries; 13. Jazygian, on the North-side of Hungary, betwixt Danubius and Tibiscus, and 14. Tartarian, in the Taurica Cherfonesus, and other European parts of that barbarous people. And this shall serve for Europe in the general notion. Descend me now to the particular Kingdoms, Regions, and Islands of it; beginning first of all with Italy, contrary to the usage of most Geographers; who commonly begin with Spain or Ireland, as being the firstest Countries Westward, and consequently nearest to the first Meridian, from whence the Longitude was reckoned. Which we shall do by reason of that great influence which the Romans had in most parts of Europe, and many parts of the World besides, in matters as well Civil and Ecclesiastical, which much depended on the power of that Empire, formerly, and on the usurpations of that Church in the later days.

porary with Scipio Africanus, passed not above 300 years. That the Latin tongue was afterwards at any time spoken generally in all parts of the Roman Empire, or of Italy itself, as I see some hold, I can by no means be persuaded; it being by special favour granted to the Cumans, dwelling but an hundred miles from the Walls of Rome, that they should use the Roman Language: which had been a meer mockery, and no mark of favour at all, if the Italian people dwelling out of Latium had used it formerly. And yet this happened not above 140 years before the times of the Emperors, at what time the Romans were Lords of Italy, Sicily, Sardinia, Cosica, and a great part of Spain. It's true, the Latin tongue in succeeding times came to be understood in most parts of Italy, by reason of the Roman Colonies which were planted among them (being in all no fewer than 150) and their continual resort to Rome on their several businesses: it being a great point of the Roman State, not only to have their Laws written, and judgment pronounced by the Pretors for the several Provinces, in the Latin only: but to give audience in the open Senate to none who came thither from the subject Nations, save only in the Latin tongue, their own proper language. Yet for all this, it never grew to such extent as to be the Language of the whole Empire, no more of Italy it self, no more than the English tongue is natural or national to the Welsh, or Irish, though it be generally understood (for the very same reasons) by all of the better sort both in Wales and Ireland. In which regard I am not of their opinion, who think that the Italian (as the French and Spanish) are nothing but corruptions of the Latin tongues, occasioned by the inundations of the barbarous Nations: But rather that the Latin words which occur therein, proceeded from that weak impression which the Latin tongue had made amongst them, whilst they were under the obedience of that puissant Empire; and that the Italian tongue, as it is now spoken, could not receive so great a change from the Barbarous Nations, none of which tarried long amongst them, but the Goths, and Lombards; nor they so long (the Lombards not at all in the Eastern parts) as to be either the occasions or authors of the alteration. So that the present Language of Italy is a decompound, made up especially of Latin and the old Italian: some notions of the Lombard being mixt with it in the North, and Welf, some of the Goths, in the middle, about Rome it self, and not a little of the Greek, in the East of Naples.

And as the Language to the Religion of the Country, hath received some change. The Christian Faith was first preached in Rome it self, and in Rome first preached by Saint Peter, who came thither in or about the beginning of the Empire of Claudius. The two Apostles Peter and Paul, are generally said by the ancient Writers, to be the first who preached the Gospel in that City. A double Apollis Petro & Paulo Rome fundata & constituta est Ecclesia, faith the old Father Irenaeus, Lib. 4. Cap. 3. To one of these, the first preaching of the Gospel there is to be referred; both being Bishops of that City: That is to say, St. Peter of the Churches of the Circumcission; St. Paul of those which consisted specially of the Gentiles. Now that the Gospel was preached there before Paul's coming, is evident by his Epistle written to the Romans, at Cenchrea the Port-Town of Corinth, six years at least before his being brought to Rome; in which he testified that their Faith was famous over all the World; and therefore could not count him who had never been there, for the planter of it: And as St. Peter was the first Preacher of the Gospel at Rome, so sent he his Disciples to promulgate it in most parts of Italy. The Roman Martyrologist reckon up eight Bishops of St. Peter's making, for so many of the principal Cities of this Country: that is to say, Ephraïmus (not he whom St. Paul speaks of in his Epistle to the Philippians) for Terracina, of which called Anagnin, Hernagora for Aquila, Paulinus for Lucca, Apollinaris for Ravenna, Marcus for Atina, Proculus for Padua, Marcianus for Syracuse, and Pancratius for Taurinonium in the Isle of Sicily. But whether St. Peter planted it, or St. Paul watered it, certain I am that GOD only gave it the increase. It could not else have prospered under such a Tyranny, as many, if not most of the Roman Emperors did earnestly endeavor to suppress it with. But Sanguis Martyrum (saith Ecclesiæ) the watering of it with the blood of so many Martyrs, made it grow the faster. And this small grain of Mustard waxed so great a Tree, as over-shadowed all the Provinces of that mighty Empire; and did not only stand it out against all Tempests, but in conclusion did suppress that Superstition and Idolatry, for whose sake all those Princes, till the time of Constantine, did more or less, labour to destroy it. How much it had reduced since those times from its primitive purity, and how it did degenerate into Worldly pomp, and Secular policy, by the design and arts of those who boasted themselves to be Successors of that great Apostle, shall be a little touched at, in the story of the Roman Papacy. Suffice it in this place to say, that all the people of this Country, partly in reference to the Pope, partly for fear of the Inquisition, and partly by being kept in ignorance of the Protestant Doctrine (of which they are taught to believe many monstrous things) are all of the Religion of the Church of Rome.

But though the Fountains of the waters of Eternal life, have either been stopped or else corrupted by the Popes of Rome; the Rivers which do water this most flourishing Garden, still preserve their beds, and run unimpeded and uncorrupted in the same Channels, as before they did. And of these Italy hath as many as any one Country; but none of any long course, by reason that all parts of it are so near some Seas; most of which rising from the Alps, or the Apennine Hills, by melting of the Snows in Winter and casualty of Land-floods at other times of the year, do often overflow the Country, and for the most part leave an ill Air behind them. Those of chief note are, 1. The River Po or Padus (the Greeks call it Eridanus) into which Phaeton is said to have been drenched when he fell from Heaven. It ariseth in the Alps, runneth through Lombardy, which it divideth into Cisadrianum and Transpadanum; and having taken in thirty lesser streams, falls with seven mouths into the Adriatick Sea not far from Venice. 2. Robur, now called Pisatello, anciently the North-bound of Italy. His fons quondam Italiae fons, as it is in Pliny. It runneth into the Adriatick Sea not far from Rimini, or Ariminum, now the Port-town to Ravenna, the Haven of Ravenna being long since choked; but of this River more in another place. 3. Arno, which rising in the Apennine falletteth in to the Tuscan Sea, and anciently divided Italy on that side from the Cisalpine Galls: on the banks hereof standeth the fair City of Florence. 4. Ticino, which gave name to the City of Pavia called of old Ticinum; it riseth in the Alps, and emptieth it self into the Lake called Lacus Verbanus. 5. Livis now called Garigliis, stained with the blood of French and Spaniards, in their quarrels for the Realm of Naples, and no less unfortunately memorable for the drowning of Peter de Medicis. 6. Caique fuit rerum promissa potentis, Tibris.

And Tiber, unto which was given
The power of all things under Heaven.

It riseth from the Apennine Hills, not far from Arretium (now Arezzo) a Town of Tuscan (which it parted from the Roman Latium, and the Land of the Sabines) and gliding gently near Citta di Castello, Perugia, and the old Oriculum, passeth by Rome, and falletteth into the Tuscan or lower Sea, at Ostia. Here is also, 7. The Lake of Thrasymene, near which Annibal defeated Flaminius the Consul and his whole Army, opening thereby his passage to the gates of Rome; and 8. The famous River of Mæturnus, where the Romans overcame Asdrubal the Brother of Annibal, and thereby made a way to the ruin of Carthage. Others of less note shall be mentioned in their proper places.

As for the Mountains of this Country, those of most note are the Alps, and the Apennines, of which the residue in a manner are but spurs and branches. Of these the Alps being also appertaining to France and Germany, or rather containing many large and entire Provinces which belong to neither, deserve a Treatise by it self. The Apennines, being proper only to this Country, but so that it relates to many and particular Provinces of it, shall be spoken of here. A ledge of Hills which take beginning near Savona, a Town of the Commonwealth and Country of Genoa, situate on the Mediterranean, and fetching a little compass Northwards, extend to the further part of Italy, dividing it almost in the very middle: that part thereof which lieth towards the Tyrrhenian, or Tuscan Sea, being called Cisapennina; Transapennina, that which lieth towards the Adriatick. Passing in one entire body as far as Apollis, a Town of Mare Anconitana (a Province belonging to the Pope) where they are at the highest; it is there parted into two horns or branches, whereto one runs out to the mount of Gargano, and so unto the Land of Oranto; the other spreadeth it self as far as Calabria, those being the most Eastern Provinces of this noble Continent. Called the Apennine as some say, a Penna, by which word the Latins used to signify the top or summit of an Hill, by reason of the height and sharp points thereof; as others say, quasi Alpes Peninae, because first overcome by Annibal and his Carthaginians, who the Roman Writers did by the name of Penni. The Inhabitants hereof by Virgil named Apenusiaci. But otherwise reducible to some of the neighbouring Provinces. Of this large Mountain most of the Hills of Italy from Savona Eastwards, are but the excursions; which being of less note, shall be spoken of as they be before us in the way.

To proceed now to so much of the History of Italy, as concerns the general; we are to know that the first Inhabitants of it (not to say any thing of the fictions of Eriæ Annus under the name of Berosus, who will needs have Nash himself come hither shortly after the Flood) were doubtless of the race of Cittim or Kittim the fourth son of Javan, one of the sons of Japhet. Who being planted by their Father in that part of Greece, which was since called Macedon, and after spreading themselves further as their numbers increased, peopled Etolia and the Countries adjoining to it: From whence, detestous of a warmer and more fertile Soil, they came in tract of time to the Coasts of Dalmatia, and thence to this Country since called Italy. That they did spring originally from the seed of Cittim (or Kittim), as the Greek pronunciation it wants not very good Authors. For thus Eusebius, Kittim ἔστιν Ἀρχαῖος ἢ Πρωτογενής, that is to say, him the Kittians, or children of Kittim, descended the Latins and the Romans. The fame occurs also in the Chronicon of Alexandria. So also faith Cædrenus in his Analeis, but with more punctuality. Telephus (saith he) the son of Hercules, reigned in Italy, and after him his son Ionius, ἢ Τῆς Κιττίας; ἢ Ἀρχαῖος ἢ Πρωτογενής, from whom the Kittians were named Latins. The same in other words faith Suidas. Nor want there some remainders of this name in approved Writers; besides these authorities; there being a Town in Latium called Ketea, mentioned in Dionysius Halicarnassius, and a River named Ketes not far from Cume, wherof Aristotle speaketh in his book de Mirabilibus. And that they came immediately from the Adriatics, belideth the other Arguments which Reinsceus utteth in this point, the names, or identity rather of the names doth seem to intimate. For Etolia being written in the Greek Italia, and the letter O being changed into A according to the Adriack Dialect, which was that used by the Etolians; the alteration of the name from Adriatic and Adriatics, to Italia and Italians, will be thought very easy, if not natural; the rather in regard there is an Island near Italy, in the Tuscan Sea, peopled originally by these very Etolians, which in ancient times was called Etholia. And it by such an easy alteration of one Letter only, Italy may derive its first plantation from the Etolians, as no doubt it may; then may that Italus, the Chieftain of whom Virgil speaks, be no other than Attilus, some man of principal mark and eminency, amongst that People, who had the Conduct of this Colony, when they came for Italy. And this I should believe much rather, than that this Italus was the name of a King of Sicily: it being more probable that Sicily should borrow its first Planters out of Italy, than Italy should borrow either Name or People from so small a Kingdom; especially considering that the name of Attilus was famous in those parts of Greece, ever since Attilus the son of a King of Etolis was Founder of the Etolian Kingdom. The way thus shewn, and the passages into Italy laid open, it was not long before the Pelasgi, another Greek Nation, found the way into it: after whom Saturn out of Crete, and Evander out of Arcadia, with their several followers, came and settled there. Not to say any thing of those several Colonies, which coming out of Peloponnesus, and the parts of Achaia, planted themselves so thick in the East of Italy, now called Calabria, that of long time it had the name of Magna Græcia. So that the Græcians made the main grove or body of the Italy people: to which the coming of some Tuscan under the conduct of Tyrrhenus a Prince of Lydia, in Asia minor, served but as an Accessory, and altered nothing of the Principal. The last that settled here, were some of the Relicks of Troy, under the conduct of Æneas: who flying from their Native Country, and enraged Enemies, were first cast upon the Coasts of Africk, where having laid a while to refresh his Companies (we shall hereafter take an occasion to consider of the Fable of his loves with Dido) he let fall for Italy, being the place assigned him by the Gods for his Seat and Empire, whither he came with fifteen Ships, which might contain, according to the rate which Ulyssides alloweth to the Vessels then used, to the number of 1200 men. And there he landed, as it proved in an happy hour: For he was no sooner arrived, but he was lovingly cherished and entertained by Latinus King of the Latins, or of Latium's whole chief City or Seat-Royal was then called Laurentum; which much relieving of this Stranger, as a man whole time had been his Harbinger, thought he could neither manifest his love sufficiently, nor bind him fast enough unto him, but by betrothing him unto Lavinia, his only daughter. Hence grew the Wars betwixt Æneas, and Turan King of the Rutuli, a former Suiter, which being ended in the death of the Rutuli in Rival, confirmed Æneas and his Trojans in a sure possession. For now growing with the Latins, or Laurentians, into a more constant bond of Friendship, by many inter-marriages and mutual kindneses, they built the Town of Lavinium, called so in honour of their Queen, intending it for the Seat-Royal of the Princes of the Trojan line. But long it did not hold that state. For Aeneas the son of Jeneas by his former Wife, to avoid all occasions of contention with his Mother-in-Law, left her (Jeneas being dead) in possession of Lavinium, and built Lunga Alba, which being surrendered by Julius the son of Africanus to his half brother Sylvius, became the constant habitation of the Sylvian Kings, till the building of Rome, and final ending of the race of the Sylvian Kings, the names of whom (for there occurs little of their doings) we are next to these; taking along with us those few Kings which reigned in those parts of Italy, before the coming of Aeneas.

A. M. The Kings of Italy of the Aboriginis.

2637 1 Janus, the first King of the Aboriginis, who lived in the same time with Boaz and Ruth. He received Saturn flying out of Greece from Jupiter, and left him his Kingdom at his death. He is said to be the Founder of the City of Genoa, and to have given name to the Hill in Rome called Janiculum, on which it was supposed that he had his dwelling.

2 Saturn, who taught the people the use of dunging of their Lands, and for that cause was honoured by them as a God, under the name of Stercoris, as St. Austine hath it. He reigned first together with Janus, and afterwards by himself alone: the whole time of both their reigns was 33 years.

2670 3 Picus, well skilled in divination by the flight and chattering of Birds, and therefore feigned by the Poets to be turned into a Pye. He entertained Evander and his Arcadians, giving them the Hill (called after Aventine) to build upon. 37.

2707 4 Faunus, the son of Picus, and the Husband of Fatua, in whose time Hercules came into Italy, vanquished the Giants of Cremona, and killed the Giant Cacus, who had fled from him out of Spain. 44.

2751 5 Latinius, the son of Faunus, who entertained Aeneas coming from the Wars and destruction of Troy, and gave him his daughter Lavinia to wife, with his Kingdom after him in Dower. 36.

2787 6 Lavinia, daughter to Latinius, and Queen of the Latins married to Aeneas whom she outlived, he being slain in his Wars against Meczentius, the King of Tuscany, the son or successor of that Meczentius (an ungodly Tyrant) whom Aeneas had before slain in his War with Turnus and the Latins. 7.

A. M. Kings of the Latins of the Trojan or Sylvian Race. 2787 1 Aeneas the son of Anchises, and Husband of Lavinia, slain in his Wars against Meczentius King of the Tuscans or Hetrurians, as before is said. 3.

2790 2 Africanus, the son of Aeneas by Cressa his former wife: for fear of whom, Lavinia being great with child, fled into a Wood, and was there delivered of a son called Silvius. He removed the Seat Royal from Lavinium to Lunga Alba, a City of his own building. 38.

2828 3 Sylvius Posthumus, the son of Aeneas by Lavinia, preferred to the Kingdom by the love of the people, before Julius the son of Africanus (the Founder of the Julian Family) from whom all the Kings of this race had the name of Sylvius; Julius being honored with the title Priesthood (an Office next in dignity to that of the King) which he translated afterwards unto his Posterity. 29.

2857 4 Aeneas Sylvius, 31.

2888 5 Latinius Sylvius, 30.

2938 6 Alba Sylvius, so called because of his beautifying and repairing the City Alba, then in some decay: or probably, because there he had his birth. 39.

2977 7 Capetus Sylvius, 22.

3001 8 Capys Sylvius, said to be the Founder of the City of Capua; which shews that he extended his dominion farther than the Province of Latium. 28.

3029 9 Capetus Sylvius, 13.

3024 10 Tiberinus Sylvius, from whom the River Tiber derives that name, being formerly called Albulas. 8.

3050 11 Agrippa Sylvius, 40.

3090 12 Alladius Sylvius, who to make himself the more terrible to his Subjects, studied a way to imitate the Thunder's but was killed at last by a real Thunder-clap from Heaven. 19.

3109 13 Aventinus Sylvius, who gave the name to the Hill Aventine. 37.

3146 14 Procas Sylvius, 23.

3169 15 Amulius Sylvius, the younger son of Procas, setting aside his Brother Numitor, obtained the Kingdom for himself; slain at last by Romulus, and Numitor settled in the Throne. 42.

3211 16 Numitor, the 21 King from Janus, and the last King of the Latins, restored by Romulus to the Throne; and after the short reign of one year only, deprived by him both of life and Kingdom. After whose death the Latins, or Albans, had no more Kings, but kept themselves as a Free Estate till subdued to Rome. 1.

Concerning this it is to be understood, that Amulius having chased his eldest Brother Numitor out of the Country, and possessed himself of the Throne, caused his Brothers daughter Rhea (for preventing an issue by her) to be shut up in the Temple of Vesta. Where the proving the mother of two sons, was according to the Law but quick, and her children by the cruel Tyrant cast out to be devoured of wild beasts. They were found by Faustulus the Kings Shepherd, nursed by his Wife, for her infamous life called Lupa (whence came the Fable, that they were suckled by a Wolf) and being grown to manhood, fled the Tyrant Amulius, placing their Grandfather Numitor, in the Royal Throne; whom not long after they deprived both of life and Kingdom. Of these the eldest was named Romulus, and the younger Rhemus, who leaving Alba to the short possession of their Grandfather Numitor, laid the foundation of the most famous City of Rome; which Romulus first handled with the blood of his Brother Rhemus, who had disdainfully leapt over the Walls of his new City. This City he made an Asylum or place of Refuge for all comers, of what desperate estate soever, and having ranked them into order, made himself their King. A people of so base a nature, that their neighbours refused to give them any of their daughters in marriage: So they were destitute of wives, and consequently not like to continue a people long; till on a Proclamation made of some Plays and Pastimes, many of the Sabine women flocked thither to behold the sports, whom the Romans seized on, and forced an unwilling consent from them, to become their Wives. From such a base and low beginning did this City rise to be the Empress of the World.

The

The Kings of Rome.

A. M.

3213 1 Romulus, the Founder of Rome; he made peace with Tatius King of the Sabinis, coming against him to revenge the ravishment of their Women; incorporating him and his into his new City, and by that means adding thereto a fair and goodly Territory. 37.

3251 2 Numa, the first Author of the Roman Ceremonies. 43.

3294 3 Tullus Hostilius, who enlarged the borders of Rome by the Conquest of Alba, the mother City of the Latins, and vanquished the Fidenates. 32.

3326 4 Anus Marcius, who built Osia on the mouth of Tiber, to be an Haven to the City. 24.

3350 5 Tarquinius Priscus, who subdued many of the Trojan Nations, increased the number of the Tribes and Senators, and added the triumphal Ornaments. 38.

3388 6 Servius Tullus, who first caused the people to be enrolled, and brought into use. 44.

3432 7 Tarquinius Superbus, son to the former Tarquinius. He vanquished the Gabii, and took the Towns of Ardea, Ostium, and Suessa Pometia: but for his own insolent behaviour, and a Rape committed on Lucretia the Wife of Collatin by his son Seamus, he and his whole race were driven out of the Town, Ann. Mundi. 3457. V.C. 268.

After this, the Romans loathing the name of King, chose two Officers to be chosen out of the Patricii, or chief Citizens, to whom they gave the name of Consuls, ad consulenda, from counselling of, and consulting the good of the Commonwealth, ut consules se suis civibus meminissent, faith the Historian, their name being a Memoria of their charge or duty. And in this Office they resolved to have always two, and those but only for a year, Ne vel solitudine vel mora potestas corrupteretur. And though some had the fortune to be Consuls two or three years together, yet every new year they were anew chosen, and to their Offices reckoned as several: neither do we find any to have been elected for less than a year, unless upon the death or deposition of a former, until the Civil Wars. But then, cum belli civilis premia sollicitari caperent, when theyelves done in the Civil Wars required a quicker turn in requital, the Consulship was given only for some part of the year, and ordinarily for two Months: the first Consuls being named Ordinarii in whose names the writings for the whole year were dated: the other Minores, or Honorary, which only served to make up a number. For so ambitious were the Romans of this honour, that when Maximus died in the last day of his Consulship, Cornelius Rebilus petitioned Cesar, for that part of the day that remained: whence that to memorate Justi of Tully, O vigilante Consulem, qui tot consulatus suis tempore summum oculis non vidit! And when Cicero was by the Senate degraded from this honour on the day in which he was to have resigned it, one Publius Reginus obtained the Office from Vitellius for the day remaining: but as the Historian notes, magna cum irrisu accipiente, relictisq. Now as the Romans did thus exceed the first number of Consuls, so sometimes fell they short of it. The first that was sole Consul was Pompey in the beginning of the Civil Wars, viz. A.D.C. 403. The next, one Varenus D.C. 410. This Office, from the first Institution to the final period of it, continued at the least in name (for the Emperors had of long time assumed the Power and Prerogative appertaining to it) the space of 1084 years though not without many intermissions of the name and Title, by the several interplings of the Decemviri, the Dictators, and the Consular Tribunes; of which more anon. The last Consul was one Basilus, in the time of Justinian, A.C. 542. The two first Callistinus the husband of Lucretia, and Junius Brutus, by whose indignation the people had took Arms against the house of the Tarquins. A man so zealous in defence of the common liberty, so resolutely bent to make good what he had begun, and so extremely opposite to the Royal Race, that he not only caused Callistinus to resign his Office with the year, because he was of the blood of the Tarquins, but executed his own laws for holding corrupt Conduces & intelligence with them. But though the Government were changed, the old design was followed, which the Kings had laid for the enlarging of their Empire; but followed with so slow a pace, by reason of their factions and divisions, that it was full 900 years before they could be Masters of Italy. A matter not unworthy of our consideration, that the Italians should hold out so long a time against the puissance of the Romans; when in less than half that time ensuing, they did possess themselves of almost all Europe, and many goodly Kingdoms and Provinces both in Asia and Africa: So difficult a thing it was (as is said by Florus) dare caput Italiae, to contract the many limbs of Italy into one body, and unite them under one head.

But to proceed, after Italy was fully conquered by them, they fell upon the Carthaginians, as their nearest neighbours; whose overthrow in the end of the first Punic War, A.U.C. 512. gave them the full possession of Sicily, (except the State of Syracusa) and the Isle of Sardinia. After that being molested in their Trade by the Illyrian Pirates; and finding them countenanced therein by the Queen of that Nation, they made a fortunate War against her, and brought that puissant people to become their Tributaries, A.U.C. 525. The second Carthaginian War, managed by Annibal in the bowels of Italy, had almost put a period to the glories of their Commonwealth. But that being also ended to their advantage by the conquest of Spain, they quarrelled Philip King of Macedon, who had aided Annibal, compelled him to accept of peace on their own terms, and after outdrew his son Perseus of all his Dominions, making Macedon a Province of Rome, and all the rest of Greece but their Tenants at will. Nor was it long before they picked a quarrel with Antiochus the great King of Syria, made him abandon his possession of the Leffer Asia; and finally prevailed so successfully in all their actions, that there was neither King nor Commonwealth that could stand in their way, until the State being burdened with its too much greatness, began to totter of its self.

Two things there were, which much conduced to the advancement of the Romans to their power and greatness, besides the Providence of God which had disposed of it: which were the great encouragements which they gave their Soldiers, and the Triumphant manner of reception which they used to bestow upon their Generals when they returned home with honour and victory. For when any of their Generals did so return, they permitted to enter sitting on a glorious Chariot, the spoils which he had got in War being carried before, the Prisoners he had taken following bound at the heels of his Chariots; his Soldiers compassing him about with their several Crowns according to the quality of their well-deeds, and all the Fathers of the City, attended by the Priests and principal Ladies going out to meet him. The first beginning of which custom is ascribed to Romulus, who in the War with Acan King of the Ceninenfes made against him in revenge of the rape committed by the Romans on the Sabine women, seeing his people give ground, called for help to Jupiter, and vowed if he overcame King Aeneas, to offer up his Armour to him. Aeneas being vanquished, the Conqueror cut down a fair young Oak and hangeth on it all the Armour of the vanquished King: then girding his Gown close unto him, and putting on his head a Garland of Laurel, he laid the Oak upon his shoulders and marched towards the City, his Army following, and singing an Epitaph, or song of victory. To this we must refer the original and beginning of Triumphs. But, Nihil est inventum & perfectum eodem tempore, as the saying is. Tarquinius Priscus long after Romulus, added hereunto the purple Robe, and the triumphal Chariot drawn with four horses. The other pomps came afterwards, as they grew both in power and pride. Now of these Triumphs there were two sorts the greater, which was properly called a Triumph, and the lesser, vulgarly called the Ovation, which differed from one another in many circumstances. For, 1. The Triumph made his entrance in a Royal Chariot, and was met only by the Senators in their Robes; but the Ovation made his entrance on foot, and was met only by the Knights and Gentlemen of Rome. 2. The Triumph had a Laurel Crown, and entered with a noise of Drums and Trumpets; but the Ovation had only a Garland of Firr, with Flutes and Hautboys playing before him. 3. The Triumph was attended in a Garment of State, which they called Vestis Trabeata, but the Ovation in a plain purple Gown only. 4. In a Triumph, the Soldiers carried out, in Triumph; but in an Ovation, they ingeminated only O. O. O. from the often doubling of which word, it had (as some think) the name of an Ovation. 5. And lastly the Triumph used to sacrifice a certain number of Oxen; but the Ovation a Sheep only, from whence the name is properly to be derived.

Now there was three calcs in which the Conqueror was to be content with this lesser Triumph. 1. If the number of enemies whom the flew in battle exceeded not 5000 men; or that he had not so much overcome them by force, as by persuasion or subtilty. 2. If the War had been flight, cursory, or not lawfully managed. And 3. If it were against an Ignoble Enemy. And of this last we have a fair instance in P. Rupilius, who having got the victory in the Servile War, (a victory of great importance to the State of Rome) was yet content with an Ovation, in Triumph dignitatem Servili infirmitate violaret, as it is in Florus. As for the greater Triumphs, they were indeed very full of magnificence; the pomp whereof, who list to see, may find it in the Triumph of Paulus Emilius described by Plutarch; though by that which hath before been said, we may conjecture somewhat at the glories of it.

And yet this Honour was not always vouchsafed to those who had but deserved it, there being many ways whereby it might be forfeited or denied in a factious State, and jealous of the over-greatness of the men of War. For, 1. Sometimes it was denied a victorious General, by the strength of a contrary Faction; and so Pompey denied Mucellus the honour of a Triumph for the conquest of Crete: 2. Sometimes the Conqueror himself is willing to decline it, for fear of envy: And so Marcellus in Plutarch, after his conquest of Sicily, having triumphed twice before, refused that honor: his reason was, ἔγὼ δὲ ἀνὴρ ἄριστος & ἰσχυρότατος, for fear his third Triumph might become a matter of envy. 3. Sometimes the Soldiers, having been ill paid, or otherwise not well treated by their Commanders, opposed them in their suit for it: and this was the case of Paulus Emilius, who questioned if he missed this honour for not dividing amongst them the spoils of Greece, as he once had promised it Servilius and others of the Senate, making it their own cake, had not tickled hard for him with the Soldiers. 4. It was sometimes denied, because the General had born no public Office in the Commonwealth: for so, in Livy, when Lentulus coming Proconsul out of Spain required a Triumph, the Fathers answered, that he had indeed done things worthy of that honour, but that they had no precedent for it, ut qui neque Consul, neque Dictator, neque Praetor Res gestisset, Triumpharet. 5. Sometimes the Generals themselves omitted it for the furtherance of some of their other purposes: And so Cæsar coming towards Rome a Victor, at the same time the Consuls were to be chosen; laid aside his demand of the Triumph to sue for the Consulship; it being the custom that such as demanded the Triumph should abide without the City, and such as sued for the Consulship must of necessity be within. 6. Sometimes it was denied, when the War had been undertaken without the Command of the Senate: in which respect the Triumph was denied unto Marius on the conquest of Galatia by him, to the great enlargement of their Empire, quia causam Belli Senatus non approbasset, because he had no Commission from the Senate for it. 7. There was no Triumph granted if the War had been Civil, because in all such Wars whoever was Conqueror, the Commonwealth was a loser by it. And therefore Pompey and Metellus having vanquished Sertorius and his party in Spain, would have it called a Foreign, nor a Civil War, because they would not lose their Triumph. Extremum magis id bellum quam Civile: videri volebant, ut triumpharent. 8. If the Victory had not been obtained without great loss on the Romans sides in which regard Valerius after his conquest of the Galls was denied this honour, quiam agni doli civium amissis, quam gaudium suis hostibus praestulit, faith Alexander ab Alexandro. 9. And lastly, the Triumph was denied a General, if the service had not been performed in his own Province: And so we find that when Lucius and Nero, being Consuls, had vanquished Asdrubal, Lucius only had the Triumph, though Nero was the man that had won the day, because the field was fought in the Province of Lucius, to which Nero came but as an Accessory, or assistant to him.

And these are all, or at the least the principal causes of hindering or omitting this great Honour, indeed the greatest that the Free-State could be capable of. But after when the Commonwealth was changed into a Monarchy, it began to be laid aside for altogether, as too great for subjects; and was first purposely neglected by Vespasian Agrippa, the Establishment of Augustus in the Roman Empire, who when he had a Triumph decreed unto him, for quenching certain Rebellions in Africa, and his quiet settling of that Country; to give civility an example, refused to accept it. And this example being (as it were) a rule to others, occasioned that this custom was in short time quite laid aside; and that no man under the degree of an Emperor triumphed solemnly; all others from thenceforth, being content with the Triumphal Ornaments, subornatis ensibus, togis, in the words of Dio. And though Bisulcius having subdued the Kingdom of the Vandals in Africa, is said (600 years after the death of Agrippa) to have had the honour of a Triumph; yet in propriety of speech, it was nothing but an honourable presenting of himself and his prisoners before the Emperor, and was so far from the magnificence of a Roman Triumph, that it wanted many of the solemnities used in an Ovation. Nor did the Emperors themselves much affect this honour, either because too popular, or too chargeable, or that they thought it was beneath the Imperial Majesty; the last (as I remember) that made use thereof to set forth his glories, being Valerius Probus, after his victory ries over the Germans, and the Blomy, a people of Africa, in or about the year 284 of our Saviour's birth.

In the next place look we on the encouragements and rewards of the Common Soldiers: For, besides the setting out of Lands and dwellings for the poorer sort, in which they might rest themselves when they were past service; and besides the large donatives which the General in his Triumph did below upon them; they had their mural Crowns for him that first scaled the Walls, a naval Crown for him that first boarded the Enemies ships, a Camp Crown, or Corona Castroris, for him that had forced a way into the Tents or Camp of the Enemy; a City Crown, or Corona Civica, for him that had preserved the life of a Roman Citizen. Not to say any thing of those Chains and Bracelets which Soldiers of inferior merit were adorned withal. By which encouragements, and the good conduct of their Councils in the Senate, the Roman affairs succeeded so prosperously, and their Dominions were enlarged so immensely, that never any Commonwealth had so large a growth.

And yet the greatness of this State is neither totally, nor only to be attributed to the Consular Government. For though the Walls of this great building were raised by the Consuls, yet the foundation of the same was laid by the Kings, and the roof thereof laid on by the Emperors. Nay, be it spoken to the honour of Monarchical Government, whenever any great and imminent danger did seem to threaten them, they were fain to lay aside their confidence in the rule of their Consuls, and betake themselves to the Command of one Sovereign Officer, whom they called Dilatator. Of which, and other the changes hapning in the State of Rome, take this short abstract from Corn. Tacitus. "Urben Romam à principibus Reges habuere, &c. "The City of Rome, was in the beginning governed by Kings. Liberty and the Consulship L. Brutus brought in. The Dilatator were chose but for a time: The Decemviri passed not two years, neither had the Consular authority of the Triumvires of the Soldiers any long continuance, or Gin-na's or Sylla's dominion. Pompey and Crassus quickly yielded to Cæsar's forces; Lepidus and Antony to Augustus. So Tacitus in brief of these publick changes: Of which, as to the Decemviri, which were instituted only on a particular occasion for the reforming of the Laws by those of dilatators, and the Military Tribunes of Consul Authority ordained to divert common people from seeking after the Consulship; I shall here say nothing. But as for the Dilatator, being Officers of a Supreme power, and such as made way for the Emperors in the close of all, I shall enlarge a little further. They were called Dilatators a dilando, because they prescribed what they pleased unto the people; which they were bound to execute and not dispute. Hence that memorable jest of Julius Cæsar, who being told that Sylla had resigned his Dilatatorship though by the decree of Senate made perpetual to him's returned this Answer, that Sylla was an unlearned man, dilatare nesciit, and therefore knew not how to dilate; or to play the Dilatator. They were also called Populi Magistri, or the peoples Masters, because from them lay no appeal unto the people (as did from all the rest of the Roman Magistrates) during the whole time of their Command, which ordinarily continued for six months; yet so, that if they did in the mean time settle the affairs of the Common-wealth, they resigned it sooner: if the necessities of the State required a longer continuance in it, they were chosen again. The names of as many of them as I have met withal, I have here subjoined together with the services they did the Publick, in the time of their Office.

The Dilatators of Rome.

A. D. C.

- 253 1 Titus Lartius, chosen upon occasion of a general War made by the Latins upon Rome; the first that ever had this Office.
- 257 2 Aulus Postumius, chosen to pursue that War, which he ended with the slaughter of 30000 of the Latins.
- 295 3 L. Quintinus Cincinnatus, chosen to this Office from the Plough, overcame the Volsces, chosen again A. D. C. 314. to suppress the sedition raised by Sp. Mælius.
- 318 4 Amilius Mamercus, overcame the Veientes and the Fidenates, and was thrice in eleven years called unto this Office.
- 338 5 Pub. Servilius, who finally vanquished the Fidenates and the Lavinians.
- 354 6 Furius Camillus, who finally destroyed the City of the Vols, and being chosen a second time, A. D. C. 362. preserved his Country from the Galls: thrice chosen after this upon new occasions.
- 375 7 Tit. Quintinus Cincinnatus, chosen in the War against the Latins.
- 385 8 L. Manlius, elected in the time of a grievous pestilence, to find a way for the appealing of the gods.
- 396 9 C. Sulpicius.
- 418 10 Marius Rustilius, the first Dilatator chosen out of the Commons.
- 11 L. Papirius, subdued the Samnites.
- 438 12 Cæsius; by whom the Samnites were again vanquished.
- 13 Amilius, who also overcame the Samnites.
- 14 Lentulus, who triumphed also over the Samnites.
- 451 15 I. Bembulus, who finally subdued the Æqui and the Volsci.
- 16 Corn. Rufinus.
- 467 17 Q. Hortensius, chosen for appeasing a difference between the Senate and the Commons, who had fortified himself in Janiculum, one of the Hills whercon Rome stood.
- 505 18 Cl. Gliazia, forced to resign his Office to Attilius Colatinus, the first that exercised his Office out of Italy: he was chosen in the first Punic War.
- 505 19 Attilius Colatinus, the first that exercised his Office out of Italy: he was chosen in the first Punic War.
- 536 20 Fabius Maximus, chosen in the War against Amibal.
- 537 21 M. Junius, chosen upon the great defeat which the Roman Forces had at the battle of Cannæ.
- 545 22 L. Manlius Torquatus, chosen upon the death of Marcellus Consul slain by Amibal.
- 672 23 L. Sylla, (descended from that Corn. Rufinus, who had been formerly in this Office) having by force of Arms suppressed the Faction of Marinus and Cinna, made himself Master of the City, and caused himself to be chosen Perpetual Dilator, after the Office had been intermitted, for the space of 127 years: which Office having exercised with a great deal of cruelty, he resigned with as great a confidence.
- 707 24 C. Julius Cæsar descended from Julius the son of Ascanius, who was the second King of the Trojans.

Trojan race, having conquered Britain, and added all Gaul Transalpine to the Roman Empire; and finding himself unworthily required by the Faction of Pompey, passed with his Army after him into Greece: and having vanquished him in the fields of Pharsalia, and made himself absolutely Master of the Roman Empire; took to himself the supreme Government thereof, under the Title of Dictator; which having managed for the space of five years, he was murdered in the Senate-house by Brutus and Cassius.

Before the time of these perpetual Dictators, the Romans having some enemies or other that opposed the progress of their fortunes, had not the leisure to contend with one another in a public way; or if they did, their differences and seditions were soon composed. But being grown too great as to fear no Enemy; and the Estate too vast, that it was grown too mighty for a popular Government; then they began to practise on the people's patience, and to project the sharing of the Empire amongst the great Ones. Concerning which, take here this short Epitome, which I find in Tacitus. "Rebus modo dictis equalitas facile habebatur. &c. While (saith he) our Dominions were but small, Equality was easily maintained among us. But after we had subdued the World, and destroyed all Kings and Cities that stood in our way, or might work our annoyance; when we had leisure to seek after Wealth without peril, there arose hot contentions betwixt the Nobility and Commons. Sometimes the factious Tribunes carried it away, sometimes the Consuls had the better: and in the City and common Forum, some little skirmishes (the beginning of our Civil Wars) were sometimes seen. Afterwards, C. Marius one of the meaneſt of the Commonwealth, and L. Sulla the most cruel of all the Nobility, by force of Arms overthrowing the Freedom reduced all to an absolute Government. To them succeeded Cn. Pompeius, a little closer in his projects, but not nothing better minded to the Common-wealth: Et nunquam postea nisi de Principatu quæſimus; and never after that was any other point debated, than who should get the Sovereignty unto himself. So Tacitus: and he saith it rightly. For after Pompey had revived the controverſie, and had found Cæſar a better Disputant than himself; Augustus, Antonius, and Lepidus (on the death of Cæſar) made good the Argument, attracting all power unto themselves by the name of Triumvirs: till Augustus having out-witted Lepidus, and vanquished M. Antony at the battel of Actium, became sole Sovereign of the State, by the name of Prince; Et cuncta bellis civilibus ſeſſa, nomine Principis ſub imperium accepit, as that Author hath it.

But touching those great alterations in the State of Rome, the contentions for the chief command, and the Reduction of it into a Monarchy by Augustus Cæſar, I published a Discourse in the year 1631. (but written many years before) under the title of AUGUSTUS, or an Essay of those Means and Counsels whereby the Commonwealth of Rome was altered, and reduced to a Monarchy. Which being but short, is pertinent to the present business, and so well entertained when it came abroad; I hope it will not be improper or unprofitable to subjoin it here. The Reader may either peruse it, or permit it, as his phanſie guides him. And here it followeth in these words.

They which have heretofore written of Commonwealths, have divided them into three Species: 1. The Government of the Kings, secondly, of the Nobles, and thirdly, of the People. Either of these is again subdivided into good and evil: The evil being only the good corrupted; the good nothing else but the bad rectified. So is the Government of a King divided into a Monarchy, and a Tyranny: Of the Nobles, into Aristocracy and Oligarchy: Of the People, into a Republick, and Democracy. All these, as well in general, as in the several couplets, have a secret inclination to change the one into the other; and to make a Pythagorical transmigration (as it were) into each others King, if need not stand on many instances. The Common-wealth of Rome ("into whose stories whoever looks, will judge "them rather to contain the acts of the whole World, "than a particular Nation) will serve for all. Romulus at the foundation of his City, reserved unto himself the chief Sovereignty, leaving it entire to his successors. Numa, Ancus, Tullus, Tarquin the Elder, and Servius, governed themselves so moderately, and the People so justly, that they affected not Tyranny, nor the Commons Liberty. They appeared more desirous to fill the Coffers of their Subjects than their own Treasuries: And when necessity compelled them to a Tax, they rather seemed to their their sheep than fleece them. But Tarquin the second, commonly called Superbus, a man of insupportable Vices, having by violence enthronized himself in that Chair of State, which (had not his ambitious spirit been impatient of delay) would have been his rightful Inheritance, made his government answerable to his entrance, cruel and bloody. How many men, eminent as well by their own Virtue, as their Parents Nobility, did he cut off? How many did he for no cause promote to make their fall the more remarkable? What part of the Senate was free from slaughter? What corner of the City from lamentations? Yet this was not all. The miserable Romans were visited with three Plagues at once: Pride in the Father, Cruelty in the Mother, and Lust exorbitant in their own Sons, a true Copy of the old Originals. Either of these had been more than enough to exercise the peoples patience. But meeting all at one time, it seemed that nothing could now be added to the wretchedness of the one, and the wickedness of the other. Brutus (a name fatal to Tyrants) did easily persuade the Commons to shake off this yoke. For they, as well desirous of Novelties as sensible of Oppressions, had long since murmured at the present State, and wanted nothing but a Head to break out into actual Rebellion. So the People got the Freedom, and the Kings lost the Sovereignty of the City.

2. Brutus, although he wanted no fair title to the Crown, yet either perceiving how odious the name of King was grown; or perhaps willing to be rather the first Consul than the last Prince, instituted a new form of Government: Wherein the sway of all was referred to the Fathers of the City; out of whom two were annually chosen as chief of the rest. And herein certainly he dealt very adviſedly. For had he sought to confirm himself in the Country, what could men judge, but that not long in his Country was the cause that stirred him to take Arms, but desire of Rule? Again besides that secure Privilege is to be preferred before hazardous Royalty, what hope had he to keep the seat long, having by his own example taught the people both the Theory and Practice of Rebellion? Under this new Aristocracy the Roman affairs succeeded so prosperously, their dominions were were enlarged so immensely, that it may well be questioned whether the Roman Fortune caused their greatness, or their valour commanded their Fortune. For the Governours not seeking wealth but honour, or not their own wealth, but the publick, did to demean themselves both in Peace and War, that there was between all a virtuous emulation which should most benefit his Country. An happiness which was too great to continue long. The people had as yet no written Laws; Custom bearing most sway, the rest of the Law looked up in the breast of the Judges. To avoid such inconveniences as might hence ensue, there were some men, conceived to be as found in judgment, as honest in their actions, deputed by the general Commission, to take an abstrakt of the Corian Laws: according to the tenor whereof, the people were to frame their lives, the Judges their sentences. Here followed the Oligarchy or Decemvirate, State of Rome, but long it lasted not. For these new Lords joining forces together, made themselves rich with the spoil of the people, not caring by what unlawful means they could purchase either profit or pleasure. Appius Claudius, one of the Decemvirs, was the break-neck of this Government. He, unmindful of Lucretia and the Tarquins, lulled after Virginia, a woman thought of low condition, yet such a woman in whom Beauty and Virtue strove for the preeminence. The issue was, that she (to save her honour) was slain by her own Father in an open Assembly of the People; Appius forced to make away himself in Prison; and the rest of that Magistracy abdicating their Offices, the Consuls were for a time restored.

3. The People flattered with this victory, and calling to mind how their Ancestors had in like manner banished the Kings, began to know their own strength, and stomached it exceedingly, that they on whose shoulders the frame of the State was supported, should be so much under the command of others, that they who were Lords abroad, should be below the condition of Slaves at home. Hereupon they raise a tumult under the Conduct of their Tribune, Canticus. Not could they by any persuasions be induced to lay down Arms till they had obtained a Decree, That from thenceforth the Nobles and the Commons might promiscuously be married. And this was the first step to the Republick. The gaining this new privilege, put them in possibility of obtaining greater. They now live to be capable of the Consulship. The Fathers consulting of this demand, wisely forbore that to grant their Petition, or to deny it, was alike dangerous. For were it utterly dashed, it was to be feared the people would again forsake the City; and yet make their stay more insolent and insupportable, if it were granted. C. Claudius, one who by his honorable behaviour, was by both parties had in an equal degree of reverence, quickly proposed a middle course, whereby the fury of the multitude might be appeased, without blemish to the Consular dignity. He constituted five Annual Officers, equally chosen out of the People and the Nobles, calling them Tribuni Militum Consularis potestatis. This Office continued, but not without many Interpositions, the space of 75 years. Which time extended, and some experience being had of the Peoples Government, the Lords of the Senate did decree, That one of the Consuls should from thenceforth be chosen by, and out of the Commons; that they should be capable of all Magistracies, yea, even of the Dictatorship. So that now Fortune was as speedily a Ladder to climb unto Honours, as Nobility of Birth; and a Good man as much respected as a Great. A rare felicity of the times.

4. The People being thus mixt with the Nobles, as well in Marriages as Honours: one would have thought that this Common-wealth, being thus equally poised, had been immortal. But as in the Natural Body there can be no exact and Arithmetical proportion of the humors and elements, without some predominancy; so in the Body Politick can there be no equal mixture of the Plebeians and Patricians, without the supremacy of the one or the other. The People had, presently after the institution of the Consuls, raised a Commotion, and withdrew themselves into Mount Aventine. Nor could they be intreated to return into the City, till there were granted unto them peculiar Officers called Tribuni Plebis, or Protectors of the Commons. These being not long after by the Common-Council pronounced to be Sacrosancti, and inviolable, began to heave the Popular State too high, and thrust the Aristocratick too low; not regarding to lose the love of the one, so they might get the applause of the other. Infomuch, that matters of judgment were devolved from the Fathers to the Commons; and the authority of the Senate trod under foot by the People. Nay, they proceeded so far, that Marius being Tribune, threatened to send Cato the Consul unto prison. And Sulpicius in the same Office made the Consuls forsake the Senate-house; and slew one of their sons, whose heels were not nimble enough to tie away. And now were the Romans governed by that form of rule, than which there is no lower. So that as well by an inevitable necessity in Nature, as the ordinary course of Policies, there must be reverting to the first, and Monarchical Authority. For questionless it saith many times with a Common-wealth as with the Sun, which runneth through all the signs of the Zodiack, till it return to the place where its motion first began. And the Placidian year of reducing of all things to the frame beginning, continuance, and period, how false soever in the Books of Nature, is in some sort true in the change of Government.

5. The way down hill is easy and ordinary, but to ascend unto the top requirith both wit to frame the steps, and courage to give the attempt. So was it here also with the Romans: They had naturally, and almost insensibly falln from a Monarchy to a Populacy or Democracy: But to ascend from a Populacy to a Monarchy, required many steps and degrees in many, much industry in all. Marius and Sulla, well skilled in feeding the humours of the People, were the first that attempted, and severally mounted to such a height of command, as never durst any promise to them, nor they hope for themselves. Marius was of an harsh and stern nature, equally cruel to the Enemy in War, and the People in Peace; one whose birth the Romans might have had just cause to curse, had he not saved them from the Cimbrs. Sulla was one whose carriage none could enough commend before, or sufficiently condemn after his prosperity. A man whose Peace was far more bloody than his Wars; a better Subject than a Prince.

These two gave way each to other, and both to death. Next these, as well in factions and designs, as blood and alliance, succeeded Cæſar and Pompey: Two men never truly parallel since their own times. Cæſar had a wit to invent pregnant, a heart to execute stout, and to both a Fortune to favourable, that he durst undertake what no man dared; and his performances commonly were answerable to his undertakings. Pompey, a man greater than his own or his friends wishes, had triumphed over all the parts of the known World; and could he but have brooked an Equal, he had never met Superior. Had these two lived in divers Ages, or exercised their valour on the common Enemy, the World had been too little to yield them employment.

END

But turning their forces one against the other, Pompey overthrown in the Field, was basely murdered in Egypt; and Cæsar, victoriously conqueror in Thebais, was barbarously massacred in the Capitol. And though none of these four Worthies could settle the Monarchy in himself, yet this shall be to their eternal memory recorded, that they first opened a passage to others, and first moved the stone, which rolling along, tumbled the People out of the Government.

6. After the overthrow of Pompey, and death of Cæsar, the Common-wealth might have recovered Liberty, if either Cæsar had left no heir, and Pompey no children; or rather, if Antony, a man of an unquiet and turbulent spirit, had not begun new troubles. For he knowing the affection of the common people unto young Octavius, Cæsar's heir; and hearing the continual report of his approach to Rome for his inheritance, did by Decree of the Senate restore Scævus the son of Pompey to his blood and honours; Hoping that they two, inheriting their Fathers hatreds, would like Pellets in a Boys Pot-gun drive out each others; and so he might remain Lord of the whole. But young Octavius was too old to be so fetch over, and had moreover more desire to revenge his Fathers death on Brutus and Cassius, than turn himself upon an Enemy that neither had done, nor could do him any hurt. At his first entrance into Rome he declared himself Cæsar's heir, though some regarding more his welfare than honour, disfavoured him from it. His retinue at his entrance was but small, his behaviour gentle and courteous, so that all had cause to love him, none to fear him. His first business was to Antony, then possessed of all Cæsar's estate. His words as model as his Petition just. Antony answer somewhat churlish, forbidding him to meddle in matters of State, adding that he was too young to take upon him the name of Cæsar, and so dismissed him unsatisfied, and with discontentments. AUGUSTUS (for by that name we mean to call him, though he was not yet so called) perceiving that Antony answer, though in these but a delay, was in effect a denial, insinuated into the acquaintance of Cicero, then potent among the Senators, and a capital Enemy of Antony; by whose means the Lords of the Senate began to cast great affection towards him. Next in a solemn Oration to the People, he let them know, how he intended to have distributed his Fathers wealth among them; and how Antony did unjustly detain it from them both. Certainly, there is not any thing prevailth sooner with the ignoble Man than hope of gain. No sooner had he finished his speech, and given away that to them, which he thought impossible to get for himself, but all was in a tumult. None was sparing of his words, but he had some curse in store for Antony: every one vowing the destruction of that man, whom they supposed to deprive them of AUGUSTUS donative.

7. In this hurly Antony quits the Town, and is by the general voice of the Houses declared an Enemy to the State. An Army is given to Hircius and Passus, then Consuls: AUGUSTUS, aged but 18 years, having proclaimed Imperator, and made head of the League against the common Foe. AUGUSTUS as he loved not to absent from a necessary War, so he always used to reserve himself from the dangers of it, and therefore he committed the whole enterprise unto the Consuls: well knowing that though the Officers and Soldiers took most pains to get the Victory, yet would the honour of it be referred to him, as Imperator; Whereas if any thing fell out to the Army not well, his being a Non-agent in the business, would bring his honour off without him. The Consuls therefore proceeded in the War against Antony: who seeing little possibility of prevailing, resolved to sell the loss of his own liberty and his Soldiers lives, at a dear rate. And indeed the fortune of the day was so equally shared, that as the Consuls might boast of the vanquishment of Antony, so Antony might triumph in the death of the Consuls.

AUGUSTUS had now as much as he could desire, more than he expected; a victorious Army at his service. He therefore applies himself to them, that giving that among them which he had in present, and promising them greater favours, according as his fortune and their valour should advance him; he bound them unto him in an eternal bond of allegiance, and made them the first step by which he ascended the Royalty. The Lords of the Senate hearing of the young mans fortune, thought it belto strangle these hopes even in their Cradles, and to that end, decree the honour of governing Antony, not to belong to AUGUSTUS, but to Decius Brutus; for whose defence (being belied by Antony in Mutina) their Army had been levied. Nor did they think this froth of unexpected unkindness, sufficient to nip the blossom of his hopes; but they denounced him the Confilipus. These harsh proceedings compelled AUGUSTUS (his honour now lying at stake) to enter Rome as Conqueror, and force the Fathers to grant him his desires. Having thus gotten what for the time he aimed at; he generally shewed himself grateful to all, and particularly to some of the Soldiers, paying them what was behind by promise, and openly professing that without their aid he durst not have adventured into the Capitol. So by keeping his day with the Military men, and shewing his noble and generous nature in a thankful commemoration of their service; he added stronger bonds to such as were already his own, and won many daily to his side, which before were either neutral, or adversaries.

8. Antony in the mean time was not idle, but knowing that Lepidus was beyond the Mountains with a puissant Army, he posted thither, and so far prevailed with the Soldiers, that he was admitted into the Camps where the General entertained him with all expressions of love and welcome. Antony perceiving the facile nature of Lepidus, soon persuaded him to lead his forces into Italy; promising him no less than the Lordship of the World, if he durst but show his face to the Romans. AUGUSTUS having continual news of this combination, and fearing much the prowess of Antony, now strengthened; conceived no course to fitting and convenient to his ends, as to join friendship, and to enter into confederacy with them. And this he did, not for any good will to either, but because being destitute of means to resist them, and also to revenge the death of his Father Julius, which he much laboured; he might with their forces oppress Cassius and M. Brutus, and, as occasion fell out, deal with them being forced. This League was solemnly confirmed by a bloody Prescription immediately following. Wherein, to be revenged on their Enemies they betrayed their Friends. A lamentable and ruinful time to good and bad, rich and poor, being alike subject to the slaughter. Now was the time of Julius Cæsar's Government thought to be the Golden Age, and every one began to curse Brutus and Cassius as the Authors of these present miseries; whom they barbarously honoured as the Restorers of the Common Liberty. Nay the very Kings were deemed tolerable, and such as lived in their days, happy. The poor Romans had not changed the

Tyranny,

Tyranny, but the Tyrants: Yea, they had three for one into the bargain. Such is the condition of us men, that we know not our own happiness in the fruition, but the want. Two of these Triumvirs glutted themselves with blood, taking pride in hearing the lamentable cries and groans of the People. Antony on the contrary, shewed himself much grieved at this barbarous cruelty: so that his consent seemed rather forced than voluntary. But this Prescription, though in it self cruel and tyrannical, produced some good and profitable effects in the Republick. For when by this Prescription and the ensuing Civil War, the stoutest of the Nobles and Commons were made away, few being left which durst endeavour to recover the old Liberty; Antony did more easily establish his Monarchy, and restore peace to the City. Moreover the prosecution of this cruelty so incensed the people against Antony and Lepidus, that Antony, whom most held excusable, found them always his faithful friends, if not for love to him, yet in spite to them.

9. But to proceed; Antony and Antony leaving the guard of the City to Lepidus, with joint-forces march against Brutus and Cassius, both overthrown by Antony, whom AUGUSTUS did therefore put upon that service, as well to diminish Antony's forces, as to keep his own entire. As for himself, either he in policy suffered himself to be driven out of the field by Brutus, to make Antony more work; or else indeed durst not abide the Battle. Such end had Brutus and Cassius, two men whom fortune seemed to be in love with on the sudden, and did as suddenly forsake them. Brutus the more accomplished man; Cassius the more expert Soldier. I pass over AUGUSTUS Wars in Italy, Antony's in Asia, the discontents between them, and their reconciliation by the means of Octavia, sister to the one, and wife to the other Emperors. As also how joining forces together to oppress Scævus, then Lordship it over the Sea, and proud with the conquest of Sicilia, they received him into the Confederacy, and joined the Island of Sardinia to his other conquests. To recompence which kindness, Scævus invited the two Generals aboard his Admiral-Galley; and after a bountiful entertainment, returned them safe to their Camps. I scarce have ever heard of so great an over-sight among so many able Politicians. And much I marvel with my self, upon what confidence AUGUSTUS and Antony durst to trust their persons to a reconciled Enemy: or on what reason Scævus having both of them in his power, would let slip so lightly that advantage, greater than which was never offered to a discontented and ambitious person. This I am free of, that he afterwards repented it, and could have wished that he had hearkened to the voice of Menus his old servant, who had persuaded him to make his bet of that opportunity. The Kings of France and Aragon, of old Enemies made new Friends, had the like interview at Saxona: which that notable Historiographer and States-man Giesbrandine describeth with much wonder and commendation. Yet, in the like case, have many, and, as I think, worthily condemned Lewis the 11. of France, and Charles of Burgundy, the Arch-politicians of those days, in that Lewis at Perouse put himself into the hands of Charles his Enemy, who also after a short retention, dismissed him.

10. These solemn expressions of amity between the three Generals being thus ended, and Antony gone for Egypt, AUGUSTUS then began to contrive his establishment in the State; though with the ruin of his Collegues. He began first with Scævus, having by gifts and promises drawn Menus unto his side; who by reason of his inwardness with his Master, knew most of his designs. By the directions of this Menus, and the assistance of Lepidus, he quickly overthrew Scævus; who flying death in Europe by the hand of AUGUSTUS, found it in Asia, by the command of Antony. After this victory, AUGUSTUS either having, or pretending a quarrel against Lepidus, entred into his Camp, seized his person, and depriving him of all honours, confined him to Rome. A man that had against his will, stumbling upon the Government, had beyond any desert of his, enjoyed ten years continuance of Empire and prosperity. An action of a very high nature, and such as AUGUSTUS durst not have ventured on, if Antony had been in Italy. He therefore advicely removed him out of his way, before he would attempt the same. It hath been ever a chief Maxim in Court-Polity, to remove that man out of the way, under pretence of some honourable charge, whom we intend either to cut from his present honours, or else to make less potent with Prince and People. For which cause also AUGUSTUS persecuted Antony's father out of the City, to bring him at the last into discredit and contempt. For well he knew that his detrage on Cleopatra, could not but draw him into many inconveniences: neither could his neglecting the State, to riot with his Lemman, be other than distastful to the Lords and People. Next, he commanded his sister Octavia to leave her husband Antony's house; yet privately he persuaded her to live there still, and bring up his children; that so the Romans seeing her noble demeanor and love to her husband, might the more heartily detest him, who so ignobly and unkindly had rejected her. To add more fuel to this flame of hatred, he readeth Antony's Will unto the people, in which many of the Roman Provinces were bequeathed to Cleopatra's children, and other things ordained to the common prejudice. Antony likewise preferred many Evils against AUGUSTUS, as that he had deposed Lepidus from the Triumvirate; that he had divided Italy among his own Soldiers only, that he had not restored the Ships borrowed to make War against Scævus.

11. These discontents seconded with an ambitious hope of prevailing, made them both resolute to refer all to the decision of a Battle. Antony had a Fleet consisting of 500 Ships, high built, and trimmed up rather for a Triumph than a Fight. His Land Forces consisted of 10,000 Foot, and 12,000 Horse. Antony had the like number of Horsemen, 8000 Foot, and 250 good Mules of War, strong and close, built more for use than ostentation. The Rendezvous was Actium, a place seeming to be marked out for notable designs: here being fought also in our Fathers days, that famous battle, wherein the Venetians gave the World to understand, that the Turke Forces by Sea were not invincible. Antony was on the Offensive side, and therefore much doubted whether it were better to give the Onset by Sea or by Land. Cleopatra, whose words were Oracles, persuaded him to the Sea-fight: not that she thought it more safe, but that, if Antony lost the day, the might with more facility escape. To this resolution, when most of the Captains had for fear agreed, one of the old Soldiers thus bluntly gained it. "What a miserable security are thou possessed with, most noble Emperor? Where is that ancient force, fight wherewith thou hast formerly prevented all disasters? turned the Enemies devices on their own head? Consider with thy self, most noble General, what uncertain friends the Wind and Sea are? To howickle "an Element thou dost trust thy fortunes? Let the Egyptians, Grieks, and Phoenicians, old Mermoids, born and nurtured in the Sea, follow this kind of warlike. But let us thy true Roman spirits try our valour on the firm Land, and there fight for thy Empire, and our own Lives. Per-

"happ's thou dost mistrust our faith; Look here, Antony,
 " (with that he opened his bosom) and thou shalt see " many an honourable scar got in thy service. We are " now too old to learn new Treasons: Alter therefore thy " resolution, and, to please a woman, cast not away to " many of thy faithful Followers. Certainly the unfeeling " powers of Heaven when they decree a mans destruc" tion, overthrow those Counsels by which he should " escape it. Antony turns his deaf ear to this Soldier's " wholesome advice, and borrowing from Cleopatra two " or three knives (as if from the Fountain of her lips he had " derived all his courage) without any more ceremony
 " proproach to the battle.

12. AUGUSTUS on the other side, seeing a necessity of a Sea-fight, was yet in this comforted, that his " Vessels were more useful and better manned, though fewer " than his Enemies: that his men to him were faithful,
 " and, by reason of their many Victories, in good heart:
 " From Antony were daily revolted some Kings and Cap" tains of note, to the great encouragement of the onside, " and disheartening of the other. The whole charge of the " War he committed to Mysipponus Ascrippa, who falling " in no duty of a good Captain, took from his Gallies what" soever might be impediments to the valiant or helter for
 " the cowardly; all that was cumbersome to his own men, " or advantageous to the Enemy. Things thus ordered, and
 " the battle ready to joy, Augustus Caesar standing where " he might be seen and befall of all, is said to make this or the " like Oration. " Fellows and Companions in Arms, I sup" pose it needless to hear you, which never were ac" quainted with fear nor bid you overcome, which never " yet knew what it was, not to vanquish. Conquest hath " always fast upon the edges of your swords, and victory
 " been written in your foreheads. Be not now back" ward to add this one to your other Triumphs. When " after the death of my Father Julius of famous memory,
 " I first deal in matters of War, I rather found than " made you good Soldiers. And during this twelve " years service under me, neither have you been wanting
 " in the duty of faithful followers, nor I (I hope) of a vi" gilant and grateful Leader. Sure I am, I expressed my " self as far as I could, and more I would, had I been able.
 " Tell not the number, nor the greatness of the adverse " Gallies any ways affright you. The hugeness of their " Bulks maketh them unfit for employment; and the " multitude, once clogging and hindring the others, may
 " as much further our Victory as theirs. They exceed us
 " in multitudes of Men, we them in number of Soldiers.
 " The meaning of the word Pilot is unknown among " them. And for their Mariners, the best of them are " but Carters, Reapers, and Harrow-men, raked out of the " fields; the rest, the excrement of common Prisons, where-
 " with their Vessels are loaded, not manned. The General " is indeed a fit Captain for such a selected Company. It " is the same Antony, whom you once drove out of the " field, before Mutina. I verily perfwade my self, that " neither he dares think of recovering, or of losing " your former glories. It is the same Antony, who being " charitably chafed out of Parthia, only in that he was " not vanquished, proclaimed himself Vilior. It is the same " Antony, who intended to make Rome subject to the E- " gyptians, and to distribute the Provinces purchased " with the blood and virtue of our Ancestors, amongst " Isis and her fellow Chamber-maids. Nay indeed, it is " not Antony at all, but the shadow only of that substance, " which now is hid in Cleopatra's Cabin. Courage then,
 " brave men of Arms; be, as you have till been, Con- " querors. To speak more, were to detain you from victo" ry. Only this, Call to mind your ancient valour. Re" member that I am Cesar, you Romans.

13. This speech animated the new Soldiers, and " confirmed the old; so that with a general acclamation
 " they gave the assault. Death, wounds, and blows, dif-
 " fided in divers fashions, and served in by several men,
 " were the best delights prepared for these unwelcome visitants.
 " Cleopatra beholding the Battle, and doubting the success,
 " through the thickets of Antoniae Fleet, made away with " the 60 Gallies appointed for her Guard. This disorder
 " made the breach, at which the Victory entered. Antony
 " seeing her flight, left his Squadron aloft; and being taken " into her Gally, hoysed sail for Egypt: Herein playing " the part of a cowardly Soldier, whilst all of his " Soldiers executed the office of a courageous General.
 " For they to absolutely perished in the night, that AUGUSTUS
 " was fain to offer them mercy sooner than they " would accept it. At last they all swore allegiance unto
 " him. The Victory being thus gotten, AUGUSTUS
 " (no loser of advantages) speecheb into Egypt,
 " which he redueth into the form of a Province; making
 " the people pay, for fine, twenty millions of Gold. By " receiving this money, he so weakened them that they had " no ability to raise an after-war; and by distributing part " of it among his Soldiers, he confirmed them in obedi" ence. As for Antony, he seeing his fortunes desperate,
 " redeemed the honour lost in his life, by a noble and he" roick death. And Cleopatra ended her life not long after
 " also. A woman more well-favoured, than fair; well-
 " spoken, rather than cither. Antoniae Courtiers had seen
 " many Ladies more lovely, none more prevailing; men " being chained to her by the ears, rather than by the " eyes.

14. I willingly omit AUGUSTUS entry into Rome,
 " as also the state and magnificence of his Triumph. His " Victory he used to justify, that none felt the fury of the " War, but such as were slain in the Battle. To assure him" self of Antoniae adherents, was his first care: to which end
 " he burst in the common Forum, the Collets of Antony, un-
 " opened; wherein all his Letters from his friends in Rome
 " had been inclosed: well knowing that as long as any " thought themselves suspected Adversaries: they would " never show themselves true Friends. To the Sensors
 " and Magistrates he made sumptuous feasts: to the Com- " mon People he exhibited magnificent and pleasing Stage-" Plays; and, with all variety of pleasure, banished from " both, as well sorrow for the old Proscriptions, as fear of a " new. But this was only as a preparation to his main de" sign. There were two men most dear unto him, and pri" vily to his Council, Mecenas and Agrippa; which in the " object of their love, differed only in this; Mecenas was " a lover of AUGUSTUS, Agrippa of the Emperor. Mecenas
 " was of the rank of Knights, a man of good and bad parts " equally compounded; when his business required care,
 " vigilant and circumspect; at leisure time, excessively ri" otous. Agrippa was the first of his house: a man alike
 " fit for Camp and Council; one neither careless of a good " name, nor covetous of a great. For although he yet
 " was the man which vanquished Scotas, and Antony; yet
 " well skilled in the humours of Princes, he gave AUGUSTUS
 " the honor of all his Conquests; making the " virtue not the reward, but the end of his Actions. So by " doing nobly, and speaking modestly of it, he was without " envy, but not without glory. With these two, AUGUSTUS
 " withdrew into a private Closet, and there " spoke unto them in this form. He made first unto them
 " a long discourse of the Civil Wars; then added, " That " having by his fortune, and the valour of his Soldiers,
 " put an end to the troubles; he was unresolved what " to do. Whether to resign the Empire to the People, or " retain it still in his own hands: That in a business of " such

" such importance, he durst not rely altogether on his " own wisdom: That he had made them his Judges, as " men that could speak frankly, and durst speak freely:
 " That he knew them to have more care of his honour,
 " than profit; but of the Common-wealth, more than " both: That his Councils, which course he took,
 " would not be by them eliminated. He therefore in-" treated them to consider what was to be done, and to " give up their opinions in it.

15. Agrippa after a short silence thus began. " I know,
 " thou canst not but marvel, O Cesar, that I who under " thine Empire, am sure to be beyond president exalted,
 " should perfwade thee to live private. But I esteem
 " more thy honour, than my profit; the publick good,
 " than my particular preferment. And yet perhaps my " Council shall be as profitable, if not as plausible as the " contrary. I know thee to be no way delighted with " lies and flattery, and will therefore deal with thee
 " freely and plainly. Thou hast indeed put a period to " the Civil Wars, but to what end, unless thou dost re" store unto the Common-wealth that Liberty for which " the Wars were raised? What benefit can the people
 " reap from thy Victory, if thou dost use it only as an in" strument, for their greater bondage? Dost thou think " that the Romans having for many hundred years main" tained their Liberty, will now be willing to forgo it?
 " No, Cesar, no, Flatter not thy self with these hopes.
 " Marius the younger, and Sertorius, were quickly cut " off, when their ends were once known; and Julius
 " thy Father of happy memory, did not long live, after " his Actions seemed to bring the Common Liberty in " hazard. And shall we think that there is no true Ro" man spirit surviving? no Brutus, living to attempt the " like against thee? Believe me, Cesar, believe me, it " is far better not to meddle with the Empire at all, than " to be forced to abandon it. But say, Divine Providence " will I protect thee, that thou mayest out-live thy " practices; that thou also not out-live thy glories?
 " This present age perchance will not censure thee
 " Actions, because it dares not: but Posterity, free from " all respects of love or hatred, cannot but call them into " question, and brand thy enterprise with Ambition, and " perhaps Tyranny. If thy designs prosper they will " judge thee to have risen unjustly; if otherwise, to have " fallen deservedly. How much better then were it,
 " now when this honour is without blemish, and thy " reputation unshaken, to resign thy authority? Indeed
 " when Scotas lorded it over the Sea, and Antony over " Egypt, it might have been thought want of spirit, to " have depolized thy self from the Government. But now
 " to do it, when thou art without Rival in the Empire;
 " now when thou art Commander of the Worlds Forces,
 " now when the People and Senate lie prostrate at the feet
 " of thy mercy; were to strike dumb detraction, and " to make future Ages admire thy Temper. Thou art
 " at this present the joy and comfort of the World;
 " there is wanting to thee neither Wealth nor Fame. Here
 " then fix thy foot. For go but one step beyond this " Non ultra, and thou wilt run into a boundless Ocean
 " of perils, which have no end, but the end of thy life and " reputation.

16. " Not so, excellent Agrippa, replied Mecenas. I " never heard good Pilot find fault with Sea-room, or of " more vessels call away into the Ocean, than in the " Straitest, and narrow passages. Our Republick is a Ship " fraught with divers Nations. She hath been long tossed " on the waves of Civil dissensions, long driven up and " down with the Wind of ambition; and there is now
 " no place to fit her for safety, as the unlimited Ocean of " one mans power. This Empire at first rising, seemed not " to require a Mararch; but it is now grown too unwork-

 " dy, to be without one. Take then upon thee, O Cesar,
 " this Empire; or, to say better, do not forsake it. I should " never thus advise thee, did I conceive any possible in" conveniences. The Senate doth allow thee a competent " guard of valiant and faithful Soldiers; whom thou " shouldst thou fear? Nay, ill may I prosper, if I see any " cause of fear, were thy Guard cashiered. Enemies thou " hast none: For such as were, are either already slain by " thy valour, or made thy fast friends, by thy bounty and " clemency. To omit Marius and Sertorius, I will a little " touch at thy Father Julius. He, too good a Soldier to " be a Statist, was too heady and violent in establishing
 " his government. Nor could he cunningly temporize,
 " and suffer the people incontinently, and by degrees, to drop " into bondage; but opprest them all at once. Again, he " committed a great Solacisum in State, when discharging
 " his Guard, he fought to retain that Empire by fair means,
 " which he had gotten by violence. I know thee, O Ce- " sar, to be of a more wary and cunning behaviour. Learn
 " also to work out thy own safety, by Pompey's misfor" tunes. He after the finishing of the British Wars, at " Brundisium, disbanded his Army; and thereby merited
 " to be accounted an honest and moderate man. Certain" ly, he shewed himself in the course of this action, ra" ther virtuous than fortunate or politic. For presently
 " he began to be contemned, and by his improvident
 " weakening of himself, made an open passage to his own
 " ruin. I commended his modesty, more than his brains;
 " neither did he himself, on better considerations, ap" prove his own doings: and therefore he relolved, had " he been Victor in Pharalia, never to have committed " the like oversight. So it is, and so it will fall out with " thee, O Cesar, if in this action thou propose him to be " thy pattern. It is not safe, Agrippa faith, to take the " Empire; lest fate it is, to refuse it. A settled and in" variable vice it is in man, Never to endure that any not " above our own rank should over-top us. Romes second " founder Camillus Scipio, that scourge of Carthage, were " disgraced; and Marcellus banished by our Ancestors:
 " only because their worth had lifted them above the or" dinary pitch of Subjects. Do not thou hope to fare " better than thy Predecessors. Hereafter, perchance,
 " thou mightest have fought the Empire, to satisfy thy " ambition. The Empire must now be thy refuge and " Asylum. Credit me, The Lords of the Senate, after so " many years of Obedience, know not how to Govern;
 " neither canst thou, having so long been a Governour,
 " learn Obedience. True it is, that in matters of domesti-
 " cal business, a man may stop and desist where he will:
 " But in the getting of an Empire, there is no mean be" tween the death of an Enemy and the life of a Prince.
 " Thou hast already gone too far to retire. Now thou " must resolve to be Cesar or Nothing. To say more " were superfluous. Thine own discretion will suggest " unto thee better Arguments. Only this I know, " that thou hast in thee too much Julius, not to be an " Emperor.

17. AUGUSTUS seemed to incline to this latter " opinion, whether moved with Mecenas Oration, especially " his instance in Pompey, or that he was before relolved to " follow that course; is uncertain. Howsoever, seeming
 " with great attention to observe their speeches, and ga" therer their several reasons and motives together; he " made this reply. " A most hard thing it is, for a divided " mind to make a well-joynd Answer. Divided I am,
 " and troubled between your two opinions; loth to " follow either, thence in so doing I must offend
 " one. Yet since there is a necessity of Resolution, I " intend, though I like well of thy advice, Agrippa, to follow thine, Mecenas. In doing which, I am but an instrument of the Deities, to put their wills in execution. Often have I heard my Father Obavus report, how Nigidius, famous for his skill in Judiciary Astrology, told him once in open Senate, That he had begotten an Emperor for the Romans. As also, how M. Cicero, so renowned for Wit and Eloquence, dreamed, that he saw Jupiter place me on the top of the Capitol, with a Whip in mine hand. Certainly, if the Powers of Heaven promise me to great an Empire, I will not be wanting to my self; but will add by my industry, to their influence. To further my designs, I do desire you, nay I conjure you both, that as you have been ever ready in your Counsels, for you would not now be backward in any necessary Alliance. This said, they presently enter into a new conference, how to manage a business of this weight; what Senators to acquaint with their intent, how to dispose of the Army, not yet calldred: with what Plumets it were best to found the minds of the common people, and to oblige all forts unto him. This Consultation ended, AUGUSTUS continued his assiduity to the People, and respect to the Nobles. An opportunity he had to express himself to both. There was at that time a Famine, which shrewdly ragged among the Commons. To the poorer sort, he distributed Corn, grain; to others, at a mean price. Riches and honours he communicated to both sorts; the better to wipe out of their memories, the ancient freedom. Such parts of the City as were destroyed by casualty of fire, ruined by length of time, or defaced during the Civil Wars, he re-edified. Houses of Common-assembly he repaired, Temples, consecrated to the gods, he spared no cost to adorn and beautify. And finally, he freely diffused his bounty, that there was no part or member of the City which had not some taste of it. Next, he dismissed his Soldiers, aligning them Lands and habitations in divers parts of Italy: That to the People might conceive his Resignation to be real, and yet, if need were, his forces might be quickly re-assembled. Nor were Agrippa and Mecenas waiting for their parts, to promote the cause, but carefully acquainted some of the Senates with it, who stood well affected to them; and cunningly prepared others, who had stood indifferent.

18. The foundation thus laid, and the Senate fate, AUGUSTUS rose from his seat, and spake to this, or the like effect. "When I consider with my self the infinite extent of the Roman Empire; I protest I stand at a maze: marvelling how such, as heretofore have raised combussions in the State, durst undertake the sole administration of it. What Nation in the World hath not either begged their Peace at our Gates, or felt the fury of our Wars at their own? What Countries have we not harried with Fire and Sword; making the rising and setting of the Sun the bounds of our Dominions? It mult questionless proceed from an over-weening conceit in them, of their own abilities; who thought themselves fit to undo that which they then, which none but the immortal gods can carry. Of my self I will not say much: Only, I hope I may say with modesty, that I am not inferior to Cinna, nor it may be to Sylla. Yet have I found in my self, by late experience, yet how unable I was to manage the affairs of State, even then when I had two Co-adjutors. There is no Atlas of strength sufficient to bear up this Heaven, Nor Star of influence sufficient, to animate this Sphere; Nor one form of virtue sufficient, to actuate this matter. Neither indeed it is fit, that the Republick which ought to be immortal, should depend only on the life and welfare of one man. There never was, since the beginning of time, a City replenished with greater store of worthy and able men, either to consult or execute. Never was there less to grave and discreet a Confistory; Never for many of both sorts, to sit to govern. I have by your directions, and the Valour of your Soldiers, put an end to all home-bred quarrels. I have been your instrument to reduce peace internal and external, to your City; and desire now no other Guard or recompence, for any former services, than a quiet and a private life: free from all such dangers and inconveniences, as are inseparably annexed to the Sovereignty. Now therefore, (and may my action be auspicious and fortunate to my Country) do I resign my authority; committing my self, and the Common-wealth into the hands of the Senate and People of Rome.

19. This Oration ended, there followed a soft and silent buzzing in the house. Some supposed this speech not to have so much truth, as art and cunning; yet smothered their conceits for fear of after-claps. Others were creatures of their own making, and they hoping to rise in the fall of their Country, would not hear of a Resignation. Some few of the wisest sort thought it not expedient, to put the Reins again into the hands of the Multitude. The rest out of a sluggish and Phlegmatic Constitution, chose rather the present state with security, than to strive to recover the old with danger. All therefore with a joint-consent proclaim him sole Emperor; and solemnly intreat him to save the Common-wealth, otherwise running to inevitable ruin. He for a while, as vainly denied to accept the Government, as they vainly persisted to desire him. At last, wearied with the clamorous all in general, and importunity of some in particular; he by little and little yielded to their requests, taking upon him the Empire for ten years: with this Proviso, That if before that time expired, he could fully settle and order the present State, he would give up his charge. This he gave out, not with a purpose of performance, (for at the end of every Decennium he renewed his Lease of the Government.) But that the people seeing no sign a possibility of regaining their Liberty, might not practise against him. Whereas, had he for term of life received the supreme Authority, he had no doubt halsted his own overthrow. For well he knew, that not the Title of Dictator, but the Epithet Perpetual, was the destruction of C. J. S. A. R.: And yet a great respect was had also in the choice of the Title. The name of King he refused, as being odious unto the Citizens. Neither would he be called Romulus, though he much desired it; lest they should suppose that he did affect the Tyranny. When the people called him Dictator, he rent his Garments; desiring them to discharge him of a name so hated; and being once called Lord, (Dominus) he forbade all that Title by publick Edict. Princeps Senatus was the only Title he admitted: well knowing, that the like glorious attributes were heaped on his Father Julius by them which least loved him, only to this end, that growing more and more into hatred, he might the sooner be dispatched. Nor was he ignorant, that the Common-people, led more by appearances than truth, discerned names more plainly than execution: and that the only course to make greatness stand firmly, was to receive extraordinary power under a Title not offensive. The name also of AUGUSTUS conferred upon him by the Senate, (as if there had been something in him more than mortal) he refused not; as a Title expressing more dignity and reverence than authority. And having pleased himself in the choice of his Title, he next proceeded to the establishment of his power, which he thus pursued.

20. When

20. When first at the hands of the Lords of the Senate, he had for ten years received the Government; there was appointed unto him two Coborts of Prætorian Soldiers for the guard of his person; to whom the Senate allowed the double wages of a Legionary Soldier, to make them more vigilant and heedful in their charge. Over these he appointed two Præfects or Governors, (Captains of the Guard we may best term them.) To commit the charge to one only, might breed danger, to more, confusion. Agrippinus to settle Nero in the Empire, prevailed with Claudius, to make Burrus, whom he had at her devotion, the sole Captain: and Nimphidius, fallen from his hopes of fitting Galba belides the cushion; desired the command of the Guard, as the next step to Sovereignty. In choice of these Captains, he observed two Rules: First, he ever chose them, exordine Equitri, not Senatorial; lest that, to high a dignity joined to so high a birth, might irritate their resolutions to some designs against his quiet. Secondly, he made choice of two such, as were of contrary humours, and somewhat at odds; that so the ill intents of the one (if they should harbour any) might be thwarted and revealed by the others, and toward in his services. The next course which he took for his own security, was a law he made to curb the wills and attempts of the great ones. For whereas it hath been formerly unlawful to question a Bondman, in matters concerning the life and death of his Lord; AUGUSTUS passed an Act, that all such Bondmen should be first sold to him, or the Commonwealth. By means whereof he kept the Lords, before presuming on the secrecy of their slaves, from all close and private Conspiracies against him. Having thus strengthened his person, he assumed to himself the Imperial, Consular, and Tribunician authority, together with the Sacerdotal dignity. As Emperor and General of the Men of War, he could press Soldiers, raise Taxes, proclaim Wars, make Peace; yea, and put to death the very best and stoutest of the Senators. As Consul, it was in his power to reform corrupt manners, enquire after mens carriages, to take in and put out of the Senate whom he liked; to place and displace the people from a more honourable Tribe, to a less honourable. Yet would he not be called Consul as a name too inferiour; but accepted the Prerogatives of it, after the surrender of Mannius, and his Associates; two men for unity that Magistracy, that they could object no crime to old or young, of which themselves were not guilty. The Tribunician authority enabled him to hinder any thing attempted against his liking. It preserved his person from all contumely and injury; giving him power to punish, as an execrable person, yea, and without any formality of the Law) whosoever had offended him either in word or deed. As for the Pontifical dignity, it made him a little more revered, not more potent. Only it added to his title the title of Pontifex Maximus, or Chief Bishop; and made him of authority amongst the Priests, and in sacred matters, things that concerned Religion. The light of Reason taught him, that it was convenient for him, being a Prince, to have command on all his People; He had been clerk but half a Monarch, such as some Princes are with us; who quit their Clergy to be governed by a Foreign Head.

21. These several Prerogatives annexed together, seem not yet sufficient; and therefore he so cunningly dealt with the Senators, that they gave him a general Exemption from the Codive power of the Law. Which once obtained, he ferociously bends his thoughts to settle the Common-wealth; and so to settle it, that by uniting all parties, and giving satisfaction to all Interests, it might not be obnoxious to such frequent and tumultuous alterations, as it had been formerly. But herein when he had consulted the ancient Platforms, he found no small difficulty. The form described by Plato, shewed rather how a City ought to be governed, than how it may be. Aristotle, though bred in the Free-State of Greece, was a friend to Monarchy; but his discourses dark, and speculative, and not easily reduced to practice. Solon afforded the People too much Authority; the Nobles too little, the King none. The old Carthaginian Legislators attributed too much to Riches, too little to Virtue. The Persian Law-makers indulged to the King too much, to the Subject nothing. And on the other side, Lycurgus in his modelling of the State of Sparta, ascribed too little to the King, and too much to the Senate. Zaleucus was rather the Author of some particular Laws, than the Framer of a Commonwealth. Ptoleus, and Hippodamus, as unimitable altogether as Plato. Seeing therefore that none of the old Patterns did come home to his purpose; and withal considering with himself, that the unmixt Forms of Rule were not equally balanced, and by consequence subject unto change: he resolved to frame his Common-wealth out of the perfections of the three good Forms, their imperfections being rejected; referring to himself the Supreme Majesty, to the Senate eminent Authority, to the People convenient Liberty, all in just and fit proportion. And to say truth, he did mix the Sovereignty of one, with the Liberty of all; that both the Lords and People, without fear of bondage or edition, enjoyed their accustomed Freedoms. The Consuls and Nobles of the City assembled as formerly they used; matters of State they handled by themselves; Ambassadors of foreign Nations they heard, and dispatched. The Commons did assemble in the Comitia, to enact Laws and elect Magistrates, as in the free Common-wealth; Yet to that nothing was done without the consent and privacy of the Prince, who for the most part nominated the successive Magistrate, leaving the confirmation of him to the people. So that the change, as he contrived it, was not violent and at once, but by degrees, and by the silent approbation of both Estates, as seeming to consist more in the alteration of the Magistrate, than of the Laws.

22. But (to proceed more particularly) the first care he took, was to confirm Religion, in the same state he found it. I mean Religion, as the Romans used the word, for these particular, though idolatrous Forms of Worship, which to their several gods had been used among them. This, though he might have changed, as the Pontifex Maximus, or Chief Bishop of the City; yet very wisely he forbore it. It is not safe for Princes that are settled in a long descent of Government, to be too active in such changes; But it is dangerous to attempt it in a green State, and in an Empire not well quieted, and inured to bondage. Men are more sensible of the smallest alterations in the Church, than greater changes in the State, and raise more frequent broils about it. The Romans specially were exceeding tender in this point. The ancient Ædiles formerly received it into their charge, that they permitted no external either Gods or Ceremonies, to be introduced into the City. And by Amilius it was enacted for a Law, That none should offer sacrifices in any publick place, after a new and Foreign fashion. Excellent therefore was the counsel which Mecenas gave him when he first undertook the Empire, viz. That he should follow constantly the Religion which he found established, and compel others also to do like. For, Foreign and strange Rites (saith he) will offend the people, work many inconvenient alterations.

alterations in the Civil State; yea and most likely "will occasion many both seditions and conspiracies. Words which he spake not to the air, but to a Prince exceeding apprehensive of the best advice. Nor did AUGUSTUS ever himself more careful in any one Act of Empire, than he did in this. That which Mecenas noted, we find true in these latter Ages; in times more skilful of obedience, than the most quiet hour of AUGUSTUS Government. No one thing more hath caused so frequent and so general Rebellions in the States of Christendom, than alterations of this nature. I cannot therefore but commend it, as a pious resolution in a late mighty Monarch: Better some few corruptions should be suffered in a Church than still a Change.

23. Religion thus established, in the next place the welfare of the whole Empire consisted chiefly in reforming of the City; from which, as from the heart, life was conveyed to all the Provinces abroad. And in the City the corruption was most apparent in the Senate it self. With them therefore he beginneth, well knowing that crimes in men of eminent place end not in themselves; but by degrees become diffused among their Clients and Followers. Now in the Senate were many and desperate men, who had been taken into it during the Civil Wars; as they could court the People, and humour such as were most potent. Of these he expelled none by his own power; but making a speech to them in the Senate, of the ancient order and present confusion of the house, he first exhorted them to look back on their former lives, and to judge of their own abilities and merits, for to honourable a room. Then he desired some of them to pick out such among them, as were in disposition factious, and in life faulty, but both to condemn to all their own actions; which they did accordingly. Yet as it often happeneth, that the great Thief leads the left to the Gallies; and as Cominius observed, that after the Battel of Mantlibury, Offices were taken from many for flying away, and conferred on such as ran ten miles beyond them: So remained many in the Senate, neither less vicious, nor less violent; only more potent to maintain their doings, than some others whom they had removed. AUGUSTUS therefore joying to him Agrippa, proceedeth to a new review: And certainly it much concerned him in the settling of his affairs, that none should have a voice in that famous Council, but such as were of able judgments, honest repute, and well affected to his Service and the Common-wealth. An enterprise which he esteemed dangerous; that he permitted entrance to no Senator till he were searched: himself wearing a Brigandine under his Gown; and being invironed with ten of the most courageous and best beloved of the whole company. Such as he found in either kind inexcusable, he discharged from their attendance; else chiding them in their places, which were either emboldened for their wildom, or noted-moderation, or otherwise strong in their dependants. Yet so that greatness of Revenue was esteemed neither a fit Patronage for any, if they were offensive; nor a just cause to challenge interest in the house. Such of them as were rich rather in the gifts of the mind, than those of fortune, he relieved with honourable Pensions; and finally he belittled himself so resolutely, that all confessed that they had need of such a wife Physician, to cure that dull Consumption, whereinto the Common-wealth was fallen.

24. In other things he seldom did proceed against them, as of himself; but when they any of them had conspired his ruin, he referred them to the judgment of their fellows. And this he did partly to reserve unto the Court the ancient Prerogative; partly not to be

Judge and Party in his own cause; but principally following the example of his Father Julius, who counter-acting a wretchless contempt of his adversaries, used, when he was least suspected, under hand, and by public Officers, to work their destruction. Many also of them whom the Senate had condemned he would freely pardon: Conceiving truly, that the questioning of men of high calling, would produce as much error, though it argued not so much rigor as the punishment. Yet if extremity of law was used towards some few, it was to settle quietness in the whole; and as it were a particular blood-letting for the general health. Those who had followed the Factions of Brutus and Antony, he forgave freely. And not for only, but by manifesting his works by his deeds, and adding truths and honours to his pardons; he made his Chair of State more settled, and immovable. So Cesar, by erecting the false and broken Images of Pompey, made his own statues stand more firmly. But the chief Act by which he bridled the Nobles, was an Edit by him promulgated, forbidding any of them, his leave not granted, to travel out of Italy. For well he knew, that an Empire unseated, and Provinces not quieted; the presence and authority of men of that rank, might raise greater troubles, than could be easily suppressed. Examples he wanted not, that especially of Cato; who after the overthrow of Pompey, fiercely such a War against Cesar in Africa; that he never thought Victory at a dearer rate. Yet not altogether to imprison them, he licensed them at their pleasure, to visit Sicilia, and Gaul Narbonne Provinces close to the Continent of Italy, altogether unarmoured for Wars; and indeed chide, as by reason of the variety of pleasures in them used, were more likely to weaken their minds, than to arm their bodies.

25. Now to give the Senate some sweet meat to their former lawce; he as much honoured and revered that Order, as ever it was in the Free-State: Submitting himself to their Judgments and appearing of his own accord, at most of their days of Session. Out of those he chose fifteen alterable every half year, to be of his Privy-Council; but then changing them for others: that so all of them might participate of that honour; and yet none of them be acquainted with too many of his Secrets. At his entrance into the Senate, he used courteously to salute the Lords; and so likewise at his departure. He knew full well that it was noted for great pride in his Father Julius, so much to sleight the Lords of that House, as he always did: never making to them any obeisance; no not then, when they came to tell him what honours were decreed unto him. This Reformation of the great Ones, soon made the lower sort more careful; both to observe good order, and to learn obedience. Yet did not AUGUSTUS refer all to Præfidents, but somewhat to Prospit. The Roman Knights he enlisted to yield an account of their lives; a course full of health and wisdom: Idleness being the root of all privacies, and public disorders. To the Commons in their Comitia and other meetings, he prescribed Laws and Orders as himself titled. The old authority of the Tribunes, dashed in the Dictatorship of Sylla, he would not restore. He suffered them to intercede for the People, but not to prefer or hinder any Bill, to the advancement or the prejudice of their Estates. Without this Curia, the Commons would never have suffered him to sit in the Saddle. For had the people had their Tribunes and had the Tribunes had their ancient dignity and power, which they had usurped; there had been little or no hope of altering the form of Government. So different are the ends of the Common-People, especially if nuzzled in a factious Liberty, from the designs of Sovereign Princes.

26. The

26. The City thus reformed in the principal errors and defects of it; he again exhibited unto them divers pleasures; as shews of Fencers, Stage-plays, Combats of Wild beasts, public Dancing, with variety of other delightful Spectacles. And this as well to breed in them a good conceit of the change; as by fearing let their cogitations, for want of other objects, would fix themselves upon his actions, and the old freedom. And therefore when some of his more severe and rigid Councillors advised him to interdict all such public pastimes, alleging, that the meetings of the people at those sports, and in so great numbers might at last end in some great tumult and sedition to the endangering of his person, and destruction of his whole Edifice; it was thus over-ruled by Mecenas (his most trusty Favourite) Exspedis tibi, O Cesar, pibem sic occupamus esse. That it best agreed with his affairs, to have the minds of the people taken up with these sports and pastimes; by which being sweetened and appeased, they were the less inclined of the yoke he had put upon them. But as for Horse-races, Tilt, and Turnaments, as he gladly cherished them, so he permitted them only to the Inhabitants of Rome: That to that City being the Seat-Town of his Empire, might be stored with good Horses, and expert Riders. Such of the Commons as were behind hand, he relieved: and when that many of them had made him Heir to their goods, he well knowing that no good Father did appoint to his Heir any Prince but a Tyrant, presently restored to the Children of the deceased the whole Patrimony. An action truly worthy of AUGUSTUS as a true a Guardian of Orphans, as a Father of his Country. Such Princes as gave covetously after other mens possessions, seldom enjoy the benefit of their own. The Treasures of Kings are then great, not when their own Coffers are full only, but their Subjects rich. Yet one thing more he seemed to leave unto the people, which they thought most pleasing, Liberty of Speech: Wherein sometimes they were so licentious, that they spared not Agrippa himself, to potent with the Empire. But he, good man, never using the Prince's favour to the prejudice of any, feared not to mark their taunts and slanders; whether with greater moderation or wisdom, I cannot tell. Neither did AUGUSTUS scape their foolish Poissails and infamous Libels. All which he winked at, knowing that contumacies of that nature slighted and contemned, soon vanish of themselves; but it repined and stormed at, seem to be acknowledged. A temper which he learnt of his Father Julius, who was perfect at it. And certainly it was a notable point of Wisdom in both of them. It is the misery of the best Princes, even when they do well to be ill spoken of. And therefore many times such follies are with more policy dissembled than observed, by the greatest Kings.

27. As for this lavishness of the tongue, it is a humour that springeth for the most part, rather from a delight in prating, than any malice of the heart: and they which use it are more troublesome than dangerous. Julius feared not the fat men, but the lean and spare. And so AUGUSTUS's thought, that not men liberal of speech, but silent, close and sparing of their words, were most likely to raise tumults. Moreover, as long as the Common People retained this Liberty of Speech, they were the less knible of the loss of Liberty in State. Whereas in the days of Domitians, when not only they were prohibited to commune together, but even their secret sighs and tears were registred, then began they to look back with a furious eye on the old and common Liberty. Neglect is the best remedy for this Talking vein. When the humour is spent, the People will cease on their own accords: till then, no forces can compel them. Tacitus taxeth Vitellius of great folly, for hoping, by force to hinder the continual reports of Vespasians revolt; that being the only way to increase, not diminish the rumour. And as much he extolled (I will not say how fitly) the Reign of Prince Nerva; wherein it was lawful for the Subject to think what he would, and speak what he thought.

28. These courses though he took to rectifie the Senate, and content the people, yet he flayed not them. There were too many of both sorts, dangerous and unquiet spirits, who flamed his proceedings; and under pretence of the ancient Liberty, were apt to any bold attempt, and sudden alteration. These as he winked at for the present, for he employed them (as occasion served) in his foreign Wars. Wherein he followed the example of his Father Julius, who when his Soldiers had displeased him, in their Mutinies and Tumults, would lead them presently unto some desperate and dangerous service: So weakening both his Foes which lay next unto him, and punishing those Soldiers which had disobeyed him. For, though AUGUSTUS had thrice shut the Temple of Janus, and cherished Peace, no Emperor more, of so large a Territory; yet when he flew his times, and that mens minds were active, and their thoughts disquieted; he could find presently occasion for some new employment. In this a Body Politick may be compared most fitly to the Body Natural. When we are full of blood, and our spirits boyling, there is not any Physick better than Plebotomy. But if a vein be broken in us, and we bleed inwardly, our estate commonly is dangerous, and almost incurable. So Princes, when their people are tumultuous and apt to mischief or when their thoughts are working, and hearkening after action: do commonly employ them in some service far from home; that there they may both vent their Anger, and employ their Courage. For let them stay at home to confirm their practices, and grow at last into a Faction; the State will suffer in it, if it be not ruined. We cannot have a fairer instance of this truth, than the proceeding of our fifth Henry, and the times next following: Whose former Wars kept us all quiet here at home; wasted those humours, and consumed those fiery spirits, which afterwards, the Wars being ended, inflamed the Kingdom.

29. But his main work was to content the Soldiers, and to make them sure. Some of which he dispersed as before I said, all about Italy, in thirty two Colonies; as well for the defence of the Country, as for their more speedy re-assembly, if need should require. Abroad amongst the Provinces were maintained upon the common charge twenty three Legions with their aids; besides 10000 of his Guard, and those which were appointed for the bridling and safety of the City. As to all of them he shewed an excellent thankfulness for their faithful services: so in particular to Agrippa, and to one other, whose name the Histories of that Age have not remembered. This latter had valiantly behaved himself at the battel of Actium: and being summoned to appear before the Lords of the Senate, in a manner which concerned his life, cried to AUGUSTUS for succour; who assigned him an Advocate. The poor fellow not contented with this favour, baring his breast, and shewing him the marks of many wounds: There (quoth he) have I received, AUGUSTUS, in thy service never supplying my place by a Deputy. Which said, the Emperor descending to the Bar, pleaded the Soldiers cause, and won it. Never did Sovereign Prince, or any that command in Chief, lose any thing by being bountiful of favours to their men of War. For this act quickly spreading it self over all the Provinces, did fo indear him to the Military men, that they all thought their services well recompensed, in his graciousness to that one man. And now werc they fo far given over to him, that the Honours conferred on Agrippa, could not increase their love; well it might their admiration. Agrippa was of a mean and common Parentage. But supplying the defects of his Birth with the perfections of his Mind, he became very potent with AUGUSTUS; who not only made him Consul, but his companion in the Tribunician Authority, and Provet of the City. So many titles were now heaped on him, that Mecenas perfwaded the Prince, to give him his Daughter Julia to Wife; affirming it impossible for Agrippa to live safe, confidering how open new Creatures lie to the attempts of malicious men, unless he were ingrafted into the Royal Stem of the Cæsars. On which caufe questiond, for the stronger establishment of his new Honours; Sejanus afterward attempted, but not with the like success, the like match with Livia, Tiberius Daughter-in-Law.

30. The Senate, People, and Men of War, thus severally reduced to a Mediocrity of power and content, the next labour is to alter the old, and establish a new Government of the City it self. To effect which, he dashed all former Laws, by which the Alites and Confederates of the State were made free Denizens of the Town. That he conceived to be a way to draw the whole Empire into one City; and by the monstrous growth and encrease of that, to make poor the rest. Therefore this privilege he communicated unto a few only: partly that in the times of dearth, the City might not so much feel the want of sustenance; and partly that so ancient an honour might not be diffemled; but principally left Rome replenished with so huge a multitude of stirring and unruly spirits, should grow too headstrong to be governed in due order. The greatest and most populous Cities, as they are prone to faction and sedition, so is the danger greatest, both in it self, and the example, if they should revolt. This provident course notwithstanding there were in Rome men more than enough; and among them not a few male-content, and murmurers at the present fate, such as contemned the Consuls, and hated the Prince. To keep these in compais, AUGUSTUS (it being impossible for him to be still resident at Rome, and dangerous to be absent) constituted a Provet of the City for the most part chosen out of the Senators; assigning him a strength of 6000 men, called Milites Urbani, or the City Souldiers. To him he gave absolute and Royal authority, both in the Town and Territory near adjoining, during his own absence. To him were appeals brought from the other Magistrates; and finally to his Tribunal were referred all causes of importance, not in Rome only, but the greatest part of Italy. Mestalla was the first Provet; but proof being had of his insufficiency, the charge was committed to Agrippa: who did not only settle and confirm the City, but did the best he could to free the adjoining parts of Italy from Thieves and Robbers; and stopped the courses of many other troubles of the present State. And yet he could not with that power chide so speedily, or so thoroughly reform all these mischiefs; which in the late unsettled times were become predominant, as he did desire.

31. It is recorded that in the Civil Wars of Marinus and Sylla, one Pompeius Tellestus of the Marian Faction, told his General, That he did well to scour the Country, but Italy would never want Wolves as long as Rome was so fit a Forest, and so near to retire unto. The like might have been spoken to Agrippa; That he did well to clear the common Roads and Passages, but Italy would never want Thieves, whilst Rome was so good a place of Refuge. For though he did, as far as humane industry could extend, endeavour a general Reformation both within the City and without; yet neither could he remedy, nor foretell all mischiefs. Still were they many, and those great disorders committed in the night seasons; when as no eye, but that to which no darkness is an obstacle, could discern the Malefactors. For in the first Proscription, many men used to walk the Streets well weaponed; pretending only their own safety, but indeed it was to make their best advantage of such men, as they met either in unfrequented Lanes and Passages, or travelling as their occasions did direct them, in the Night. To repress therefore the fool insolencies of these Sword-men, AUGUSTUS did ordain a Watch, consisting of 7000 free-men, their Captain being a Gentleman of Rome. In the day time, the Guard of the Town was committed to the Provet, and his City Souldiers; These Vigils resting in their standing Camps. In the night season, one part took their stations in the most suspicious places of the City; another, in perpetual motion traversed the streets; the rest lying in the Corps de Garde, to relieve their Companions. By which means he not only remedied the present disorders, but preserved the City from danger of Fire also: Yea, and secured himself from all Night-tumults, which carry with them (though but small) more terror and afflictment, than greater Comotions in the day. Never till now were the common people Masters of their own, both Lives and Substance. And now was travel in the Night, as safe, though not so pleasant, as at Noon.

32. The People and City thus settled, his next study is to keep the Provinces in a liking of the Change. But little Rhetorick needed to win their liking, who had long desired the present form of Government: mistaking the covetousness of Magistrates, the Lawless factions, being swayed hither and thither by ambition and corruption. These Provinces when he first took the Government, he thus divided: Asia, Africa, Nomidia, Betia, Narbonensis, Sicilia, Corfica, Sardinia, all Greece, Crete, Cyprus, Pontus, and Bithynia, being quiet and peaceable Provinces, of known and faithful obedience, he assigned unto the Senate. But the new conquered Regions, such as had not digested their loss of liberty, with whom any Rebellion or War was to be feared; he retained under his own command. Such were Tarracensis, Lugdunensis, Germany, Belgica, Aquitania, Syria, Gilicia, Egypt, Dalmatia, Mysia, Pannonia, &c. And this he did, as he gave out, to sustain the danger himself alone, leaving unto the Senate all the sweets of ease: but the truth was, to keep them without Arms, himself always strong, and in a readiness. The notable effects of which Council did not discover themselves only by the establishment of the Empire in his own person during life, and the continuance of it in the house of the Cæsars (though men of most prodigious Vices) after his decease: but in some of the Ages following also. For when the family of the Cæsars was extinct in Nero, the Imperial Provinces being so strong, and perceiving the Consular fo weakly assumed to themselves the creating and establishing of the following Prince. Thus Galba was made Emperor by the Spanish and French Legions, Vitellius by the German, Vespasian by the Syrian and Pannonian. The Consular Provinces never stirring, either to prevent their attempts, or to revenge them. And when they adventured once to advance Gordian to the Throne, all they could do, was but to betray the poor old man and all his family to a tragic end. And yet he did not so appropriate these Provinces to the Senate, but but that they also (as well as those which he referred unto himself) were specified particularly in his private Register. In which (the better to manage the affairs of the Empire) he had set down what Tributes every of them paid, what Presents they sent in, what Customs in them were levied. That Book also comprehended the wealth of the publick Treasury, and necessary charge issuing out of it: What number of Citizens and Allies there were in Arms; what strength there was by Sea; with all other circumstances, the extent, strength, riches, and particulars of his estate. William of Normandy did the like when he first came into England, when he composed that first Roll of this Kingdom, which we call Domesday Book, or the Roll of Winton; according unto which, Taxations were compiled, and Aids exacted. The greatest Princes have not thought it a disparagement to be good Husbands; to know the riches of their Crowns, and have an eye to their Intreaso.

33. Britain was left out of this Bead-Roll, either because from thence there neither was much hope of profit, nor much fear of hurt; or else because being more desirous to keep than enlarge the Monarchy, he thought it most expedient to confine it within the bounds appointed by Nature. Dauubius on the North, Mount Aspas on the South, Expatres on the East, and the main Ocean on the West, did both bound his Empire and defend it. Some Kingdoms have their limits laid out by Nature, and those which have adventured to extend them further have found it fatal. The Persians seldom did attempt to stretch their Territory beyond Darus, but they miscarried in the action. And what was that poor River, if compared unto the Ocean? Many who loved Glory, or expected preferment by the Wars, incited him unto the conquest and Plantation of these Countries. Affirming, "That the barbarous people were naturally bad Neighbours; and though for the present not very strong, nor well skilled in Arms, yet might a weak Enemy in time gather great strength: that he ought to pursue the War for his Father Julius sake, who first shewed that Island to the Romans: that it yielded both refuge and supply to Malecontents of Gaul, and Enemies in Germany: that he would lose the benefit of a wealthy Country; stored with all manner of provision; and the command of a valiant Nation, born (as it were) unto the Wars. That it was an apostasy from honour, to licitly, and add nothing to the conquest of his Ancestors: That he was in all equity bound, as far as in him was, to reduce to Civility from Barbarism, to many proper and able men. But to these motives he replied, "That he had already refused to wage War with the Parthians, a more dangerous Neighbour, and far worse Enemy than the British: "That he had waste and desert ground enough in his Dominions, for many a large Plantation, when he saw it needless: That he had constantly refused, though with great facility he might, to conquer any more of the Barbarous Nations: That, as in the Natural body, a surfeit is more dangerous than fasting; so in the body Politick, too much is more troublesome than too little: That the Roman Monarchy had already exceeded the Persian, and Macedonian; and to extend it further, was the next way to make it totter and fall by its own weight. That he had learned in the Fable not to lose the substance by catching at the shadow. And finally, that many puissant Nations lay in and about Britany, against whom Garrisons must be kept, and he feared the Revenues would not quit the cost. And so the enterprise of Britany was quite laid aside.

34. For the assurance of the Provinces already conquered, he dispersed into them 23 Legions, with their Adi- whose pay only, besides provision of Corn, and Officers wages, amounting to five Millions and an half of our English pounds, and somewhat more, were so duly paid unto the Armies, that we read seldom in the Histories of that Empire, of any Mutiny amongst the Souldiers, for want of pay. An happiness, whereof these ages have been little guilty. For the amassing of this treasure, and defraying of this Charge, AUGUSTUS made not use only of his own Revenue. Wars which are undertaken, and Souldiers that are levied for the common affairs, ought in all reason to be maintained on the Common purse. The Grandeur and security of an Empire, concerns in all respects, as much the People as the Prince. For which cause he erected an Exchequer in the City, which was called Aerarium militare, or the Souldiers Treasury; whereunto the twentieth part of every mans estate was brought, according to the true and perfect valuation. This was elected an heavy burden at the first; and indeed it was, but that the people felt the strictness and effects of it in the Common safety. In that respect, the Interest was greater than the Principal. Subjects that have a care either of the common peace or honour, will not repine at payments and taxations, though more than ordinary. It is a poor conceit to think that Princes either are able or obliged, to maintain the Wars without assistance from their people: or that the treasures which in these respects they give the King, they do not give unto themselves. I may perhaps repeat him for a cunning Sophist, but never for a faithful Subject which covens distinctions betwixt the welfare of the King and the weal of the Kingdom. These Legions he employed as occasion was, either to curb the Natives, or secure the Borders. The Roman Empire seldom had such perfect peace, but that there were employments always for the Souldiers. If that they had in any place a short cessation from the Wars, yet they were not idle. Idleness doubtless is the greatest enemy to Martial Discipline. Therefore he kept them at such times perpetually buied, either in paving Roads, or in draining Marshes. By means whereof, he made not only many of the Barbarous Countries, both fruitful in themselves, and profitable to the Chequer: but thereby also he secured his own affairs, and disarmed his enemies. For many times the Barbarous people trusting to such advantages, were apt too often to rebel; and having got themselves within those Myres and Fastnesses, stood on their Guard, as in some fashionable or defensible Fortresses. The surest means to keep a conquered people from all occasion of revolting, is to lay waste their Wood-lands, and make all parts passable. The opportunity of a safe retreat, makes not more Thieves than Rebels.

35. Those whom he placed over his Provinces and Armies, he neither would remove under three years Government, nor yet continue after five. A longer stay might teach them too much cunning in practising on the dispositions of the people, and perhaps prevent them to work unto the favour of the Natives, and the Men of War, and so at last establish in themselves a Sovereignty. Cæsar's long stay in Gaul, (a second five years being added unto that which was first allowed him) made him so potent with the People, and gracious with the Souldiers, that in the end he brought the Roman Empire under his subjection. And on the other side, to take them from their charges under three years continuance were to have called them home, before they were well learned in the Customs and the nature of the Provinces; so making them unable to instruct their Successors: As for the men whom he employed in those commands, he called them always out of the most valiant and upright in the Camp and Senate.

loved, constant and bountiful to the last. Finally such a one he was, of whom I will only say, what I find spoken of Severus; 'It had been an ineffable benefit to the Common-wealth of Rome, if either he had never died, or never been born.

Thus having drawn the picture of this puissant and prudent Prince (though I confide with too much shadow) I now proceed unto the Catalogue of the Roman Emperors: in which I shall take notice of such of their Actions only, as had relation to the Publick, either in the improvement or decarage of their Power and Empire; or point to any single matter which concerns the Church.

The Roman Emperors.

A. M.

3918

1 Julius Cæsar the last of the Dictators, and the first of the Emperors: in memory of whom the following Emperors were called Cæsars, till the time of Adrian; when it became the title of the heir apparent, or designated Successor; the first who had it in that sense being Ælius Verus, though he lived not to enjoy the Empire.

3923

2 C. Octavianus Cæsar, to whom the Senate gave the name of Augustus; who added unto the Roman Empire the Provinces of Noricum, Pannonia, Rhetia, a great part of Spain, and the whole Kingdom of Egypt.

A. Chr.

In his time the Lord CHRIST was born.

17

3 Thiberius Nero, the Son in Law of Augustus, subdued many of the German Nations; and added Galatia and Cappadocia to the Empire. In his time, CHRIST suffered 23.

39

4 Caius Caligula, the Son of Germanicus Son of Drusus, the brother of Tiberius and of Agrippina Necece to Augustus Cæsar, by his daughter Julia.

43

5 Claudius Cæsar, Uncle to Caligula, Brother of Germanicus, and Son of Drusus by Antonia Necece to Augustus by his Sister Octavia; added Britain, and Mauritania, to the Roman Empire.

57

6 Domitius Nero, Son of Enobarbus, and Agrippina Daughter to Germanicus, the last of the Cæsars. He made the Cædian Alpes a Province of the Empire, and brought the Armenians to receive their Kings from the Roman Emperors; and was the first that raised any publick persecution against the Christians. An. 67. 12.

7 Sergius Galba, chosen by the French and Spanish Legions.

8 Salustius Otto, made Emperor by the Prætorian Soldiers.

9 Ant. Vespasian, elected by the German Legions.

10 Flavius Vespasianus, chosen by the Syrian and Judæan Armies, subdued utterly the Common-wealth of the Jews, by the valour and prowess of his Son Titus and brought Archie, Lycia, Rhodes, Samos, Thrace, and Syria Comagene, under the Form of Roman Provinces.

80

11 Titus Vespasianus, the fortunate Conqueror of the Jews.

82

12 Fl. Domitianus, who raised the second persecution against the Christians. An. 96. 15.

97 13 Nerva Cocceius, a noble Senator, but no Roman born; as all the rest had been before him, but not many after him.

99 14 Vlpian Trajanus, by birth a Spaniard, adopted by Nerva: he made Dacia a Province of the Empire, carried the Roman Armies over Euphrates, subduing Armenia, Mesopotamia, and Assyria, and raised the third Persecution against the Christians. An. 110. 19.

118 15 Ælius Adrianus, who utterly exterminated the Jewish Nation, and continued the Persecution begun by Trajan. 20.

138 16 Antoninus Pius, whose friendship was sought by the very Indians. 24.

162 17 Marcus Antoninus, furnished the Philosophers, associated L. Verus in the Government, by whose valour he subdued the Parthians. He raised the fourth Persecution against the Church. An. 167. 19.

181 18 L. Antoninus Commodus, Son to Marcus, the first Emperor that had been hitherto born in the time of his Fathers Empire. 13.

194 19 Ælius Pertinax, made Emperor against his will. Didius Julianus, who bought the Empire of the Soldiers.

195 21 Septimius Severus, took Cæstrophon from the Parthians, subdued the Provinces of Ofoene, and raised the fifth Persecution. An. 195. 18.

213 22 Basilius Caracalla, Son to Severus.

220 23 Opilius Macrinus, made Emperor by the men of War.

221 24 Varius Heliogabalus, the supposed Son of Caracalla.

225 25 Alexander Severus, Cousin of Varius.

238 26 Maximinus, a fellow of obscure birth; who being advanced to the Empire, raised the sixth Persecution. An. 237.

241 27 Gordian, elected by the Senate against Maximinus. 6.

247 28 Philip, an Arabian, supposed by some to be a Christian. 5.

252 29 Decius, slain in War against the Goths; the Author of the seventh Persecution raised against the Church. An. 252.

254 30 Gallus Hostilianus. 2.

256 31 Emilianus the Moor.

256 32 Valerianus, the Author of the eighth Persecution. An. 259. He was taken prisoner by Sapores, King of Perfia, and made to serve him for a footstool.

33 Gallienus, Son to Valerianus, in whose time the 30 Tyrants ingrossed unto themselves several parts of the Empire.

271 34 Claudius II., who after a short and troublesome time, left it to 272 35 Septimius his Brother, who enjoyed the same but 17 days.

273 36 Valer. Aurelianus, restored again the ancient discipline, suppressed all the Invaders of the Empire, and vanquished the Goths; but was a great persecutor of the Church, An. 278. 6.

279 37 Amavus Tacitus, descended from Tacitus the Historian.

38 Florianus, an Emperor of two months only.

280 39 Valerius Probus. 6.

286 40 Aurelius Carus, together with his two Sons Carinus and Numerianus.

Dioclesian

288 41 Dioclesian, first associated Maximinianus by the name of Emperor, or Augustus; and afterwards Galerius of Dacia, and Constantinus Chlorus, by the name of Cæsars. He had had continual Wars against the Perfians, and raised the tenth Persecution against the Church, An. 295. Which held so long, and was so vehement, that as St. Hierome writes, there were 5000 slain for every day in the year, save the first of January. He afterwards resigned the Empire, and lived in private at Salona. 20.

303 42 Constantinus Chlorus, a friend to Christians. 2.

310 43 Constantine, Son of Chlorus, furnished Magnus, or the Great, the first Emperor that countenanced the Gospel, and embraced it publicly; which he is said to have done on this occasion. At the same time that he was located Emperor in Britain, Maxentius was chosen at Rome by the Prætorian Soldiers; and Licinius named Successor by Maximinianus, the associate of his Father Chlorus. Being pensive and solicitous upon these distractions, he cast his eyes up towards Heaven, where he saw in the Air a light Pillar in the form of a Cross, wherein he read these words, In hoc signo, In hoc vinces, and the next night our Saviour appearing to him in a Vision, commanded him to bear that figure in his Standard, and he should overcome all his Enemies. This he performed, and was accordingly victorious, from which time he not only favoured the Christians, but became a very zealous Professor of the Faith and Gospel. I know Zosimus an Heathen Historian, partly out of malice to the Christians in general, and partly a particular grudge to the Emperor Constantine, reporteth otherwise of the causes of his Conversion: But the authority and consent of all Christian Writers, who deliver it as before is told, is far to be preferred before the testimony of one single Heathen, had he not been biased (as he was) by his disaffections.

Before this time it is observed, that few (if at all any) of the Roman Emperors died a natural death, as after they generally did. From Julius Cæsar unto Constantine there were 40 in all. Of which Julius was openly murdered in the Senate, Augustus made away by his wife Livia as Tiberius afterwards by Macro Caligula was slain by Cassius Chæres as Claudius poisoned by his wife Agrippina, Nero, and Orbs, laid violent hands upon themselves, Galba, and Vitellius, massacred by the Soldiers; Domitian by Stephanus, Commodus by Leites and Eldius, Perpetua and Fulgentius by the Soldiers of their Guard; Caracalla by the command of Macrinus, Macrinus, Heliogabalus, Alexander, Maximinus, Maximus, and Emilianus, successively by the men of War, Gordianus by Philip, Philip by the Soldiers; Hostilianus by Gallus, and Ælabius died a Prisoner in Parthia; Florianus was the author of his own end, Aurelianus murdered by his household servants; Gallienus, Quintillus, Murcius, and Probus, by the fury of the military men. And yet I have omitted out of this Account such of the Emperors as were tumultuously made by the Army, without the approbation of the Senate; as also the Cæsars, or designed Successors of the Empire; most of which got nothing by their designation and a doption, but as citius interfectores. Some of these were cut off their middlemembers: some for seeking to revive again the ancient Discipline, and some that others might enjoy their places. The chief cause of their continual massacres, proceeded originally from the Senate, and Emperors themselves. For when the Senators had once permitted the Soldiers to elect Galba, and had confirmed that election; Evangelus (saith Tacitus) imperis arcem, principem alibi quam Romæ fieri posse: more Emperors were made abroad in the field by the Legions, than at home by the Senators. Secondly from the Emperors alone, who by an unfeignable love to their Guard-Soldiers, so strengthened them with privileges, and nullified them in their licentious courtes; that on the smallest rebuke, they which were appointed for the safety of the Princes, proved the Authors of their ruin: so truly was it said by Augustus in Dion, Metendum est esse fuisse custode, sed multo magis a custode metendum est. The last cause (be it causa per accidens, or per se) was the larges which the new Emperors used to give unto the men of service; a custom begun by Claudius Cæsar, and continued by all his Successors: in so much that the Empire became fableable, and many times he which had most had it. As we see in Dion, when Salpustianus offering twenty Sesteritians to each Soldier, was (as if they had been by a flock at Gleek) out-bidden by Julianus, who promised them five and twenty Sesteritians amon. So that Herodian justly complaineth of this Donative; Id institum casaque militibus fuit, ut etiam in posterum turpissimum contumacissimisque evaderent, sic in avaritia indies, ac principum contemptus, etiam ad sanguinem usque procederent. That is to say, From this occasion and beginning, the Soldiers every day grew more shameless, and less regardful of their Prince: so that their covetousness encroaching, and the contempt they had of their Emperors waxing more and more, ended at last in the frequent shedding of their bloods, in hope to have a better Mark of the next Successor: So as the Emperor Constantine wanted not good reason, besides their hiding again him for Maxentius, to cashier these Guards, as grown more dangerous than useful to Imperial Majesty. And so accordingly he did, levelling their banding Camp to the very ground, disbanding the whole company, or putting them under other Officers, and to other Services, by means whereof they were not able to create the like disturbances, or dispose of the Empire as before. And for the Captains of these Guards which before were two (Præfetti Prætorio in Latin) he increased their number unto four (one for each quarter of the Empire, giving them a Civil Jurisdiction in exchange for the Military Command which they had before, and casting them behind in place after the Patricii, an Order of his own devising.

As for the extent and latitude of the Roman Empire, whilst it remained one intire Body (as it was before the time of Constantine, who at his death divided it among his Sons) it was in length about three thousand miles, namely from the Isthmus Ocean West, to the River Euphrates on the East; and in breadth, it reached from the Danubius Northward to Mount Atlas on the South, about two thousand miles. And though the Romans had extended their Dominions sometimes farther East, and North; yet could they never quite settle themselves in those conquests. Nature (as I formerly) had appointed them their bounds, not to much to limit their Empire, as to defend it. For the enemies found those Rivers, by reason of the depth of the Channel, and violent current of the stream, as a couple of impregnable Fortresses; purposely (as it were) erected to hinder hinder them from harassing the Roman Countries.

The Revenues of it Lippian in his Tract de Magnitudine Romanæ, esteemeth to be about one hundred and fifty millions of Crowns; and that they were no less, may be made more than probable by these reasons: 1. It is affirmed by divers, and among others by Batovic, that the yearly Revenues of the King of China amount to one hundred and twenty millions of Crowns. And if this be true (as few question it) we cannot in proportion guess the whole Empire of the Romans to yield less than one hundred and fifty millions; especially considering what Arts-Masters the Romans were, in levying and raising their Taxes and customary Tributes. 2. The Legionary Soldiers which were dispersed over the Provinces, received in ordinary pay, (besides provision of corn, apparel, and Officers wages) five millions, 156062 pounds and ten shillings of our money; which amounteth unto sixteen millions of Crowns, or thereabout. In the City it self were kept in continual pay, seven thousand Soldiers of the Watch, four thousand or six thousand for the defence of the City? and ten thousand for the Guard of the Emperor's person. The two first had the same wages, the last the double wages of a Legionary Soldier. Add hereto the expences of the Palace, and other means of disburals, and I think nothing of the sum can be abated. 3. We read that C. Caligula spent in one year two millions and seven hundred thousand of Sesteriis; how Nero must lavishly gave away two millions and one hundred thousand of Sesteriis; and how Vitellius in few months, was nine hundred thousand Sesteriis in Arrearages; every Sesterius being valued at seven pence sixteen shillings three pence: all of them huge and infinite sums. 4. When Vespasian came to the Empire, the Exchequer was so impoverished, that he professed in open Senate, that he wanted to settle the Common-wealth four millions of Sesteriis, amounting to three hundred and twelve millions of our English money: which Protestation (saith Sueton) seemed probable, Quia & male partis optime usus est. Now unless the ordinary Revenues came to as much, or more than we have spoken; by what means could this extraordinary sum be raised? 5. We may guess at the general Revenue by the moneys issuing out of particular Provinces; and it is certain, that Egypt afforded the Ptolemies twelve thousand Talents yearly: neither had the Romans less, they being more perfect in inhabiting, than in abating their Intrado. France was by Cæsar called at the yearly tribute of twenty millions of Crowns. And no doubt the rest of the Provinces were rated accordingly. 6. And lastly, the infinite sums of money given by the Emperors in way of largesse, are proofs sufficient for the greatness of the Income. I will instance in Augustus only: and in him, omitting his Donatives at the victory of Actium, and thereby, I will specify the Legacy at his death: He bequeathed (by his Testament, as we read in Tacitus) to the common lot, and the rest of the people, three pound eight shillings a man to every Soldier of the Prætorian bands, seven pounds sixteen shillings three pence; and to every Legionary Soldier, of the Roman Citizens, four pound ten shillings six pence: which amounted to a mighty mass of money.

The Arms or Ensigns of this Empire when it was up and in the flourish, was the Eagle: not born, as now in colours, and a banner; but in an Image or Portraiture on the top of a Spear, or other long piece of wood, to be fixed in the earth at pleasure. This Ensign, Spear and Eagle together, they called the Labarum: Quæ signa quædam Labarum Italia appendebantur Labra dicebantur, saith Lippian, Epist. Quæ. Ep. 5. The use as of this, of other standards, Lyra giveth us in his Notes on the second of Numbers, namely, in ad eorum aspectum, bellatores dividuntur & mutantur, to call together, and distribute the Soldiers according to occasions. And certainly for this end and purpose, were those Ensigns first invented. Afterwards they were applied to the distinguishing of Tribes and Families; and at last bestowed by Kings and Princes as the honorary tokens of well-deserving: Those which had been the Ensigns of War, becoming the ornaments of Peace. At what time the form of this Labarum was altered, and began to be born in colours, I have not yet read. It is now an Eagle Saturus, in a Field Sol, which kind of bearing the Heralds call mostrich. It was first born by Cæ. Marius in his second Consulship, and in his Wars against the Gimbri: from him conveyed to J. Cæsar, who was allied to him in design and person; and so derived unto the Emperors, his Successors.

But to proceed, Constantine having settled his affairs in peace, and cashiered the Prætorian Guards, left to new modelling the Empire; which he conceived to be too cumbersome and unwieldy to be governed by the former Policy: as indeed it was. And first of all, he augmented the Roman Provinces to the number of one hundred and twenty, or thereabouts; over every one of which he ordered a particular Præfident, that had his residence in the chief City of that Province. Then he reduced these Provinces under fourteen Dioceses, (for so he called the greater divisions of his Empire) seven of which were in the East parts thereof, that is to say, the Diocese of Egypt, of the Orient, of Asia, of Pontus, Thrace, Dacia, and Macedon: and as many also in the West, viz. the Præfident of the City of Rome (which I count for one), the Diocese of Italy, Africa, and Illyricum, of France, Spain, and Brittain. Finally instead of the Præfident Prætorio which had the command of the Prætorians, he ordained four for the quarters of the Empire: that is to say, the Præfident Prætorio Italia, under whom were the Dioceses of Italy, Africa, and Illyricum: Præfident Prætorio Galliarum, who had under him the Dioceses of France, Spain, and Brittain; 3. The Præfident Prætorio Orientis, who had commanded over the Dioceses of Egypt, the Orient, the Asian, the Pontick and Thracian Dioceses; And 4. the Præfident Prætorio Illyrici, under whole superintendence, besides Illyricum itself, were the Dioceses of Macedon and Dacia only, each of these Præfidents having a Vicarius, or Lieutenant in the several Dioceses under his authority, who fixed their residence in the head City of the Diocese. And thus I have the rather noted, because of the relation which the Policy of the Christian Church had to this Division: it being so ordered in the best and purest times thereof, that in every City where the Emperors had an Officer, whom they called Defensor Civitatis, the Christians should have a Bishop: in every chief City of the Province a Metropolitan; and over every Diocese an Archbishop or Primate, from whom lay no Appealation to any other. And so far Constantine did well; if at the least the casting of the Empire into so many Dioceses was of his devising. But I have reason to believe, that it was more ancient: the Patriarchs or Primates of Rome, Carthage, Alexandria, Antioch, and other of the greater Churches, being settled in a preeminence of jurisdiction over the Provinces, and Metropolitans assigned to them long time before the Council of Nice, and consequently before the Empire (may the birth of Constantine, who possibly might act no more in this great business, than the assigning of a Præfident Prætorio to each several quarter, and the allotting of the Dioceses unto each Præfident. But whether it were so or not, certain it is, that he committed divers errors, which did more prejudice the Empire, than any thing that had been done by his Predecessors. First in translating the Imperial Seat from Rome to Byzantium; by which transplantation, the Empire lost much of its natural vigour: as we see by experience of Plants and Flowers, which being removed from the place of their natural growth, lose much of their vermic which was formerly in them. On which reason, Camillus would not suffer the Romans to remove their Seat unto the City of the Pith, newly conquered by him: but to prevent them in it, let fire on the Town, and so consumed it, utrimque Vicis, finit, Laborem Antulianum fides, as my Author hath it. A second fault of this Constantine, was the dividing the Empire amongst his Sons, which only concerned himself. For though it was quickly re-united in the person of Constantius (his brethren dying without issue), yet his example being followed by others, the Empire was after torn into many pieces to the defolation of the whole. 'Tis true, the former Emperors used sometimes to associate some partner with them; but so, that they did manage it as one sole Estate: Constantine (if I remember rightly) being the first which parcelled it into several Sovereignities, each independent of the other, allotting to Constantius, Greece, Thrace and all the Provinces of the East, to Constantius, Italy, Illyricum, Africa; to Constantine, Gaul, Spain, and Brittain. The third fault of this Emperor was his removing the Legion and Colonies which lay before on the Northern Marches, into the Eastern parts of his Dominions; pretending to use them as a Bulwark against the Persians, & lying thereby those passages open, at which not long after the Barbarous Nations entered, and subdued the West. For though instead of these Colonies they placed Garrisons and Forts in convenient places, yet these being filled with Soldiers, for the most part out of other Countries, fought not as in defence of their native Soil, (as the Colonies would and must have done) but on the first onset of those Barbarians abandoned them to the will of the enemy. So that Zozymus (though in other of his reports about this Prince he bewrayeth much malice) doth call him, not untruly, the first Subverter of that flourishing Monarchy. To these three we may add a fourth, which concerns the Emperors in general; namely their stupid negligence and degenerate spirits, which shewed it self most visibly in the last of

The Western Emperors.

- 341 1 Constantius, the youngest son of Constantinus Magnus, his brother Constantine being dead, in the third year of his reign, remained sole Emperor of the West. 13.
- 354 2 Constantius, the other of Constantinus sons succeeded Constantius in his part, after his decease; uniting the divided Empire into one Estate.
- 359 3 Valentinian Emperor of the West, his brother Valens ruling in Constantinople, and the Eastern parts.
- 4 Valentinian II. youngest son of the former Valentinian.
- 399 5 Honorius the second son of Theodosius the Emperor, (his elder brother Arcadius reigning in the East) in whole time Alaric with the Goths invaded Italy, sacked Rome, and made themselves Masters of the Country, which afterwards they left in exchange for Spain. 26.
- 425 6 Valentinian III. during whose time Attila and the Hunnes made foul work in Italy; and the Vandals seized upon Africa, as they did on Italy and Rome also after his decease: Murdered by Maximus a Roman (whose wife he had trained into the Court, and ravished) as shall be shewn hereafter on another occasion. He was son unto Constantinus Cæsar by Placidia sister to Honorius, and Widow of Ambulius King of the Goths.

- 455 7 Maximian having slain Valentinian the third, succeeded in the Empire; but on the coming of the Vandals, whom Eudoxia the wife of Valentinian (who had some inkling of the manner of her husband's death) had drawn into Italy, he was flung to death by his own Soldiers. 1.
- 456 8 Avitus, chosen Emperor in a military tumult.
- 457 9 Majorianus, 7.
- 461 10 Severus, 6.
- 467 11 Anthemius, who at the end of five years was slain (as were the three before him) by Recimus a Saracen born, the chief Commander of the Armies, who had an aim to get the Empire for himself, but died as soon as he had vanquished and slain Anthemius.
- 471 12 Olybrius, an Emperor for six months only.
- 472 13 Glycerius, another of as little note: As also was 14 Julius Nepos, deposed by Orestes a noble Roman, who gave the Empire to his son, called at first Monimus; but, after his assuming the Imperial title, he was called as in contempt Angustulus.
- 473 15 Angustulus, the last of the Emperors who resided in Italy, vanquished by Odoacer King of the Herals and Turingians. An ominous thing, that as Angustulus raised this Empire, so an Angustulus should ruin it.

But though Angustulus lost the Empire, yet Odoacer was not suffered to enjoy it long: Zeno the Emperor of the East (thence Theodosius King of the Goths, to expel him thence; and to possess himself of Italy, the reward of his valour. And thus the Emperor did the rather, partly because the Goths were Christians, and in good terms of correspondence with him; but principally to remove that active Nation somewhat further off, who lay before too near the borders of his own Dominions. And that he might diminish them with the greater content and honour, he made Theodosius a Patriarch of the Roman Empire: an honour first devised by the Emperor Constantine; and of so high esteem from the first Institution, that they who were dignified therewith, were to have precedence of the Prætorio Præfident, who before took place next to the Emperor himself. Nor did the famous Charlemain fit upon it any lower estimate, in case he did not add much unto it; when to the Title of Emperor of the Romans, he added that of a Patriarch in the title Imperial. Theodosius, thus authorized and encouraged, marches toward Italy; and having vanquished Odoacer, secures himself in his new Conquests by divers politic proceedings: first by Alliances abroad, and then by Fortresses at home. To fortify himself abroad he took to Wife Amalobeda, daughter to Chlodovech (or Chlovis) King of the French; marrying his sister Hemeltruda to Thorismund, King of the Vandals; a Prince of the Goths in Spain; and Amnelberga his Niece, to Hermandfridus King of the Turingians. Being thus backed with these Alliances with his Neighbour-Princes, (all equally concerned in the subverting of the Roman Empire) he built Towns and Forts along the Alpes, and the shores of the Adriatic, to impeach the passage of the barbarous Nations into Italy. His Soldiers and Commanders he dispersed into most parts of the Country; partly to keep under the Italians, of whose wavering and unconstant nature he was somewhat doubtful; partly to unite unite both peoples in a mixture of Language, Marriages, and Customs; and partly that he might more easily in War command them, and in Peace correct them. Italy, which before was made a thorough-fare to the barbarous Nations, and quite disordered by the frequent inundations of Lust and Rapine; he reduced to such a peaceable and settled Government, that before his death they had quite lost the memory of their former miseries: insomuch whereof a general felicity had diffused it self over all the Country. Such Cities as had been formerly defaced, he repaired, strengthened, and beautified. In his Wars he was victorious, temperate in his times of Peace, and in his private carriage discreet and affable. Finally (as Velleius saith of Marcus Antoninus) he was Nationis magis quam rationis Barbarus: And went the most judicious way to establish his dominion in Italy, of any of the Barbarous Princes that ever had invaded the Roman Provinces, which he left thus confirmed and settled unto his Successors.

A. Chr. The Kings of the Goths in Italy.

- 495 1 Theodorick of whom before; who to his conquest of Italy added that of Illyricum, as also the appendant Islands to both those Countreys; and wrested Provence in France, from the Goths of Spain.
- 527 2 Alabalaricus, Nephew to Theodorick by his daughter Amalsueta, who in the minority of her son managed the affairs of the Goths in Italy. Fearing some danger out of Greece, he rebuked Provence to the French, and by their aid drove the Burgundians out of Liguria. A Lady skillful in the Languages of all those Nations which had any commerce with the Roman Empire, insomuch that pro miraculo fuerit ipsam audire loquentem, saith Procopius of her.
- 534 3 Theodatus, the son of Hummelfride, the sister of Theodorick, succeeded on the untimely death of Alabalaricus. Who being in War with the Romans, (or rather with the Greek Emperors, endeavouring to recover Italy from the hands of the Goths) and desiring before hand to know his success; was willed by a Jew to thrust up a certain number of Swine, and to give some of them the names of Goths, and unto others the names of Romans. Which done, and going to the flies not long after, they found the Hogs of the Gothish faction all slain, and those of the Roman half unbrui'd: and thereupon the Jew prophesied, That the Goths should be discomfited, and the Romans lose a great part of their strength; and it proved accordingly. Which kind of Divination is called Ovaricaria, and hath been prohibited by a General Council. The loss of this battel (won by Belisarius Commander of the Armies of the Emperor Justinian) drew on the loss of Rome, and the East parts of Italy, (with the Realm of Naples) and occasioned the death of Theodatus, slain shortly after these great losses by the Goths themselves.
- 537 4 Vitiger, chosen by the Goths, besieged and taken in Ravenna by the said Belisarius.
- 540 5 Idabaldus, Governour of Vercina on the calling home of Belisarius, chosen by the Goths, and by them not long after slain.
- 541 6 Adaricus, of whom nothing memorable.
- 542 7 Totilas, a right valiant Prince, recovered all which had been got from his Predecessors, and sacked Rome in the fight of Belisarius, then returned into Italy, as not able to hinder him. Vanquished and killed in fight by Narses, in the 11. of his Reign.

- 553 8 Teyas, the last King of the Goths in Italy, who being vanquished by Narses in the fourteenth year of his Reign, submitted himself to the Eastern Emperours; but after breaking out again, he was finally discomfited, and slain by Narses, not far from the City of Nocera. An. 567. After which time, the Goths and the Italians mingled in Blood and Language, became one Nation.

But the miseries of Italy, and those Western parts were not so to end. No sooner had God freed them from the rod of his visitations, which he had laid upon them in the times of Persecution, formerly remembered; and giving them peace within their dwellings; but they became divided into Schism and Factions: and after wallowed in those sins; which a continual surfeit of prosperity hath commonly attending on it. Insomuch that devout Salvian, who lived much about these times, complains of that high hand of wickedness, wherewith they did provoke the patience of Almighty God; the lives of Christians being grown to deplorably wicked, that they became a scandal to the Faith and Gospel. In advis pastor Christus approbatus, in advis pastor Christus maledictus, saith that good Bishop. So that their sins being ripe for vengeance, God sent the barbarous Nations, as his Executioners, to execute his divine justice on the impudent men, and made themensible though Heathens, that it was Gods work they did, and not their own; in laying such afflictions on these Western parts. Ipsi facientes non suum esse quod faciunt, agunt se & pergerunt divino iussu, as the said good Bishop doth inform us of them. On this impulsion the Vandals did acknowledge that they first wasted Spain, and then harried Africa: And at the same time, did Attila the Huns insert into his Royal Titles the stile of Malleus Orbis, and Flagellum Dei; acknowledging thereby his own apprehension of some special and extraordinary calling to this publick service. Nay, as Jorandus doth report, some of these barbarous people did not stick to say, that they were put on this employment by some Heavenly visions, which did direct them to the work which they were to do. In prosecution of the which, in less time than the compass of 80 years, this very Italy (though anciently the strength and seat of that Empire) was seven times brought almost unto desolation, by the Fire and Sword of the Barbarians, viz. First by Alarick, King of the Goths, who sacked Rome, Naples, &c. 2. By Attila King of the Huns who razed Florence, wasted Lombardy, and not without much difficulty was diverted from the spoil of Rome, by the intercession of Pope Leo. 3. By Geisericus King of the Vandals, who also had the sackage of Rome it self. 4. By Biorgius King of the Atians, in the time of the Emperor Maiorianus. 5. By Odoacer King of the Hernis, who drove Augustulus the last Western Emperor out of his estate; and twice in thirteen years laid the Country desolate. 6. By Theodorick King of the Goths, called in by Zeno Emperor of Constantinople to expel Odoacer and the Hernis. And 7. by Gundabild King of the Burgundians, who having ransacked all Lombardy, returned home again, leaving possession to the Goths. As for these Goths, being the first and last of those barbarous Nations who had any thing to do in the spoil of Italy, after they had reigned here under eight of their Kings, for the space of 72 years, they were at last subdued by Belisarius and Narses, two brave bravest Souldiers that had ever served the Eastern Emperours; and Italy united once more to the Empire, in the time of Justinian. But Narses having governed Italy about 17 years, and being after such good service most despitigly used by Sophia (never the wiser for her name) the Wife of the Emperor Justinus, abandoned the Country to the Lombards. For the Emperess envying his glories, not only did procure to have him recalled from his Government, but sent him word, That she would make the Eunuch (for such he was) come home and spin among her maid: To which the discontented man returned this answer, That he would spin her such a web, as neither she nor any of her minions should ever be able to unweave. And thereupon he opened the passages of the Country to Alboinus King of the Lombards, then possessed of Pannonia, who coming into Italy with their Wives and Children, possessed themselves of all that Country which anciently was inhabited by the Cisalpine Gauls, calling it by their own names Lombardia, now commonly Lombardy. Nor laid he thereto but made himself master of the Countries lying on the Adriatick, as far as to the borders of Apulia; and for the better Government of his new Dominions, erected the four famous Dukedoms, 1. Of Friuli at the entrance of Italy, for the admission of more aids it occasion were, or the keeping out of new Invaders; 2. Of Turin, at the foot of the Alpes against the French; 3. Benevent, in Abruzzo, a Province of the Realm of Naples, against the incursions of the Greek; then possessed of Apulia, and the other Eastern parts of that Kingdom; And 4. of Spoleto, in the midst of Italy, to suppress the Natives; leaving the whole, and hopes of more unto his Successors.

- 750 22. Alstulfus. 6.
- 756 23. Desiderius, the last of the Lombards, of whom more anon. In the mean time, we will look into the story of some of the former Kings, in which we find some things deserving our consideration. And first beginning with Alboinus, the first of this Catalogue: before his coming into Italy he had waged war with Cassimundus, a King of the Cepheis, whom he overthrew, and made a drinking Cup of his Skull. Belisandus daughter of this King he took to Wife, and being one day merry at Verona, forced her to drink out of that dented Cup; which the she loathed, that she promised one Helmichild, if he would aid her in killing the King, to give him both her self and the Kingdom of Lombardy. This when he had consented to, and performed accordingly, they were both so extremely hated for it, that they were fain to flee to Adriana, and put themselves into the protection of Longinus the Exarch. Who partly out of a desire to enjoy the Lady; partly to be possessed of that mass of Treasure which the was fain to bring with her; but principally hoping by her power and party there, to raise a beneficial War against the Lombards, persuaded her to dispatch Helmichild out of the way, and take him for his husband; and to which the willingly agreed. Helmichild coming out of a Bath called for drink, and the gives him a strong poyson; half of which when he had drunk, and found by the strange operation of it how the matter went, he compelled her to drink the rest: so both died together. 2. Clephas the Second King extended the Kingdom of the Lombards to the Gates of Rome: but was so tyrannical withal, that after his death, they resolved to admit of no more Kings, distributing the Government among thirty Dukes. Which division, though it held not above twelve years, was the chief cause that the Lombards failed of being the absolute Lords of all Italy. For the people having once cast off the yoke of obedience, and tasted somewhat of the sweetness of licentious Freedom; were never after so reduced to their former duty, as to obsequy to their Kings in such Achievements as tended more unto the greatness of the King, than the gain of the subject. 3. Cunibert the 14. King was a great lover of the Clergy, and by them as lovingly requited. For being to encounter with Allochis the Duke of Trent, who rebelled against him: one of the Clergy knowing that the Kings life was chiefly aimed at by the Rebels, put on the Royal Robe, and thrust himself into the head of the Enemy, where he lost his own life, but saved the Kings. 4. Arbiter the 17. King, gave the Colian Alpes containing Piedmont, and some part of the Duchy of Milain to the Church of Rome: which is observed to be the first Temporal Estate, that ever was conferred upon the Popes, and the foundation of that greatness which they after came to. 5. The 19. King was Luitprandus, who added to the Church the Cities of Ancona, Narnia, and Humana, belonging to the Exarchatus; having first won Ravenna, and the whole Exarchatus thereof An. 741. The last Exarch being called Eutychus. But the Lombards long enjoyed not his Conquests. For Steph King of France, being by Pope Stephen III. solicited to come into Italy; overthrew Agilulfus, and gave Ravenna to the Church. The last King was Desiderius, who falling at odds with Adrian the First, and besieging him in Rome, was by Charles the Great, Successor to Pepin, besieged in Pavia, and himself with all his Children taken Prisoners, An. 774. And to end the Kingdom of the Lombards, having endured in Italy 9.6 years. Lombardy was then a Province of the French, and after of the German Empire: many of whose Emperours used to be crowned Kings of Lombardy, by the Bishops of Milain, with an Iron Crown: which was kept at Moscuca, now called Monza, a small Village. This Charles continued his Fathers former donations to the Church; and added of his own accord, Maree Anconitana, and the Dukedom of Spoleto. For these and other kindnesses, Charles was by Pope Leo IV. on Christmas day crowned Emperor of the West, Anno 800. whose Successors shall be reckoned when we come to the story of Germany. At this division of the Empire, Irene was Emperess of the East; to whom and her Successors was no more allotted that the Provinces of Apulia, and Calabria, (the East parts of the Realm of Naples) being then in possession of the Greek. To the Popes were confirmed or given by this Emperour and his Father, almost all the Lands which they possess at this day; though afterwards extorted from them by the following following Emperours, or under colour of their Title: by many several ways and means brought again unto them, as shall be shewn hereafter in convenient place. The Venetians, in that little they then had, remained suæ juris. The rest of Italy, containing all the other Provinces of the Kingdom of Naples, together with Tuscany, Frinds, Trevisina, and whatsoever is at this day in the possession of the Dukes of Milân, Mantua, Modena, Parma, Monferrat, and the Duke of Savoy as Prince of Piedmont, together with Liguria, or the States of Genova, was reserved by Charles unto himself, and in his life-time given by him to Papian his Second Son, with the title of King of Italy. But long it did not rest in the House of France; the Princes of the Lombards wresting it from the Line of Charles, and after weakening and dividing it by their several Factions, till in the end, instead of an united Kingdom, there rose up many scattered Principalities, as shall hereafter be declared. But first we will proceed to the Kings of Italy, of which we shall endeavour as exact a Catalogue, as the confusions of that State can be capable of.

The Kings of Italy, of the French, Italian, and German Lines.

1. Papian, Son of Carolus Magnus, died before his Father.
2. Bernard, Son of Papian.
3. Ludovicus Pius, Emperor, and King of France.
- 841 4. Lotharius, Emperor, eldest son of Ludovicus: 15.
- 856 5. Ludovicus II, Emperor, eldest son of Lotharius: 20.
- 876 6. Carolus Calvus, Emperor, the youngest son of Ludovicus Pius: II.
7. Caroloman, Nephew to Ludovicus Pius, by Ludovicus his second son, (surnamed the Antient).
8. Carolus Crassus, or the Fat Emperor, brother of Caroloman, the last King of Italy of the house of Charles, he died Anno 888.
- 888 9. Guy, Duke of Spoleto, contends with Berengarius Duke of Frinds both of the Longobardian Race, of the Kingdom of Italy; and in fine carrieth it against him.
- 894 10. Lambert, the son of Guy, crowned by Pope Formosus.
11. Ludovicus, son of Boson Earl of Ardenne, King of Arles and Burgundy, by some Writers called only Earl of Provence; upon the death of Lambert invadeth Italy; and is made King.
- 917 12. Berengarius Duke of Frinds, vanquisheth Ludovicus; is made King of Italy; and at last overcometh by the Hungarians who having wasted the Country returned back again.
13. Rodolph Duke of Burgundy Transjuranus, called into Italy against Berengarius, relinquit in exchange for the Kingdom of Arles and Burgundy to his Cousin.
- 926 14. Hugh I, Arles King of Arles and Burgundy, who held the Kingdom of Italy upon this resignation; but after many troubles, was at last ousted of it by Berengarius, and returned into France.
- 946 15. Berengarius II, son of the former Berengarius, on the retreat of Hugh, received by the Italians as Protector to Lotharius the son of Hugh; besieging Adelbair the next Heir of Italy (on the death of Lotharius) was taken prisoner by the Emperor Otho.
16. Otho, called into Italy by Adelbair, daughter to Rodolph King of Burgundy and Italy; married the Lady, and in her right is King of Italy.

- 974 17. Otho II, son of the former Otho, married Theophania Niece to Nicephorus Phocas, Emperor of Constantinople, and hath Calabria for her Dowry: 20.
- 984 18. Otho III, Emperor, and King of Italy, in whose minority the Kingdom was usurped by 19. Harduinus, a man of great power in Italy, who kept it all the time of Otho; till being broken with long Wars by Henry the succeeding Emperor, he was forced to quit it.
20. Henry, the second Emperor of that name, having thrice vanquished Harduinus, got the Kingdom of Italy, and left the same unto the Emperors his Successors: the Title of Italy after this time being drowned in that of the Empire; and the Country governed as a part and Member of the Empire, by such Commanders and other Officers as the Emperors from time to time sent thither. But long it did not in that state. For the Popes of Rome knowing how much it did concern them in point of Policy, to weaken the Imperial Power in Italy, without which their own Grandeur could not be maintained; stirred up continual Factions and Wars against them; and by that means, and by the Censures of the Church which they denounced according as they saw occasion, did so astonish and distract them, that in the end the Emperors began to lay aside the affairs of Italy, by which they reaped more trouble than the profit came to. Inasmuch that Rodolphus Habsburgensis, a valiant and a politic Prince, finding the ill success which Henry the 4. and 5. and Frederick the 1. and 2. Emperors of more puissance than himself, had found in their Italian actions and pretensions; resolved to rid his hands of that troublesome and fruitless Province; and to that end made as much money as he could of that Commodity, which he saw he was not like to keep. And yet he sold good penny-worths too, to them that bought them; the Florentines paying for their Liberties but six thousand Crowns, the Citizens of Lucca, ten thousand; and others as they could make their Markets. And being once required the reason, why he went not into Italy to look to the affairs thereof, as his Predecessors had done before him; he is said to have returned for answer that conceit of the Fox, for his not going to attend (as other beasts did) at the Lion's Den:

Quia me vestigia terrent,
Omnia te adesse sum spectant, nulla retrosum.

That is to say;

I dare not go, because no track I see
Of any Beast returning towards me.

Which faulty and impudent resolution being followed by too many of his Successors, not only gave the Popes the opportunity they looked for, of making themselves the great disposers of the affairs of Italy but many pious Princes thereby took occasion of getting all they could lay hold on for themselves, and others. For by this means, the caligars made themselves Masters of Verona, the Papstresses of Montana, the Carriants of Padua, the Bailiffs of Bononia, and by the same the Florentines got Pistoia and Ferrara was possessed by the Venetians. And although Henry VII, provoked by these indignities, made a journey thither, reduced many of them; revolted Cities

Cities to their former obedience, and was crowned King at Milân with the Iron-Crown; as were also Ludovicus Bavaricus, and Charles IV, two of his Successors: yet found they in conclusion less small benefit by the enterprise, as did not quit the charge and trouble which it put them to. So in the end Italy was left wholly in a manner to the Pope's disposing, who gave away to others what they could not manage, or otherwise confirmed those men in their usurpations, whom they found already possessed of the Emperors Countries; and bound them by that means the faster to the See of Rome, of which they were to hold their Estates in Fee: the Emperours having nothing left them, but the empty Title, nor exercising the Imperial Power there any other way, than by changing Earldoms into Marquises, and Marquises into Dukedoms, which they often did for ready money, or reward of Service, or to preserve some shadow of their ancient Interit.

And now we are to look on Italy as under a new face of things, not only in regard of several Principalities and forms of Government; but as replenished with new Colonies or Sets of people, differing from the old in manners as well as language. And though the Soil be now as it was before, yet hath that also found some change in the different production of the natural Fruits, as well as in the Manufactures and works of Art. For now besides their Corn and Wine, which anciently were the staple Commodities of this Country; they supply the rest of Christendom with Rice, Silks, Velvets, Taffeties, Satins, Grograins, Ruffs, Fullians, Goldwire, Allom, Armour, Glasses, and such like Commodities, which make their Merchants very wealthy; who being for the most part Gentlemen of Noble houses, not only lose not the esteem of their Nobility by following the Trade of Mechanicks (as in other places); but by reason that they are possessed of Estates in Land, which they manage by their Bailiffs and other Servants, they are become the wealthiest Merchants in all Christendom.

Nor do the Gentry come behind them in all manner of affluence, which can be possibly enjoyed in so rich a Soil. Their Lands they set not at a vent, but at thirds and halves, according as the Soils more or less fruitful; seldom not into Italy to look to the affairs thereof, as his Predecessors had done before him; he is said to have returned for answer that conceit of the Fox, for his not going to attend (as other beasts did) at the Lion's Den:

Quia me vestigia terrent,
Omnia te adesse sum spectant, nulla retrosum.

That is to say;

I dare not go, because no track I see
Of any Beast returning towards me.

Which faulty and impudent resolution being followed by too many of his Successors, not only gave the Popes the opportunity they looked for, of making themselves the great disposers of the affairs of Italy but many pious Princes thereby took occasion of getting all they could lay hold on for themselves, and others. And although Henry VII, provoked by these indignities, made a journey thither, reduced many of them; revolted Cities

apparel they are said to be very modest, in the furniture of their houses sumptuous, at their Tables neat, sober of speech; enemies of all ill reports; tender; that whoever standerth any one of them, if it come unto the parties ear, he is sure to die for it. Of more cost and expense he is very thrifty, and loves to be at no more cost than he is sure to save by, or receive great thanks for; but otherwise for civil carriage and behaviour, surpassing all the Gentry of the World besides. Only in frictions to their Wives, they exceed all reason, of whom they are so extremely jealous, that they shut them up all day from the common view, and permit them liberty of discourse with few or none. The Lock used by a Gentleman of France to be assured of his Wives chastity in the time of his absence, is to know a story that it needs no report. But touching the predominancy of this jealous humour in most Southern Nations, we shall speak more hereafter when we come to Spain. And yet if that be true, which is proverbially spoken of the women of Italy, the husbands have more reason for this strict restraint, than other Nations are aware of. For though they be for the most part witty in speech, and modest in the outward appearance, as much as any; yet it is said of them in the way of Proverb, That they are as Magpies at the door, Saints in the Church, Gossips in the Garden, Devils in the house, Angels in the Streets, and Syrens in the Windows, not wanting on this ground to set out themselves with all advantages of art, there being few amongst them who are not painting, and other the sophisticated helps to fallacious Beauty; and thereupon they have a saying, that If God make them tall and fat, (for the title of a godly woman is much prized amongst them) they will make themselves fair.

The Language of both Sexes is very courtly and fluent, all when speaking the Cortezan, or Court-language; notwithstanding the diversity of Dialects which is amongst them. For though there be a remarkable difference betwixt the Florentine and Venetian, the Milanese and the Roman, the Neapolitan and the Genoese; yet it is hard to be discerned by the tone or Pronunciation what language any Gentleman is of. But generally it is best spoken in the great Duke's Country, in the Cities of Florence and Siena; but in Florence especially; in which City, Gineciardine the Historian, Eccoci the Author of the Deamemon, and other great Masters of the Italian Language, did live and flourish in their times.

For other men of note both for Arts and Arms, Italy hath afforded many since the fall of the Empire, viz. Ann Silvius, afterwards Pope, by the name of Pius the Second; 2. Maffius Patavinus, a stout defender of the Imperial Rights; 3. Petrarch, a Roman born; 4. Angelus Politianus, the Rector of polite Literature in Italy; 5. Rodolphus Volaterranus; and 6. Picus Mirandula, two great Humanitians; 7. Guido Bonatus, a famous Astrologer; 8. Aristo, and 9. Tasso, the most renowned Poets of their times, and the latter never followed since; 10. Sixtus Senensis one of the best Antiquaries of the Nation and a great Divine; 11. Bellarmino, and 12. Barnius, the Buttrells and Pillars of the Church of Rome. And then for Arms; 1. Ludovicus Contarini, the first Rector of the honour of the Italian Soldierly; 2. Forti Braccio, and 3. Nicolas Piccinino, two of his training up in the feats of Chivalry; 4. Sforza, the Father, and the Son; of which the Son attained by his valour, to the Dukedom of Milân; 5. Christopher Columbus, a Genoese; 6. Americus Vesputius, a Florentine, and 8. Sebastian Cabot, a Venetian, the fortunate Discoverers of America; 9. Andrea D'Oris, Admiral of the Navies to Charles the fifth; and 10. Ambrosio Spinola (both Generals) Commander of the Armies of Philip the Great, King of Spain: Which last being once upbraided by Maurice, Prince of Orange, as issued from a Race of Merchants, (though otherwise of a very ancient and noble Family) returned this tart and sudden Answer, that he thought is a greater honour to him, being a Merchant, to have the command of so many Princes; than it could be unto the other, though a Prince by birth, to be under the command of so many Merchants.

The usual Division of Italy is into fix parts, 1. Lombardy, 2. Tuscany, 3. the Land of the Church, 4. Naples, 5. Riviere de Genoa; and 6. the Land of Venice: and of them there is passed this Confine according to the principal Cities, i.e. Rome for Religion, Naples for Nobility, Millain for beauty, Genoa for Intellects, Florence for Policy, and Venice for riches. But take it as it stands at the present time; and Italy is best divided into

The Kingdom of NAPLES.

THE Kingdom of NAPLES is invironed on all sides with the Adriatic, Ionian, and Tuscan Seas, excepting where it joyneth on the West to the Lands of the Church: from which separated by a Line drawn from the mouth of the River Trento (or Dreventum) falling into the Adriatic, to the Spring-head of Aventum, By which accompt it taketh up all the East of Italy, the compass of it being reckoned at 1468 miles.

It hath been called sometimes the Realm of Pozzuoli, from Pozzili or Apulia, a chief Province of it: its first possessor of the Romanes (the Founders of this Kingdom) in these parts of Italy: but called most commonly the Realm of Sicily, on this side of the Phare, to difference it from the Kingdom of the Isle of Sicily, lying on the other side of the Phare, or Strait of Meftina. The reason of which improprie appellation proceeded from Roger the first King hereof, who being also Earl of Sicily and keeping there his fixed and ordinary residence? when he got the favour to be made King, desired (in honour of the place where he most reposed) to be created by the name of King of both the Sicilies. And that indeed is the true and ancient name of the Kingdom; the name or title of King of Naples not coming into use till the French were dispossessed of Sicily by the Aragonians; and nothing left them but this part of the Kingdom, of which the City of Naples was the Regal Seat, called therefore in the following times, the Kingdom of Naples; and by some of the Italian Writers, the Kingdom only.

This is esteemed to be the most fertile place in all Italy, abounding in all things necessary for the life of man, and in such also as conduce to Delight and Physick; viz. Many Springs, and Medicinal Waters, Baths of divers virtues, fowly Physicks. It hath also an excellent breed of Horses, which may best be transported but by the leave of the King, or at least the Viceroy; great store of Allom, Mines of divers Metals, and the choicest Wines, called anciently Vina Massica, and Falerina, frequently mentioned by the Poets. And as for Merchandise, to Alexandria they send Saffron, to Genoa Silks, to Rome Wines, and to Venice Oyl, &c.

The Noblemen or Gentry hereof, live, of all men the most careless and contented lives; and like the Tyrant Polyrates in the elder Stories, have nothing to trouble them, but that they are troubled with nothing. And there is a great number of them too, there being reckoned in this Realm in the time of Orsini, 13 Princes, 24 Dukes, 25 Marquesses, 90 Earls, and 800 Barons; and those not only Titular, as in other places, but men of great power and revenue in their several Countries: it is said to be 1000000 Crowns a year with the other: the Princes of Salerno, and Severine being near as great. They are all bound by their Tenure to serve the King in his Wars, which gives them many Privileges, and great command over the common Subject: whereby as they were made the ablest to assist the King, upon any foreign invasion; so are they in condition also of raising and countenancing such defections as have been made from King to King, and from one Family to another, as forced betwixt their ambitious & particular interests. For not alone the Nobles, but in general as many of the common people as can be spared from husbandry, are more addicted to the Wars, than they are to Merchandise: The Nobles in pursuit of honour, and the Peasants out of desire of being in action; so that the greatest part of the Forces which serve the Spaniards in the Low Countries, are sent from hence. To which, the humour which they have from the highest to the lowest, of going bravely in Apparel, leaves exceeding fitly. An humour which is so predominant in both Sexes, that though the Peasants live all the rest of the week in as great severity and drudgery, as his Lord doth in pride and jollity; yet on the Sundays and Saints-days, he will be sure to have a good suit to his back, though perhaps he hath no meat for his belly. And for the women, the that works hard both day and night for an hungry living, will be so franked up on the Sundays and other Festivals, or when the is to show her self in some public place, that one who did not know the humour, might easily mistake her for some noble Lady.

The principal Rivers of this Kingdom are, 1. Sylarbis, 2. Bisurnus, 3. Pfocara, 4. Trentus, 5. Asidius, 6. Salutinus, 7. Vomano, 8. Salutinus, and 9. Gargilian. The most famous of which are Asidius and Gargilian. The first as being the only River of Italy, which rising South-side of the Apennine, forceth a breach through it to the upper Sea: but more for the great Battel fought on the Banks thereof, called the Battel of Canus, of which more hereafter. The other no less famous for those many Battels, which have been fought near it between the French and the Spaniards, for the Kingdom of Naples: especially that famous Battel between the Marquess of Saluzzero, General of the French, and Gonsalvo, Leader of the Spaniards; the issue of which Victory by the French, was the absolute confirmation of the Realm of Naples to the Spaniards. More famous is this River for the death of Peter de Medicis, who being banished his Country at the coming of King Charles VIII. into Italy, and having divers times in vain attempted to be reintegrated, followed the French Army hither, and after the loss of the day, took ship with others, to fly to Cajeta; but over-charging the Vessel, he sunk and drowned them all. But most famous is it in that Marius, that excellent though unfortunate Captain, being by Sylla's faction driven out of Rome, hid himself stark naked in the dirt and weeds of this River: where he had lain long, but Sylla's Souldiers found him, and carried him to the City of the Minyrmians, being not far off.

These

These men, to please Sylla, hired a Cimber to kill him, which the fellow attempting (such is the virtue of Majesty even in a miserable fortune) run out again crying; he could not kill C. Marius. This River was of old called Liris; and towards its influx into the Sea exported into Lakes and Fens, called the Lakes of Minyrmians, from a City of that name adjoining.

It is divided into the Provinces of 1. Terra di Lavoro, 2. Abruzzo, 3. Puglia, or Apulia, 4. Terra de Otranto, 5. Calabria Superior, 6. Calabria Inferior, and 7. the Isles of Naples. Some of which have some smaller Territories adjoining to them, which we shall meet withal as they come in our way.

TERRA di LAVORO is bounded on the North with Abruzzo, from which separated by the Apennine Hills, on the East with the River Silarus, which parteth it from the lower Calabria; on the South with the Tyrrenian or Tuscan Sea, and on the West with Lattium, or Campania di Roma; from which divided by the River Gargilian, called anciently Campania Felix, in regard of the wonderful fertility of it, and that it was the seat or dwelling of the Campani: by some modern Latins called Campania Antiqua, to difference it from Lattium, which they now call Campania di Roma, or Campania Nova. And for the other name of Terra di Lavoro, or Terra Laboratoris, it was given to it, from the continual labour of the Husbandmen in cultivating the ground, and carrying in the fruits thereof: but neither the reason, nor the name so new, as some men suppose. But, I am sure, as old as Pliny, who calleth these parts sometimes by the name of Laboria, sometimes of Campania Laboriosa; and gives this reason of the name, quod ingenium in colendis sit labor, because of the great pains it requires to till it, and the great profit reaped by them who did till and manure it.

The Country is so exceeding fruitful in Wines and Wheat, that by Florus the Historian it is called Cerevis & Bacchi certamen, and deservedly too. For in this noble Region one may fee large and beautiful fields overthatched with rich Vines, thick and delightful Woods, sweet Fountains, and moist whollom Springs of running waters; useful as well for the restoring of man's health as delight and pleasure; and in a word, whatsoever a covetous mind can possibly wish, or a carnal covet.

Towns of note hereabouts in the elder times. The principal whereof, 1. Cajeta, seated on a fair and capacious Bay, from the crookedness whereof it is thought to be called from Kaios, i.e. with reference to the burning of the Fleet of Enes by the Trojan Ladies, for fear of being forced again to go to Sea, where they had been so extremely rolled in their former Voyages. But why that Faë committed on the further coasts of Sicily, should be so solemnly commemorated here on the shores of Italy, I can see no reason: and therefore we may far more probably derive it from Cajeta, the nurse of Enes, in memory of whom being buried here, or herabouts, Enes is affirmed to have built this Town. Of which thus the Poet, Æneid, lib. 7.

Tu quoque littoribus nostris Ercia maris,
Æternam moriens famam, Cajeta, dedisti.

That is to say,

Enes Nurse, Cajeta, by her death,
Did to these shores an endless fame bequeath.

But on what ground soever it first had this name, it is assuredly a place of great strength and consequences, and of so special importance for the Estate of this Kingdom, that (as Cimber hath observed) if King Charles VIII. had but only fortified it and the Castle of Naples; the Realm had never been lost. 2. Naples, the Metropolis of the Kingdom, a beautiful City, containing seven miles in compass, was once called Pantheon, and falling to ruin, was new built, and called Napoliis. Among other things here is an Hospital, the revenues whereof is 100000 Crowns yearly, wherewith, besides other good deeds, they nourish in divers parts of the Kingdom, 2000 poor Infants. In this City, the difciple called Marius Gallicus, or Napoliensis, was first known in Christendoms. This City is seated on the Sea-shore, and fortified with four strong Castles, viz. 1. Cast. Capodua, where the Kings Palace was, 2. Ermo, 3. Cast. del Ovo, or the Castle of the Egg, and 4. Cast. Novo, or the new Castle. But nature hath not done much less to her Fortifications, than the hand of Art, the Town being for the most part environed by Sea, or Mountains not to be ascended without great difficulty and disadvantages. Which Mountains, as they serve on that side as a bank to the City, so do they furnish the Citizens with most generous Wines; and being once ascended yield a gallant prospect both for Sea and Land. A City honoured by the Seat of the Vice-Roy, and the continual resort, if not constant residence of private buildings, to be very graceful, and the publick flatly. And yet it had increased much more in buildings, than it is at present, if the King had not forbidden it by special Edict. And this he did, partly, at the perswasion of his Noblemen, who feared that if such a restraint were not laid upon them, their Vassals would forsake the Country to inhabit here, so to enjoy the privileges and the exemptions of the Regal City: but principally upon jealousie and point of State, the better to prevent all revolts and mutinies, which in most populous Cities are of greatest danger: 3. Cepes, once the head of the Campani, seated in a delicious and luxurious soil, and one of the three Cities which the old Romans judged capable of the Star of the Empire, the other two being Carthage, and Cornith. Being distressed by the Sammites they were fain to cast themselves into the Arms of the Romans, who did not only take them into their protection, but suffered them to live according to their own Laws, as a free Common-wealth; rather like a Confederate than a Subject State. Which freedom they enjoyed, till after the revolt to the Carthaginians; when being reduced to their obedience by force of Arms, they lost all their Liberties, and hardly escaped its fatal and final ruin: drawing the whole Nation of the Campani with divers lesser States, which depended on them, into bondage with its A.V.C. 542. Apulia and Flaccus being Conuls. The pleasures of this place was it which enervated the victorious Army of Annibal, who wintered here after a great defeat given to Terentius Varro at the Battel of Canus, whence came the saying, Capium est Canus Annibalis. 4. Canus, a City once of great power and beauty, till Campania was subdued by the Romans; after which, it decayed in both. Near hereto was the Cave or Grot of one of the Syls, called from hence Canus; and not far off the Lake called Lacus Avernus, the sink whereof is said to have poisoned Birds as they flew over it; supposed by ignorant Antiquity for the entrance of Hell. And finally, from this place it was, that Enes is fabled by the Poets to have gone down to the infernal Ghosts, to talk with his Father. 5. Nola, where Marcus discomfited the Forces of Annibal, and thereby gave the Romans to understand, that he was not invincible. 6. Tuscani, a small Town standing standing on a Creek of the Sea, just opposite to Baie, on the other side of it: from which distant about three miles and a half. Both Towns remarkable for the Bridge built betwixt them by Caligula, composed of sundry Vessels joyned together in such sort, that there was not only fair and large passage over it, but Vidallian houses on both sides of it: Over which Bridge thus made, he marched and remarched in triumphal Robes, as if not only the Earth, but the very Seas were made subject to him. And this he did (as himself afterwards affirmed to some of his friends) to awe the Ocean; and imitate (if not exceed) the like acts of Xerxes and Darius, mentioned in the ancient Writers, as also to terrifie the Britains, and the German Nations, with the report of such a notable exploit; or (as some thought) to fulfill the Prophecy of one Thrasibulus a fortune-teller of those times, who had been often heard to say in the life-time of Tiberius (his next immediate Predecessor) that it was impossible for Caesar to succeed in the Empire, as it was for him to ride on Horseback from Baile to Pactolus. 7. Not far hence, on a Semicircular Bay, stands the City of Baie (whereof Baile before mentioned is a part) so called as they say, from Baio, one of the companions of Ulysses in his Navigations. A City in the flourish of the Roman Empire of five miles in length, and two in breadth; so wonderfully endued by Nature, and adorned by Art, that no place in the world was thought comparable to it.

Few places in the world there are

With pleasant Baie to compare. As it is in Horace.

A City beautified with magnificent Temples, multitude of Baths, or Banias, Imperial Palaces, stately buildings, and the adjoining Mannor-houses of the Principal Romans, whom the pleasures of the place invited thither; and was indeed too great and sensible a monument of the lasciviousness and luxury of that profligate people; of which the Ambubae mentioned in the Satyrists is sufficient proof. Though some fetch the Etymology of the word far enough from Rome, deriving it from Ambubae, a Syrian word signifying a Pipe, from whence the Lutier give this name to their Minstrels now demolished by War, and devoured by Water, that there is nothing of it to be seen but some scattered ruins. 8. Misenum, seated near a great Hill, or Promontory of the same name; at the foot whereof there is a large and capacious Harbour, where Augustus keeping one Navy and another at Ravenna in the upper Sea, awed the whole Roman Empire. But these were places of renown in the former times; all which, excepting Naples, are now only known by what they have been, not by what they are. The Principal Cities at this time, are next to Naples is Sessa, the Strutium or Suffia of the ancients, and now the title of a Dukedom to the house of Cordova in Spain, derived from Consulva the great Captain, of whom more hereafter. 2. Aversa, a Town of great strength and consequence, second to few in all the Kingdom, but forced to yield (though the Earl of Montpenier then Vice-roy of the Realm for Charles VIII. were in person to it); to the good fortune of Consulva, spoken of before: the whole Kingdom following shortly after. 3. Cano, 4. Salvi, 5. Nepesina, and 6. Caserta, with others, to the number of 22, besides 166 Castles or defensible places. Here is also in this Tract the Hill called Callicianus, where Annibal that great Master in the Art of War, fringed that wary Captain Fabius Maximus, by the stratagem of two thousand Oxen, carrying fire in their horns; by which device he freed himself out of those difficult Straights, in which he was at that present. And in this Country there is also the Hill, Pylaeum, that catcheth out flames of fire, the smoke of which titled Pliny Senior, coveting to search the cause of it. The flame hereof brake forth cruelly also during the reign of Titus, calling out not only such fumes of smoke, that the very Sun seemed to be in the Eclipse; but also huge fumes: and of ashes such plenty that Rome, Africa, and Syria, were even covered; and Herculaneum, and Pompeii, two Cities in Italy were overwhelmed with them. There were heard dismal noises all about the Province; and Giants of incredible bigness fell to stalk up and down about the top and edges of the mountain; which extraordinary accident, either was a cause, or preface of the future Pestilence, which raged in Rome and Italy long after.

On the East side of this Campania, and properly (as anciently it was esteemed) a part thereof, lieth that little Territory, which Alfonso King of Naples caused to be called the Principate; bounded upon the East with Calabria inferior, or that part thereof which is called the Basilicata: from which parted by the River Silarus. It extends 33 miles in length, and 10 in breadth: and was of old the Seat of the Poenicima Colony of the Piceni dwelling on the Adriatick Principal places of it, 1. Melfi, by the Italians called Maris, of more note for the Hills adjoining, than any great beauty or antiquity it hath in it self. Those hills now called Monte Maris, but known to the Romans by the name of Monte Maris; of special estimation for the rich Wines called Vina Melfica. 2. Nuceris, nine miles from the Sea, in a very plentiful and delicious soil. 3. Rivoli, a City not long time built, which for the elegance of the buildings hardly yields to Naples. 4. Melfi, or Anagnin Archbishops See, in which it is supposed that the Marines Compsis was first found out. It is situate on the Sea-side, and giveth name to the coast of Anagnis, fenced with Hills or Mountains of 40 feet an height, that to look down into the Valles or the Sea adjoining, makes men sick and giddy. A Town of great note (where there nothing else to commend it to our observation) for the finding out of the Mariner Compsis, (as before is said) devised and contrived here about the year 1300, by one John Flavio, a native or inhabitant of it. 5. Salerno, about a mile from the Sea, the title of the Prince of Salerno, and an University, but chiefly for the study of Physick, the Doctors of which wrote the Book called Schola Salerno, dedicated to a King of England: not to King Henry VIII. as it is conceived, for then the Commentary on it, written by Arnoldus Villanovanus, (who lived about the year 1313) must needs have been before the Text. And therefore I conceive it dedicated, either to King Richard I. or King Edward I. who in their journeys towards the Holy-Land, might bestow a visit on this place, and give some honourary encouragement to the Students of it. Besides these, there are said to be in this small Territory, fifteen other good Towns, and two hundred and thirteen Castles or walled places; but these the principal.

II. North of Campania, lieth the Province now called ABRUZZO, bounded on the East with Ugentia, or Apulia on the West, with Marca Anconitana; on the North, with the Adriatick Sea; and on the South, with the Apennine. It is called, Abruzzum by the Latins, but the reason of the name not agreed upon: divided anciently between the Picenter and the Sannites: the Picenter taking up those parts which lay next the Adriatick; the rest being far the greater part) was possessed by the Sannites. These last (of the others we shall speak elsewhere)

a people which held longer wars with the States of Rome than almost all Italy besides; as keeping them in continual action for the space of seventy years together, besides many after-claps. In which long course of Wars, the Romans were so hardly put to their shifts, that they were four times fain to have recourse to the last refuge; which was the chusing of Diktators; and yet came off so often with success and victory, that it afforded them the honour of thirty triumphs. But these Sannites, as they were a potent, so they were also a compound Nation; consisting of the Ferentini, Caraceni, Teligni, Precatini, Vesfimi, Hirupini, and Sannites properly so called; into which name the rest of the interior Tribes were after swallowed. The chief City of the whole was called Sannium, whence they had their name; which in the conclusion of the War was so defaced by Papirius the Roman Consul, as he called Sannium in ipso Sannio requiritur, that not improperly (saith Florus) a man might ask where Sannium lived, even in the middle of the City. Which happened A. D. C. 481.

The River of Pescara runneth through the midst of it, and divideth it into parts, whereof the one containeth 5 Cities, and 150 Castles, or walled places; the other, 184 Castles, and 4 Cities. The principal Cities of the whole, 1. Arpinum, once the chief Town of the Arpinates, and the Country of M. Tullius Cicero, that famous Orator, now a poor Village called Arpino. 2. Beneventum, heretofore called Maleventum, as we find in Pliny, because the Winds hereabouts are so fierce and violent, that men could not sit upon their Horses; but had at last that name of Beneventum, from the pleasant Plains and spacious Valleys, which lie round about it; in like manner as the Country of the old Abroges, exchanged the name of Malvo into that of Salvo. It was one of the four Dukedoms which the Lombards erected, when they first came into Italy, for the better assuring of their Conquest; and was given to the Church of Rome by the Emperor Henry IV. in exchange of a certain Tribute remitted by Pope Leo IX. to the Church of Bamberg, where the said Emperor was born, and is still under the command of the Popes of Rome. 3. Avella built by the Emperor Frederick the Second, King of Naples, to assure the Realm upon that Quarter. 4. Lanciano, four miles from the Adriatick, a Town of great Trade and much resorted to by Merchants at her Annual Marts. 5. Ortona, the Port-town unto Lanciano. 6. Teramo, or Teran, (Polomy called it Inter-am) anciently the Metropolis of the Precatini. 7. Citta di Chieti, situate on a Hill some seven miles from the Sea, heretofore known by the name of Theate. 8. Aquino, the Birth-place of Thomas Aquinas, the great Schoolman, who first brought the scattered limbs of Popery into a body. Here stood also, 9. The old Town Consuntium, the chief City of the Peligni, made good a while by Domitius Enobarbus against Julius Caesar, in his first following after Pompey, then retired from Rome. And seven miles hence, 10. Sulmo, honoured with the birth of Ovid, that renowned Poet, as himself testifieth.

Sulmo mihi patria est, gelidis uberrimis undis, Millia quinque distat ab Urbe decem.

Full of cool streams Sulmo, my native Land,
From the great City ninety miles doth stand.

There belongeth also to Abruzzo the Country of Morisi, in which are 104 walled places or Castles, and four considerable Towns the principal of which is Bovianum, or Bosano, now a Bishops See, in former times a Colony of the Romans, by Pliny called Bovianum Undecimanorum to difference it from another in this Tract, of the same name, which he calls Bovianum vetus. 2. Lupatella, of which little memorable. In this Country also (I mean that which when the Sannites called Fuere Candine, in which the Sannites and their Confederates had so inclosed the Romans, that there was no possibility to escape, they sent to Horatius, a man for his Age much honoured, and for his Wisdom much followed by them, to know what they should do with the captive Enemies. Word was returned, that they should send them home safe, and without dishonour. Thinking the old man had not been well informed of the state of the business, they sent him again, and he advised, that they should put them all to the sword. These contrary answers made them judge amiss of the old mans brain; and therefore following their own fancies, they spoiled the Romans, and dishonoured them, and despoiled them, and so sent them home. Which when Horatius came to know, he much lamented the imprudence of so rash an action, but much more the destruction of his Country, as a consequence of it. Telling them, after their return, that had they given the Romans a safe and honourable deliverance from the present danger, they had made them their friends for many Ages; or had they put them to the sword for many of their Soldiers and chief Commanders, they had disabled them for long time from pursuing the War: The middle course which they had taken, would be their undoing; and so accordingly it proved. For the Romans not being made their friends by so odious a benefit, but hatching revenge for the disgrace, soon renewed the War; and under the conduct of Papirius subdued the Country, and handled the poor conquered people with the like despoilment. An excellent precedent unto Princes and those in power, how to proceed towards men of Quality and Rank, when they have them under, which must be, either not to strike at all, or to strike home, and to the purpose. Nic. Machiavelli, in his Florantine History taxeth Rinaldo of Albrici for committing a great Salestia in point of State, in that having Cosmo de Medici, and desiring to remove him from his publick managery of affairs, he thought it was sufficient to procure his banishment: which Cosmo, afterwards returning, paid in better coin. When upon he increth this notable Apophism, that, Great persons must not at all be touched, or if they be, must be made pure from taking Revenge. Yet do I not interdict a Prince, or any Supreme Governour, the use of Mercy. I know it is the richest Jewel which adorns the Crown. Nor dare I take upon me to direct the use of that excellent virtue. Only I shall observe what usage hath been commonly afforded towards such persons for their Delinquencies; whose liberty or life may create danger to the publick. The first is present Execution; for Mortui non mordent, as the saying is: a course more to be allowed of where it cannot, than commended where it may be spared. The second is either delicate imprisonment under trusty Guards, or else commitment to the house and custody of some trusty Statesman: in which great caution also is to be observed. For, besides that nothing is more ordinary than the escape of great Prisoners, either by corrupting or deceiving their keepers; We find in our Histories, how D. Martin, Bishop of Ugentia, being committed to the custody of the Duke of Backingham by King Richard III. not only procured his own liberty, but brought about that Duke to the contrary faction. The last, which is in all times the gentlest, and in some cases the safest, is not only an absolute pardon of life, and a grant of liberty; but an declaring of the party delinquent, by giving him some place of honour, or committing unto his fidelity some

Office of trust, it being the nature of most men, that where they are not trusted, they are never true; and that as long as they lie under suspicion and jealousy, they will be apt to entertain some thoughts of their lost condition. And of this kind of dealing with a person Dionysius we have a pregnant instance in the Emperor Julian, who not only pardoned Marius Celsus, one of Galba's Faction, and a chief one too, but put him in place next to him, and made him one of his principal Leaders, in the following War against Vitellius. His reason was Nobilis natus reconciliationis adhiberet, lest lying aloof as a pardoned Enemy, he might conceive the breach were but bad made up. And on the other side, Marius Celsus proved so sensible of the obligation, that he continued faithful to him to the very last; and lost his life in the pursuance of his quarrel: shewing thereby, that persons of a generous and noble disposition, are more obliged by favours, than restrained by terror. But it is now time I should free my self of these Furca Caudine and sport my self a while in the Plains of Apulia.

But I must note, before I take my leave herof, that these two Provinces of Campania and Abbruzzo, make up the greatest, richest, and best peopled part of the Realm of Naples. And therefore when the Kingdom was divided between the French and the Spaniards, it was allotted to the French, as having the priority, both of claim and power. The Provinces remaining, although more in number, yet are not comparable to those two for wealth and greatness, and were assigned over to the Spaniards, as lying most conveniently for the Realm of Sicily.

III. PUGLIA is bounded on the West, with Abbruzzo; on the East, with Terra di Otranto; on the North, with the Adriatick Sea; on the South, with Calabria. It contains the whole Country called of old Apulia; from whence the Puglia of the Italians and the Pouille of the French are to be derived.

The whole Country containeth in it besides Villages and Towns unfortified, 126 Castles and walled places, with 13 Cities of good note. The most considerable of which we shall meet withal in our Chorography of the several parts, divided anciently by Ptolemy, and since him, by Leander, into Apulia Dannia, and Apulia Poenicia: the former subdivided into the Capitanate, and Pouille the Plains; the later into Bari, and the Land of Otranto. For that the Land of Otranto, (though now a Province of it self) did sometimes pass in the account of Apulia; seems to me most probable, in that all the East parts of this Kingdom were held by the Constantinopolitan Emperours (after the coming in of the Lombards) by no other names than those of Apulia and Calabria: and by no other names than those were assigned over unto Otho II. of Germany, on his marriage with Irphonia, Nece to one of those Emperours. And I conceive that it was then laid unto Apulia, rather than to Calabria, first, in regard that the old Inhabitants were the same in both; the Lapyge, Meſapians, and Salentini, possessing promiscuously all this Tract from mount Garganus in Dannia, to the Promontory called Lapygium in the most Eastern Angle of the Land of Otranto. And secondly, in regard that the people of both have a dicitale peculiar only to themselves, occasioned by the biting of a little Serpent, called a Tarentula, not curable but by Mistlec only. This said, we will proceed in our Survey of the parts. And first,

APULIA DAUNIA, is that part herof which lieth next to Abbruzzo, in which parted by the River Phierus (now called Fortore) and to extending Eastwards to the River Aufidus (Lefonto the Italians call it) where it meets with Poenicia. The reason of the name is not yet agreed on. But I find no more probable conjecture of it, than that it should be called thus of Dannus, the Son of Danac by Piliunus, once the King of this Country; it being reported in the Legends of those elder times, that Dannus being delivered of Perſeus whom he had by Jupiter, was by her Father the King Acifius, exposed to the mercy of the Seas; by which he was waisted with her young son to the Coasts of this Province, here taken up by a poor Fisher, and by him carried to the Court, where the King became enamoured on her, that he took her to Wife, and by her was Father to this Dannus. But Dannus had not long enjoyed it, on the death of his Father, when either by force or compulsion, he was fain to leave it to Diomedes King of Ætolia: who at the end of the Trojan War, wherein he was principal Actor, hearing of the libidinous couſes of his Wife Ægiale, abhorred the thought of living with her; and so came with his people to this Country; where he first his dwelling, and built the City of Argyrippa, whereof more anon. But as for Dannus, though he was not able to keep the possession of this Country, yet he bequeathed his name unto it; and afterwards withdrawing into Latium with such of his subjects as were willing to follow his Adventures, he became there the chief head of the Rutuli, and built among them the Town of Ardea, his chief seat at the coming of Æneas into Italy; betwixt whom and Turnus the son of this Dannus, grew that deadly feud, so celebrated in the Works of Virgil.

In this part herof is the Lake of Lefina, so called from a City of that name adjoining to it, made of the waters of Phierus and some other Rivers, which there lose themselves; in compass forty miles, and well stored with Fish: the Eels herof the largest that have been seen. Another Lake called Arduarius, more memorable, though not so great, it being laid herof by Pliny, that the waters of it are neither diminished by draining, nor increased by Land-floods. Here is also the Mount Garganus, known by that name in Virgil, but now called S. Angelo, high, steep, and full of cragged Rocks: twenty miles in compass, but that extent diversified into Hills and most pleasant Valleys, well wooded, and well stored with waters: here being one Lake (besides many others) called Lacus Veneris, said to be thirty miles in circuit. A place defendible by nature, and so strong by art, that it is commonly the last piece in the Realm of Naples, which is given up to the Invader: as appears plainly by the keeping of it by the Greeks and Sarazens for many years, after the Normans had possessed themselves of the rest of the Kingdom.

The whole divided by Alphonſus in his new modelling of this Kingdom) into two parts, the greatest and most flourishing called Pouille the Plains, from the condition of the soil which plain and level, not so much welled with Hills as the rest of Apulia: for which cause called Puglia Piana by the modern Italians. Intersected betwixt which and Abbruzzo, lieth a small Territory, by the said King Alphonſus called the CAPITANATE, detritate both of Woods and Rivers, and consequently not so populous as the rest of this Province: well furnished notwithstanding with all sorts of Grain, and stored with large and spacious Pastures, which breed fish infinite herds of Cattel, that the Tribute there arising was valued at 80000 Crowns per an. in the time of Giulio Cesare, and by him reckoned one of the best Revenues of the Realm of Naples. Of which tribute when the French could receive no part, by reason that on the division which they made with Ferdinand the Catholic (spoken of before) this Territory as a part of Apulia, did belong to the the Spaniards, they brake out into open War, pretending that the Country appertained to them, (as indeed it lay very near their part) and thereby gave a just occasion to the Spaniards, a more diligent nation, and more intent upon their work, to worm them by degrees out of all the Kingdom.

Chief places of the whole Dannia, 1. Laveria, the Necropolis of Ptolemy, and the Radra of Strabon; as rich as it is ancient, and honoured with an Episcopal See. 2. Ascoli, of old called Asculum, and sometimes Asculum Satrianum, to difference it from another of that name in Antoniana; the title and honour of a Duke, 3. Trisica, Dukes title also, built by the Eastern Emperours in a place of strength and great advantage to restrain the insolencies of the Sarazens, then infesting this Country. These three in that part of it which is called the Capitanate. Then in the other part called Pouille the Plains. 4. Sipontum, once a Roman Colony and an Archbishop See, which honour it enjoyed till destroyed by the Sarazens. 5. Mansfredonia, founded near the place of the former, by Mansfred the Baffard, King of Naples, the better to assure these parts of his Kingdom. A stately and magnificent City the Seat of the Archbishop of Sipontum; beautified with a capacious Harbour for receipt of Ships, and an impregnable Castle for defence thereof. 6. Salpe of great antiquity, but not else defensible. 7. Severina of a newer date, but more rich and populous. 8. As ancient and as famous as the best amongst them the poor Village of Cannae, situate near the mouth or influx of the River Aufidus; ignobilis Apulie vici, as it is in Pliny, but such as afterwards grew more notable for the great defeat which Annibal there gave to Paulus Emilius and Terrontius Varro the Roman Consuls, of whose Army he slew 42700 on the very place. Which victory had he husbanded as he might have done, he had utterly subverted the State of Rome: so that it was most tartly (as most truly) said by Malerb General of his Horse, Vincere ſu Anni-bal, videri uis uſuſi; that he knew better how to get, then to use his victory. 9. But of most note in this part of Apulia was the Town Argyrippa or Argyrippa as some call it, founded by Diomedes in the skirts of Mount S. Angelo towards the Sea, and in that part of this Country, which then (or afterwards) was held by the Lapyges, of which thus Virgil in the 11 of the Æneid.

Vidit Gargani cœnabit Lapygis arvis*

And being Victor he a City builds Near Garganus in the Lapygian fields,
And called it Argyrippa by the name
Of some known place it's Land from which he came.

By which we also may conclude that it took this name with reference to some Town of Ætolia, which was the native Country of Diomedes. For although I know that many of the ancient Writers suppose it to have been first called Argos Hippium, with relation to a famous City of that name in Peloponessus; and after by contradiction or corruption to be named Argyrippa; yet those words of Patria de nomine Genis, do persuade me otherwise; Diomedes having nothing to do in the Country of Argolis, where that City stood; nor in the whole Demi-Island of Peloponessus, whereof Argolis was a part or Province. It was called also Diomedis, and urbis Diomedis, because of this foundation, and his Royal Seat, after his fixing in his Country; but at the last it came to be called Argy, and by that name was known in the time of the Roman greatness; Now no where to be found but in the ruins of the place, and the Records of Antiquity, unless it be in a poor Village called Sarpy where Niger findeth it.

APULIA FEUCETIA, extendeth from the Banks of the River Aufidus on the West, to the land of Otranto on the East. So called as some conceive from Peuceutis; the Brother of Oenone; which may be probable enough, this being the first Country at which Oenone touched, when he came into Italy with his people. Bocharius a great Enemy of all Traditions, will have it called Peuceutia, αὐτὴ ἡ πευκευτία, for that great quantity of Pitch which these Countries yield, as the word itself signifieth in the Greek. But whatsoever was the reason of this ancient name, of the present is well known and agreed upon from Bari the chief City herof, being now called Bari.

Places of most importance in it: 1. Bari, seated near the Sea, but without a Haven, yet feared in a rich a soil, and so well inhabited, that it is a fair and wealthy City, and the chief of this part of Apulia, taking name from hence. 2. Barietto, by the modern Latins still called Bareulum, situate in or near the place of the old Causium, an Haven Town, and of so great importance, reckoned for one of the four strong holds of Italy, in the middle Ages; the other three being Crema in Lombardie, Prato in Tuscani, and Fabriano now called Fabiano in Antoniana. 3. Monopolis, a Port town also not very large, but of a near elegant building; new built, and the title of a Marquis. 4. Tranen, an ancient City, and an Archbishops See, but at this time better built then peopled by reason of some defects in the Harbour upon which it standeth. These three last together with Mansfredonia in the other Apulia, pawned by the Kings of Naples (when first invaded by the French) to the State of Venice; but recovered from them not long after by Ferdinand the Catholic, when possessed of the Kingdom. 5. Bisone, an Archbishop See also, one of which was a notable fiddler in the Council of Trent. 6. Polignano, on a rocky hill, the Honourary title of a Marquis, and a See Episcopal. 7. Mottine, which gives title to a Prince, but not else considerable. 8. Vigilia, now called Bisigla a Bishops See, situate near the Adriatick amongst craggy Rocks. 9. Venosa, a strong piece and of great importance; one of the last Towns which held good for the French, in the recovery of this Kingdom from Charles VIII. The Venustum of the ancient Romans, and the Birth-place of Horace, hence called Venusium. Nothing considerable of these people in point of story, but that confederating with Tarentum against the Romans, as the Calabrians, Bruttii, and Lucani did; they were all forced to submit to the power of Rome at the end of the Wars A. U. C. 481. Papyrius Censor and Sp. Carvilius being the second time Consuls.

IV. TERRA di OTRANTO, as it is now called, was once the Eastern part of Apulia Dannia. unto which it joyneth, from which parted only by a line drawn from Brundisium to Tarentum, of which more anon. Thus called from Otranto the chief Town herof, the seat and habitation in the elder times of the Salentini, the Lapyges, and the Meſapians, and is accordingly intitled in ancient Authors by the several names of Lapygia, Meſapia, and Salentina. They were the last people of Italy which held out against Rome, and sunk immediately after the Tarentini, upon whose Fate they did depend. A. U. C. 487. Junius Pera and Fabius Pictor, the two Consuls then, triumphing for it. Of these three Nations the Lapyges were of greatest fame or of greatest infamy. Creteus originally sent in quest of Glauce the Son of Minos, whom when they could not find, and durst not return without him, they fixed here their dwelling; Lapyx the Son of Debalus, being their Captain and conductor; and from him denominated.

Growing into estate and power, they became not only so luxurious in their course of life, and effeminate in their dress and habit, that they were a scorn and scandal to the neighbour Nations; but so regardless of their gods, that in the end they threw down all their Images, and destroyed their Temples: punished at last for these high insolencies by balls of fire falling on them from the heavens, with which the whole flock of them were almost extirpated. The Promontory called Lapyx, being the extreme point of this Country towards Greece, now better known by the name of the Cape of St. Mary, did take name from this people; and from thence the North-west wind (or the West-north-west) which the Latines generally call Caurus, frequently blowing from this coast, had the name of Lapyx, occurring by that name in the 8. of Æneid; and in Horse, Carm. l. i. Ode. 4.

But to proceed: this Country is invironed on all parts, with the Adriatick and Ionian Seas, having where it joineth to Apulia by an Isthmus of about 30 miles in breadth; reaching from Brundisium in the Adriatick or upper Sea, to Tarentum on the Gulf or Bay thence named in the Ionian Sea. And is from land to land, as you go by water, about 200 miles in compass. The foil hereof is very fruitful if well manured, abounding in Corn, Oyl, Melons, Citrons, Saffron, and other commodities of good price for which they never want the company of the Merchants of Genoa. They are many times much endangered by Grafshoppers, which commonly devour all whereforever they come, and would in one night consume whole fields of standing corn, if divine Providence by sending the birds called Gallus amongst them, did not provide a remedy for so great a mischief. The greatest defect hereof is the want of waters, and therefore probably enough may be the Sitiosus Apulia; spoken of by Horace; which notwithstanding, they have very rich pastures. The people are conceived to be the simplest or most void of craft, of any in Italy; perhaps because they have so little commerce with their own Countrymen, and so much with strangers.

The chief Towns are, 1. Lece, Altinum in Latine, a rich Town well built, and very well peopled, 2. Castro, a Sea Town, but not well fenced by Art or Nature, which hath made it very often a prey to the Turks. 3. Gallipoli, a Town built on so craggy a Rock, that it is conceived to be unconquerable. 4. Brundisium, the head Town of the Salentinii, once glory in the most capacious Haven of all the world; from whence there was continual passage into Dalmatia, Epirus, Macedon, and the rest of Greece. Here was it that Pompey took Ship to fly from Cæsar, and Cæsar took Shippling also to pursue after him: when to encourage the Pilot who was afraid of the storm, he cried out, Cæsarum vultis & Fortunaem cedere. It was first built by the Ætoliæ, under the conduct of one Dionæctor, and called Antiochia, which in the Mæssian Tongue, signifieth the horn or head of a Stag, which it much resembleth: from whence the Latines give it the name of Brundisium. At this day it is but a mean Town, the Haven of it being so shoaked, that a Gally can very hardly enter. 5. Hydruntum, a very ancient Town, yet still reasonably well peopled, having a strong Castle upon a Rock for its defence, and a capacious Port for Traffick; the principal at the present of all the Province, which is therefore called Terra Hydruntina, by our modern Latins. It is now called Otranto, and is a place of great importance, that the taking of it by Mahomet the Great, Anno 1481. put all Italy into such a fear, that Rome was quite abandoned. Not well inhabited again, till the expulsion of the Turks in the year next following.

Pals we on next to the two Calabrinæ, so called from the Calabri an ancient people of this Tra9, inhabiting that Part hereof which formerly had been called Magna Græcia, now Calabria superior, with a part of the Country of the Salentinii, lying on the Northern side of the Gulf of Tarentum, now called by the name of Otranto. But the Greek Emperors being possessed of these parts of Italy, when the more Western parts thereof were under the Goths and Lombards, extended the name of Calabria as far as to the Strait of Messina, taking the Country of the Bruttii, now Calabria inferior, into the account; and making but two Provinces of their whole Estate which was left in this Continent by the names of Apulia and Calabria: of which, Apulia contained all the Country on the coast of the Adriatick, from Arusso to the extreme point or Promontory in the land of Otranto, called antiently Lapygium, now the cape of St. Mary; Calabria, all the rest of these parts of Italy, which lie between the Tyrrhen or Tyrrhenian Sea, and the Bay of Tarentum. So that the ancient Calabria, was but part of this; and of that Ennius the old Poet was a Native, as is affirmed by Ovid in his 3. de Arte.

Ennius emensit Calabris in montibus hortos.

Old Ennius his Garden tills
Among the steep Calabrian Hills.

Now called the Basilicæ, and reckoned as a member of the lower Calabria.

But leaving these matters of remote Antiquity, let us behold the Country as it standeth at the present; divided of late times into Inferior and Superior, in which distinct capacities we shall look upon it. Premising only by the way, that this Country is the title of the eldest Son of the Kings of Naples; who were from hence called the Dukes of Calabria; and that, before it was subjected to these Kings, it had a King of its own; Holyfermes, whose daughter Flora was married unto Godfrey of Bouillon, being King hereof, An. 1098.

V. CALABRIA SUPERIOR, so called formerly Magna Græcia, from many great and famous Cities founded there by the Greeks, hath on the East the Adriatick or Ionian Sea; on the West Lucania, from which it is divided by the Apennine, and the River Crathis; on the North, Sinus Tarentinus, or the Gulf of Tarentum; and on the South and South-East, Calabria inferior, and Golfo di Squillacy, of old called Sinus Salentinus. The principal Cities at this time are, 1. Belvedere, eight miles from the Sea, where once stood Paestum. 2. Brigugian, the title of a Prince, fortified with a very strong Castle and endowed with the best Revenues of any principality or other Noble-man of Title in all the Kingdom. 3. Maceræ, an Archbishops See, a rich Town, and well peopled. 4. Rofanum, three miles from the Sea, a well fortified City, and situate in a very fruitful and pleasant Soil. 5. Alavilla, which gives title also to a Prince. 6. Terra Nova, given with the title of Duke to Gonsalvo Fernandez de Cordova, commonly called the great Captain, as a reward of his signal service in the conquest of the Realm of Naples; and still enjoyed (together with the title of Duke of Sessa) by the house of Cordova.

As for the chief Cities of the Greeks in the former times, they were Locris founded by the Locrians, a people of Achaia. Here lived the Law-maker Saleucus, who ordering Adultery to be punished with the loss of both eyes, was compelled to execute the Law on his own Son, as the chief offender. Therefore to shew the love of a Father, and the severity of a Judge, he put out one of his Sons eyes, and

and one of his own. He also provided in his Laws that no Woman should be attended in the street with more than one Maid, but when she was drunk; that she should not go abroad at night, but when she went to play the Harlot; that she should not wear Gold or Embroidered Apparel, but when she meant to set her self open sale; and that men should not wear Rings and Tiffes; but when they went about the prostituting of some Woman; and many others of this mould. By means whereof both men and women were restrained from all extraordinary Traits of Attendants, and excess of Apparel; the common consequents of a long and prosperous tranquillity. It was also famous in old times for the victory which Ennomus and excellent Musician obtained against Aristonum of Rhegium, another of the same profession. For though Aristonum had made his prayers to Apollis the God of Musick for his good success; yet Ennomus plainly told him, that Nature was against them in this contention, which had made all the Grafshoppers mute on that side the water. And so accordingly it happened. For when the day appointed came, Ennomus had the ill part to break one of his Harps strings, even in the middle of his Musick; when presently a Grafshopper leaped upon his Harp, and supplied most melodiously the place of the broken string, and by that means obtained the victory to Ennomus. An accident not unworthy of the Muse of Strada, in his personation of the Poet Claudian. And though I bid not any man to believe this Tale (though of Strada's telling,) yet there are very good Authors for this much thereof, that on the one side of the River Alax, which parteth Locris from Rhegium, the Grafshoppers do merrily sing; but on the other side, which is that towards Rhegium, they are always silent. 2. Tarentum, a Town of no less note, situate on the Bay called Sinus Tarentinus; first built by the Spartans; the people whereof having a great command on the Country adjoining, were one of the last Italian Nations taken in by the Romans. Namque populi Tarentinos auderet: For who durst first when once the Tarentines were vanquished? faith the Historian. For in the ruin of this Estate, the Apulians, Lucani, Bruttii, and the neighbouring Calabrinæ being all confederate together in defence thereof, were brought under the command and power of Rome, A.D. 578. all which (from the beginning of the Tarentine War some nine years before) were either a free people, or in a kind of subjection to this mighty City; but never felt the force of the Roman puissance. So that the War began but A.D. 472. and ended in the total subjection of these several Nations; An. 482. Papyr, Curior, and Sp. Carvilius being then the second time Consuls, as before was said. In the defence of this people did Pyrrhus War against the Romans; the hope of getting this place for Antibal, was the lost of Capua; finally here lived Arctas, so famous for his flying Dove. 3. Crotone, the Inhabitants whereof were once so active, that at one Olympick meeting the Villars were all of this one Town. Their glory much decayed in a Battle against the Locrians, in which one hundred and twenty thousand of them and their Confederates were vanquished by fifteen thousand of the enemy. 4. Amylea, a Town inhabited formerly by Pythagoras, who having been often terrified with a false report of the approach of their Enemies, published a Law prohibiting all such reports. By which means, their Enemies coming unawares possessed themselves of it. Hence grew the Proverb Amylea silentium perdidit; and hence that notable saying of Lucilius, who being commanded to be silent, returned this answer, Mibi necesse est loqui, sic enim Amylea silentio perisse: 5. Sybaris, a City built by the Greeks after the destruction of Troy; the people whereof were Lords of 25 good Towns, and could Arm 30000 men. A people so effeminate, that they permitted Ulysses nor Brazier, no not so much as a Cock to live amongst them, because they would not have their fleeces disturbed; but the Fiddlers and Musicians were in high request, which advantage the Crotonian taking, (with whom then in hostility) they entered the Town in the habit of Musicians, and so mattered it. Before which accident there had been a Prophecie, that the Town should never be taken, till men were more esteemed than the Gods themselves. It happened that a slave being grievously beaten by his Master, and obtaining no pardon for the Gods sake, upon whom he called, fled to the monument of some of his Masters Ancestors, and was pardoned of him; which coming to the ears of Amysir the Philosopher, he forsook the Town, moan holding him mad in a time of no danger to leave so dedicate a feat; whence came the Proverb, Amysir infansit, applied to such as under the pretence of madnes or folly do provide for their safety.

VI. CALABRIA INFERIOR is bounded on the North with Calabria superior, from which parted by the River Crathis, and a branch of the Apennine on the South with the Tyrrhenian Sea, and the Strait of Messina; on the West with that part of Campania which is called the Principate; and on the East with a part of the Adriatick or Ionian Sea. It was anciently the habitation of the Bruttii, whom the Greek Writers generally call Bruttii and their Country Bruttania upon which ground, some of our modern Critics (envying so great an honour to the Isle of Great Britain) have transferred to this Province the birth of Constantine, the first Christian Emperor. The Bruttii being first conquered by the Romans, with the rest of Italy, after the defeat of Canne, took part with Carthage, and was for a long time the retreat of Antibal, whom the Romans had shut up in this corner. A Country not much short in fruitfulness of the rest of the Kingdom; and having the advantage of so much Sea, is the better fitted for Traffick. At one extremity hereof, is the Promontory called by Platony, Lexico-Petra, now Labo di Spartimento; all along which, especially in the month of May, are taken great store of Tuna (a Fish which much resembleth mans flesh) which being barrell'd up are sold to Mariners. Here are two Rivers also of a very strange nature; of which the one called Crathis, makes a mans hair yellow, and dieth Silk white; the other named Buftenus, causeth both hair and Silk to be black and fwarthy.

The Principle Cities of it are, 1. Consentia, an ancient Town, comprehending seven little Hills, and a Castle on the top of one of them, which commandeth both the Town and Country adjoining. It is built betwixt the head two Rivers, and is still reasonable rich, though not so wealthy now as in former times; 2. Rhegium, or Rhezo, on the Sea-shore, opposite to Messina in the Isle of Sicily, which is supposed to have broken off from the rest of Italy, and that this Town had the name of Rhegium from the Greek word ρῆγος, which signifieth to break off, or to tear asunder. A Town in former times very well traded, but left desolate in a manner since the year 1594. when it was fired by the Turks. 3. Castellum-Lare, seated upon the top of a very high Mountain, 4. Idomonte, and 5. Altamura, two very fair Towns, whose names sufficiently express their pleasant and lofty situations. 6. St. Euphemia, from whence the Bay which anciently was called Sinus Lamestinus, or Lamestinus, is now called Golfo de St. Euphemia. 7. Nicastro, three miles from the Sea, the same with Newcastle in Engliff.

The Hungarian Line.

- 1371 13. Charles III. Son to Lewis, and Nephew of Prince John of Durazzo before mentioned, by the power of Lewis, King of Hungary, and the favour of Pope Urban V. was made King of Naples. He overthrew and killed in Battle Duke Lewis of Anjou, his Competitor, and after the death of King Lewis of Hungary, succeeded in that Kingdom also; but long he had not reigned therein, when poisoned (as it was supposed) by the old Queen Mother, to advance her Daughter to that Throne. 15.
- 1386 14. Ladislaus, Son of Charles III. having a quarrel with the Pope, made a voyage Royal unto Rome, where he forced his entry and was there triumphantly received: on which displeasure the Pope called in Lewis II. Duke of Anjou, who gave Ladislaus a great overthrow. Incomfuch, as Ladislaus used to say, that if Lewis had followed his Victory the first day, he had been master of his Kingdom and Person too; if the second, of his Kingdom; but not of his Person: but not putting it till the third day, he failed of both. So in the end he was compelled to flee to Rome, and give over the enterprise. 29.
- 1415 15. Joane II. Sister of Ladislaus, of as much levity, but not altogether of so ill a fame as the former Joane: observing the unprosperous success of the House of Anjou the adopted for her Heir, Alphonso V. of Aragon; who had some claim unto the Kingdom as the direct Heir of Pedro, or Peter III. and Constance the Daughter of King Manfred, spoken of before. But finding him to stand too much on his own right, and to be too forwards in taking a possession of it, before her death: she revoked that Adoption, and made a new grant of that Estate to Lewis IV. Duke of Anjou, and after his decease to his brother Rene, or Renatus: both vanquished by the Aragonians.

The Aragonian Line.

- 1434 16. Alfonso King of Aragon, partly by Conquest, and partly by Adoption, having got the Kingdom, left it well settled unto Ferdinand, his natural Son. 24.
- 1458 17. Ferdinand, the base Son of Alfonso (the lawful Sons inheriting the Realm of Aragon, Sicily, &c.) succeeded in the Realm of Naples. 36.
- 1494 18. Alfonso II. Son of Ferdinand, in whose time the French began to aim at the Realm of Naples. This King and his two Predecessors were of the Order of the Garter.
- 1494 19. Ferdinand II. Son of Alfonso II. outed of his Estate and Kingdom by Charles VIII. Son of King Lewis XI. of France, whom Rene the last Duke of Anjou had made the sole Heir of all his Titles and Possessions. And though Charles upon his Conquest was solemnly Crowned, yet pushing back his affairs into France before he had settled his affairs in this Kingdom, and having much discontent ted the chief men of the Anjouin Faction; he lost it suddenly to the same Ferdinand from whom he had so suddenly won it.

- 1497 20. Frederick II. Brother of Alfonso II. and Uncle of this last Ferdinand, succeeded him in Estate; and was the sixth King that had reigned in Naples within the compass of three years: that is to say, Ferdinand I. Alfonso II. Ferdinand II. Charles of France, the second Ferdinand again, and then this Frederick. Finding himself betrayed by the Spaniards, he submitted himself to Lewis XII. King of France, and yielded up his Kingdom to him. And indeed what else could that poor Prince do, when he saw his own bloud, and such as had taken his Realm into their protection, conspiring against him?

For when Charles made his passage towards Naples, Ferdinand the Catholic, sent Gonsalvo, (who was afterward for his valour furnished the Great Captain) with some Forces to resist the French Invaders. But when the French were expelled, Gonsalvo would not leave the Country, because his Master had not as yet sent for him. In the mean time it was agreed between Lewis of France, and this Ferdinand, that they should jointly let upon the Kingdom of Naples: That having won it, the French should possess Abruzzo, and Lavoro; the Spaniards, Puglia, and both Calabrias: That the first should be entitled King of Naples; the other, Duke of Apuia. This Confederacy was kept secret till the French Forces were come to Rome; and Gonsalvo possessed (under pretence of defending it) of all Calabria. So that it was no marvel that they made themselves Masters of the Country. An action in which the French dealt very unadvisedly, in bringing into Italy where he was before the sole Moderator, another King as great as himself; to whom as to his Rival, his Enemies might have recourse on all occasions; and the Spaniard as unaturally, in betraying for the moiety of a Kingdom, a Prince of his own blood, under pretence and promise of favours: But the two Kings did not continue long in good terms of Partnership. For the Spaniards being more intent upon their advantages, soon picked a quarrel with the French, with in two or three years drove them out of all, and to this day keep it; though both this Lewis, and his Successors Francis I. and Henry II. have divers times, and with great effusion of blood, attempted the recovery of it.

The Kingdom of SICILIA.

BEFORE we can come into the Isle of Sicily, we must first cross that branch of the MEDITERRANEAN Sea, which is called the Faro, or Strait of Messina; where the passage is so strait and narrow, that it exceedeth not in breadth a mile and a half. In other parts, as the Sea grows wider, it is distant from the main land of Italy near 300 miles; that is to say, from the Town of Drepanum in Sicily to the City of Naples. As for the Mediterranean Sea, it is so called because it interlaceth the middle of the earth; extending from the Straights of Gibraltar on the West, to the Coast of Palestine on the East; and so dividing Africa both from Europe and Asia minor. In the Scriptures, Iosh. v. 4. it is called by the name of Mare magnum, or the great Sea: great in comparison of the dead Sea, and the Sea of Galilee, lying on the other side of the land of Palestine; but small enough if compared to the Ocean, with which in probability the Writer of that Book might have no acquaintance. Besides which general name of the Mediterranean, it hath also many particular names, as the Adriatick, Aegean, Ionian, and Carpathian Sea, where it bordereth upon Greece, and Anatolia; Mare Libyæum, where it runneth by the shores of Africa; with reference to Italy called in some parts Mare Tyrrænum, in others Mare Liguricum; in some parts Mare Siculanum, and in others Mare Sardinum, &c. And as the Camelion is said to apply it self to the colour of the nearest adjacent body: so this Sea taketh its particular denominations from the nearest shores. These Seas are also called by some modern Writers, in imitation of the French, by the name of the Levant, or the Seas of the Levant; because in respect of France, Spain, Britain, Germany, &c. they lie towards the East; the word Levant signifying in the French, a rising up, and more especially the Sun-rising. The principal Island of this Sea which relate to Italy (for of others we shall speak in their proper places) are those of Sicily, Sardinia, Corfica and some Isles adjoining unto these.

SICILY, environed round with the lower or Tyrrænian Sea, contains seven hundred miles in compass; and is supposed to have been joined to Italy in former times, being then a Peninsula, or Demi-Island, such as Palæoponessus; and joined to the Continent by as narrow an Isthmus. The reason of that name we shall see anon.

The Separating of it from the main Land of Italy, is by the Poets ascribed to Nepheus, who with his three forked Mace, or Trident, broke it off from the land, in favour of Jæsus the son of Æolus; that so he might inhabit there with the greater safety, being environed round with waters. Which though it be a Fable or Poetical fiction, yet with some help from the Mythologists, may be made a story. For if by Æolus and Nepheus, we understand the Winds and Seas, it intimates that it was divided from the rest of Italy, either by the fury of the Waves, or by the violence of some Earthquakes, to which this Island is still subject, which might in time consume and wear away the Earth. Nor wants there very good reason for this supposition; as, 1. The narrowness of the Strait, exceeding not a mile and a half; inasmuch as at the taking of Messina by the Carthaginians many of the people saved themselves by swimming over this Strait, into the opposite parts of Italy. 2. The shallowness of it, being found upon a diligent sounding, not to be above eight fathom deep. Then 'tis observed, that the land on both sides is very brittle, full of Caves and chinks made in it by the working of the Sea, on this separation; and that on the Italian coast where the Strait is narrowest, there stands a City of old called Rhegium, which signifieth a breach or cutting off, from the Greek word Ρρηγναι, which signifies to break off, or violently to pull asunder; and is supposed to be so called upon this occasion. And indeed the violence of the Sea is so great and dangerous in this narrow Channel, so subject unto blasting winds issuing out of the hollow caverns of the earth; that the breaking off of this Island from the rest of Italy, is a thing most credible. Which dangerous nature of the passage, being also full of Rocks, and unsafe by reason of the Whirl-pools occasioned it to be called by Florus the Historian, Fabulosæ infame monstrosæ fretum; chiefly so called with reference to Scylla and Charybdis, of which many fabulous things are reported by the ancient Poets. Of these Charybdis is a Gulf or Whirl-pool on Sicily side, which violently attracteth all Vessels that come too nigh it, devoureth them, and catcheth up their wrecks at the shore of Trojanum, not far from Catana. Opposite to this in Italy, stander the dangerous Rock Scylla, at the foot of which many little Rocks shoot out, on which the wave strongly bearing, making that noise, which the Poets feign to be the barking of Dogs. The passage between these two being to unskilful Mariners exceeding perilous, gave beginning to the Proverb;

Who seeks Charybdis for to shun,
Doth oftentimes on Scylla run.

But there are other things which made Sicily famous in old times, besides these two, as viz. the punishment of the Giant Enceladus, for his attempt against the gods; the frequent burning of Ætna (under which he is fabled to be shut up) being supposed to proceed from his sulphurous breath. Secondly, the birth of Ceres in this Isle; and thirdly, the Rape of Proserpine. To these two last the Isle was consecrated in those days; to Ceres in regard the first taught the people to sow Corn, whence the word Ceres is often used in the Poets to signify Bread, and other necessary provisions for life, as Sine Cere & Baccho friget Venus: To Proserpine, because bestowed upon her by Pluto, to please her after the Ravishment committed by her.

It is situate under the fourth Climate, the longest day being 13 hours and a half. And was once called Trinacria, because it stood forth into the Sea with three Capes or Promontories: viz. 1. Pelorus, now Capo de Faro, to the North; 2. Pachynus, now Capo Pallaro, to the West; 3. Lilybæum, now Capo Boia, or Capo Caro, to the South. This last looketh towards Carthage, and the shores of Africa, from which distant 183 miles. And of this Strabo doth affirm, that a man of quick and strong sight getting up into a Watch-tower that stood in this Cape, descried a Fleet setting full out of the Haven of Carthage; and told the Lilybæans their benigns and number. That this is true, I dare not say: for besides the unlikelihood of kenning at so great a distance; we are taught by Philosophy, that the Sea being of an orbicular form, swelleth it self into the fashion of a round Turret or Hill, till it put beyond the eye-sight. From these three corners, this Country was as we have said) called Trinacria, or Trinacria, according to that of Ovid.

Trinacris à positæ, nomen adepto, loci.*

And

An Island with three corners braves the Main,
And thence the name of Trinacris doth gain.

The first Inhabitants that we find to have dwelt in this Country, are the huge Giants fo often mentioned in the Odyssey of the divine Poet Homer, called Leviathans and Cyclopes; of which last rank was the so famous fa-mouled Polyphemus, who with so much humanity entertained Ulysses, and his companions. These were after-wards rooted out by the Sicani, a people of Spain, who called it Sicania. As for the name of Sicilia, some de- rive it from Sichew, a supposed King of Spain, who is fabled to have conquered this Country. But the truth is, it came from the Siculi, who being by Evander and his Arcadians driven out of Latium, came into this Island: to which having mastered the Sicani, and driven them from the West and the Northern part, to the East and South they left their name. At their first landing they built the City of Zancle, called afterwards Messina, to- gether with Nee, Hybla, Catana, and Leontium. After them came another Italian people named the Monges, being driven thence by the Oenontians; and fate down in that part of the Island where stood the City of Mo- rentum, built by them at their first arrival. The first of all the Greeks who set foot in it (not to say any thing of the coming of the first Hunter in the pursuit of De- dalus), having more in it of the Fiction than Historical truth) were the Chalcidians, a people of the Isle Euboea, now called Negropont; who built the City of Naxos; and after them Archias of Corinth, with his fellow ad- venturers, by whom Syracuse was either first built, or very much beautified and repaired. Next then the Rhodians and Cretans sent some Colonies hither, the first Founders of Gela; and after of the renowned City of Agrigento: And not long after a new Plantation fell from Sparta built Heraclaea. The Citizens of Megara, another state of Greece, sent a Colony also, who built Selinus. And did those of Messene also, who taking the Town of Zancle from the Siculi, new built or beau- tified it, and gave unto it to repaired the name of Messina. Nor is it to be thought, that the Tyrians and Phoenicians, being to great undertakers of public business, and very powerful in shipping, would sit still, when fo fair a booty did invite their industry: who seizing on the Promontories of Pachynus and Lilybæum, and some of the adjoining Islands did fortify them for the better secur- ing of the Trade which they had in Sicily. But all these several Adventurers having several interdicts, joined to- gether in the work of an absolute Conquest; but plant- ing themselves only on the Sea shores, altered not the name by which they found it called at their coming thither.

The people are ingenuous, eloquent and pleasant, but withal very unconstant, and so full of talk, that from thence came the Proverb, Gerre Sicile. They are also said to be of a very envious, suspicious, and distrustful nature, uncapable of injuries, and vehement in pursuit of revenge, as appears by that great slaughter which they made of the French: yet withal courteous enough to strangers and Parasitical enough to their superiors. They have been famous heretofore for many notable in- ventions, Aristotle ascribing to them the Art of Oratory, and first making of Pastoral Elegies, Pliny of Clocks (or rather of Hour-glasses; for Clocks were but a late invention, and that of the Flemings); and Plutarch of Military Engines; in which last were brought by Archimedes unto great perfection.

The Christian Faith was first preached here, by some of the Disciples of St. Peter, whom he sent hither at his first coming to Rome; of which Pancreas (whom we call commonly St. Pancrace) is said to have been the first Bishop of Taurumentum, and Martianus of Syracuse. They are now generally of the Religion authorized by the Popes of Rome; that of the Greek Church being rather com- mitted at then allowed of; in the Communion whereof here are thought to be ten thousand souls, but looked on by the rest as schismatical people. For the most part they use the Italian Language, but very much altered, by the Greek, Arabian, Norman, French and Spanish tongues; to which Nations they have been se- verally subject, since the time of the Romans. The total number of the people is thought to be about a Million and a half.

The soil is incredibly fruitful in Wine, Oyl, Honey, Minerals of Gold, Silver, and Allom, together with plenty of Salt and Sugar; which last commodity the Natives sell in Canes unto the Venitians, and buy it again of them when it is refined; and thereby letting strangers go away with the best part of their gains; as generally they do in all other Merchandize; which they permit to be exported, rather then put themselves to the trouble of Trafficking abroad in Foreign Nations. There are also Gems of Agates, and Emeralds. It yieldeth also great store of the richest Silks, which grow plenty- fully about Messina; variety of most excellent and de- licious fruits, both for salt and colour: with such abun- dance of all kinds of Grain, that it was called in old times Horreum Romanis populi, or the Granary of the Ro- man Empire; and doth now furnish some parts of Italy, Spain, and Barbary, besides Malta, and the adjacent Isles, with that which the can spare of her superfluities. Nay, Tully doth not only call it the Granary and Store-house of the City of Rome, in regard of Corn, but adds that it was accounted a well furnished Treasury; as being able of it self without charge of the State, to cloath, maintain and furnish the greatest Army, with Leather, Corn and apparel. And it Dionorus Siculus may be cre- dited in it, he telleth us, that about Leontium and some other places, Wheat did grow of it self, without any labour of the Husbandman. At this day in some parts of the Isle, the soil is so exceeding fruitful, that it yields unto the Husbandman an hundred measures of Corn for one And certainly the Corn of this Country must needs yield a wonderful increase, the King of Spain receiving an hundred thousand Crowns yearly for the Custom of Wheat. In this Country is the Hill Hybla, so famous for Bees and Honey; near which there was a City of the same name also, which afterwards was called Megara. And here is also the Hill Ætna, now called Monte Pelé, which continually sendeth forth flames of Fire, to the astonishment of all beholders. The most famous Con- flagrations in the former times were precisely before the breaking out of the War in Sicily, which the Romans Writers call Bellum frivile, not pacified but by the slaughter of 70000 of the Slaves which had taken Arms against Rome; and shortly after the death of Julius Cæsar, portending those procriptions and Bloody Wars, which did after follow. And to this day such extraordinary eruptions of it are accounted ominous. The Hill it self is of that height, that it is ten miles from the top to the bottom, and may be easily discerned by Sailors at an hundred miles distance: the lower parts thereof being very fruitful, the middle shaded with Woods, and the top covered with Snow, a great part of the year, not- withstanding the frequent vomiting of flames and cin- ders. But these eruptions of fire are not now so ordinary as they have been formerly; the matter which gave fuel to it being watted by continual burnings: so that the flames which issue hence are hardly visible but by night, night, though the smoke shew it self the most part of the day. And when it doth break out, which is com- monly once in three or four years; it falleth in great flakes on the Vales adjoining; to the destruction of the Vintage, and great loss of the Country. But that, they say, is recompensed by the plenty of the following years; the ashes thereof so bathing and enriching the soil, that both the Vines and Corn-fields are much bettered by it. And this report I am the apter to believe, in regard we find by late experience here amongst our selves, that the Turk taken from the ground and burnt to ashes, and so spread on land and ploughed into it, doth yield a very great improvement, even to barren soils. Which kind of Husbandry is called the Devonishing of land, because there first used; but in Hampshire it was called, as I re- member (having been unfortunately too long a stranger there) by the name of burning and beaking. But to return again to Ætna, into this fiery Furnace the Philosopher Empedocles call himself that he might be reputed a God.

Deus immortalis haberi

Dum caput Empedocles, ardentem fervidus Ætnam
Insistit—

As Horace, in his Book de Arte Poetica.

Empedocles to be a God desires,
And calls himself into th' Ætnean fires.

The reason of these fires is the abundance of Sulphur and Brimstone, contained in the bosom of the Hill, which is blown by the wind, driving in at the chaps of the Earth as by a pair of bellows. Through these chinks also there is continually more fuel added to the fire, the very water adding to the force of it as we see that water cast on coals in the Smiths-Forge, doth make them burn more ardently. The reason of this flame thus set down by Ovid.

Ille bituminis raptum incendia vires;
Lutæque, exiguæ ardentes sulphura flammæ.
Atque ubi terra cibus alimentisq; debita flammæ
Non dabit, adsumptis per longum viribus ævum,
Naturæq; sustinetur, non enim decet edaci,
Naturæ feret illa famem, desertisq; desertæ ignes.

A rozen mould these fiery flames begin,
And clayey brimstone aids that fire within:
Yet when the slimy foyle consumed, shall Yield no more food to feed the fire withal,
And Nature shall refrain her nourishment,
The flame shall cease, hating all aliment.

Under this Hill some Poets feign the Giant Enceladus to have been buried, as before is said, whose hot breath fired the Mountain lying on his face. Others suppose it to be the Shop of Vulcan, and the Cyclopes and the gross Pa- pists take it for the place of Purgatory; all alike unfaillible. The principal Rivers heretof, 1. Taretta, anciently called Toris. 2. Himera, neighboured by Mount Hybla, much famed for Honey. 3. Sicurus. 4. Hybla. 5. Acasus, of great note for its precious Stones. None of them much observable for its length or breadth, but that defect supplied by the commodiousness of Bays and Creeks, which are very frequent in this Island, and by the bene- fit of Fountains and fresh-water Lakes. Most memorable amongst these, 1. The Lake called Palerme, (now Nap- thia) which for three months doth cast forth water very hot, but of very ill smell; of which there is men- tion made in Pliny, by the name of Ephibia. 2. A Foun- tain near the foot of Ætna, the water whereof is sharp like Vinegar, and sometimes boylth; into which a piece of cloth cast, being before steeped in water mixed with Gall, becomes suddenly black. 3. Another Fountain near Drepanum, the water of which, as soon as drunk, provo- keth loosness. All which effects proceed from that sul- phureous and bituminous matter, of which the whole Island is exceeding full. 4. Arctusius, of greater fame among the Ancients, than all the rest; especially in that the River Alpheus (a River of Greece) having swallow- ed up one hundred and forty lesser streams, and losing it self under the ground is thought to empty it self into it. The thing affirmed by Seneca and Strabo both, and seems to be sufficiently proved, by the several instances of a wooden dish or cup lost in the River Alpheus, and found rising up in this River; and by the leaves of certain trees growing on the banks of that Greek River, and swimming on this in great abundance; there being none of these trees in all Sicily. Dicitur Alpheus (with Mela) se non conficiare pelago; Jed subter maria, terræq; depressis, hic agere alveum, atq; hic se rursus exalare.

This Island is famous for the worthy Scholars the once produced, viz. Æschylus, the first Tragedian of fame; who being banished through age, once walked in the fields, where by chance an Eagle taking his bald pate for a white Rock, let a Shellfish fall on it, of that bigness that it beat out his Brains. 2. Dionorus Siculus, that famous Historian. 3. Empedocles, the first inventor of Rhetorick; and his fellow Gorgias. 4. Euclid, the textuary Geome- trician, who taught in Megara. 5. Archimedes, a most worthy Mathematician, the first Author of the Sphere; of which Instrument he made one of that art and bigness; that one standing within, might easily perceive the several motions of every Celestial Orb. He made also divers Military Engines, which in the siege of Syracuse foxy vexed the Romans, and was at last slain in his study by a common Souldier in the sack of the Town, to the great grief of the General Marcellus. 6. Epicharmus, the first Inventor of Comedies; and 7. Theophrastus, the first Author of Pastoral Elegies. In the latter times, Nicola, Abbot of Palermo, a learned Canonist, and Cardinal of the Church of Rome, commonly called Panormitanus, was of greatest fame.

In Plinius time there were reckoned in this Island se- ven two Cities, of which only twelve are now remain- ing. The whole divided at this time into three small Pro- vinces, that is to say, 1. Val de Noto, 2. Mazara, and 3. Mazara, to which the Isles adjoining may add a fourth, 1. V. A. L. L. S. de Noto. To speak up the Eastern parts of the Island. The chief Cities of which are 1. Syracuse, once the Metropolis of the whole Island, and a most flourishing Common-wealth: it was (as Tully reports) the greatest and goodliest City of all that were possessed by the Greeks; for situation very strong; and of an excellent prospect, from every entrance both by Sea and Land. The Port thereof which had the Sea on both sides of it, was for the most part environed with beautiful buildings; and that part of it which was with- out the City, was on both sides banked up, and situ- ated with very fair Walls of Marble. Nor was it only the goodliest City of the Greeks, as Tully tells us, but one of the greatest also in the World, as is said by Strabo; by whom it is affirmed, that without the outmost Wall thereof, (for it was environed with three Walls) it contained one hundred and eighty Furlongs in compass, which of our measure cometh to eight-hundred and one, that is to say, Insula (or the Isle) Arcadian, Neapolis, and Tyche, besides the Fort called Heclepi, which commanded the rest; the greatests of all which, the ruins and foundations of it do still de- monstrate. It standeth North of the Promontory called Pachynus, and was built by Architis of Corinthus about the time of Jotham King of Judah, who being for an unnatural Race, committed on a young Gentleman, banished his Country, together with his friend and companion Misellus, consulted with the Oracle at Delphos, how and in what place they should dispose of themselves. The Oracle demanding whether they most affected wealth, or health: Misellus answered health, and Architis wealth; and thereupon the former was directed to settle himself at Crotone in Italy, and the other here. Nor did the Oracle deceive him in his expectation; this Town by reason of its beautiful and commodious Port, growing of greatest trade and wealth next to Carthage it self, in those times of the World. It was the custom of this Town, when any of the Citizens grew too potent, to write his name in an Olive-leaf, which being put into his hand, did without more ado condemn him to banishment for five years, and was called Petalium, from the Greek word Πτελον, signifying a Leaf. Yet could not this device so well secure them in the possession of their much desired freedom, that this City fell often into the power of Tyrants, than any one City in the World. That which is now remaining of it is the work of Angustus, who after a second destruction of it in the time of Pompey, sent a Colony thither, and built upon the site and the parts near unto it. But now the whole Isle (Ortygia the Ancients called it) is taken up with a very strong Castle, and the whole City also being very well walled, and held by a Garrison of Spaniards. 2. Note, which gives name to this whole Division. A City which heretofore contended with Syracuse in point of Greatness; situate on a very high Rock, inaccessible on all sides but by one narrow passage; and having under the Cape of Pasirra a very fair and capacious Harbour, the Key of Sicily on that side. 3. Angitia, situate on the shore also, and of so large a Haven that it could never be fortified. 4. Castro Giovanni, a Town of about four thousand Families, situate in a wholesome air, and a fruitful foil, which they hold to be the very Navel and exact middle of the Island. It is also much prized for Mines of most excellent Salt. 5. Lentini, famous for its Lake, whose fishing is farmed for eighteen thousand Crowns yearly: It was anciently called Leontium, and stood somewhat North of Syracuse; with which continually in War, either to preserve their own Liberties, or get the Sovereignty of the other. 6. Enna, a midland Town, whence Pluto is said to have ravished Proserpine. In after-times the dwelling of that Syrus Enna, who stirred up the Roman slaves against their Lords; and having broke open his common Prisons, and received all such as came unto him pitched up an Army of forty thousand. This War the Roman Writers call Bellum Sicile, ended at last but with no small difficulty, by the valour and good fortune of P. Rutilius.

2. MAZARA containeth all the West parts of the Island. The chief Cities thereof, 1. Agirgentum, now call'd Gergenti, famous for Phalaris the Tyrant, and his torturing Perillus in a Brazen Bull, which he had made for the destruction and torture of others. Of which aply Ovid, — Nec enim lex injuria nulla est,

Quam necis Artifices arte perire sua.

Most just it is, a man should be tormented
With that, which first his cruel Wit invented.

It was said anciently of the people of this City, that they built as if they should never die, and eat as if they were sure to live no longer. 2. Palermo, anciently called Panormus, and then a Colony of the Phenicians; now the chief City of Sicily, and the Seat of the Spanish Vice-roy. Situate on the West Cape of the Island looking towards Sardinia, beautified with large Streets, delicate Buildings, strong Walls, and magnificent Temples. It hath no natural Port appertaining to it, (Drepanum serving anciently as the Port thereof) but of late there is an Haven forced out by a mighty Pierre, a work of vast expense, and worthy of the greatness of Rome. It is also an Archbishops See, and an University. 3. Morrell, commonly call'd Morrell, famous for the Church, the Archbishops See. It is called in Latine, Mor Regaliu. 4. Drepanum, now call'd Trapani, situate on a promontory thrusting into the Sea, not far from that of Lilybeum, a Town well fortified, in regard of the ill Neighborhood of the Moors, who do often pillage on these Coasts; and having the command of a very fair Port. The Inhabitants of this place are said to be the best Seamen of Sicily. 5. Mazara, which gives name unto all this Vale, situate South of Lilybeum, and not far from Salemi. 6. Eryx, situate on a Mountain over-looking the Sea, said by the Ancients to have took this name from Eryx the Son of Venus, slain here by Hercules: memorable in those elder times for being the Seat of King Acleas, who for kindly entertained Æneas, and his wandering Trojans; and a magnificent Temple, in which Venus was worshipped, and from thence was called Erycina; as, Sive tu maxis Erycina ridens, in the Poet Horace. This was the last Town which the Carthaginians held in Sicily. On the surrendry whereof by Amilcar the Father of Anibal; at the end of the first Punic War, it was conditioned by the Romans, amongst other things that the Carthaginians should relinquish all the Claim or Title which they had to any part of this Island; which thereby fell unto the Romans (the State of Syracuse excepted only.) Who, whatsoever colour they were pleased to put upon that action, were principally tempted to it by ambition and covetousness. And therefore in my mind Florus states it rightly, who saith, that it was undertaken specie quidem juvenudi Socios, re autem silibstante Prædæ; i. e. under pretence of aiding the Minorians, who had put themselves into their protection, but in plain terms to get possession of the Island which lay fit for Italy. Now, and long since a ruin only, the place on which it stood being called Mont St. Julian. 7. Segesta, on the Sea-side, not far from Eryx, near unto which the Trojans Laid waste of their many long and dangerous voyages, and fearing to go again to Sea, burnt the Fleet of Æneas; on which occasion it was built. Peopled at first by such of the more old and feeble Trojans, (Longæque senes, et seclæ æquore matres, as the Poet hath it) who chose rather to fix their dwelling here, than to follow the fortunes of Æneas, in his quest of Italy. Call'd then Acleas, in honour of King Acleas, spoken of before, part of whose Kingdom it was made; afterwards Ægeia from Ægeus one of Trojan Race, born here, by whom it was repaired and beautified; and at last Segesta.

3. MONA lieth on the North-East of the Island, opposite unto Palis de Noto. The chief Towns of it, 1. Nicosia, in the mid-land. 2. Milase, on the Northern Promontory. 3. Messina, a City of great strength and beauty just opposite to Rheza in Italy. It was the first Town which the Romans had in this Island, being put into their hands by the Mamertines, a Troop of Soldiers brought thither out of Campania for the defence of the City, who minding themselves too strong for the Citizens, made themselves Masters of the place; but being with all too weak to hold it, chose rather to surrender it to the Romans, than to its true and proper Owners. Hence the beginning of the first War betwixt Rome and Carthage. A City it is at this time, of the most beautiful beautiful building of any in Sicily; and peopled by the wealthiest sort both of Merchants and Gentlemen, who live here in great pleasure (if not voluptuousness) as having plenty of all necessary provisions, Fruits of all kinds, delicious Wines, and Snow to moderate and qualify the heats thereof, at cheaper rates than any elsewhere in the Country. On the West side there stands a strong Citadel, highly mounted, and well Garrisoned, which commands the Town: and not far off a very high Lanthorn where Lights are kept burning all night long, for the direction of such Mariners as are to pass those dangerous Straits; which from this Phare or Watch-Tower, is called commonly the Phare of Messina. The Haven of this Town is the fairest of Sicily, whose entrances are so strongly fenced and bulwarked, that the people let their Gates (in derision of the Turks) stand always open. It is also an Archbishops See. 4. Catana, so often vexed by Diomedes the Tyrant of Syracuse; more ancient than beautiful: seated on the North side of a great (but hollow) Bay, not easily approached by Ships, and therefore neither held by any Garrison, nor much traded by Merchants: the riches of the place consisting principally in the fruitfulness of the foil, the habitation of many of the Gentry, and by being a small University. It was once a Colony of the Naxians. And so was also Tauromenium, the fifth Town of note in this part of the Island, called sometimes from its Founders Naxos, but now Thermino; a ruin only of what was in the former days: a place by nature of great strength, but over-topped by Syracuse and Messina, betwixt which it standeth. It was in this part of the Country that the Cyclopes dwelt, there being three little Rocky Islands (now not inhabited) not far from this Town, which for a long time were called Cyclopsom Scopuli.

4. On the West part of Sicily lie the ÆOLIAN or Vulcanian Islands, heretofore only seven, and all almost of equal bigness; now eleven in number. The first name derived from Æolus, once Lord of them, who being well skilled in divining from what coasts the Winds would blow, (which he conjectured by the smoke ascending from them) occasioned the Poets to make him the God of the Winds. The other is derived from Vulcan the God of fire; by reason of the continual flames of fire from thence evaporating in those elder days. But now the matter of those flames being wasted in long track of time, there is only one of them which burneth, now called STOMBOLO; by some Writers Strongyle, from the roundness of it. An Island of about ten miles compass, but such as seems to be no other than a large round Mountain. Out of the top whereof issueth continually a flame like a burning Beacon, easily discernable far off, but at nights especially: a place so full of horror to the neighbouring Islanders, that they and many others of the Romish Catholics conceive it to be Hell it self. And yet in those parts where the rage of the fire offendeth not it is of a very fruitful foil, and apt for tillage.

2. But the fairest and best peopled of those Islands, is that of LIPARA, some ten miles in circuit, (from whence the red at call'd the Liparean Isles) so named from Liparus the chief of the Town, said to be built in the time of Judah King of Judah; the See of a Bishop, under the Archbishop of Messina. The Island generally fruitful, well furnished with Allum, Sulphur, and Bismuth; and with some hot medicinal Baths, which are much frequented, and from thence called Thermæ, by the ancient Writers. It was formerly of great wealth, that falling into the disfigurement of Agaboles (then the Tyrant of Syracuse) they were able to buy their peace of him, at the some of one hundred Talents of Gold; which sum they had no sooner paid, but the Tyrant for a farewell, robbed their very Temples. Unprosperous in his Actions always after that adventure. Nor sped it better with the Turks, who in the year 1544. laid the Country to the siege; in which condition it remained, till Charles the fifth replenished it again with Spaniards, and fortified it very strongly against all invasions.

3. Not far off lieth another of these Islands, now called PAFOGNANA, or Fanciana, but anciently Ægeia, conceived to be the same which Livy and Florus call Ægæti: in which there is a fair and capacious Bay, able to receive the greatest Navies; and near to which Lutathus Catulus the Consul gave the Carthaginians their last blow at Sea, which drew along with it the surrender of Ægeia, and the loss of Sicily. Didyme, Erymus, and Phanias, four other of these Islands, but of lesser note, I pass over willingly; and make haste to

4. HIERO, the seventh and last of these Islands of any consideration, and the eighth in tale, called also Vulcania, in which Vulcan was worshipped; said to have first appeared above the water at such time as Scipio Africanus died. A barren, stony, and uninhabited place, by reason of the fires which formerly have flamed so hideously (especially in the year 1444.) that it made not only the rest of these Islands, but all Sicily tremble. Near unto this Isle was fought the first Naval fight betwixt Rome and Carthage. Before which time the Romans had never used the Seas, as being totally employed in the conquest of Italy, inasmuch that when they had built their Gallies, they were fain to exercise their men in rowing, by placing them on two Seats near the water with Oars in their hands. Which notwithstanding, having devised an Engine like a grappling hook, they so fastned the adverse Fleet unto them, that the whole fight seemed a Land-battle fought upon the Sea. The victory fell unto the Romans; C. Duilius the Consul then commanding in chief; and honoured with the first Naval Triumph that was ever solemnized at Rome.

After this Island was once known to the Greeks, they sent from all their chief Cities several Colonies, who planted in the Sea-coasts of the Country, as before noted. But so as they never united themselves in a body together, but had their several elites and particular ends; whereby they came to be divided into many factions, and at last made themselves a prey to as many Tyrants. Phalaris Lording it at Agirgentum, Panæus at Leontium, Gelon at Syracuse, Cleander at Gela, and when one Faction grew too weak to resist the other, they called in several Foreign Nations to abet their quarrel. For on this ground the Carthaginians were first called into Sicily by the Messinians, against the Agirgentines. And on the Wars was managed here a great part of the Peloponnesian Wars: the Athenians siding with the Leontines, and the Spartans with the Carthaginians: in which the whole power of Athens was broken by Sea and Land; and their two Generals Nicias and Demophilus, murdered in prison. But because Syracuse was a City of the greatest Authority, and of greatest influence over the rest of Sicily, we shall more punctually insist on the State-affairs thereof. The Government of which at first was popular, as it was in most of the Greek Colonies, according to the platforms which they brought from home; and was but newly altered to the Archepterial, when Gelon made himself King of it, about 256 years after the expulsion of the Tarquinians at Rome; whom with as many as succeeded in the Royal dignity, take along as followeth.

The Tyrants, or Kings of Syracuse.

A. M. 3495 1. Gelon the Prince or Lord of Gela taking advantage of the quarrels in Syracuse, betwixt the Magistrates and people, made himself Master of the City; and was chosen King. A valiant and prudent Prince, by whom 150000 Carthaginians were slain in battle, for their first welcome into Sicily.
L 2 Magistrates

3472 2. Hiero, the Brother of Gelon, a valiant King also, but a rude and covetous man, whereby he lost the love of his people.

3484 3. Therasybulus, Brother of Hiero, whose Government proved so cruel and unsupported, that it held not above ten Months; who being forced into Exile by the Syracusan, the peoples did a while enjoy their liberty; but withal fell into those Factions, which after 60 years made them lose it again.

3544 4. Dionysius, that so famous Tyrant, from being General of the Forces of the Syracusans, made himself their King. A man of great virtues, but great virtues withal. He brought almost all Sicily under his obedience, and the Town of Regium in Italy; reigning in all 18 years.

3582 5. Dionysius II. succeeding his Father in his Kingdom and vices, but not in valour or widow, was first out by Dion a noble Gentleman of Syracusa and afterward taken Prisoner by Timoleon of Corinth, to which City he was sent, and there died in Exile.

3635 6. Agathocles, by trade a Potter, after that a soldier, 20 years after the death of Timoleon, made himself King of Syracusa. To draw the Carthaginians out of Sicily, he passed over into Africa, and besieged Carthage; which example Scipio after followed, but with better fortune.

3681 7. Hiero II. of a Commander of their Armies chosen King of Syracusa, by a Party which he made amongst them. In his time brake out the first Punic War, the Romans being called in by the Mercenaries, who held Messina against the Carthaginians; the Lords at that time of the greatest part of the Island.

3737 8. Hieronimus, the Son of Hiero, after whose death Syracusa and all Sicily became subject to Rome, by the fortunate conduct of Marcellus.

Of these eight Kings, the six first commonly pass under the name of Tyrants; from whence and from some others of like disposition, who Lorded it over the free Cities of Sicily, the name of Sicili Tyranni grew into a Proverb. But of all none more hated than the two Dionysii, who were so odious, that there were continual execrations poured on them; only one old Woman praying for the life of the latter. Who being asked the cause made answer, that he knew his Father to have been a monstrous and wicked Tyrant; on whom when the curses of the people have prevailed, and obtained his death; this his Son succeeded, worse by far than he; for whose life he was resolved to pray, lest after his death the Devil himself should come amongst them. But to proceed: after these Tyrants, as they called them, from their rout out, and the Island was conquered by Marcellus, it always followed the fortune of the Roman Empire; till in the partition of that Empire, it fell together with Africa and Calabria, into the power of the Greeks. In the declining of whose greatness, this Island having been miserably pillaged and spoiled by the Emperor Constantine, An. 669. became a prey to the Saracens; from them recovered again by the help of the Normans, who held both this and the Realm of Naples, in Fee of the Church, under the title of Kings of both Sicily. From that time forwards it ran the fortune of that Kingdom, subject unto the Princes of the Norman and German Lines; till the death of Conrade, no interruption intervening. After whose death when Manfred or Manfred, the base Son of the Emperor Frederick, and Brother of Conrade, had forcibly made himself King of these Countries; it was offered to Richard Earl of Cornwall, Brother to Henry III. of England: a Prince of such riches, that he was able to dispense an hundred Marks per diem, for ten years together; which according to the Standard of those times, was no small sum. But the conditions which the Pope proposed were so impossible for the Earl to perform, that his Agent told him, he might as well say to his Master, I will give thee the Moon, catch, climb up, and sit by it. The Earl refusing it, it was offered the King for his second Son Edmund, who was invested by the gift of a Ring, and money coined in his name by the Popes appointment, with the Inscription of Edmundus Rex Sicilie. But the King not being able to pursue the business, because then overburthened by his Barons Wars, and the Pope having sucked no small store of Treasures from him; it was in the year 1261. given unto Charles, Earl of Provence and Anjou, Brother to Lewis X. Under him those Countries joyntly continued subject till the year 1281. in which his Competitor, Peter of Aragon, claiming it in right of his Wife, Daughter of Manfred before mentioned, promising him to fight a single combat before our King Edward I. at Bourdeaux, failed of his Word; and in the mean time so contrived it, that at the found of a Bell tolling to Prayers, all the French men in Sicily were cruelly massacred. This exploit is known now under the name of Vesperi Siculi; and was managed by John de Procopia, a Gentleman of the Realm of Naples, whom Charles had dispossessed of the Isle of Procopia, whereof he had been formerly Lord; and not content to do him such a piece of injustice, added a further insolence to it, in the forcing his Wife. Provoked with these two injuries, the abused Gentleman plots with King Peter of Aragon, to make him Master of the Isle of Sicily, where he had very good Intelligences; and where the French by reason of their Lufts and Infolencies had so exasperated the Natives, that they were capable enough of any such impressions, as a man sharing with him in his sufferings, could imprint upon them. According to the compact made, Don Pedro riggish out his Navy, under pretence of some exploits against the Moor, and anchored in the Port of Sardinia, there to expect how well the Tragedy would be acted; which fell out so agreeably to his expectation, that in one instant as it were, on the signal given, the French were universally murdered in all parts of the Island: the people being so enraged, that they would not spare women great with Child; supposed to have been got by any of that hated Nation; and Pedro coming in with his Navy as the deed was done, was by the general consent of all sorts of people, crowned King of Sicily. A bloody policy, confests, which as the Actors learned of the English Saxons, who had made like riddance of the Danes; so did they teach it to the French, who practised it on the Hugonots of France in that horrid Massacre of Paris, An. 1572. An Act which provoked the Pope, that he solemnly excommunicated the King, and caused many of the neighbouring Princes to Arm against him. But the Rox dared never the worse for that: who did to order his affairs, that he did both clear his own Country of those enemies which on the Popes curse had come in against him; and ruled Sicily more firmly in obedience to him. Since which time this Island hath belonged to the House of Aragon, but not always in possession of the Kings thereof, being a while governed as a State apart by its own Kings, whose succession followeth.

Kings

Kings of Sicily of the House of Aragon.

1281 1. Pedro, or Peter I. King of Aragon by birth, of Sicily in right of his Wife, the choice of the people, and the Legacy of Conrade (the last of the Royal Line of Suevia) but principally by the power of the Sword.

1291 3. Frederick, the Brother of James, on his Brothers taking the Crown of Aragon, got possession of Sicily. By Frederick Alfonso, a younger Son of this Frederick, the Title of Duke of Athens came into this Family.

1336 4. Peter, or Pedro II. Son of Frederick.

1342 5. Frederick II.

6. Peter, or Pedro III.

7. Lewis, Son to Peter III.

8. Frederick II. in the life of Lewis his Brother called Duke of Athens; after his death succeeded in the Kingdom of Sicily.

1389 9. Martin, Son to Martin I. King of Aragon, succeeded in the right of his Wife Blanche, Daughter of Frederick, the third; and dying without issue, gave the Kingdom unto Martin his Father.

1409 10. Martin II. of Sicily and the first of Aragon, of which last he was King by birth, and of the former by the gift of his Son. After which time the Isle of Sicily being again united to the Crown of Aragon, was never separated from it; except it were when John King of Aragon gave it to Ferdinand his Son, the better to fit him for the bed of Isabel Princess of Castile, with whom the match was then in treaty; and when the Emperor Charles V. gave it, with Naples, unto Philip his eldest Son, on his marriage with Mary Queen of England, who thereupon was styled King of Naples, Sicily, and Jerusalem. But this held only for a year; his Father shortly after resigning to him all his Kingdoms, whereby it became joynt to Spain again.

The Revenues of this Kingdom are by some said to be but 800000, but as others say, a million of Ducats, most of which is again disbursed on the entertainment of the Vice-Roy, and the defence of the Island. The Arms are, Or, four Pallets Gules (being those of Aragon) betwixt two Flanches Argent, charged with as many Escus Sable, beaked Gules, which was the bearing of Manfred King of Naples, and Sicily, spoken of before, who gave those Arms with reference to his descent from the German Emperours.

This Island for the number of its Nobility compares with Naples, as having in the time of Ortelius, 80 years ago, 7 Princes, 4 Dukes, 13 Marquesses, 14 Earls, 1 Viscount, 48 Barons: Men of authority and power in their several Territories; and therefore not permitted to live much in the Island, the greatest part of their time being spent in the Court of Spain, but more to satisfy that King upon reason of State, than any affection of their own to so long an exile. And for the Government of the

The Kingdom of SARDINIA.

The Island and Kingdom of SARDINIA lieth called Cape Bari, or Cape Cero, it is distant about 200 miles. It is in length 180 miles, 90 in breadth, 560 in the circuit; and is situate under the 4. Climate, the longest day being 14 hours.

In the time of Ariftole it was called Ichnusa, next Sandaliotis, from the resemblance which it hath to a mans Shoe or Sandal; and finally Sardinia from Sardus the Son of Hercules, who coming out of Sardinia possessed the fame. For this there is sufficient authority amongst the Ancients. Of the first names faith Pliny in as plain terms as may be, that Timaeus called Sardinia Sandaliotis, and Myrsilus, Ichnusa, from the similitude which it hath to the Shoe-sole, or impression of a man's foot on the ground; Sardiniam Timaeus Sandaliotis appellavit ab effigie sole; Myrsilus, Ichnusam a similitudine vestigi. And for the last nothing can be more plain than that of Paustanias, who tells that the first who came by shipping into Sardinia, were certain Affians under the conduct of Sardus the Son of Macris, whom the Egyptians called by the name of Hercules; who coming into this Island then called Ichnusa, τὸ ἰχνηνὰ ἀπὸ τοῦ Σαρδηνίου τοῦ πρώτου ἐκ τῶν ἑλλήνων, caused it after his own name to be called Sardinia. For further evidence whereof, the people in the Latine tongue are called Sardis the adjoining Sea, Mare Sardinum. And to this name it was so constant, that no following Plantations from other Countries were ever able to alter it. Some Companies of Affians, led by Iolans, Came and settled here, where they built Olbian, and Agillie: leaving a memory of Iolans their Captain in some places, which remained in the time of Paustanias, called Iolais; and taking to themselves for his false name of Iolantifer. And after the destruction of Troy, some of that scattered Nation came and planted in some void parts of the Island; kept to themselves the name of Iliosfer, and by that name are mentioned both by Pliny and Livy. But neither of these Nations did attempt the change of the name, because not of ability to suppress or out-power the Natives. Nor could the Carthaginians do it, though a more puissant Nation than the former were; and such as by the nearness of their habitation (Sardinia being distant but 160 miles from Affica) had all advantages to make (as at last they did) a full Conquest of it: building therein the Cities of Charmis, Chalaris, and Sulcis; and holding it until it was unjustly extorted from them by the Romans, at the end of the first Punic War, at what time Carthage was in danger to be ruined by the revolt of her own Mercenaries, and for not able to resist.

But of the name and first Plantations of this Island we have said enough. Let us now look upon the places in which it is reported that there is neither Wolf nor Serpent, neither venomous nor hurtful Beasts, but the Fox only, and a little Creature like a Spider which will by no means endure the light of the Sun, except held by violence. Some Pools it hath, and those very plentiful of Fish; but generally so destitute of River-water, that they are fain to keep the Rain which falls in Winter, for their use in Summer. By means whereof, and for that there is no passage for the Northern winds, being obstructed by the high Mountain near Cape Lugudori, the air is generally unwholesome, if not pestilential: Intomuch that Tully writing to his Brother Quintus being then in this Island, adviceth him to remember, as in point of health, that he was in Sardinia; and speaking of

Tigilins,

Tigellus a Sardinian born, faith of him, that he was more pestilent than the Country which bred him. The soil is very fertile in respect of Corn, but barren if compared with Sicily, which yet may rather be imputed to the want of good manuring in the Husbandman, than any natural defect in the Soil it self. Well furred with all sorts of Cattel, as appears plainly by that plenty of Cheefe and Hides which are sent hence yearly into Italy and other places. The Horses hereof, hot, headstrong, and hard to be broken, but will last long. The Bullocks naturally amble, so that the Country-man rideth them as familiarly as they do in Spain on Mules and Asses. Here is also the beaft called Musfrones or Musfriones, found in Corfica also, but in no other part of Europe; somewhat resembling a Stag, but of so strong an hide, that it is used by the Italians instead of Armour: Of the skin of which carried to Cordova in pain, and there dressed, is made the right Cordovan Leather. Finally, here is an Herb, of which if one eat, it is said he will die with laughter; whence came the Proverb, Risus Sardonius. The truth of which report I shall not dispute, though it be by others more probably conjectured, that the Herb being of a poysonous nature, causeth men to die with such a Convulsion or attraction of Sinews, that they seem to grin or laugh at the time of their death.

The people are small of stature, of complexion inclining unto swarthy, and that either by reason of the heat of the Sun, or more probably from their African extraction: their behaviour much participating of that people also. So slothful in the times of the Romans, that people also. They were grown into a Proverb, and a Law made to compel them to work; but now esteemed a very painful and laborious Nation. Much given to hunting, and so prone to Rebellion that the Spaniard permiteth no Cutler to live among them; yet peaceable among themselves, and in some measure courteous unto Strangers also. Their Language a corrupt Catalonian; their diet on meats common and gross, their apparel in the Towns (especially that of the women) gorgeous, in the Villages fardly.

In matters of Religion they are little curious. That which they make most shew of, is according to the Rites and Doctrines of the Church of Rome; which both their Neighbourhood to the Pope, and their subjection to the Spaniard, have imposed upon them. But in their practice of it they are loose enough, going to Mass on Sundays and Saints days; which done they fill a dancing in the middle of the Church, singing in the mean time songs too immodest for the most rude, ignorant, and illiterate of any people in Christendom; saying their Masses rather by rote, than reason, and utterly unable to give any account of their Religion.

It is divided commonly into two parts, viz. Cape Lugudari, toward Corfica and Cape Cagliari, towards Africa: the first the least, and withal mountainous and barren the last the larger level, and by much more fruitful. Chief Cities of the whole, 1. Calaris, first built by the Carthaginians, and situate in that point of the Island which lieth nearest to Africa; which from hence took the name of Cape Cagliari, by which it is at this day called. A City of high fame, when it was first taken by Gracchus, for the use of the Romans, that it is called by Florus, Urbs ubinum; and was destroyed by the said Gracchus, the better to disable the Natives from rebelling against the Conquerors. Being new built again in more solid times, it was a second time destroyed by the Saracens; and finally re-built and beautified by the Pisians, at such time as they were Masters of this part of the Island. Very well fortified by Nature, as seated on the top of an Hill; and hath under it a spacious and goodly Haven, much frequented by Merchants. The Town it self adorned with a beautiful Temple, being the seat of an Archbishop, many fair Turrets, and the constant residence of the Vice-Roy: from whose authority it is exempt by especial privilege, as to the legal Government of it, and ordered by a Common-Council of its own Citizens. 2. Bassa, on the West side of the Island, another Arch-Episcopal See. 3. S. Reparata, on the North, looking towards Corfica. 4. Aquillara, on the Western flowers. 5. Sassari, a Town of consequence, where they have an Aqueduct twelve miles long reaching from thence unto S. Gavini. 6. Algher-basa, a good Town situate in a whollom air, and a fertile soil, and having a fair Haven of six miles in length, in which the Ships of Genoa and Catalonia do most commonly ride. 7. Oreflagne, a large Town, but very ill peopled, by reason of a bad air which proceeds from the fens the Country about which gives title to the Marquess of Oreflagne. 8. Turtis, once a Roman Colony, now little better than a ruin; yet giving title to the third Archbishop of this Island, who is called in Latine, Turtianus. Here are also in divers parts of this Island the remainders of sundry Towers and Forts which the people call Nuraghi from Nura, one of the Sons of Geryon; who (as they think) came into this Country, and built the first dwelling or mansion in it. And this Tradition of the Vulgar hath so much in it of Historical and undoubted truth, that certain Colonies from Spain came and planted here, under the conduct of one Nura; somewhat before the expedition of the Atitick under Iolas, as Pausanias testifieth.

This Island taken by the Romans from the Carthaginians, as before is said, was first under the immediate Jurisdiction of the Prefect of the City of Rome; but after by Justinian was made a Province of his new Diocess of Africa; and as a part thereof or rather an Appendix to it, was challenged, invaded, and finally conquered by the Saracens, Anno 807. From them recovered by the joint-forces of the Pisians and Genoese, who divided it betwixt them: the Southern part, called Cape Cagliari, being allotted to the Pisians, and the Northern towards Corfica, to those of Genoa. But the Genoese not content with the partage, (their portion of the Island being less in quantity, and worse in quality) began to quarrel with the Pisians, and at the last broke into open wars. To part the Fray, Pope Eugene VIII. bestowed it on James King of Aragon, who driving thence the Genoese, Anno 1324. became Master of it. The Aragonians before that did pretend fowle Title to it, in right of the Kingdom of Sicily, then in his possession; to some preceding Kings whereof it had once been sub-ject; and having backed that Claim by the Pope's Donation, who challenged it as a part of St. Peter's Patrimony; incorporated it for ever to the Crown of Aragon. Once indeed it was offered unto Anthony of Bourbon, in exchange for his Title to Navarre, but without any purpose of performance, that being only a device to fetch him off from the party of the Reformed in France, to which he formerly adhered: and was as suddenly laid by, as it if had done the feat intended in the Proposition.

The Government hereof is by a Vice-roy, who resides at Calaris, and must of necessity be a Spaniard under whom are two Deputy Governors, Spaniards also: the one for Cape Cagliari, the other for Cape Lugudari. Inferior Officers of Command may be of the Natives. What profits arise hence to the Crown of Spain, have no where found. The Arms hereof are said to be, Or, a Cross Gules, betwixt four Saracens heads Sable, cutted Argent.

Argent. Which Arms were given upon the taking of it from the power of the Moor: but first taken (as some say) for the Arms of Aragon, on occasion of the heads of four chief Princes of the Moor which were found severed from their bodies in the Batel of Alcoraz, Anno 1094. won by Don Pedro, King of Navarre and Aragon.

There are divers small Islands about Sardinia, as 1. Iola Ruffa, heretofore called Phintanis. 2. The title of Hercules, now called Afinaria. 3. St. Peters, anciently Hieracum, or Acipitrum, with others of as little note: all which as the Appendants of Sardinia, do belong to the Spaniard.

There are in this Island, Archbishops 3. Bishops 15.

The Land of the CHURCH.

WEST OF the Realm of Naples, lieth the LAND OF THE CHURCH, extended North and South from the Adriatick, to the Tuscan Seas. Bounded on the North-east with the River Trontius, on the South-east with the Ausonium, by which two parted from that Kingdom; as on the North-west by the River Po, and Fiore, by which separated from the State of Venice; and on the South-west with the River Pisio, by which it is divided from the Modern Tuscany, or the State of the Florentine.

By this Account the Pope's Dominion taketh up the whole middle of Italy; having in breadth from the one Sea unto the other about two hundred miles, and in length along the Adriatick to the furthest parts of Romandulia, above three hundred. By which advantages it lieth most fitly for the command of all the rest, it being very calie for the Pope to convey their Forces by Sea or Land, unto what part thereof they please. And were it not that the Pope commonly are of several Factions; and that the Successors peruseh not the designs of his Predecessors, but hath his own ends to himself, which for the most part are driven on without consideration of increasing the publick Patrimony; it is not possible, but that the Pope long before this time, had been Lord of all. And this may be conceived the rather, considering the extraordinary fertility of the soyl, able to spare provisions for the greatest Armies: the multitudes of people which it may afford, in regard they are so seldom consumed by Wars; and that the men of this Dominion (but chiefly those of Rome, and the parts adjoining) are conceived to be the best Souldiers of Italy; as retaining fome sparks of their Ancestors valour, together with their gravity, magnificence, and a certain greatness of courage, which seems to be particular to them of this Nation. And they preserve also to this day so much of the ancient Roman, as to prefer any kind of life, before Trades or Merchandize. For though their Lands be very well tilled, and their Vines well dressed, and all things done exactly in the way of Husbandry; yet for their Mansuétude they are brought from other places, as Venice, Naples, Florence, Genoa. And though they have the Sea on both sides, and the advantage of many fair and commodious Rivers and Havens, which with little cost might be made very useful: yet do they no way improve their fortunes, or the publick Patrimony in the way of Trade; which is the main defect of the Papal Policy, and lieth a rich Country full of poor and indigent persons. But to proceed to the description of the Pope's Estate: it containeth the Provinces of 1. Romandulia, 2. the Territory of Ferrara. 3. The Estate of Urbino. 4. Marca Anconitana. 5. Ducato Spoletano with Sabina. 6. St. Peter's Patrimony, and 7. Campagna di Roma.

1. ROMANDIOLA extendeth from the River Iguar (now called Foglia) by which parted from the Dukedom of Urbino on the East, to the Dukedom of Parma on the West, from which parted by the River Panaro, called of old Sulentina: and from the Apennine on the South to Padua, and the Adriatick on the North. It was called anciently Flaminia, from Flaminio the Roman Consul, who having won it from the Gauls planted Colonies in it, and had the honour (though he pursued this War against the will of the Senate) to have it called by his own name: and for the better passage betwixt Rome and this, made a very large Caufway, which for a long time was called Via Flaminia. Chief Rivers herof, besides those spoken of already, which are only borderers, 1. Ariminum, now called Marechia; and 2. Rubicon, now called Iffigello, betwixt Ariminum and Ravenna, of which more anon.

The chief Cities of it are, 1. Bononia (or Bologna) seated in a spacious Plain near the Apennine Hills, a very populous City of a round form, and a great circuit: the building Antique, seeming for the most part to be the work of the Lombards, the foundation of the houses of Free-Rome, the rest of Bricks; built with arched Cloysters towards the street, under which one may walk dry in the greatest rain. A City honoured with many Palaces of the neighbouring Nobles, the chief University of Italy, and the retiring place of the Popes. The Civil Law is much studied here, inasmuch that from hence proceeded the famous Civilians Johannes Andream, Aza, Barthol, and Socinus. I believe they have built Castles in the air, which ascribe the founding of this University to Theodosius II. The Charter of whose foundation dated, Anno 423. is an idle and foolish thing. For there it is said that at the institution there were present Gualter Earl of Padua, Emmanuel, for the King of England; and Baldwin Earl of Flanders, for the King of France: when at that time, neither those Earldoms, or those Kingdoms were in revera natura. It is situate on the River Aposa, and was by former Writers called Felsina. Near unto this Town in a Dismy-land called Forelli, was that meeting, between Angulus, Anthony, and Lepidus; wherein they agreed on the Triumvirate, dividing the Empire and City of Rome among themselves: Which combination was confirmed by the ensuing Proscription; wherein, that they might be revenged on Cicero, Lepidus proscribed his Brother; Anthony, his Uncle. 2. Kimini, anciently called Ariminum, seated on the mouth of the River Ariminum, of no great note, but for giving name unto this City, and now called Marechia. The City large, and seated in a plentiful and pleasant soyl, abundantly productive of Wines, Figs and Olives; wealthy withal, the trade which formerly enriched Ravenna, being for the most part managed here. Divided by the River into the City and the Suburbs, but joined together by a fair and stately Bridge, built over it by Augustus Cesar, who also erected in the City a Triumphal Arch. It is situate somewhat East of the River Rubicon, which in those times divided Italy from Gaul: upon the Bank whereof, looking towards this Town, there was an old Marble Pillar, having on it a Latine Inscription to this purpose, viz. Levebore thy Colours, and lay down thine Arms, and pass not with thy Forces beyond the Rubicon's whitherfore goest against his commands, let him be held an enemy to the people of Rome. Which Rule when Cesar had transgressed, and turpized this City, he so frightened Pompey and his Faction, that they abandoned Italy and Rome it self, and withdrew themselves themselves into Epirus. It is said that Cæsar dreamed the night before, that he carnally knew his own Mother: whereby the Soothsayers gathered that he should be Lord of Rome, which was the common Mother of them all. Which dream, and several prodigies happening at the same time with it, did so encourage him in his enterprise, that he is said, at the passing over Rubicon, to have said these words, Eamus quo nos Decemviri, &c. Let us go whither the fins of our Enemies, and the Wodigies of the Gods do call us. In memory of which warlike, but fortunate action, he caused a monument to be erected in this City, with his name and titles. It was anciently a Roman Colony, and in the bulwicks happening betwixt the Pope and the Emperor, was seized on by the Malabelli, as Bononia was by the Sevizioli, two potent Families of these parts; who held them in defiance of the Popes of Rome, till they were reduced again unto the Church, by Pope Julius the Second. 3. Cervia, on the Adriatick Sea, where there is made so much Salt, that they furnish therewith all their neighbours of Marca Anconitana, and a great part of Lombardy: the Pope receiving for his Customs of this one Commodity, no less than 60000 Crowns per annum. 4. Favilli, (called of old Forum Livii) one of the Towns belonging properly to the Exarchate of Ravenna, seated in a very pleasant air, and a fruitful soil, betwixt two fresh streams; of which the one is called Ravenna, and the other Montonus. 5. Faventia, now called Favenza, on the banks of Anuense, a calm gentle River; an ancient City, but well peopled: much benefited by the Flax which growth in the adjoining fields, and the Earthen Vessels which they vend to most parts of Italy. It was first given unto the Popes by Disiderius the last King of the Lombards, whom they had forcibly required for to grant a courtier. 6. Sassina, an old City, seated at the foot of the Apennine, the birth-place of Plautus the Comedians. 7. Inola, anciently called Forum Cornelli, and 8. Cesena, Cities both of them of no small Antiquity; but this last the fairest build, the better peopled, and the more strongly fortified: there being a strong Castle on the top of an Hill, the work of Frederick II. Emperor and King of Germany. This Town, with that of Sassina, spoken of before, seem to be seated on the banks of the River Rubicon, now called Fifto. 9. Ravenna, situate in the embracements of two Rivers, called Montonus and Ronchus: by the confluence whereof at their fall or influx into the Adriatick, it was one beautified with one of the fairest Havens in the World, and for that cause made the Road of one of the two Navies, which Augustus always kept manned to command the whole Empire of Rome: the other riding at Milennus in Compania. This of Ravenna, being in the upper Sea, armed and defended Dalmatia, Greece, Crete, Cyprus, Affa, &c. the other at Milennus, in the lower Sea, protected and kept under France, Spain, Affick, Egypt, Syria, &c. The Walls of this City are said to have been built or repaired by Theodosius Cæsar: the whole City to have been much beautified by Theodosius King of the Goths, who built here a most stately and magnificent Palace; the ruins whereof are but easily discernable. The private buildings are but mean, the public ones are of a grave, but stately structure. Of which the principal heretofore was the Church of St. Mary the Round, whose roof was of one entire stone, and honoured with the rich Sepulchre of the said King Theodosius: which the Soldiers (in the sack of this City by the French, Anno 1512) pulled down together with the Church itself, only to get the Jewels and Medals of it. The principal at the present is the Church of St. Vitale, the Pavement hereof is all of Marble, and the Walls all covered with precious stones of many sorts, but unpolished as they were taken out of Mines; which sheweth as well the Magnificence as Antiquity of it. The Patriarch of this City, in regard it was so long the Regal and Imperial Seat, have heretofore contended for precedence with the Popes themselves: not brought to yield the place to those proud pretenders, till Donus II. in the short time of his Papacy about the year 975, did in fine prevail. And this they did upon good reasons, this City having been anciently the Metropolis of the Province called Flaminia, afterwards honoured with the Seat of the Emperor Honorius, and his Successors; next of the Goths Kings, then of the Exarch, and last of its Patriarch, which was chosen for this purpose, because of the plentiful Territory, fume covered with water; and the convenience of the Haven, at this day choaked; though lately by expense of a great deal of treasure, the Fens about the City have been very much drained; and the Bogs in some places turned to fruitful fields, to the great benefit hereof both for health and pleasure.

As for the fortunes of this Country, it was anciently together with the Territories of Ferrara, and some part of Trevigiana, the habitation of the Belli, who with the Senones, the Isabures, and the Cenomani, made up the whole body of the Cisalpine Galls, of whom more hereafter. Finding the Romans grown too near them, by whom the Senner their next neighbours had been rooted out, they thought it was high time to bestir themselves, especially after the defeat given them by the Consul Minutius, who carried the War home unto them; which never any of the Romans had done before. For after this, under Caraculus their King, they set upon Marcus the Consul, killing 3000 of his men, but vanquished and subdued by him in a following Battel. Vanquished again not far from Minna by Cornelius Merita, with the loss of 14000 of their men, they called both the Isaburian and Transalpine Galls to come in to aid them. But being then vanquished also at the Battel of Telamon (of which more in Lombardy) A.U.C. 528, they were followed home, and utterly subdued by the Consul Flaminius, as before was said: after which times this Country following the same fortunes with the rest of Italy, became subject to the Goths, as a part of their Italian Conquests: whose Kingdom here was no sooner destroyed by Narsis, but the Lombards entered. To give a stop to whose successes, and preserve so much unto the Empire as was not already conquered by them; it was thought good by Justin II. to send thither an Imperial Officer of principal command and note, whom he honoured with the title of Exarch. His residence settled at Ravenna, as standing most commodiously to hinder the incursions of the barbarous Nations; and withal to receive such aids from the Eastern parts, as his occasions did require. These Exarchs having divided Italy into many Governments, appointed over each some Supreme Commander, dignified with the name of Dukes. And even now the City of Rome it self (so far then was it from being subject to the Pope in Temporal matters) had a chief Officer of this kind (acceptable to the Exarch, and subordinate to him) whose Government was called the Roman Dukedom. That which they kept unto themselves as their own peculiar, contained the Cities of Ravenna, Rhegium, Minna, Bononia, Cassil, Forli, Forlimpopoli, Sarfina, Parma, and Placentia: which ten Cities with the Territories belonging to them, made up that District which properly was called the Exarchate of Ravenna; much mentioned in the Histories of the middle times, by reason of the continual Wars which they had with the Lombards, but newly entered when this Magistracy had its first beginning. The names of these Exarchs are as followeth.

The Exarchs of Ravenna.

A.C.

- 570 1 Longinus 21.
- 591 2 Smaragdus 4.
- 595 3 Romanus Patricius.
- 596 4 Gallinicus 13.
- 609 5 Smaragdus 3.
- 612 6 Joh. Lamigius 4.
- 616 7 Eluberius 5.
- 621 8 Isaacus Patricius 24.
- 645 9 Theodorus Calliopius 10.
- 655 10 Olympius 2.
- 657 11 Theodorus Calliopius, II. 30.
- 687 12 Joh. Platina 15.
- 702 13 Theophilactus 25.
- 727 14 Paulus.

728 15 Eutichius 12. In the days of this Exarch, Ravenna was taken from the Empire, by Loisigarius King of the Lombards, An. 746. But regained by Charles the Great, and by him given to the Bishops of Rome, together with Acumonia and Spoleto, as a requital for the Kingdom of France, conferred unto King Pepin his Father, by the consent and authority of the Popes. The donation of this Exarchate to the Popes, partly to blot out the memory of the Exarchs, and partly to make the people obedient to those Prelates, changed the name of the Country from Flaminia (by which name it was formerly known) to Romandolia, and now to Romagna. Notwithstanding which Donation, or Original Grant, the Popes enjoyed not long the possession of it: The Emperors of Germany, and their Vice-gerents in Italy, writing it by strong hand out of the possession of the Church; and giving it to such as deserved well of them, and were most likely, or most able to uphold their Faction. And so it stood, till the late Popes conspiring with the French Kings, Lewis the 12, and Francis the first, brought them into Italy, Anno 1509. and by their aids, and by the censure of the Church, to prevail in fine, that they extorted Ravenna, and some other places, out of the hands of the Venetians, ejected many petty Princes out of other Cities, which they pretended to belong to St. Peter's Patrimony; and thereby got possession of all those Territories, which lie betwixt the State of Venice, and the Marches of Ancona.

2. The Territory of FERRARA lieth in the very skirts of Romandolia towards the Vention, extending one hundred and sixty miles in length, and about fifty in breadth: the soil thereof exceeding rich, but (subject to the overflows of the River Po; which makes the air in many places to be somewhat unwholesome. And though as well the former Dukes as the Popes, who are now Lords hereof, have been at great charge in raising high banks and Ramparts to keep in the Waters: yet could not this relict the violence of the River, falling from so high a Spring, and seconded with so great Land-floods (as sometimes it is) but that it makes many breaches in them, do what they can. The places of most note herein, are 1. Grassignan in the borders of Tuscany, near the Apennine. 2. Carpi, a place of great importance, seated in the middle of this Dukedom; belonging heretofore to the house of the Pici. But partly by exchange made with Marcus Pius, partly for one hundred thousand Crowns in ready money, given unto Lionel Pico, once the Lord hereof, it was by Charles the 5. incorporated into this Estate. 3. Comacchia, seated in the Marshes of the Adriatick, from which the Princes of this Family of Este, were at first called only Lords of Comacchia; a place which yielded great profit to the former Duke, by the fishing of Eels. 4. Saviole, given by Duke Alphonso in exchange for Carpi. Here is also the Territory and Lordship of the Polefins, the cause of so many quarrels and contentions between the ancient Dukes of Ferrara and the States of Venice. But the chief honour of this Dukedom is in the Capital City that which denominates the whole. Ferrara, a City of five miles in compass, so called from the Iron Mines which are about it; commodiously seated on the River Po, which by reason of its breadth, depth and violent swiftnes of the current, is a sufficient rampart to it on that side; the other sides being fortified with a strong wall, and a spacious mote. In the middle of the City is a fair and spacious Market-place, into which do open on all sides about twenty Streets, all of them half a mile in length; and all so freight and evenly built, that the furthest end of each of them may be easily seen. Near to this Market-place is a little Mland, in which the former Dukes had a stately Palace, called Estudero, from the fair Prospect which it had or gave to the whole City; and on the North-side of the City a large Park for pleasure. The other houses are for the most part built of fair Free-stone, not joining unto one another as in other Cities, but at pretty distance with neat Gardens between. Arights, the Author of that ingenious Poem called Orlando Furioso, and Eleonore Savanarolo the Prophetical Friar, were both of them natives of this place: of which the first lieth here entombed, the last for preaching against the Pope, was burnt at Florence.

In the declining of the Power and Empire of the Lombards, this City together with Ravenna was given by Disiderius their last King, to the Church of Rome, the better to oblige the Popes by so great a benefit. But being taken from them by the Emperors of the house of Schwaben, it was again recovered by the prowess of the Countess Mathildis An. 1107, who took it, with many other Towns in Italy, from the Emperor Henry the fourth, and at her death conferred the same upon the Church. The Popes once more possessed hereof, and not able to hold it, gave it in Fee for ever unto Azzo of the house of Este, a man of great sway in the affairs of Italy, who valiantly had defended it against Ezzelinus, Vicegerent of Frederick the second. This was the first of this Family who had Ferrara in propriety: His Ancestors being called before, the Marquesses of Este, and sometimes Marquesses of Ferrara, (but in title only) as Governors hereof in behalf of the Pope of Rome. Obizzo the Grandchild of this first Azzo, obtained of Rodolphus the first, (who was willing to make what money he could of his Lands in Italy) the Cities of Rhegium and Modona; that Grant confirmed by Guido Legat of Pope Benedict the ninth, with the Popes consent, Anno 1204. Other improvements thereof were made by the following Princes, according to the chance of War, but none of them continued constant in their possession but these three Cities and the Territories adjoining to them. As for this Family of Este (Familia Austria, it is called in Latin) it took this name from Este, or Astis, a small Town in the Signory of Verice, conferred upon the Ancestors of this Azzo, by Charles the Great. And for the Chiefs, or Princes of it, they have been of great authority and power in their several times, commanding sometimes the Venitian Armies, and sometimes the Popes: great favourers of Learned men, and advancers of Learning; in whom that the Reinold's and Rogers of Este, make up a great part of the Poems of Arigho and Tasso, two of the greatest Wits of Italy; and finally allied to many of the best Houses of Christendom. The Catalogue of whom, since they were made the Hereditary Lords and Princes of this noble City, I have here subjoined.

The

The Dukes and Marquesses of Ferrara.

- 1236 1 Adius, or Azo de Este, the ninth of that name, but first Hereditary Marquess of Ferrara, by the Grant of the Pope.
- 1264 2 Obizzo, the sixth of that name, Grandson to Azo by his Son Reinaldo, second Marquess of Ferrara.
- 1293 3 Azo, the tenth of Este, and II. of Ferrara, Son to Obizzo.
- 1308 4 Francisco, Brother to Azo the 2. after whose death, Anno 1312. Ferrara for a time was under the command of the Popes.
- 1312 5 Alabrandinus, Brother of Franciscus, who had the Title to, but not the possession of Ferrara.
- 1315 6 Reinaldo the 3. of Este, and the first of Ferrara, recovered Ferrara from the Pope, and cast out his Garrisons. 1317.
- 1335 7 Obizo II. Brother of Reinaldo.
- 1352 8 Alabrandino II. Son of Obizo.
- 1361 9 Nicolao the 2. of Este, and third of Ferrara, Brother of Alabrandino, whose children being young he dispossest of the Estate.
- 1388 10 Alberto, Brother of Nicolao, the Founder of the University of Ferrara. Anno 1392.
- 1382 11 Nicolao II. base son of Albertus.
- 1441 12 Leonorus, the base Son of Nicolao, in the minority of his Brother Hercules, begot in lawful Wedlock, invaded the Estate, and held it.
- 1450 13 Borfius, another of the base Sons of Nicolao 2. succeeded Leaut in the Estate; who being made Duke of Modina by Frederick the 3. was by Pope Paul created Duke of Ferrara also, Anno 1470.
- 1471 14 Hercules, the lawful Son of Nicolao the 2. made Knight of the Garter, by King Edward 4.
- 1505 15 Alphonso, the Son of Hercules.
- 1534 16 Hercules II. Son of Alphonso.
- 1559 17 Alphonso II. who dying without lawful issue, Anno 1595. Pope Clement 8. challenged this Estate in the right of the Church; and partly by force, partly by composition (whereof we shall say more when we come to Modena) united it for ever to the See of Rome.

The yearly Revenues of this Dukedom were heretofore two hundred and fifty thousand Crowns: now not so much worth unto the Pope, by reason of the Alienation of Modena and Reggio; of which more hereafter.

The Arms of these Dukes (which for the honour of this noble and illustrious Family, and for the transgress of the Coast, I shall here put down) were Pale-wise of three pieces, 1. Partie per Fesse, in a chief Or, an Eagle displayed Sable, membered, langued, and crowned Gold; and in base Azure, three Flowers de Lys Or, within a Border indented Or and Gules. 2. Gules, two Keys in Saltire, the one Or, the other Argent, charged in Fesse, with an Echocheon of pretence Azure, supporting an Eagle of the third, membered and crowned of the second. Over all in chief a Papal Crown Or, garnished with fundry Gems Azure and Purple. The 3. as the first Counterplaced. Which Coat upon the falling of the House of Ferrara, doth now belong to that of Modena and Reggio, as descended of it.

3. From the Territory of Ferrara proceed we to the Estate of Urbine; both Dukedoms and distinct Estates till these later times: this last the younger of the two, and consequently (as in the ordinary course of Nature) the survivor also; but swallowed at last into the Popedom as the other was. Bounded on the West with the River Janus (now called Foglia) by which parted from Romandula, on the East from Marca Anconitana, on the North with the Adriatick, and on the South with the Apennine Hills, by which parted from Tuscany. So called from Urbine the chief City of it, and the Ducal Seat. It is in length about 60 miles, 35 in breadth: Some pieces and Estates belonging anciently to the Church, lying intermingled with the Lands and Signeuries which belonged to the Dukes.

The soil is very fruitful of Corn, Wine, and Oyl, plentiful of Figs and other fruits of most pleasant taste; and in a word, affording all things necessary for the life of man. But the air is generally unwholesome, especially about Pesaro and Fossimbrown, by reason of the low flats and overflows of the water. The principal Commodities which they vend abroad, are the Wines of Pesaro, sold in great abundance to the Venetians; and dried Figs, which they vend unto Bolognes, and other places.

The most famous River is Metaurus, (now called Mtremo) and a famous one it is indeed, by reason of that Battel fought on the banks thereof, betwixt Astrubal the Brother of Aniball, and his Carthaginians; and the two Consuls Livius and Cl. Nero: in which, after a long and hot dispute, the victory fell unto the Romans; there being 56000 of the Carthaginians slain, (as Livy writeth) and 5400 taken prisoners. Polybim speaks of a less number both slain and taken; and like enough it is that Livy, to advance the honour of that Family, might enlarge a little. But whatsoever was the truth in this particular, certain it is, that this victory turned the tide of the Roman Fortune, which from this time began to flow again upon them: the Citizens of Rome beginning at this time to trade and traffick, to follow their affairs, and make contracts, and bargains with one another, which they had long forborn to do: and that with secure confidence, as if Aniball were already beaten out of Italy. This famous River rich in the Apennine Hills, and passing by Fossimbrown, a Town of this Dukedom, falls into the Adriatick.

There are reckoned into this Dukedom seven Towns or Cities, (four of which are Episcopal Sees) and three hundred Castles. The principal of which are, 1. Urbine, one of the most ancient Cities of Italy, which both Tacitus and Pliny mention; a fair Town, well built, and the Duke's ordinary seat in Summer. It is seated at the foot of the Apennine Hills, in a very rich and pleasant soil, built in the fashion of a Miter, and therefore called Urbium, quod ubi binae continere videtur. Francisco Ubaldo the first Duke, built here a very sumptuous Palace, and therein founded a most excellent Library, replenished with a great number of rare Books, covered and garnished with Gold, Silk, and Silver; all scattered and dispersed in the time that Cesar Borgia seized on the Estate. Polydore Virgil, the Author of the History of England, which passeth under his name, was a Native here: an History of worth enough as the times then were, except only in such passages as concern the Pope (the collector of whole Peter-pence he was then in England) whose credit and Authority he preferreth sometimes, before truth itself. 2. Pesaurum, now called Pesaro, the strongest Town of all the Dukedom, two miles in compass, and fortified according to the modern Art of War: the fortifications of it being first begun by Francisco Maria and perfected by Guido Ubaldo, his Son and successor: the ordinary seat of the Duke in Winter, well Garrisoned, and therefore trusted with the publick Armory. It is seated near the shore of the Adriatick, at the mouth or influx influx of the River Janus, which parts it from Romagna: populous, of handom buildings, and a very strong wall, the soil exceeding rich, but the air so bad, that partly in regard of that, and partly by their eating of too much fruits, nothing is more frequent here than Funerals, especially in the month of August; few of the Inhabitants living to be fifty years old. 3. Sengalle, called anciently Sena Gallica, (Gallica being added to it to difference it from another of that name in Tuscany) a strong and well fenced City near the River Metaurus, over which there is a Bridge consisting of eighty Arches, made of that length, not so much in regard of the breadth of the Chancel, as the frequent overflowings of that turbulent Water. 4. Fossimbrown, called in old Authors Forum Sempronii, for air and soil of the same nature with Pesaurum; bought by D. Frederick of Galacezza Malatesta for thirteen hundred Florins of Gold. 5. Cabo or Cagli on the Sea. 6. S. Leon, a good Town, and the chief of the Country of Montefiore, which is a limb of this Dukedom, anciently belonging to the Church of Rome; of old time called Fortuna Fortuna, from a Temple there erected to Goddess Fortuna (Te facimus Fortuna deam, as the Poet hath it.) 8. Engubium (now called Angubio) a Town belonging to these Princes, but properly within the bounds of the Spoltan Dukedom; and there we shall hear further of it. Of the Castles the principal are Marivola, and the Rock of S. Leon, which were the last that held good for Duke Guido Ubaldo against Cesar Borgia, Duke of Valentinus, Son to Pope Alexander the sixth; and the first which did return again under his obedience. For which cause when he fled the second time from the said Borgia, he dismantled all his other Castles, as being more likely to admit than resist the Invader; and these two last being very well fortified, he left to keep possession of the Country for him.

Here is also within the limits of this Estate, the Dukedom of CAMERINO, an ancient and well peopled Town, of a strong natural situation amongst the Hills: an Estate holden of the Church by the noble Family of Varenna till the time of Pope Paul the third; when Julius II. of Varenna the heir thereof, conveyed it by marriage unto Guido Ubaldo Duke of Urbine. But the Pope pretending an Elcheat for want of heirs males, made himself Master of it by force of Arms; and gave it to his Son Filippo Farnesi, whom afterwards with the consent of the College of Cardinals he made Duke of Parma; and seated Camerino on the Church, as it still continues.

As for the fortunes of this Country, it was anciently the habitation of the Senones, a Nation of the Cisalpine Galls, who only had the honour of sacking Rome, to which City it continued subject, till the declining of the Empire in the time of Honorius. They being rooted out at last (of which more in Lombardy) and the Country peopled with Roman or Latin Colonies, it followed the fate fortunes with the rest of Italy, till the time of Conradine, the last Duke of the Imperial House of Swabia, when Urbine was first subdued by the Earls of Montefiore, whose Successors increasing in power, added the Town and Territory of Engubio to it. And in the bulles betwixt Leopold of Bavaria the Emperour, and Pope Clement the sixth, Anno 1345. Guido di Montefiore held it under no other Title, but as the Emperour's Viceroy. This Family enjoyed it till the year 1444. by the Title only of Earls of Montefiore, and Lords of Urbine when Frederick Ubaldo, for his singular and surpassing valour, was by Pope Engenius the fourth, created the first Duke thereof: to hold as Feudatories of the Church, and paying 2240 Crowns for an Annual quit-rent. A man of such repute for all gallant qualities, that he was by King Henry the sixth, made Knight of the Garter; in recompence of which high honour, the English to this day enjoy many privileges in these Dominions. Guido Ubaldo this Duke's Son lost his Estate to Cesar Borgia; after whose death he did recover it again by the power and favor of Pope Julius the second, to whom succeeded Francisco Maria di Rovero, his Sifters Son, in whose Family it continued till now of late, as may appear by this ensuing Catalogue of

The Dukes of Urbine.

- 1444 1 Frederick Ubaldo, of the ancient Family of Montefiore the first Duke of Urbine, and one of the Knights of the honourable Order of the Garter.
- 2 Guido Ubaldo*, Son of Frederick, for a while outed of this Dukedom by Cesar Borgia. He was Knight also of the Garter.
- 3 Francisco Maria di Rovero*, Sifters Son and next heir to Guido Ubaldo, was in his own right Lord of Sengallia, and had Pisero from the Pope in reward of his many services done unto the Church; disfigured for a while by Pope Leo the tenth.
- 4 Lawrence di Medices*, Father of Catherine di Medices the French Queen, and of Alexander the 1. Duke of Florence; was for a while made Duke of Urbine by Pope Leo the 10th (being of that Family) but lost it shortly after to Duke Francisco, who after the death of Pope Leo, recovered his estates again, and died possessed of the Dukedom.
- 1538 5 Guido Ubaldo II. Son of Duke Francisco.
- 6 Francisco Maria II.* Son of Guido the 2d, whose line expired, it elcheated not long since (for want of heirs males) to the Church of Rome.

The Revenues of this Dukedom were reckoned to have been 100000 Crowns per annum; but might have been raised to a greater sum, had not the Dukes preferred the love and ease of their Subjects, before the filling of their own Coffers. He was able to raise 1200 good Soldiers out of this Estate; and more the people would supply, if they had occasion. The Arms heretofore a Tower Argent, environed with Flowers de Lys Or.

4. MARCA ANCONITANA is bounded on the West with the State of Urbine, on the East with the River of Tronto, or Drenatus, by which it is parted from Abruzzo, on the South with the Apennine Hills, by which parted from the Spoltan Dukedom; on the North with the Adriatick. The reason of the name we shall have anon.

It was formerly the dwelling of the Picentes, possessed all these parts on the Coasts of the Adriatick, from the River Rubicon on the East, to that of Anfidum on the West. For aiding the Tarentine their Allies, in their War against Rome, they were invaded and subdued by the Romans A.U.C. 485, which was about five years before the first Punic War, under the conduct of Sempronius; at which time they were so great and multitudinous a Nation, that they were numbered to amount to 360000 which were then brought under the Command and Vassalage of the Roman Empire. When Italy was divided into no more than eight Regions, these Picentes only made up one; so did they also when divided into eleven. Afterwards, in the time of the Antonins, they made up one of the sixteen Provinces, into which Italy was divided by those Emperors; and the same repute it held in the time of Constantine, Picenum making always one. Anselmus capri gavis, as Florus calls it, which was the head of their nation, being the Metropolis of the Province.

Called in those times Picenum Annonarium, partly by reason of the abundance of grain which it did produce, and partly to distinguish from the dwelling of the Picentini, which from its nearness unto Rome, had the name of Picenum Subvolaturnum; that part of Campania at this time, which is called the Principate. In the declining of the Empire, it was first called Marca Firmiana, from Firmo: once a Roman Colony, and at that time of most importance in the Country; but by transferring the chief seat from Firmo to Avicena, in the time of the Lombards, it came to have the name of Avicenniana. The chief Rivers, besides those named already, which are only borderers, are, 1. Chientus, 2. Sentina, and 3. Potenis; all rising in the Apennine, and passing with a twist course to the Adriatick Sea.

The chief Towns, 1. Avicena, seated on the Hill Cimmerius (shooting into the Sea, glorying in giving name to the Province, and her Haven built by Trajan the Emperor: one of the fairest of the World, not so much for capacity, as the pleasantness and beauty of it: the descents down unto the Water being made of Marble, and very delectable walking on all sides of it. The City it self is begirt with Hills, on one of which Pope Clement the seventh built a very strong Castle. Anno 1532, under pretence of defending the Town against the Turks, but indeed to keep the people in more full subjection, who till that time, did yearly choose their own Magistrates, and lived according to their own Laws, like a Commonwealth. 2. Recanati (heretofore Ælia Reatina), seated upon the banks of the River Mulio, renowned for the great concourse of Merchants from all parts of Europe, at her Annual Markets; and a vein of the most excellent Wines. 3. Firmo, tornamed the Strong; in former times of most esteem in all the Province which was hence called Marca Firmiana; and to this day, a place of great strength and consequence; and an Archbishop See. 4. Macerata, now of most credit; by reason that the Popes Legati keeps his residence there, and with him the Chancery for his Marquisate. 5. Loreto, called in Latin Lauritana, a little City betwixt Recanati and the Sea; well fortified against the Turks, and other Pirates who once spoiled the same, and might be easily tempted thither on the like occasions: The Church here being admirably rich, and frequented by Pilgrims from all parts, to pay their devotions unto our Lady of Loreto, and to behold her Miracles. Concerning the removal of whole Chamber litters, in our description of Palladine, you shall meet with a very proper Legend. 6. Aso, situated the Fair, seated at the influx of the River Druentum, and on the uttermost side of it towards Avicena, to which by some it is ascribed. Anciently the chief City of the Picentia, as before is said, and then called Asculum, conquered by the Romans, under the conduct of Sempronius, A.U.C. 485. Near unto this City, was fought the second Battle between C. Fabritius and the Romans on the one side, and Pyrrhus with the Epirians on the other; wherein the Victory (as Plutarch telleth us) fell to the King, having slain 6000 of his Enemies; but yet with such loss on his side also, that he affirmed to some of his Friends and followers, That such another Victory would quite undo him; and with such apparancy of valour and virtue in the Romans, that he could not but break forth into this acclamation: O quam facile esset avire vincere, aut mihi, Romanis militibus, aut me rege, Romanis! This Town also was the seat of a War called Bellum sociale, raised by the people of Italy against the Romans; Popedius being both Author of the Rebellion, and Captain. They for a while forely flaked the state of Rome, but at last were vanquished, and this Town by Strabo Pompeii forced and spoiled. 7. Adria, now not otherwise famous, than that it gave denomination to the adjoining Sea, and the Emperor Adrian. 8. Humana, which together with Avicena, was given to Pope Zachary, by Leoprandus King of the Lombards, about the year 741. The succeeding Popes after the giving of this Inch, took the whole Ell.

5. Having surveyed the Provinces of the Church along the Adriatick, we must next cross the Apennine, which parts the Marches of Avicena from the Dukedom of Spoleto (DUCATO SPOLETANO the Italian call it) which takes up the Western part of that Province, which the old Romans called Umbria: and therefore before we come to the description of this, we must a little look on the state of that. A Country bounded on the East with the River Aniene, dividing it from the East parts of Latiun; on the West with Tufcia or Hetruria; on the North, with the Apennine; on the South, with the reaches or windings of the Tiber, the main body of Latiun, and with that part of Tufcia which is now called St. Peter's Patrimony. So called, because being situate under the shade of the Apennine Hills, it was Regio Umbria. Some give another reason of it, that the Inhabitants were called Umbri, quasi Umbra, as men that had escaped the Deluge; because to ancient people, that no body could tell the Original of them.

But whatsoever was the reason of the name, they were a stout and valiant people, and gave the chief check to Annibal's career, after his great Victory at Thrasymus, repelling him with loss and shame from the Walls of Spoleto: yet not of power sufficient, for all their valour, to preserve their Country from the Tuscani, who are said to have destroyed in it 300 good Towns. Made by that means, if not plainly subject, yet obnoxious to the will and pleasure of the Vibores, that at their influence or command they sided with them in a War against the Romans (whom formerly they had found very quiet neighbours;) and by the Romans were subdued together with the rest of the Confederates then in Arms against them, A. U. C. 458. Decius and Qu. Fabius then in the fifth time Consuls, which was about 77 years before Annibal fell into their Country. After which time in such esteem, that it was one of the eleven Regions into which Italy was divided by Augustus Cæsar; and finally, together with Tufcia, made up a Province of the Empire.

As for the Dukedom of Spoleto, it taketh up the Western parts of the Province of Umbria, as before was said, included betwixt the Apennine, the Tiber, and the River Nar, by which last (now called Nera) it is divided from Sabinia, or the Land of the Sabinæ. The Country of a mixt nature, equally composed of very rough Hills, and yet most delectable Vallies; exceeding plentiful of all necessities, and much commended heretofore for the extraordinary fecundity of the Women. The Wine heretofore is much commended by Marialis, as the best of Italy.

De Spoletanis que sunt carissima Lageris
Malueris, quam si multa Falerna bibas.

That is to say,

If with Spoleto bottles once you meet,
Say that Falerno Must is not so sweet.

Places of greatest note herein, 1. Spoleto, built partly on the Hill, and partly on the lower ground; the residence heretofore of one of the four Dukes of the Lombardians, who governed as Vice-roys, or Lord presidents, of the remoter parts of that Kingdom: from whence whence the County round about it, was called Ducatus Spoletanus. It is still a Town of good esteem, populous, and of handsom building; and hath a strong Fortified for defence thereof, built upon the ruins of an old Amphitheatre: to which men pass over a great Bridge of stone, upheld by 24 great Pillars, which joyns two Mountains together; having between them a deep Valley, but narrow and without any Water. Thordrick the Goths built a fair Palace in this City, rebuilt by Narsus but since ruined. 2. Engubium (now called Angubis) seated on the foot of the Apennine; in or near that place where anciently stood that City which Pliny calls Unguinum; Polony Iuvium; utterly subverted by the Goths. A Town well seated in a fruitful and wealthy soil, and blessed with an industrious people: acknowledging the Dukes of Urbine for Lords thereof, till that estate was swallowed up into the Popedom. 3. Nuceria, (now Nocera) in Pliny's time called Alfaterna, at the foot also of the Apennine; the people of which in former times much traded in their wooden vessel. 4. Affinum, or Affe, destroyed almost to nothing in the Civil Wars of Italy, and only famous at this time, for a See Episcopal, and being the birth-place of St. Francis; the Founder of the Franciscans, or Cordeliers, as the French call them, but we in England the Gray-Friars. 5. Citta de Castello, anciently Tiberdunum, on the banks of Tiber. 6. Tuderum, now called Todi, seated near the Tiber, on the declivity of a rich and fruitful Hill.

The rest of Umbria towards the East, not being within the compass of the Spoleto Dukedom, but under the command of the Popes of Rome, is by late Writers called SABINIA, because the dwelling in times past, of the ancient Sabinæ: who being taken into Rome, and made Free Denizens of that City in the time of Romulus, upon the League concluded betwixt him and Tatius, then the King of this people, for a long time lived under the protection of that mighty City. But after joyning with the Latins in a War against it, they were subdued by Curius Dentatus the Roman Consul, and made a subject Province of that common-wealth, A. U. C. 463. But though the Sabinæ, at this time bare away the name, yet were they not sole Masters of it in these elder times; the greatest part hereof being possessed by some Nations of the Umbri, by whom by a general name they call of Vulturni (the Sabinæ interjected betwixt them and Rome) and as a member of that body, subdued together with the rest of the Umbri by the conquering Romans. Afterwards in the division of Italy made by Antoninus, it was called Nursia; and in that made by Constantine, it was contained within the new Province of Valeria: Reate being the Metropolis, or head City of both. A Territory of no great circuit, but abundantly fruitful in Oyl or Olives, Vines and Fig-trees; watered with the River Farfarus, which cutteth through the very middle of it; and with the Lake called anciently Lacus Velinus (now Laco di Pedesina) esteemed to be the Centre or Navel of Italy by some ancient Writers; the waters of which are of such a nature, that in short time they will cloath a piece of wood with a coat of stone, and yet yieldeth excellent Trouts, and other good Fish. The Towns and Cities of most note, are, 1. Reate (now called Rieti) an ancient City; and the Metropolis heretofore of all this Tract; as well when it was called Nursia, as when it was under the name of Valeria. 2. Nursia, a City no less ancient, seated amongst the Hills, which for the most part are covered with snow; from which Town, being heretofore of more reputation, the province of Nursia, spoken of in the Itinerary of Antoninus, took denomination. 3. Magliano, a pleasant and well-peopled Town, at this time the principal of this Territory.

4. Oriculum, built amongst many Fruitful Hills, a mile from Tiber. 5. Narnia, the Country and Birth-place of the Emperor Nerva, the first of all the Emperours not born in Rome, as after him there were few born in it. The soil about it is of so different and strange a nature, that it is said to be made dirty by the Sun and winds, and dusty by Rain: the City well-peopled, and a Bishops See, seated upon a very steep and craggy Hill, not far from the River Nar (now Negra) from which perhaps it took the name. A City given unto the Church of Rome by Lauprandus, King of the Lombards; of which the Popes of Rome having got possession, never left practising till they had got into their power all the rest of the Country. Little else famous in the whole Region of Umbria, but that in the Western part thereof, is the Lake, called Lacus Vademonius, near to Amelia, now called Amelia, a Town of the Dukedom, where Dolabella overthrew such of the Senones, a valiant Nation of the Galls, as had escaped the Sword of Camillus, Quintilius, Curius, and other fortunate Commanders in the Wars against them; Ne qui exaret in ea gens (saith the Historian) qui incensam à se Romanis gloriarentur: a former slaughter being made of them by Camillus, on the banks of Aniene, the Eastern limit of this Umbri.

5. S. PETER'S PATRIMONY, properly and specially so called, is that part of Tufcia which appertains unto the Church; bounded upon the East with Tiber, which divides it from Latiun, or Campagna di Roma; on the West, with the River Piso, which falleth into the Sea near the Mountain of Argentaria and parteth it from the estate of the great Duke of Tufcia; on the North, with the Apennine and the Spoleto Dukedom, on the South with the Tuscan or Tyrrhenian Sea. It took this new name presently on the donation of the Countess Matildis, who gave it for ever unto the Church, An. 1100. (Pajal the second sitting in the Chair of Rome) to be the Patrimony of S. Peter, and his successors in that See. A Country not inferior unto any in Italy, for the fertility of the soil: but for the most part of an unhealthy Air, by reason of the frequent overflowings of Tiber, and the thick woods which hinder that the winds cannot purge and cleanse it.

The principal Cities, and places of most observation, are 1. Perugia, formerly called Perusia; a famous Town, in which Augustus beleeved L. Antonius the brother, and Falsia the wife of M. Antony the Triumvir, who when they had in vain attempted to seduce Rome from his party, repaired to this City; which also at the last, yielded to the more fortunate emperor. Augustus afterwards, having much adorned and beautified it, caused it to be called Augusta; but it returned not long after, to its ancient name. It is seated very pleasantly on the banks of Tiber, not far from the Apennine, in a very rich and fruitful soil; well built both for the publick and private structures; a Bishops See and made an University, An. 1090. In the distractions of Italy betwixt the Emperors and the Popes, this City was seized on by the Bailiuns, who held it as Vicars of the Church. The Odier, an opposite faction to them, having got together a strong party of Malecontents, so suddenly entered one night into the City, that the Bailiuns began to fly: nor was there any thing to hinder them from being Masters of the Palace, but the Chain which was drawn cross the Gate. One of the Soldiers going about to cut this Chain, and wanting room to wield his arm, cried aloud Give back; which words being heard, but not well understood by those hurst off, put them to their heels; and the foremost, which thought they fled not for nothing, ran away too. So the City was saved. 2. Ostia, seated on to high a Rock, that it is no small fort TOUR to look down from the top of it, into the vallies beneath; in which there is a Church of a wondrous lightness, and yet the Windows of the fame (it we may credit Adrianus who reports it) are made of Alabaster, instead of Glass. 3. Viterbo, famous for the long residence of the Popes, at such time as they were affronted by the Roman Senators. 4. Civita Vecchia (called anciently Cornetulle) the only useful Haven that belongeth to Rome; which being ruined by the Saracens, was rebuilt by the Popes, new named, and fortified with a very strong Castle for the defence of their Shipping. 5. Porto, seated on the mouth of Tiber, over against Ofis but cannot make one good Haven betwixt them both; a Bishops See, who is one of the seven Cardinals which is always assiduous to the Pope. 6. Farnese, the ancient Seat and Patrimony of the Farnesii, now Dukes of Parma. 7. Bracciano, which gives the title of a Duke to a branch of the Orsini, a well-known Family of those parts. 8. Racchiano, near the last in found, although not in site; compassed round about with Hills in form of a Theatre, having a fair Lake in the midst; out of which runneth the River Cremora, near which the Fabii were slain.

Here was in this Country also the City of the Veii, affirmed to be as big as Athena, but questionks of great wealth and power; in a War against which, managed for the most part by the aforelaid Fabii, 306 of them were slain in a day, at the Battel of Cremora, a petit River of the Tyberina: only one little child of them being left at home, who restored the house; and was the Ancestor of that Fabius Maximus who preserved Italy, in the wars with Annibal. Of which great slaughter, thus faith Ovid,

——— Videntibus Arvis
Ter centum Fabii, ter occidere duos.

——— On the Vesentian Plain
Three hundred and six Fabii were slain.

This City of the Veii was at last after a ten years siege taken by Publius Cornelius, and by him levelled with the earth; because he thought that the common people of Rome had a mind to leave their own City, and inhabit here. Here is also that fatal River of Alia, high unto which Bronnus and his Galli, (that people, as shall be shown hereafter, having 200 years before been drawn into Italy, by the sweet taste of the Italian Wines) slaughtered the Romans: the Roman Army at that time consisting of 40000 Soldiers, most of them being raw and unexperienced; the Galli not more in number, but naturally of a more fierce and hardy courage, and without all big-boned, that it seemeth they were born to be the terror of mankind, and the ruin of Cities. Which overthrow at Alia, and the vanquishment of the Fabii, happening in one day, though in divers years, occasioned the old Romans to put that day among those unfortunate days, on which they never did attempt any bulwicks of importance. The like account, whether on superstition, or fear of ill-luck, is used by many Christians; and especially on Childrenmas: da: on which Philipp de Comines telleth us: that Leuis the 11. used not to debate of any matter, but accounted it a sign of some great misfortune towards him, if any man communed with him of his affairs; and would be marvelously displeased with those that were near him, if they troubled him with any matter whatsoever. In this particular, little less superstitions (if not more) than the ancient Romans. And finally, here is the famous Lake called Thrasymene (now Lago di Perugia, from the nearness of it to that City) where Annibal slew Flaminius the Consul, and 15000 of his Romans: which fight continued three hours, with so great an eagerness, that the Soldiers perceived not a terrible Earthquake which at that time happened.

6. CAMPAGNA DI ROMA, containeth that part of Italy, which anciently was called Latium, the habitation of the Latins, and seat of Rome; so called, for that it is adjoining to that famous City, as the more proper Territory, and precinct thereof. It is sometimes also called Campania nova, to difference it from Campania properly so called; the seat and dwelling of the Campani. It is bounded on the East with the said Campania, from which it is parted by the River Asoletus, on the West, with Tiber; on the North with Umbria, or the now Ducato Spoletano, and Sabinia; and on the South, with the Tyrrhenian, or Tuscan Sea: and came unto the Popes by no other Title, than as they had the Sovereignty and possession of the City of Rome, to which it always did belong.

The old Inhabitants were the Latins, as before is said, but subdivided into many petit and inferior Tribes, such as the Aqui, Volsci, Fidenates, and others of as little note, to the number of thirty, all vanquished piece-meal by the Romans, first under the conduct of their Kings, and then of their Consuls and Dictators. Broken at last by L. Quintius the Dictator, A.U.C. 295, they became associates with the Romans, and so continued for the space of 100 years and upwards. But growing insolent on the sack of that City by the Galli, and impudently requiring that one Consul yearly should be chosen by and from themselves, they drew the Romans into Arms; by whom subdued under the leading of Mucius Scaevola, and Decius Mus, then Consuls, A.U.C. 413. Subject from that time afterwards to the state of Rome, but enjoying greater privileges than the rest of the conquered Nations did; excepting such to whom the like were granted by especial favour.

The chief place of it in old times was the City of Alba, then the Seat-Royal of the Latin, or Sylvan Kings, ruined by Tullus Hostilius the third King of Rome, in which War Rome and Alba being laid at the stake, the whole action was committed by the Romans to the Horatii, to the Curii, by the Albani, being three Brethren of each side; in which it happened that two of the Horatii were slain first, and the third counterfeiting a slight severed his enemies, and so flew them; whereby the Albani ever after became subject to Rome. 2. Lavinium, built by Aeneas in honour of his Wife Lavinia. 3. Antium, honoured many times with the seat and retirement of the Emperors: the Country round about affording variety of Recreations. The people once very strong in shipping till the taking of the Town by Mucius Scaevola Consul, who having broke their Forces at Sea, brought with them into Rome the Beaks of their Ships and other Vessels, with which he decked and beautified the Pulpit for Orations (in the common Forum), which have generally ever since been called Regia. This was the chief City of the ancient Volsci, a people very strong in shipping though without an Haven: afterwards much frequented by the principal Romans in their retirements from the City, so that for pompous and stately buildings it might compare with any other. Out of the ruins of this Town long ago destroyed, sprang the new City called Nepesinum, situate on a Rock near unto the Sea, the steepness of which gives it natural strength enough, and yet it is fortified besides with two strong Castles surveying the Sea, and commanding the shore. 4. Ardea the chief Town of the Rutuli, and seat of Turmus, the Rival and Competitor of Aeneas: afterwards taken by Superbus the last King of the Romans; to which when the Galli had taken Rome, the miserable Citizens were compelled compelled to fly. 5. Gabii, taken also by the same Superbus, whose Son Sextus counterfeiting some dislike of his Fathers cruelties, fled to the Gabii, by whom providently entrusted with the command of their City, which he betrayed unto the Romans. 6. Ofis, anciently the Port-Town to Rome, built at the mouth of Tiber, by Aeneas Martius, the fourth King of Rome; but the Haven hath been long since dammed up, to stop the passage of the enemies Ships unto the City. The Bishop of this Town useth to consecrate the Pope. 7. Prenefte, first conquered by the Romans under Qu. Cincinnatus the Dictator. Nothing so much damaged this City as its natural and artificial Fortifications: for when the Romans in the times of Edilition abandoned the Town, they used to make this place their refuge. Among others Marius the younger made it the seat of War, against L. Sylla: but perceiving the unconstancy of his affairs, he killed himself; and Sylla entering it as Conqueror, put 12000 of the Citizens to the Sword. It hath since been so often sacked, that it is very short now of its former lustre; but still it holds the reputation of a Bishops See. 8. Tibur, an ancient City also, and seated in a healthy Air. It is now called Tivoli, where there is a Fountain, which with artificial Engines moved with Water, representeth the notes of divers Birds. A device very rare (it seemeth) in the time of Adrianus, who reported it; but now grown ordinary. In the perfection of which Art, as almost all Civil Nations may pretend a share; so I conceive that the priority herein doth belong of right unto the French: whose Master-pieces in this kind do far exceed the rest of Europe. For in the Kings house at St. Germain, seven miles from Paris (if it be lawful for me to digress a little on this Argument) one may behold the Statue of a Nymph, sitting before a pair of Organs: whose fingers by the help of Water, are taught to manage the keys in to due order, and the Instrument to yield such a Musick to it, as comes exceeding near the Organ, if it be not the same; he heard in the mean time jolting from one shoulder to another, like an old Fiddlers at a Wage; there being also not far off, the counterfeits of Divers Mills, who very busily plyed their work till the Musick founded; and there stood still as if enchanted with the noise. In another place, upon the drawing of a Curtain, one may see two Turtles riding on their Dolphin, in a Sea of Water; each of them with a shell in his hand, which interchangeably and in turns served in stead of Trumpets. In a third, the story of Perseus and Andromeda most lively acted; and in a fourth, Orpheus in Sylvia posture, Orpheus playing on a Viol, the Trees moving, and the wild Beasts dancing in two rings about him, by the artificial guidance of the Waters only: the pretty Birds in every place so chirping under their several and respective notes, that the hearer would conceive himself to be in some pleasant Grove. But it is time to go from Tivoli to 9. Velitri (called anciently Velitae, and then a City of the Volsci) famous for the Birth of the Emperor Augustus, and the dwelling of the Ortiz Family, a place most delightfully seated among the Vines, which yields as rich Wines as most in Italy. 10. Anagnin, so called, because the Temple which here dedicated to Jupiter was named Anagnin, that is, Beardless; first built by the Spartans, who flying from the severity of Lycorgus his Laws, did here seek themselves, after a Colony of the Volsci, and at last of the Romans. But this Town being destroyed by the tyranny of times there stablished up 11. Taracina in the place thereof, seated upon a Mountain, but near the Sea, which it embraceth like a half Moon (it is now called the Bay of Mala): this City lying on the one horn thereof, in the very extremity of the Popes Dominions; and that of Cajeta on the other, which is the Port-Town of the Realm of Naples. The Country abouts hath most pleasant Orchards, of Citrus, Oranges, and Limons; the Oranges having at the same time both ripe and green Fruits, and represents a kind of Summer in the dead of Winter.

Such other things as are remarkable in this Campagna (heretofore called Latium) but more by what they have been, than that they are at the present, are 1. Tuscanum, a Village which belonged to Tully, who here composed his excellent Book, called the Tusculan Questions. 2. Formia, built by the Lacian Kings, heretofore the delight and solace of the ancient Romans, now visible only in its ruins. 3. Privernum, once the chief City of the Volsci, and the seat of Camilia, a noble Anacostian Lady, who aided Turmus the Rutulan, in his sharp War against Aeneas and the Tyberians, where she lost her life. 4. Circe, an old City (in the place whereof now stands S. Felix) the habitation of Circe, that so much celebrated Sorceress; of whom, and her enchanting of Ulysses and his companions, there is so much upon record, in the ancient Poets. Near to which is the head-land called the Circian Promontory, the repercussion of the Waves by whose Southern Basia makes a dreadful noise; and gave occasion to the fabulous inventions of the roaring of Lions, howling of Dogs, &c. which were heard about that Witches dwelling.

But the great glory of Latium, and indeed not of Italy only but of all the World, was that the famous City of ROME was seated in it, being built on the East side of Tiber; now much enlarged by the increase of 42 lesser Streams or Rivers. It is distant from the Sea about 15 miles, first built, as Frier Leander a great Italian Antiquary is of opinion, by Roma Daughter or Wife to one of the Latin Kings. But being forsaken and forsown, by reason of the unwholesome Air coming from the Fens, was rebuilt by Romulus, much pleased with the natural strength of the situation; and therefore like to make a good Town of War. And this tradition I should rather subscribe unto, than that it was called Roma from Romulus; who had he pleased to challenge the honour to himself, might better have caused it to be called Romulea (of which name there was a Town among the Samites) than to call it Roma. But whatsoever greatness it did after come to, it was small enough (God knows) at first; the City comprehending the Mount Palatine only, and therefore not a mile in compass; the Territory not extending as Strabo windeth, above six miles from the City; and the Inhabitants thereof at the first general Muster, amounting at the most to 3300 men. So inconsiderable they were as well in quality as numbers, that their Neighbours thought it a disparagement to bestow their Daughters on them; and therefore they were fain to get themselves Wives by a slight of wit: proclaiming solemn Plays and Pastimes to be held in Rome, and ravishing the Women which came thither to behold the sports. The Kings succeeding much enlarged it. Mount Aventine, and the hill Janiculum on the other side of the Water, being walled and added to it by Aeneas Martius as Quintilian, Esquilinus, and Viminalis, were by Servius Tullius his Capitolinus and Mount Calvus, came not in till afterwards. But at the last it was improved to such an height, that in the flourishing times of that Common-wealth, the men increased to the number of 463000, and the compass of the Town unto 50 miles; there being on and about the walls 740 Towers. And in this number of 463000 men, I reckon neither Servants, Women, nor Children, but men able to bear Arms; Free-Doniziers, and such as were enrolled into Consul, or the Subsidie Books. To which if we should add their Wives, Children, and Servants, we cannot probably conjecture that there so have been fewer than three or four Millions. De Liffis is of opinion, in his Tract de Magnitudine Romæ. The most memorable buildings of it, were first the Capitol, founded by Tarquinius Superbus, and beautified with the spoils of their conquered Neighbours; saved from the fury of the Gall by the cackling of Geese. Tacitus calleth this house, Sedem Jovis optimi maximi, aspicuo à majorebus pignus imperii conditum. It was twice burnt, once in the Civil Wars of Sylla and Marius; and again in the Wars of Vespasian and Vitellius. In the third building of it, Vespasian carried the first basket of Earth; after him the Nobility did like, to make the people more forward in the service; and perhaps the custom of laying the first stone in a building, or driving the first nail in a timber-work, by him whose edifice it is; hath, from hence, if not beginning, yet growth. 2. Here was the Temple of Janus open in the time of Wars, and shut in the time of peace; which, during all their Monarchy, hapned both times; namely during the reign of Augustus, after the first Punic War, and in the time of Numa. 3. Here was the Bridge, called Pons Sublicius, on which Virginius Coles refitted the whole Army of King Porcius Tarquin, and the Trojans; till the Citizens being had broken down the bridge, received him swimming to the bank with joyful acclamations and saved their City from present ruin. Here lived the famous Warriors, so much renowned in the stories of elder times; here flourished the exact Martial discipline, so memorized by ancient Historiographers; and finally, here were laid up the spoils and Trophies of all Europe.

ROME, as now it standeth lower on the bank of Tiber upon Campus Martius, (where it was built after the inundation of the Goths and Vandals), is in compass about eleven miles, within which compass is not a little waste ground. The Inhabitants of all sorts reckoned to amount to 200000, two parts whereof are Clergymen and Courtiers; that is to say, such as have their dependance on the Court of Rome, either by holding Offices and places of employment under the Popes, or by attending on his person, or waiting on the Cardinals and eminent Prelates who are there abiding; or otherwise being of the retinue of such foreign Ambassadors as are always commorant in the City, to follow the Negotiations of their several Masters; all which must needs amount to a very great number. It was first built on the East-side of the River in the Territory of Lavinium, but now there is little left of the old City but the goodly ruins; and here and there some Churches and scattered houses (except it be a little on the North East of the River, from the Gate called Del populo, to the Island of Tiber); the rest, especially towards South, being taken up with palaces and fields of Corn. The main body of the City, as now it stands is on the West-side of the water, and the Holy Island, consisting of three distinct parts or members. Of these the least is that which they call T. I. Island, but anciently the Holy Island, first made an Island by the Corn, Straw, and other goods of the Tarquins, which the Senate not vouchsafing to convert to any publick or private use, commanded to be flung into the River, where it sunk and settled to an Island, called afterwards the Holy Island, from a Temple herein built unto Jeholapius, brought thither from Epidaurus, in the shape of a Serpent. This Island is not above a quarter of a mile in length, and hardly half so much in breadth: but full of stately Churches and beautiful houses. Next to this is that which they call Trastevere, or Trans-Tiberina; but of old Janculo, from the Mountain of that name included in it: Called also Civitas Raven- nation, or the City of the men of Ravenna, of the Soldiers which Augustus kept at Ravenna against Antonius; and after placed in this out-part of the City, which by reason of the unwhollomness of the air, is inhabited only by Artizans and poor people; yet compassed about with walls, except on that side next the water, and adorned with many goodly Churches and some handfom buildings. But the chief glory of the City consisteth in that part of it which is called Il Borgo, lying on the North-side of the other, but did-joyne from it; compassed about with walls by Pope Leo the 4. and from thence called Civitas Leonina. For in this part there are, 1. The Church of S. Peter, which were it once finished, would be one of the rarest buildings in all the World. 2. The Castle of S. Angelo, impregnable unless by Assault. 3. The Popes Palace, called Belvedere, which with the Gardens thereof was compassed about with a very high wall, by Pope Nicolas the fifth. And had his name from the fair prospect which it hath: in the same fence, as Belvoir Castle here in England, the Barony and Manlion of the Earls of Rutland. A Palace of magnificence and receipt enough. 4. The Library of the Hill Palatine, properly called the Palatine, but more commonly the Vatican Library; a Library first founded by Severus the fourth, who not only stored it with the choicest Books he could pick out of Europe; but allowed also a large revenue for the perpetual augmentation of it. Bibliotheca Palatina in Vaticano, toto terrarum orbe celeberrima, aduicis ex omni Europa libris contrita; presentibus certis, &c. So Onuphrius. When the Duke of Barbar sacked Rome, Anno 1527, it was much defaced and ransacked; but by the succeeding Popes it hath been again recovered to its former fame, and beauty. Rome is now an University, which was founded by Urban the fourth, at whose request Thomas Aquinas professed here. Pope Nicolas the fifth was a special benefactor to the same; and after him, Leo the tenth, who revived the Greek Learning and Language, which were in these parts almost forgotten. And finally, to this place are brought all the treasures of those parts of Christendom subject to the Popes authority: partly for the expense of strangers, which do there remain on their several pleasures or occasions; and partly for the expeditions which are sent of Bulls of Benefices, Indulgences and other matters of Court-bully-matter; and partly in the Pensions, which are paid there to the Cardinals and other Ministers of those Kings and Princes, which know best how to make their ends of the Popes ambitions. So that it may be truly said, there came not more Tributes into old-Rome from the conquered Provinces, than hath been brought into the New from the subject Churches, which have submitted to the power of the Roman Prelates: and that they have as great command now under the pretence of Religion, as ever they had formerly by force of Arms. So truly was it said by Proper of Aquinate, (if memory fail not)

Roma caput mundi, quicquid non possidet Armis, Religionis tenet.

That is to say,

What Rome holds not with the Sword,
She holds by colour of the Word.

But yet there wants the Genius of the ancient City, the power and natural courage of the old Inhabitants, which held the same against the bravery and assaults of all foreign Enemies: this City during the time of the ancient Romans, being never took but by the Galls; but since since Pontifical, it hath been made a Prey to all Barbarous Nations, and never was beleagued by any that did not take it. In a Word, the City of Rome as now it standeth, is but the carcass of the old, of which it retains nothing but the ruins; and the cause of them, lies thus.

The Popes do much brag of the foundation of their Church, and the authority of S. Peter; whose being there is indeed constantly attested by most ancient Writers; inasmuch that Calvin, though no friend to the Popes of Rome, yet proper Scripturam confutans, in regard of the unanimous consent of the primitive times, did not think fit to controvert it. The silence of the Scriptures is a Negative Argument, and concludes nothing to the contrary; against that Cloud of unquestioned Witnesses, as soberly and positively have affirmed the same. And yet I would not have it thought by the captious Romanists, that I conceive that it makes any thing at all for the Pope's Supremacy, because he fits in Peter's seat: no more than it did make for Vibius Rufus (as Dion doth relate the story) to attain Tully's eloquence, or Cæsar's power, because he married Tully's Widow, and bought Cæsar's Chair: though the poor Gentleman did besof himself with this opinion, that he should be Master of them both. Of which see Lib. LVII. And yet the Popes rely so much upon this fancy, of being the direct heirs of S. Peter, and all his preeminencies, that all things which they lay or do, must be entitled to S. Peter. Their Throne must be S. Peter's Chair, their Church S. Peter's Ship, their Lands S. Peter's Parsonage, their Tributes and Exactions must be called Peter's pence, their Excommunications fulminated in S. Peter's name; and all their Bulls and Faculties sealed Anno Piscatoris, with S. Peter's Signet. Nay, they went so far at the last, that Pope Stephen not being contented to be Peter's Successor, did take upon him in plain terms to be Peter himself. For being distressed by Astolph King of the Lombards, he sends for aid unto King Pepin in this following stile. Petrus Apostolus JESU CHRISTI, &c. i. e. Peter the Apostle of JESUS CHRIST, to you the most Illustrious King Pepin, and to all Bishops, Abbots, &c. Like the Apostle Peter, whose adopted sons you are, admittis that you presently come and defend this City, &c. And datus non potest, but trust assuredly shall I myself, as if I stand before you, do thus exhort you, &c. And thus I Peter the Apostle of God, will as the last day yield you mutual kindnesses, and prepare you Tabernacles in the heavens. Baronius who records this Letter, Anno 755. lib. 17. was, it seems, pretty well perwaded of it, that the Pope and Peter were all one. For in his Exhortation or Paraphrase to the State of Venice, being then upon some differences with Pope Paul the fifth, he stileth him in plain terms thus, Paulus idemque Petrus vicem Christi agens in terra, i. e. Paul, who is also Peter, and Christ's Vicegerent, &c. But leaving these imaginary claims and challenges of S. Peter's privileges, though they did really advance the reputation of that See in the darker Ages two things there were which did exceedingly conduce to the improvement of their power, in the more knowing and discerning times of Christianity. Of which the principal, was the Orthodoxy of the Bishops or Popes of Rome, their eminent and sincere profession of the Faith of Christ; when almost all the other Churches were either torn in pieces by the fury of Schism, or wasted and subverted by the fraud of Heresie. In which regard, Appeals were frequently made to the Church of Rome, as a more competent Judge of the truth of Doctrines; the commendation of it much desired by all true Christians and a repair thither for relief and shelter in the times of trouble, made by the Orthodox Professors under persecution. And of these times, and this condition of that Church, we are to understand such passages of the Ancient Writers, as magnifie the Faith of the Church of Rome, and let it above all the batteries and assaults of Heresie. Such is that passage of S. Cyprian, Romanos esse ad quos perfidia non potest habere accessum, lib. 1. ep. 3. and that of Hierome, Romanam fidem; i. e. Romanorum fidem Apostolica voce laudatam, ejusmodi prestigium non recipere, in Apol. cont. Rufin and many others of that kind. Which passages it were as foolish and ridiculous to apply to all following times the condition of that Church being different from what then it was; as to accommodate all those Eligium and commendations to the present City of Rome; which the Orators and Pagnepriests of the elder times have hyperbolically ascribed to old Rome in her greatest glory. The next was the fixation of the Popes in the Metropolis, or Imperial City; which drawing to it such a multitude of suiters and attendants from all parts of the world could not but add much to the power and reputation of those Prelates, who had the happiness and honour to be resident there; and thereby opportunity to gain more Disciples, to solve more doubts of conscience, and decide more controversies than any other could expect. And so we are to understand that passage in S. Irenæus, in which he saith, Ad hanc Ecclesiam propter potentioris Principatitatem, necesse est omnem convenire Ecclesiam, i. e. eos qui sunt undique Ecclesie. And so they did as long as Rome enjoyed the honour of a more potent Principality than any other Cities. But when that more potent Principality failed to be at Rome, by the removal of the Imperial See, till to Constantinople, and afterwards unto Ravenna, then did the Bishops of Constantinople and Ravenna, dispute with those of Rome for Supremacy; the chief least of Religion most commonly following the seat of the Empire. And in this claim the Patriarch or Bishop of Constantinople prevailed so far, that with the permission of Marcellinus the Emperour, he took upon him the title of Universalis Patriarchæ. Gregory the Great (of whom it is said that he was the worst Bishop of all that went before him, and the best of all that came after him) was at that time Bishop of Rome: who sharply inveighed as well against the Emperour, as the Patriarch of Constantinople, for this Title, and plainly maintained, that whosoever called himself Univ. Bishop, was the forerunner of Antichrist. As for himself it is probable that he took the title of Servus servorum Dei, more in opposition to him of Constantinople, than with an intent to be so truly. To which though those of Rome reply that Gregory did not absolutely condemn this Title, but only blamed John the Constantinopolitan Patriarch for assuming to himself that attribute, which properly belonged to the See of Rome; yet this cannot be. For then either in the old Bulls of the former Popes, we should find mention of this Title; or else Pope Gregory would have assumed it to himself, that the world might take notice to whom of right it did belong. But Boniface, who next but on succeeded Gregory, having further aims applied himself to Phœbe that bloody Tyrant; who having murdered the Emperour Marcellinus, his Wife and Children, and thereby got the general hatred of all the good Subjects of the Empire, the better to assure himself of Italy, whose revolt he feared, declared this Boniface to be the Occasional Bishop and Head of the Church. To such a good beginning, such a gracious Patron do the Popes stand indebted for that power and Empire, which now they challenge to themselves over all the Church.

Now as the Bishop of Constantinople, and Ravenna, did challenge a priority or precedency, of the Popes of Rome; by reason that they were respectively honoured with the Seat Antichrist; so were there divers other Bishops, as Antioch, Alexandria, Carthage, Milain, which claimed claimed an equality with them; and would by no means yield them any superiority. For trial of whose claim, we must look back on somewhat which had been said before; where it is shown, that the Roman Empire was divided into fourteen Dioeceses; each Dioecesis being subdivided into several Provinces; each Province comprehending many several Cities; then, that in every of those Cities, where the Romans had their Defensores, the Christians also had a Bishop: in the Metropolis of each Province, which commonly was the seat of the Roman President, the Christians had their Metropolitans; and that in each principal City of each several Dioecesis, wherein the Vicar of that Dioecesis had fixed his dwelling, there did the Christians place a Primate. And this was done according to that famous Maxim of Optatus, hæc publicæ non sibi Ecclesiæ, sed Ecclesiæ ipse in Republica, that the Church is in the Common-wealth; and not the Common-wealth in the Church. Upon which foundation the Fathers in the Council of Chalcedon, raised this superstructure, Episcopus unusquisque in regione, &c. that the honours of the Church should be accommodated unto those in State. So that according to this Platform, the Primates of the Church were of equal power, each of them limited and restrained to his proper Sphere; out of the which if he presume once to act, he moved irregularly, and in his Ecclesiastical. And for those Primates, I shall give you once for all, this general Muster, that is to say, the Patriarch or Pope of Rome, for the Diocese or Patriarchate of that City; the Primate or Archbishop of Milan, for the Diocese of Italy; of Syria, for that of Ilyria; of Lyons, for that of France; of York, for Britain; Toledo, for Spain, and of Carthage, for Africa. Then for the East parts of the Empire, there was the Patriarch of Alexandria, for the Diocese of Egypt; of Antioch, for that of the Orient; the Primate or Archbishop of Ephesus, for the Diocese of Asia; of Nicomedia for that of Pontus; of Bizantium, or Constantinople for that of Thrace; of Thessalonica, for the Diocese of Greece; and of Justiniana prima, for that of Dacia. Amongst all which there was a mutual correspondence and Co-ordination, for the general Government of the Church; maintained by Letters of intercourse, which they called Litteræ fœderales, and Communicatorias; but no subordination, and much less subjection, unto one another, as doth appear most evidently by the Canons of the Council of Nice, allying to the three great Patriarchs their peculiar bounds, according to the custom of the former times. As for the Dioecesis or Patriarchate of the Popes of Rome, it contained in it those ten Provinces, which were immediately subject to the Præfect or Prætor of that City (an officer first instituted by Augustus Cæsar) that is to say, the Provinces of Æfrica and Umbria, Fœcens Suburbicarian, Campania, Apulia and Calabria, Valeria, Samium, Lucania and the Bruia, in the main Land of Italy; and the three Islands of Sicily, Corsica, and Sardinia. In which regard, (I mean as to the immediate Government of those Provinces by the Præfect of the City of Rome) as they are called Regiones Suburbicariæ, by Ruffinus an Italian Writer (so denominated the Pope himself was called Urbanus, or the City Bishop, as appears plainly by Optatus, who calleth Pope Zephyrinus, Zephyrinus Urbanus). But the Popes were not long content with that allotment, growing up daily by a fildly and constant watchfulness upon all occasions, to increase the Grandeur of that See; and taking to themselves the honor to be Vindictæ Canonum, the strict and punctual preservers of the ancient Discipline, which took extremely well with all sorts of people. Till in the end from being Vindictæ Canonum, they came to be Interpreters and at last the Rulers, or rather the Over-riders of the Canons; and from chief Labourers in the Vineyard, they became the Landlords: which was the honour aimed at, and at last obtained by the forsaide Boniface, whom that cruel and butcherly Tyrant Phocas made the Head of the Church, the sixty sixth Bishop and first Pope of Rome: the Latin word Papa coming from the old Greek Pater, signifying a Father. A title at the first common unto other Bishops, as is evident to any one, who hath read the Fathers; but after this, appropriated unto those of Rome. Of these Popes, their Succession, and times of Government, our Chronologues are very uncertain: not one of them that ever I had the luck to see, agreeing exactly with another. The reasons whereof, I conceive, are, 1. The frequent Vacancies; and 2. the many Schisms which have happened in it; and 3. the Anti-Popes in them created: the Writers of those times accounting him only among the Popes, to whose faction they were most devoted. This Catalogue ensuing I have collected principally out of the Tables of Helvici, Freigius, Edlmann, and Onuphrius, whose differences I have reconciled as well as possibly I could: premonishing the Reader, that where the number of years which every Pope is found to fit in the Papal Chair, makes not up the full number from his first admission, to the coming in of his Successor; it must be understood of some Schism or Vacancy, hapning in the Interval, by which the tale is to be made up. And for the difficulties which occur amongst the Ancients, in the first Succession, some placing of them thus, Linus, Clemens, Clemens; some Linus, Clemens Clemens; and finally some others putting Clemens the first, I know no better way to compose the fable than to affirm (as many of the Fathers do) that St. Peter and St. Paul were Co-founders of the Church in Rome; St. Peter of the Church of the Circumcision, and St. Paul of the Gentiles; each of them being Bishop of the Church of his own foundation: and then to draw down the Succession in this manner following.

The Bishops of Rome.

- A. Ch.
 44 1 St. Peter, Bishop of the Churches of the Circumcision.
 70 2 Cletus, or Anacleus, Successor to St. Peter in the Churches of the Circumcision. 23.
 59 1 St. Paul, Bishop of the Churches of the Gentiles.
 70 2 Linus, Successor to St. Paul in the Church of the Gentiles. 11.
 81 3 Clemens having succeeded Linus first in the Church of the Gentiles, did after Anno 93. succeed Cletus also in the Church of the Jews, reckoned by some the next Successor to St. Peter, because the next who after him had the charge of the whole; the Church of the Gentiles not being founded, or not differing from the other, till some years after Peter's coming.

To these one hundred twenty nine Popes add the fifty five Bishops which preceded that arrogant title of Universal, and they make up the full number of two hundred forty four. How many are to come, he must be a cunning man that can determine. Apostles of the Iris Nation, very much honoured by that people to this very day. Of whom there is remaining in Massingham collection of the Iris Saints, a certain number of Monitors in the Latin tongue; agreeable to the nature or chief accidents of as many Popes successively to one another, according to the order of those several Monitors; and thereunto this Prophecy annexed, that when to many Popes had fate in St. Peter's Chair, either the World should end, or the Popedom fail. The Book was shewed to me by the Author, when I was at Paris, and the Popes names in order joined to every Motto, as far as to the time of Urban, who last deceased; which I compared as well as memory would serve me, and found the Mottos and the Popes to be very answerable. The Motto for Pope Urban, which I took most notice of, was, Lilium and Rosa: a Motto very suitable to the principal Action which was like to happen in his time, being the conjunction of the English Rose, and the French Lilly; in the marriage of Charles King of England, and Madam Henrietta Maria the Princess of France; which that Pope carefully promoted, in his speedy and cheerful granting of the Dispensation. And to take from me all suspicion of Impotence, this Maffingham shewed me an old Book written by one Winn a Fleming, and printed near 200 years before his Conclaves; in which the Masterhood as in his they did and comparing the Mottos with a printed Catalogue of the Popes, I found the name of Urban, and that Motto to jump even together. From Urban downwards there remained (as I now remember) 36 Mottos more to come; by consequence, if this Malady were as true a Prophet as one Malachi was, just for many Popes, and then the Popedom to be ruined, or the World to end. But I hope God for his Election sake will abide those thofe days, and not permit the superstitions and the corruptions of that Church to endure so long; nor to many Affectors and Defenders of those Roman Heterodoxies, to be added to the former number. Out of the stories of all which (premitting many things of less consideration) I will only select some few passages, for the better understanding of their state and story.

1. Pelagius the first, ordained that Heretick and Schismatic should be punished with temporal death; which severity continueth still: and that none should be preferred to Ecclesiastical dignities by Gifts, and Bribes; which principle is long since antiquated.

2. Vitalianus, first brought Organs into the Divine service of the Church of Rome; to be used in the singing or vocal Music formerly in use; which afterwards was brought unto more perfection by the Popes succeeding.

3. Constantine was so generally beloved of all men, that going to Constantinople, Justinian the second kill his feet in sign of honour, which some of the ambitious Popes in times succeeding, drew into example, and at last brought into a custom, as it still continueth.

4. Paschal the first, caused the Priests of certain Parishes in Rome, by reason of their nearness to his person, their preference at his Election, and to honour them with a more venerable Title, to be called Cardinals. Now names for Kings, and numbered about 70, but more or fewer at the sole pleasure of the Popes.

5. Eugenius the second, took to himself within the Territories of the Church, the Authority of creating Dukes, Earls and Knights; as the Exarch of Ravenna had used to do.

6. Sergius the second, was the first that changed his name. For thinking his own name, Boeca di Boeca, or Smirner-mouth, not consonant to his dignity, he caused himself to be called Sergius; which precedent his Successors following, do also vary their names. So that if one be a Coward he is called Lio; if a Tyrant, Clement; if an Atheist, Pius; or Innocent; if a Rustick, Urbanus; and so for the rest.

7. John the eighth, is by most men confided to be a Woman, and is usually called Pope Joane. To avoid the like disgrace, the Porphyry Chair was ordained; ubi ab altissimo discant, &c. so that both in a literal and mystical sense, this Woman may not unfitly be called, The Whore of Babylon. The name of this Female Pope, the Romish Chronologists have not inserted into the Catalogue; the reason, as Marianus Scotus giveth it, propter turpitudinem rei, & solum muliebrem. And from hence it is that in the common Catalogues, these Popes that have called themselves Johns, are so ill ordered; some making that John which succeeded Adrian the second, An. 872. to be the 8th and others the 9th Platina only of all the Posticums reckoneth Pope Joane as the 8th of the Johns, and so forward: in which particular I have followed his authority. And it is probable enough that God might suffer that proud Seed to fall into such an infamy, the better to humble the ensuing Popes, in the times of their greatest trust and flourish; or to prevent the brag of that continued Succession, they so much pretend to. More of this Argument, (as to the truth of the story in matter of Fact) he that lists to see, may satisfy himself in Mr. Cocky Book of Pope Joane; who most indolently hath answered all objections, which hath been made against it by those of Rome.

8. Nicolas the first, the better to fatten the Clergy to the See of Rome, and make them the less obnoxious to their natural Princes; was the first who did by law restrain them from marriage. Saying, that it was more honest to have to do with many Women privately, than openly to keep a Wife: and some of his Successors followed it so close, that a Priest of Placentia being accused by his Wife and Children, was deprived of his Benefice; but upon proof made, that she was the Wife of another man, and his Strumper only, he was again restored to it.

9. Adrian the third, ordained, that the Emperor from thenceforth should have no more to do with the Election, or confirmation of the Pope, but that it should be left wholly to the Roman Clergy.

10. Formosus was so ill beloved, and of such a general disesteem, that Popes Sylvester the seventh caused his body to be unburied, all his Acts reversed, two of his fingers to be cut off, and then the mangled carcase to be again interred among the Laiety. And though these Acts of Steven were adjudged illegal, both by John the tenth, and Pope Romanus, two of his Successors; and the doings of Formosus justified: yet Sergius the third caused his corrupt and putrified body to be taken once more out of the grave; and his head to be cut off, as if still alive. So little did the infallibility of S. Peter's Chair preserve these Popes from falling into gross and irreconcilable contradictions.

11. John the twelfth, was the next after Sergius the second that changed his name; a very wicked, cruel, and libidinous man: who coming to that place by his Fathers greatness, cut off the nose of one Cardinal, and the hand of another, for that they had dignified to the Emperor Otho the first, what a scandal all the Church did suffer by his detestable life; and finally, being taken in Adultery, was slain by the husband of the woman.

12. Gregory the fifth, finding the power of the Emperor, as long as it continued in a way of succession, not likely to be over-born by that of the Church; and being withal incensed against the Romans, who, till that time retained some shadow of an Empire, projected the election of the future Emperors, by the Princes of Germany; by which the Germanys were distracted into Factions, and the Romans weakened; and so a door left open to the Popes of Rome, to make their ends upon them both.

13. Stephen the tenth, brought the Church of Milan to be under the obedience of the Popes of Rome, which till that time had challenged an equality with them; as before before Pope Domnus had done the Church of Ravenna, which for some time had challenged the precedence of them.

14. Gregory the seventh, commonly called Hildebrand, a turbulent and unquiet man, who first adventured to draw the Premier laid down by some of his Predecessors into a conclusion: Excommunicating the Emperor Henry IV. for meddling with the Investitures of Bishops, and causing Rodolph Duke of Saxony to rebel against him. A man, much favoured against the Princes of her own House by the Countess Matilda; who is said to be to much his friend, that for his sake he left the company of her Husband, and dissipated her right Heirs, selling her whole Estates in Italy on the See of Rome. And though the Emperor had the better of this Pope, and made him flee out of Rome, and die in exile; yet he was fain at last to submit himself to Pope Paschal the second, (who had Armed his own Son against him) to attend bare-foot at his own door, and cry peccavi.

15. Sergius the third, ordained the bearing of Candles, in the Feast of the Purification of the Virgin Mary, thence called Candlemas day.

16. Sergius the fourth was the first that on Christmas night, with divers Ceremonies did consecrate Swords, Roses, or the like; to be sent as tokens of love and honour to such Princes as deserved best of them, or whom they desired to oblige. Thus Leo the tenth sent a consecrated Rose to Frederick Duke of Saxony, requesting him to banish Luther; and Paul the third an hallowed Sword to James the fifth of Scotland, to engage him in a War against Henry the Eighth, who had then withdrawn himself and his Kingdom, from the Pope's commands.

17. Nicolas the second took from the Roman Clergy the election of Popes, and gave it the College of Cardinals.

18. Celsine the second, was the Inventor of that mad manner of cursing, or Anathematizing, by Bell, Book, and Candle.

19. Alexander the third, pursuing the desperate course of Gregory the seventh, excommunicated the Emperor Frederick I. and by raising War against him in every place; brought him to that exigent, that he was fain to prostitute himself at his feet: when the Pope treading on his neck, said aloud, Super Aspidem & Basiliscum, &c. profanely applying those words to the present occasion. And when the Emperor, to put the better colour on his disgrace, meekly replied, Non tibi sed Petro; the Pope not willing to lose his part of so great a glory, subjoined as angrily, Et mihi & Petro.

20. Innocent the third held a Council in Rome, in which it was decreed that the Pope should have the correction of all Christian Princes; and that no Emperor should be acknowledged, till he had sworn obedience to him. Which bringeth into my mind that jolly humour of the great Chan of Tartary; who when he hath done, commands his Trumpeters to sound, and make Proclamation, that now all other Kings and Princes may sit down to dinner. He brought in the Doctrine of Transubstantiation, and ordained that there should be a Fix made to cover the consecrated (but now Transubstantiated) Bread, and a Bell to be rung before it. He is also said to have first imposed Anathematic Confession upon the people.

21. Nicolas the third, was the first Pope who practised to enrich his kindred, intending to make one of them King of Lombardy, another King of Tuscany; and to raise the rest to great Advancements out of the Lands of the Church. Before which time (as Macbiavel very well observeth) as there was no mention of the advancement of any of the Pope's kinsfolks or posterity, so afterwards they studied no one thing more than to prefer their own blood; inasmuch that they have not only laboured (as he saith) to make them Princes, but if it were possible would procure the Popedom to be made hereditary. So he, with probability enough. For so clearly do they love their Nephews (by which name they use to call their Barbards) that it was very justly said by Pope Alexander the third, The Law forbids us to get Children, and the Devil bids given us Nephews in their stead.

22. Boniface the eighth, of whom it is said, That he entered like a Fox, reigned like a Lion, and died like a Dog; by his general Bull exempted the Clergy from being chargeable with Taxes and Payments unto Temporal Princes. Which being complied with by the Clergy of England, King Edward I. put them out of his protection; and to the Popes Bull left roaring here. He caused the Book of the Canon Law, called the Decretals to be first set out; and instituted the Feast of Jubilee, to be held in Rome every hundredth year; but by Clement the sixth it was brought unto the fiftieth year, and since reduced to the five and twentieth. This is that Pontifice, who in that great concourse of people which repaired to Rome, to observe his new Feast of Jubilee, (to which every one that did repair was to have a pleasurable remission of all his sins) shewed himself one day in the habit of a Pope, and the next day in that of an Emperor; and caused two Swords to be born before him every day, in sign that all Power Ecclesiastical and Temporal did belong unto him.

23. Clement the fifth, was the first that made Indulgences and Pardons saleable. For seeing (said he) that one drop of our Saviour's blood had been enough to have saved all Mankind, and yet that all his blood was shed, the over-plus was left to the Church as a standing Treasure, to be disposed of by St. Peter and his Successors. And hereunto, to make his Treasure the more inexhaustible, he added the Merits of the Virgin Mary, and all other Saints. Being wearied with the infidelities of the people of Rome, he removed the Papal See to Avignon in France, where it continued for the space of seventy years.

24. Clement the sixth had an ill time of it. For in his Papacy the Emperor gave freely all Lands belonging to the Church; so much as formerly had usurped them; to be holden by them of the Empire. Upon which title the Malgio became Lords of Rimini, the Ordelschi of Forli, the Varesi of Comarino, the Bentivoglio of Nonantia, the Manfredi of Favenza, &c. Which Estates were never recovered to the Church, till the time of Pope Jules the second, though conquered from the present owners in the time of Alexander the sixth, by Caspar Borgia his Son, who had an aim of getting them, and perhaps the Papacy itself, on the Borgia Family.

25. Gregory the eleventh, returned the Papal Chair again to the City of Rome, whither he conveyed himself by Sea in private, for fear of being with-held by the French; and being come thither, found the chief parts of the City so over-grown with briars and bushes, and the principal buildings of it so decayed and ruinous, that a little longer absence would have made it desolate.

26. Paul the second, endeavoured to encrease the Majesty of the Popedom by Arms and Avarice, and extended his Predecessors in pomp and show; causing his Miter to be enriched with Diamonds, Saphires, Emeralds and other Stones of great price; and augmenting the splendor of the Cardinals with a Scarlet Gown, whom Innocent the fourth had graced with Red Hats before. He brought the Jubilee from fifty years to twenty-five.

27. Sixtus the fourth ordained a constant Guard to attend his person. He very much beautified and repaired the City of Rome, and was the first founder of the Vatican Library. But on the other side he is said by some, to have let all Offices and Preferments to sale, and to have builded in Rome Stews of both sexes, to bring in Beads, and to authorize our Ladies Plaster.

28. Alexander the sixth, setting aside all modesty, was the first that openly acknowledged his Nephews (as they call their Bastards) to be his Sons. By one of which, the Cesar Borgia before named, he recovered Fiorino, Imola, and many other Estates from the present owners, on a design of setting them in his own Family, as before is said, and to that end called in the French, who after made such foul work in Italy.

29. Julio the second had more in him of the Souldier, than the Priest; recovering many Towns unto the Church, which had been formerly usurped, being taken from the Occupants by Cesar Borgia; and keeping Italy in his time in continual Wars. This is the Pope who passing over the Bridge of Tiber, brandished his Sword, and threw his Keys into the River: saying that if Peter's Keys would not serve his turn, then Paul's Sword should do it.

30. Leo the tenth was indeed a great Vauxer of Learnings, but of great prodigality, and vast expence. For maintenance whereof, he sent his saleable Indulgences into France and Germany: which business being indirectly handled by his Ministers, occasioned Luther in Germany, and Zuinglius amongst the Switzers, first to write against them; and afterwards to question many points of Popish Doctrine. In pursuance of which quarrel, the Pope of Rome burnt Luther's Books, whom he declared for an Heretic; and Luther did the like at Wittenberg with the Pope's Canon Law, whom he declared to be a Persecutor, a Tyrant, and the very Antichrist. Which flame increased so fast and enlarged so far, that it burnt down a great part of the Papal Monarchy.

31. Pius the fourth, continued the Council formerly called at Trent by Pope Paul the third, but interrupted and laid aside from one Pope to another, and having brought it to an end, and thereby settled and confirmed the Interests of the Church of Rome, caused it to be received as Oecumenical: though the Italian Bishops being most of them the Pope's Creatures, did more than double the number of all the rest; and yet some of the rest also were but merely Titulars. He added also a new Creed consisting of twelve Articles to be added to that of the Apostles, by all who lived in the Communion of the Church of Rome. But of the words and actions of these Ghostly Fathers we have said enough, if not too much. I will therefore end with that of the Painter, who being blamed by a Cardinal, for giving to St. Peter's Picture too much of the Red, replied, That he had made him so, as blushing at the Lives of those who were called his Successors.

As for the Temporal power and greatness of the Popes of Rome, there is a pretended Donation of the Emperour Constantine; by which the City of Rome itself, most part of Italy, Africk, and all the Islands of those Seas are conferred upon them: the forgery whereof is very learnedly shewn by our learned Crescambion, in his Discourse upon that subject. But that Donation might most justly be suspected of Fraud and Forgery, though nobody had took the pains to detect the same; considering how fearful the Popes are grown to have the truth thereof disputed: inasmuch that many leaves are razed out of Guiccardine by the Inquisition, where it had been questioned. For in that place the Historian not only denieth the said feigned Donation, but affirms that divers learned men reported, That Constantine and Sylvester (to whom it is said to have been made) lived in divers Ages. Then sheweth, how bale and obscure the Authority of the Pope was in Rome itself, during the time that the barbarous Nations made havock of Italy. 2. That in the institution of the Exarchate, the Popes had nothing to do with the Temporal Sword, but lived as subject to the Emperors. 3. That they were not very much obeyed in matters Spiritual, by reason of the corruption of their manners. 4. That after the overthrow of the Exarchate, the Emperors now neglecting Italy, the Romans began to be governed by the advice and power of the Popes. 5. That Papin of France, and his Son Charles having overthrowen the Kingdom of the Lombards; gave unto the Popes the Exarchate, Urbine, Ancona, Spoleto, and many other Towns and Territories about Rome. 6. That the Popes in all their Bulls and Charters, exprest the date of them in these following words; Such a one our Lord the Emperour reigning. 7. That long after the translation of the Empire from France to Germany, the Popes began to make open protestation, that the Pontifical Dignity was rather to give Laws to the Emperors than receive any from them. 8. That being thus raised to an earthly power, they forgot the salvation of souls, sanctity of life, and the Commandments of God, propagation of Religion, and Charity towards men: And that to raise Arms, to make War against Christians, to invent new devices for getting of money, to prophane sacred things for their own ends, and to enrich their kindred and children, was their only study. And this is the substance of Guiccardine in that place: an Author above all exception. He was a man whom the Popes employed in many businesses of principal importance; so that no hate to them, but love to the truth, made him write thus much. As for the City of Rome, so unlikely is it to have been given by Constantine, that neither Papin nor Charles his Son, (though more beholding to the Popes than that Emperour was) could be induced to part with it. Lewis surnamed Pius, is said to have been the first Donor of it, and a Copy of his Donation is found in the third Book of Volaterran, subscribed by the Emperour, his three Sons, ten Bishops, eight Abbots, fifteen Earls, and the Pope's Library-keeper: yet notwithstanding it is thought, by many very learned and judicious men, that really there was no such matter; but that all this was forged by Anastasis the Pope's Bibliothecarian, or Library-keeper, who is cited as a witness to the Donation. And yet to put the matter further out of question, let us next hear what that great Politician and Statesman, the Recorder of Florence, Nic. Machiavel, hath observed in this case. 'Rome (saith he) was always subject to the Lords of Italy, till Theodorick King of the Goths removed his Seat to Ravenna; for thereby the Romans were enforced to submit themselves to the Bishops, An. 430. or thereabouts. And talking of the estate of the Popedom, An. 931. he saith thus. 'In Rome were elected yearly out of the Nobility two Consuls, who according to the ancient Custom ruled that City. Under them was appointed a Judge to minister justice to the people. There was also a Council of twelve men, which gave Governours unto the Towns subject to Rome. And for the Pope, he had in Rome more or less Authority, according to the favour which he found with the Emperors, or others then most mighty; but the leaving of Italy by the German Emperors settled the Pope in a more absolute Sovereignty over the City. And yet it seems they were not of such absolute power, but that the Romans tugged hard with them for their Liberties. Concerning which he tells us in another place, That the ambition of the people of Rome did at that time (viz. An. 1010.) make much War with the Popes; and that having helped the Pope to drive out the Emperour, and altered the Government of the City as to them seemed good, suddenly they became Enemies to him; and the Popes received more injuries at their hands, than at any other Christian Princes; and that even in those days when the Censures of the Popes made all the Welt of the World to tremble, yet even then did the people of Rome rebel, and both the Popes and the people studied for nothing so much, as how one of them might overthrow the Authority and Estimation of the other.

But for the Method and degrees by which the Popes ascended to their temporal greatness, take here an extract of the Story taken out of the best Authors, by the most Reverend Father in God the late Lord Archbishop of Canterbury, in his learned and laborious work against Fisher the Jesuit. 'The Pope (saith he) being chosen anciently by the Clergy and people of Rome, used always to receive from the Emperors hands a ratification of that choice: inasmuch that about the year 579. when all Italy was on fire with the Lombards, and Pelagius the second constrained through the necessity of the times, to enter upon the Popedom without the Emperour's leave; St. Gregory then a Deacon, was shortly after sent in an Embassy to excuse it. But when the Lombards grew so great in Italy, and the Empire was so infested with the Saracens, and such changes happened in all parts of the World, as that neither for the present the Homage of the Pope was useful to the Emperour; nor the Protection of the Emperour, a valuable for the Pope: by this means was the Bishop of Rome left to play his own game by himself. A thing which as it pleased him well enough, so both he and his Successors made great advantage by it. For being grown to that eminence by the favour of the Emperors, and the greatness of that City and place of his abode, he then found himself the more free, the greater the Tempest was that beat upon the others. And then first he set himself to alienate the hearts of the Italians from the Emperour, in which he did prevail so far, that Theophylact the Exarch coming into Italy, was opposed by the Souldiers, who wished better to have the Pope, than to the Emperour, and the Emperour's own Governour was fain to be defended from his own Souldiers by the Power of the Pope, who had gotten an interest in them against their own Master. Next he opposed himself against him; and about the year 710. Pope Constance the first did openly affront Philippicus the Emperour, in defence of Images, as Onuphrius telleth us. After him, Gregory the second and third, took up his example, and did the like to Leo Isaurus. By this time the Lombards began to pinch very close, and to vex on all sides not only Italy, but Rome too. This drives the Pope to seek a new Patron, and very fitly he meets with Charles Martel in France that famous Warrior against the Saracens. Him he employeth in defence of the Church against the Lombards; and the Address seems very advantagefully taken, it proved so fortunate to them both. For in short time it dissolved the Kingdom of the Lombards, having then Pope's security: and it brought the Crown of France into the house of Charles, and shortly after the Western Empire. And now began the Popes to be great indeed. For by the bounty of Papin, the Son of Charles, that which was taken by him from the Lombards, was given to the Pope; that is to say, the Exarchate, and 'all that lay betwixt the Apennine and the River of Po, So that now he became a Temporal Prince. But when Charley the Great had set up the Western Empire, then he returned the Ancient and Original Power, to govern the Church, to call Councils, and to order Pal Elections. And this power continued for a time in his posterity; for Gregory the seventh was confirmed in the Popedom by the same Henry the fourth, whom he afterwards deposed. And it might have continued longer, if the succeeding Emperors had had Abilities enough to secure, or vindicate their own Rights. But the Pope keeping a strong Council about him, and meeting with some weak Princes, and those oft-times distracted with great and dangerous Wars, grew stronger till he had got the better; yet was it carried in succeeding times with great changes of Fortune, and different success; the Emperour sometimes plucking from the Pope, and the Pope from the Emperour; winning and losing ground, as their spirits, abilities, aids and opportunities were; till at last the Pope settled himself on the grounds laid by Gregory the seventh, in that great power which he now wields in and over these parts of the Christian World. A power first exercised (saith he in another place) by this Pope Gregory the seventh, and made too good upon the Emperour Henry the fourth, as by Pope Adrian the fourth, Alexander the third, with some others, upon Frederick Barbarossa. And others of the same nature were since served when they did not submit. And for this, I hope his Holiness was not to be blamed. For the Emperour kept the Pope under for divers years together, against all reason; the Pope, as Bellarmin affirms, being never subject to the Emperour, and wanting force to stand on his own Prerogative: I hope the Pope having now got power enough, may keep the Emperours under foot, and not suffer them any more to flout before him.

Having thus a little glanced at the means, by which the great power of the Church of Rome was first obtained; let us next consider of those policies, by which this Papal Monarchy hath been so long upheld in esteem and credit. We may divide them into three heads. 1. Those by which they have intimidated and crested themselves into the affections and affairs of the greatest Princes. 2. Those by which already they have, and by which they will hereafter be able to secure their estate. And 3. those by which they keep the people in obedience and ignorance.

1. Concerning the first. First, the Donation of several Kingdoms to them which have no right nor title, but by the Grants of the Pope, cannot but bind them fast to uphold that power, without which they could lay no claim to that which they are possessed of. Or which sort was the confirmation of the Kingdom of France to the house of Papin; of Naples to the house of Sarbois, and Anjou; of Naxare to the Spaniards. 2. The readiness of their Ministers to kill such as resist them, cannot but necessitate Princes to seek their friendship, and hold fast with them: especially since by a Write of Excommunication, they can arm the Subjects against their Sovereign; and without the charge of leaving one Souldier, either destroy him utterly, or bring him to conformity. The frequent Wars raised by them against the Emperors of Germany, and that against King John in England, by these Papal fulminations only; the poisoning of the said King John by a Monk of Srineland, and killing of King Henry the third of France, by Jaques Clement; are full proofs of this. 3. Then followeth their allowance of Marriages prohibited both by God and Nature; the issue of which cannot but uphold the Popes Authority, without which their birth would be illegitimate, and consequently themselves incapable of the Estates they are born unto: And by this means they do more strengthen themselves by the unlawful Marriages of others, than ever Prince could do by the lawful Marriage of his own. Nothing more fattened Queen Mary of England to the See of Rome, than the question that was raised about the Marriage of her Mother to King Henry the eighth; the lawfulness of which depended chiefly on the dispensation of Pope Julius the second. 4. Then cometh in their dispensing with the Oaths of Princes, when they conceive themselves induced upon reason of State, to fly off from those Leagues and break off those Treaties, which have been solemnly made and sworn betwixt them and their Neighbours. By means whereof, such Princes think themselves not perjured, because dispensed with by the Pope; and commonly get something in advantage, or point of profit, for which they cannot be unthankful unto the Papacy, for which they cannot be obvious in all times and stories. 5. Next comes the choosing of the younger Sons of great Princes into the rank of Cardinals; which obligeth the whole Stock or Family to the Papal Throne: that being a means whereby young Princes are preferred without charge to their Fathers, or any diminution of the Regal Patrimony. 6. And as by these courses he holds in with all Christian Princes generally, which are of the Religion of the Church of Rome; so hath he fattened more particularly on the King of Spain; whereof we shall speak further when we come to that Country.

2. Concerning the second: 1. So it is that their Estate hath the firmest foundation of any, as being built on the Conscience of men possessed with an opinion of their Infallibility, and that undoubted power they pretend unto, not only in Heaven and upon Earth, but also over Hell and Purgatory. 2. Then comes the innumerable Preferments at their disposing, for men of all humours and affections; as having in their power the disposing of almost all the Benefices and Bishopricks of Italy, half of those in Spain, divers in Germany and France; which keepeth the Clergy, and all such as are that way studied, in a perpetual dependence upon that See; especially injoying by it many notable Privileges, which those of the Temporalty are not capable of. 3. Consider next the multitude of Monks and Friars, whose very being depends wholly upon his Authority; every Monastery and Convent being a Garrison (as it were) to defend the Papacy, and train up a Militia of Spiritual Janizaries; men most affectionately devoted to his See and Service. Of these it is conceived that there are no fewer than a Million, one half whereof at least may be fit for action; and all maintained at other men's cost, themselves not disturbing one penny towards it. 4. Their Pardons and Indulgences are a great increase to their Revenue: some of them as unlimited as that of Pope Boniface the eighth, which was for 82000 years to all that could say such a Prayer of St. Angelines; and that for every day, Toties quoties. 5. Their practicing on Penitents, whom they persuade in the very agony of their Souls, that there is no salvation for them, but by giving part of their Estates unto the Church. 6. Nor have they found any small advantage to their Power and Patrimony by the invention of Spiritual Fraternities, or orders of Friars, and may in number perhaps equal them. Into these the Lay-People of all sorts, men and women, married and single, declare to be enrolled; as hereby injoying the spiritual prerogatives of Indulgences, and a more speedy dispatch out of Purgatory.

3. Concerning the third. 1. They deter the people from reading the Scripture, alleging unto them the perils they may incur by mis-interpretation. 2. They breed an Antipathy between the Papist and the Protestant; inasmuch that a Papist may not lay Amen, unto a Protestant's Deo Gratias. They debate them from all fund of the Religion, in prohibiting the Books of the Reformed Writers; and hiding their own Treatises, in which the Tenet of the Protestants is recited only to be confuted; inasmuch that in all Italy one shall seldom meet with Bellarminus works, or any of the like nature to be sold. 4. They have under pain of Excommunication prohibited the Italians from Travel and Traffick with Heretical Countries, or such places, where those contagious sounds and lights (as they term them) might make them return infected. 5. The Servitude, or Tyranny rather of the Inquisition, (of which we shall speak more at large when we come to Spain) not only the beginnings, but the smallest suspicions of being this way addicted. And 6. the people thus restrained from Travel, are taught to believe that the Protestants are Blasphemers of God and all his Saints; that in England Churches are turned to Stables, the people grown barbarous and eat young Children; that Geneva is a professed Sanctuary of Roguery, and the like. We have yet two later Examples of their dealing in this kind. First, the gross slander of the Apostasy (or, as they call it the Reconciliation) unto their Church, of the Right Reverend Father in God Dr. King, not long since the Lord Bishop of London, a Prelate of too known a Faith and zeal, to give occasion for such a calumny. The second, a Book by them published, and commonly sold in Italy and France, containing a relation of God's judgment, shewn on a sort of Protestant Heretics, by the fall of a house in St. Andrew Parish in London; in which they were assembled to hear a Geneva Lecture, Os. 26 A. D. 1623. By which dealing the simple people are made to believe that to be a judgment on us of the Protestant party, which the Authors of that Pamphlet well know to be a calumny in regard of us and a sad chance (I will not say a judgment) which befell their own by the fall of a Chamber in Black Friars, where they were met to hear the Sermon of one Drury a Popish Priest, and that too on the fifth of November in their own account, being the 26 of October before mentioned.

The Popedom being thus cunningly and strongly founded, it cannot be if the Popes had been chole young, or of the same Family, (so that the Successor had not often crossed the designs of his Predecessor) but that this new Monarchy had been greater and better established, than ever the old Roman Empire was in her greatest glory. And to say truth, I have wondered what myself, that some of the more active Popes, especially such as were chosen young, and had the happiness to be of such of Noble Families; did never feel the setting of this Estate in their own Posterity: especially considering the good Precedents which they had before them, both in sacred and in civil history. The high Priesthood in the Church of Jenny went from Father to Son; and why should any man think it inconvenient to follow the example of Almighty God, in making the high Priesthood in the Church of Christ to be also hereditary, not elective? The Sacerdents who were as great Masters for Wit and Policy, as any those Ages did produce, pursued that precedent; governed by Hereditary Caliphs many years together, until the Sultans their Viceregents (ambitiously affecting the Supreme Command) rooted out their races. And if the same Obligation lie on the Masters of Religion or mixt Orders, for preserving the Rules and Statutes of their foundations, as is upon the Pope by the fundamental mental Ordinances of the Conclave, as it seems to do so why might not the Popes as well dispense with those Constitutions, and turn the Popedom into an Hereditary Estate; as Albert of Brandenburg, and Gotardus of Denmark, Masters of the Dutch Knights in Prussia and Livonia, in their times have done? Nor can I live, but that such an alteration as I speak of, might be altogether as contenting to the Princes of Christendom, as the like change from an unfettered popular Government to an Hereditary Monarchy, was formerly unto the Provinces and People of the State of Rome. Of which it is affirmed by that notable Historian and Statesman Tacitus, Nepos Provincie illam verumtamen abnuebant, suspecto Senatus populiq; imperio ex certamina Potentium, & avaritiam Magistratuum, inviolato Legum auxilio, que vi, ambitu, potestate pecunia turbabantur. The Provinces (saith he) disliked not the alteration, to whom the Government of the Senate and People had been long distastful, by reason of the factions of the great Ones, and covetousness of their Officers: the Laws afforded no security at all, as being swayed up and down by force, ambition, and corruption. The Popedom, in one house, would prove more constant in the preservation of all Leagues and Treaties, more careful to preserve the Interest of their Estate, more useful to the Confederates and Allies thereof upon all occasions, than it is at present: where the Popes do often change their fides, and shift their factions; the Successors many times esteeming it his greatest glory to rescind all the Acts of his Predecessor. And possible enough it is that Cesar Borgia the Son of Alexander VI. might have done such ends, when it was covenanted betwixt him and Lewis XII. of France, that being declared General of the Churches Forces, and giving his helping hand to that King in the Conquest of Milaine; he should be aided by him in recovering all the Lands of the Church, which the Dukes of Urbine and Carrimre, the Families of the Malaspina, Baillois, and Estivoglio, with divers others of less note, did possess in Italy. Which having got into his hands, had not his Fathers sudden death, and his own dangerous sickness hapning at the same time, cut off his design; it had been a matter of no great difficulty (if of any at all) to have made himself absolute Master of Rome, and of all the Lands of the Church, and to have left the same established in the Borgian Family. It is true, that such an alteration would be very distastful to the ambition of the Cardinals, who by the deaths (natural or violent, it matters not) of the present Pope, (albeit by all means both of love and money to that high dignity. But for my part, I cannot see how all the wit in the Conclave had been able to hinder it, if Alexander, on a purpose to possess some of that number whom he had invited to a Supper, by a mere mistake of his Cup-bearer, had not peyked himself, (even in the very heat of the business than almost effected) and so made frustrate the device.

But passing by this imagination of an Hereditary Popedom; let us behold it as Elective, and look upon the form and order observed in it. Now the Election of the Pope is made most commonly in this place, and manner. In the Popes Palace on the Hill Vaticano, are among other Buildings five Halls, two Chapels, and a Gallery twenty foot long. The Gallery is appointed for conference, one with the Halls are for the Cardinals Lodgings. Every Hall hath two rows of Chambers, which are purposely for the time, made of green or violet cloth. To each Cardinal is allowed four Servants, to lie in his Chamber. They that are once within, are compelled, unless they be sick, still to continue there; and such as are once out, are no more permitted to go in: left by that means, the Cardinals should maintain intelligence with any foreign Princes. To this Conclave (for by this name the place of the Election is called) is but one door, to which be longed four Locks, and as many Keys. One Key is in the keeping of the Cardinals; one of the City-Bishops; one, of the Roman Nobility; and one, of the Master of the Ceremonies. There is in this door a Wicket or Hatch, which is opened only at Dinners and Suppers, whereof the Master of the Ceremonies keepeth a Key. At this hole the Cardinals Servants receive their meat; every dish being first diligently searched, lest any Letters should be conveyed in them. As for the Lodgings they have neither holes nor windows to give lights to; so that they make day of Wax-Candles. And left the Pope should be made by force, both the City and Cauldars are strongly guarded. When the Cardinals are going to Election, the privileges of the Cardinals are recited which every one sweareth to observe, in case he be chosen Pope. Then the Master of the Ceremonies ringing a Bell, calleth them to Mass: which ended, there is brought to every Cardinal a Chair, and therein a Scroll of all the Cardinals names. Before the Altar is set a Table covered with a Purple Cloth, whereupon is set a Chalice, and a Silver Bell, and about it six Stools, on which sit two Cardinal-Bishops, two Cardinal-Priests, and two Cardinal-Deacons. Every Cardinal writeth his voice in a piece of paper, goeth to the Altar, prayeth God to guide him in the Election, putteth his voice into the Chalice, and departeth to his Seat. The first Bishop taketh out all the Papers, and delivereth them to the first Deacon; who unfoldeth each of them, readeth (without mentioning the name of the Elector) the name of the Elector; and every Cardinal in his particular Scroll, noteth how many voices every one hath. The account being made, the first Priest having the like Scroll, pronounceth which name hath most voices: which done, the Priest ringeth a Silver Bell; at which call the Master of the Ceremonies bringeth in a Pan of Coals, and burneth all the little Papers, wherein the names of the Elector were written. He that hath the most voices (so that his voices exceed the proportion of two parts of three) is acknowledged Pope, and adored by the rest of the Cardinals; but if they exceed not this number, they must begin all anew. If in the space of thirty days the Election be not fully ended, then must the Cardinals be kept from fire, light, and victuals, till they are fully agreed. The Wicket, which we before mentioned, is called the Golden Gate, at which stand an infinite number of poor people; on whom the new Pope, having opened that Gate, betoweth his Fatherly Benediction, and remitteth to them all their sins. Then thinketh he continually on the same door with a Golden Miter; which whilst he is doing, workmen without break it open. The Chips, Stones, Dust, and Dirt which fallth from the Gate, whilst it is opening, are gathered and preferred as choicest Reliques; and the Golden Miter is usually given to that Cardinal, who is in most grace with the new Pope.

This is the ordinary way of the Popes Election, but subject to much Faction and Division amongst the Cardinals, and that in times of less deceit than the present are: Inasmuch as after the death of Pope Clement IV. the differences amongst them held for two years and more. Which gave occasion to one of them to say in scorn, that they must never the roof of the house to make way for the Holy Ghost to come upon them. And there is now much more corruption and abuse in it, than ever formerly, as buying of Voices, setting up some for sales and tearing Scrutinies, every Cardinal desiring to have a Pope of his own, or his Prince's Faction. So that we find it written of an old Sicilian Cardinal, who after long absence came to the Election of a Pope, where he expected that incessant Prayers, as in times of old, should have procured some fit man to be pointed out to them for the Vicar of Christ: that, finding nothing but canvassing, promising rewards, and threatening for Voices in the choice; Ad hunc madum (faith he) funt Pontifices Romani? And so returned unto his Country, and saw Rome no more.

The ordinary Temporal Revenue of the Papacy arising out of Land-rents, Impôts upon Commodities, and sale of Offices, Borarii taketh to be better than two Millions of Crowns; but the extraordinary, and Spiritual, to be far beyond. For it is said of Pius Quintus, who late Pope fix years only, that he got from the Spanish Clergy 14 Millions. And though he was a very great Builder, which spent him a great deal of money, yet he managed his Estate, that he laid up four Millions of Crowns in the Castle of St. Angelo. Sixtus V. took from the Jesuits at one clap 200000 Crowns of yearly rent, (because they were too rich for men professing poverty:) and having late but five years had costed up five Millions of Gold; four of which his Successor Gregory XIV. spent in less than a year. Out of France they received no less than a Million of Crowns yearly. Out of England, when it was the Pope's Papal inquisition, and their Followers extracted no less than 60000 Marks per annum, which amounteth to 120000 pounds of our present Money; and was more than the Kings standing Revenue did attain unto: Yet was this in the time of King Henry III. before their avarice and rapine was at the height. And of late days, no longer than since the Reign of King Henry VIII. besides their Pen-pence, which was an Annual Rent upon every Chantry in the Realm, first granted to the Pope by Offa King of the Mercians, Anno 730. or thereabouts; and afterwards confirmed by Ethelwolf the second Monarch of England, besides their first Fruits, Tithes, and all other exactions: it was made evident that in some few years then last past, the Popes had received out of England no less than 160000 l. besides for the confirmation of Episcopal Elections only. By which we may conjecture what vast sums they drew hence on all other occasions. Let other Countries subject to the Pope's Authority be accordingly rated; and the total will amount to a sum incredible. Next add to this the sums of money they receive from particular persons for pardons, for dispensations with unlawful Marriages; the profits arising from Pilgrimages, from the death and Funerals of great Persons, from the Indulgences granted to Abbies and Convents; in all which the Popes have a share; and it would puzzle a good Arithmetician to state his Intrado. So truly was it said by Pope Sixtus IV. that a Pope could never want money, as long as he was able to hold a Pen in his hand. Yet notwithstanding, their Treasury for the most part is but low and empty. For the State they keep, because of that great horror which they have above other Princes, which is to be maintained at a great expence (for the more worldly the more cost, as the saying is) is very chargeable unto them; their ordinary Graces flandering them in no less than 300000 Crowns per annum. The large allowances which they are fain to give unto their Legates, Nuncios, and other Ministers, keep their Coffers low: the entertainment of their ordinary Assessors in the Courts of Christian Princes, amounting to no less than 120000 Crowns a month to each. And 3. their greedy desire to enrich their Sons or Kinsmen with the treasures of the Church (with which humour Pope Sixtus V. being of poor and obscure birth, was never touched) keeps them always bare. Add unto these the excessive gorgings of the Papal Veli-ments (in which vanity every one seeketh to excel the other) especially that of their Triple-Crown: which must needs put them to great charges; and continual influxes of their treasure. And for an evidence of this last, we find that Clement V. who first transferred his See to Avignon, to show his gallantry to the French (probably unacquainted with the like fine fights) had his Crown thick set with Carbuncles and precious stones: one of which being lost by a fall from his Horse, was valued at 6000 Ducats.

As for the Forces of the Church, the Pope is able to impress as great a number of Land-souldiers out of his Estate, as any Prince or Common-wealth within the limits of Italy. Paul III. sent to the aid of Charles V. in the Wars of Germany, 12000 Foot, and 500 Horse, and yet raised his own Family to the Dukedom of Parma. Pius V. sent to the aid of Charles IX. against the Hugonots, 4000 Foot, and 1000 Horse; whose Forces they maintained at their own charges. And when Clement undertook the War of Ferrara, he raised out of his Estate 20000 Foot, and 2000 Horse in less than a month; which was more than most Princes in Europe could possibly have done. And for the valour of his Souldiers, and ability of his Commanders, they retain so much (as before was said) of their Ancients virtues; that there are thought to be many Families in the Estate of the Churchable to furnish all the Common-wealths and Princes of Christendom, with sufficient Captains. What and how little he is able to do by Sea, may be best seen out of the aid which he sent to the Venetians, at the famous Battle of Lepanto, wherein he furnished them with no more than twelve Gallies; and those too hired of the Duke of Florence: The Venetians in the Adriatick, and the Florentines in the Tyber. St. John has, having all the Trade, and consequently all the power in the Seas of Italy: it is true, the Pope was bound by the capitulation, to bear the fifth part of the charge of the War, and with the help of the rest of the Princes of Italy (who were to march under his colours) to set forth 50000 Foot, and 4500 Horse: which is as great an Argument of his riches and power by Land, as the other is of his weakness by Sea.

Having a purpose in the prosecution of this Work, to mention such particular Orders of Knighthood, as most Countries have given beginning to: I will here set down the Orders of such Papal Spiritual Knights or Friars, which his holy Benediction hath erected, and far allowance doth maintain. And for our better proceeding, we will begin with the original of a Monastical life; and then we will make special mention of some of the Religious Votaries of both Sexes. Know then, that under the seventh persecution raised against the Church by Decius, one Pandus, born at Thebes in Egypt, retired to a private Cave under the foot of a Rock, Anno 260. Here he is said to have lived one hundred years, and to have been seen of no man but one Anthony who was at his death. This Anthony was the first that followed the example of Paul; a man of a noble House, and one that sold all his Estate, that he might the more privately enjoy himself. He lived an hundred and fifty years, and is called the Father of the Monks. To these beginnings doth Polydore Virgil refer the original of the Monks, and religious Orders; the name Monk coming from the Greek Μοναχ, because of their lonely and solitary lives. Those of the Religious Orders are called Freres, and in English, Friars, from the French word Frere, which significeth a Brother; and that either because of their brotherly co-habitation; or else because they are Freres in male, Brethren in mischief and defign.

The foundation of Monastical life thus laid by Paul, and Anthony, the world increased so fast in Monks and and Eremites, that it seemed necessary to prescribe them Orders. Herupon St. Basil gathered them together, living formerly dispersed; and is said to be the first that built them Monasteries. He is also said to have ordained the three Vows of Poverty, Chastity, and Obedience; to have instructed them in good Arts, true Religion, and in the Service of God, with Hymns, Prayers, and Watching. Of this Order there are not many in the Latine Church but good plenty of them in the Greek. They are bound to abstain from all kind of Flesh, and are called Monks of St. Basil, by the name of that Father; amongst the Writings of which Father, the Rules for these Monasticks are set down at large.

II. The next who prescribed Orders was S. Augustine, born in the year 350, who being thirty years of age, is said to have obtained a Garden without the Walls of Hippo, for private Contemplations. Twelve only he admitted into his Society, living with them in all integrity, and wearing a leather Girdle to distinguish them from Monks. Branches afterwards into two several and distinct Orders, the one called by the name of Canons Regular, whose chief House here in England was St. John's near Colchester; the other called commonly Augustine Friars, or Eremites of St. Austin, as others call them; Of which effect formerly in the University of Oxford, that all who took the Degree of a Master of Arts, were to submit themselves to their Oppositions in the publick Schools, and receive approbation from them; from whence the form, in Anglicanorum professorum, still remained among them. Their house in London stood in Broadstreet, of which a part of the Church still standeth, converted to a Church for the use of the Dutch; the rest demolished, and in the place thereof a stately Mansion erected by Sir William Paulet the first Marquess of Winchester, and Lord Treasurer of England. These make the first Order of the Friars Medicantes. The first Monastery of them was erected at Paris by William Duke of Guien, Anno 1155, and Anno 1200, they began to flourish in Italy by the favour of John Lord of Mantua. The other branches of this Tree are 1. the Monks of St. Hieron, 2. the Carmelites, 3. the Crociati Friars, and 4. the Dominicans.

1. The Monks of St. Hieron challenge their original from the worthy Father of the Church, so called. They flourish especially in Spain, where there are thirty two Monasteries of them; their chief House being St. Bartholomew of Lupiana, and have taken unto themselves the Rule of St. Austin. Their Robe is a white Calfskin, under a tawny Cloak.

2. The Carmelites so called from Mount Carmel in Syria, pretend their original from Elias, and John the Baptist. They only allowed at first the Rule of St. Basil; and were confirmed in Europe by Honorius the Third. They are by some called Jacobines, from a Church dedicated to St. James, where they had their first Convent; and by us, the White Friars, from the colour of their Habit. Their House in London stood in Fleetstreet, converted since into a dwelling of the Earls of Kent, besides other Tenements. Their Rule was afterwards corrected according to the Rule of St. Austin, by Dona Eusebia or Teresa, a Spanish Woman; who made them then also certain Constitutions, confirmed by Pius IV. Anno 1565.

3. The Friars of St. Crois, or Crociati Friars, were first ordained by Cyriacus Bishop of Jerusalem, who shewed to Helena the place where the Cross was hidden; hence this Order, which being almost decayed, was restored first by Nicolas II. and afterwards by Innocent III. under the Rule of St. Austin. Their Robe is Watcher, and in their hands they carry the Figure of the Cross. Their House in London near the Tower, still retains its name.

4. The Dominicans, or Friars Preachers, were instituted by St. Dominick a Spaniard. He put himself in this Order with sixteen of his Disciples, under the Rule of St. Austin, Anno 1206, and his device confirmed by Honorius the Third. Their duty is to preach the Gospel in all places unto the farthest parts of the world; which both they did, and their Successors since have done, not at home only, but in India and America, with great zeal and diligence. They are called by us Black Friars, from the colour of their Habits, and are the third Order of Friars Medicantes. Their House in London stood near Radgate, and took up the whole Precinct which is still called Black Friars; though nothing be remaining of it but the wry name.

III. The third that prescribed Orders was St. Benedict, born at Nursia, in the Duchy of Spoleto, Anno 472. He gathered the Monks of Italy together, gave them a Rule in Writing, caused them to be called Benedictines, or Monks of St. Benedict; and lived till he had seen twelve Monasteries filled with them. After his death this Order grew so populous, that there have been of it 20 Popes, 200 Cardinals, 1603 Archbishops, 4000 Bishops, besides some thousands of Canonized Saints, which is too big to brag of. Their Habit is a loose Gown of black, reaching down to the ground, with a Hood of the same, an under-garment of white woollen, and Boots on their legs. The other principal streams of this Fountain are, 1. the Monks of Clugny, 2. of Carthusia, 3. of Cîteaux, 4. the Cistercians.

1. The Monks of Clugny are so called from the Abbey of Clugny in the County of Burgundy, the Abbot whereof, by name Odo, was the first that reformed the Benedictines, then fallen from their former integrity; Anno 913. He obtained of the Popes and Emperours, that all such Abbies as would come under the compass of his Reformation; which were in all about two hundred) should be called the Congregations of Clugny, and that they might call their Chapters, and dispatch their common business, when and as often as they pleased.

2. The Carthusians were first instituted by one Bruno, a German Doctor of Divinity, at the Town of Carthusia in Danubius, Anno 1080. His followers, which were at the first but six, have at this day 93 Monasteries. They eat no flesh, live by couples, labour with their hands, watch, pray, and never meet together, but on Sundays. Their House in London by corruption and long tract of time got the name of the Charter-House, (the Monks themselves being commonly called the Charter-House Monks.) Now better known by the name of Sutton's Hospital; from the Hospital of the Foundation of Richard Sutton, a wealthy Citizen of London.

3. The Monks of Cîteaux were first instituted by one Robert, Abbot of Malden, Anno 1099, or thereabouts; who together with 21 of the most religious of his Convent, retired to Cîteaux in Burgundy Duchy; whence the name. About five years after, one Bernard, a great Lord, became of their Order, who built and repaired for them 160 Abbies. Their Robe is a white Calfskin, girt with a Girdle of wool the red back. They were by us called White Monks; and the common Benedictines, Black Monks; both from the colour of their Habits.

4. The Cistercians owe their original to Peter de Moray a Samarie, born Anno 1250, who being afterwards for his sanctity chose Pope, was called Celidine V. He reformed the Benedictines, then much degenerated; and had his Order confirmed by Gregory XI. There are at this present 124 Monasteries of them.

IV. The fourth and last that prescribed new Orders to the Monasticks, was St. Francis of Assis in the Duchy of of Spoleto. He fell from Merchandize, which was his first Profession, unto the study of Religion, going barefoot, and behaving himself very penitently: whereupon, great force of Disciples following him, he gave them in writing, by which they are bound to profess absolute beggary, and are not permitted to carry any money about them, or more victuals than will for the present serve themselves and their Brethren. This they observe punctually in their own persons, but give themselves leave to have a Boy with them, to do both without scruple. St. Francis desired they should be called Minors, to shew their humility; but they are generally called Franciscans, by the name of their Founder. By the French, called Cordeliers, because of the knotty Cord which they wear about their neck instead of a Girdle; by us, the Gray-Friers, from the colour of their upper Garment. Their Houle in London stood near Newgate, of which the Church, the Cloysters, and some other the publick Offices, do still stand entire; the whole converted to an Hospital for poor Children by King Edward VI. in the latter end of his Reign, now best known by the name of Christ-Church. Their Rule and Order was confirmed by Innocent III. Anno 1212, and is the fourth and last of the Friers Mendicants, or begging-Friers. The other principal Children of his Father, are the Observants and the Capuchins.

1. The Friers Minors, were first founded by Franciscus de Pado, a Neapolitan, Anno 150, according to a correct copy of the Rule of St. Francis of Affis. His followers keep always a true Lenten fast, unless in case of sickness. Their Robe is a dark tawny, an hood of the same hanging to their Girdles.

2. The Capuchins, (so called from their Cowl or Capuchin) were ordained by one Matthew Bassi of Ancona. Frier Lewis his Companion, obtained for them of the Pope, the Habit and Rule of St. Francis, Anno 1526. In the space of 42 years they increased to 2240 Allocations, had 222 Monasteries, and were divided into 15 Provinces. They are bound by their Rule to spend their time in prayer, and are generally thought to be the devoutest of all the Orders Monastical.

I shall now speak of the Jeſuites but that I cannot bring them under any Rule, as being a people neither simply Lay nor Priests, nor merely secular nor regular, but altogether. They were founded by Ignatius Loyola, born in Navarre, who being in his youth addicted to the Wars, was lamed in one of his Legs: after which main betaking himself to the study of Religion, he framed this Order, consisting at the first of Ten only. Paul III. did confirm it, Anno 1540, confining the number within sixty: which he after enlarged ad infinitum. They are now the greatest Politicians, founders of Scholars, and chiefest upholders of the Romish See: so that the only way to re-establish the Romish Religion in any Land, is to plant a College of Jeſuites in it. To the three Vows of Poverty, Obedience, and Chastity, common to all other Orders, Ignatius at the Institution of this, added the Vow of Mission: whereby his Followers are bound to obey their General, or the Pope, without demanding any reason, in all dangerous and hazardous attempts whatsoever, whether it be undertaking some tedious voyage, for the propagation of the Romish Religion, or the massacring of any Prince whose life is a hindrance to their proceedings. It is reported, that a Jeſuit being in the midst of his Mats, which they call the Sacrifice of the Altar, was cut for by Ignatius; to whom leaving off his Mats, he went immediately. Ignatius having no business wherein to employ him, told him, he only sent for him to try his obedience; and withal privately added, that Obedience is better than Sacrifice: and this is called the blind obedience of the Jeſuites. To leave them then as they are, the greatest disturbers of the quiet of Europe, I have heard a worthy Gentleman, now with God, say many times, that till the Jeſuites were taken from the Church of Rome, and the pious Parian (or Presbyterian) Preachers out of the Churches of Great Britain, he thought there would never be any peace in Chriſtendom; with what a true preſaging Spirit, the event hath shewed.

Corrivals with the Jeſuites in power and learning, and almost coetaneous in point of time, are the Oratorians, founded by Philip Neri a Florentine, Anno 1564. Who marking the great decay which the Jeſuites began to have, and the danger which the Church might run, if that Order were not equally balanced by some other of as much ability; first established this, consulting altogether of Priests; that by their diligence in preaching of the lives of the Saints, and other heads of prudential and moral duties, they might divert the torrent of the peoples affection from the brood of Ignatius. The renowned Cardinal Cesar Baronius, Francis Borgia, afterwards Bishop of Avignon in France, and one Alexander Fidelis, were the three first whom he admitted to his Rule: initiated in S. Hieron's Church at Rome by Pope Pius IV. with great zeal and cheerfulness; to whom, as to some of his Predecessors, the power and practices of the Jeſuites were become suspicious. They increased speedily (being countenanced on so good grounds) to great numbers, and a proportionable Revenue, as much esteemed of for their knowledge in Ecclesiastical History, and Practical Divinity, as the others for Philosophy, Tongues, and the study of Controversies; and more accepted of in most places, because not usually intermeddling in affairs of State. So very looked on by the Popes, that the Jeſuites could not obtain the Canonization of their Ignatius, till the Oratorians were grown rich enough to celebrate that of their Neri also: which happened in the short Popedom of Gregory XV. Anno 1622.

To conclude this discourse of Monks and Friers, I will say somewhat of the severest kind of Recluse, which is the Anachorite, or Anchore, so called from anexochos, because they use to live retired from company. They are kept in a close place, where they must dig their Graves with their nails; badly clad, and worse dieted: not to be pitied for all that, because their restraint of liberty is voluntary; yet to be lorrowed for in this, that after such an earthly Purgatory, they shall find instead of an Engle, bone serve, a Quis quaerit hoc de maſtulo vultuſu?

But concerning these Orders of Monks and Friers, certain it is, that at their first institution they were a People much revered for their holy life; as men that for Christs sake had abandoned all their Pomps and Vanities of the World. And questionless they were then a people altogether mortified, and who by their very aspects would gain upon the affection of the hardest hearts; inasmuch that not only many men, but great personages also did desire to be buried in a Frier's weeds as Francis the Second Marquess of Mantua, Albertus Pius another Prince of Italy, Isabel the renowned Queen of Castile and Aragon, Wife of Ferdinand the Catholic; and in late times the great Scholar Christopher Longinus. But as Flam faith of the Civil Wars between Cesar and Pompey, Caſa huius belli, cadem oia omnia, nimia ſit Pompey; we may say also of these Friers. The greatness of their wealth, which many on a superstitious devotion had bequeathed unto them, brought them first to neglect of their former devout and religious carriage; next to a wretchedness of their credits, and consequently into into contempt; so that there was not a people under Heaven that was more infamous in themselves, or more scornfully abused by others. Hence the vulgar sayings of the people, that Friers wear Croſſes on their breasts, because they have none in their hearts; and that, when a Frier receives the Razor, the Devil entreth into him; and the like. Nay, Sir Thomas More, who lost his head in the Pope's quarrel, ticks not in his Utopia, to call them Errone Maximos; and would have them comprehended within the Statutes of Vagabonds and sturdy Beggars. Now to shew both the humours of Respect and Contempt, used severally to these Monks and Friers, as men often affected; there goeth a Tale, how the Lady Moor, Sir Thomas his Wife, hindring by chance a Frier's Girdle, shewed it to her Husband with great joy, saying, Behold Sir Thomas, a step towards Heaven: whereunto with a scornful laugh he returneth this answer, that he feared such step would not bring her to step higher. And as for their retired and solitary course of life, so it is that many Kings, especially of the Saxons in the time of their Hap-roys, have abandoned their Scepters to enjoy it: And Barley in his Argenis, under the person of Aeneas, hath defended it in his Princes, as have cloistered themselves to enjoy the solitude of a Convent. Which notwithstanding, Philosophers have defined a man to be ζῶον πολιτικόν, a Creature principally made for civil conversation; the Poets say, Natiſſimū indignū per quem non uſuſque alter, that he is dedicated to the World, who leaveth no way to society behind him: and the Jews, which live in great numbers even in Rome it self, abhor this unsociable kind of living, and prefer a civil sociableness much before it; as to Nature more agreeable, to Man more profitable, and consequently to God more acceptable. And having spoken thus much of the Monks and Friers, descend we now unto the Nuns.

And indeed I should much wrong the Friers, if I should deprive them of the company of their dearest Virgins, and therefore take somewhat of them also. Called anciently Moniales from the Greek word Μῆναι, from their living alone; whence we also had the names of Monks and Monasteries: in the middle times called Nuns, from Nunna an Egyptian word, (for Egypt in old times was not meanly furnished with such Armenies) which also signifieth a solitary and lonely life. A word in some of the barbarous Latines very much in use. Scho-lastica the Sister of St. Benedict, was the first who collected them into Companies, and prescribed them Rules. They are shamed as Monks are, and vow (as they do) perpetual Poverty and Virginity. Which last how well they keep, let Clementis tell us: who telleth us, that Pactula volare idem est ac publice eam ad ſortandum exponere: to veil a Nun, and prostitute her for a common Harlot, were terms equivalent. And one Robinson, who lived for a time in the English Nunnery at Lisbon, hath told us, that he found an hole in the Garden-wall covered over with Mortar, in which were hidden the bones of many newborn children, which their unnatural Mothers had murdered and thrown in there. But of these I will instance only in two Orders, viz. that of St. Clare, as being the strictest; and that of St. Briget which enjoyeth most liberty.

1. St. Clare was a Knights Daughter of Affis, where St. Francis was born, with whom life was contemporary, and with whose austere life she was so affected, that she forsook her Fathers house, and followed him. Having learned her Livie of that Frier-monger, she devoted an Order of Religious Women, and had it confirmed by Pope Honorius III. Anno 1225. Her followers vow Poverty and Virginity, as before was said, go barefoot, feed meanly, and are more straitened in their course of life, than those of any other Order. By their Foundress, out of a desire to conform the better to the Rule and Order of St. Francis, they were called Minorites, or Minors, and gave name to the place near the Tower-hill in London, where they had their Houle, called from them, the Minorites.

2. St. Briget was a Queen of Switzerland, and coming to Rome on devotion, obtained of Pope Urban III. Anno 1370, or thereabouts, that Friers and Nuns might in some places live together. For being a Woman, and a Widow, the knew best (as it seemeth) what was good for both Sexes; and to devised such a Rule, as conformed both. But little needed this co-habitation or living together, under the shelter of the same Roof. For they had formerly been joyed in carnal affections, though parted by Walls; neither were the Visitation of the Friers to traitors, but that the Nuns did fruitfully by them. These Friers and Nuns though they lived under the same Roof, are prohibited from coming to one another, but on special occasions: the Foundress for ordering it, that the Nuns should lie in the upper Rooms, and the Friers in the lower. The Confessor also is denied access into their Chambers, but thieveth them through an Iron Grate, by which his Lodging is parted from the Lady Abbeſſe's. And herein lieth the Mystery of Iniquity. For Robinson, when before I named, tells us, that at the time of his service in the English Nunnery at Lisbon, he was shewed a way by which this uncharitable Grate, which seemed to keep the Friers, from the company of their female friends, might be, and was on such occasions usually removed, and the access made free and open to each others Beds. Which if it be truly said of these, may be suspected also in all the rest of this Order, and in most also of the others.

And now I return unto my Friers, which besides the maintenance which by their Founders is allotted for their present subsistence; are kept in a continual hope and possibility of attaining to the highest honours which that Church can give, if they continue constant in their due obedience. For there is not one of them which hopeth not to be the Prior of his Convent; 2. Provincial of his Order, in that Country where he liveth; 3. and then the General of this Order. Next none more likely than the Generals to be chosen Cardinals, and out of the Cardinals one of necessity must be chosen (and why not he, as well as any of the Pack?) to be Pope of Rome. So first and twelveth a Companion of man is Hope, that being the last thing which leaves him, it makes all toys superfluous, all difficulties conquerable.

The Signeury of VENICE.

North of the Lands of the Church from Romandolia to the Alps, lie the Italian Provinces of the State of VENICE, bounded upon the South with the Territory of Ferrara, and the rest of Romandolia; on the West, with the Dukedom of Milain; on the North, with the main body of the Alps; and on the East, with the Adriatic and the River Adria, by which last parted from Liburnia a Salutamin Province. Besides which, it commands a great part of Dalmatia, together with the Islands of Candy, Corsica, Cephallenia, Ithaca, Zant, Cibiera, and certain others of less note. The length of their Dominions by Sea and Land extending above a thousand Miles, but the breadth not answerable.

The nature of the soil, and the principal Rivers which refresh it, we shall see anon in the description of the Provinces into which it is divided. According to which Provinces and the chief Cities of them, the Character of the people may best be taken: it being said Proverbially by the Italians, that the Venetians themselves are stately, crafty, and greedy; the Venotians studious and faithful; the Paduani fierce; the Venotians eager on revenge; those of Friuli, grateful, but incontinent; those of Hilria, neither long lived, nor of very great courage. That in the conduct of a War, those of Venice bring Silver; those of Trevizi, Swords; that the Brescians are fit to dig in Trenches; those of Bergamo lay Ambushes; those of Padua to manage Horses. And of the Women it is said, that those of Crema are deceitful; those of Venice incontinent; those of Venezia constant; those of Venona gracious; those of Trevizi jealous; those of Brescia diligent, and the Bergamasque crafty.

But not to lay longer in these proverbial characters (though they carry a great deal of truth in them) certain it is, that the Venetians themselves speak very little at the Table, very few where they have authority, and many times in excess. And yet such is the constant temper of their Government, and their impartiality in doing justice, that they are very well obeyed, and generally well beloved of all their Subjects; notwithstanding the heavy prefaces which are laid upon them; as well in Italy as without. Elected in former times good Soldiers both by Sea and Land, maintaining Wars continually with the Turks in Palestine; the Emperours of Constantinople, in Greece it fell; the Genoese by Sea, and their Neighbours of Italy in this Continent. But of late times they have more studied to preserve, than enlarge their Dominions; and that too rather by expense of money, than the loss of blood, and by wit rather than by valour. So fortunate in this last kind of practice, that Malabius observed of them in his time, that whenever they lost by War, they recovered by Treaty. A pregnant evidence whereof we shall see anon.

To proceed now to the description of such of the Provinces and Estates of this Common-wealth, as pass under the account of Italy, they are these that follow, that is to say, 1. Marca Treviziana, 2. Friuli, 3. Hilria, 4. the Italian Isles of the Adriatick; of which now in orders leaving the other Members of this Estate to be considered in their proper places.

1. MARKA TREVIGIANA is bounded on the South with the River Adige, and the most Northern branch of the Po, which from some Lime-kilns near adjoining, they now call Fornace, by which parted from the Territory of Ferrara and the rest of Romagna; on the West, with the Rivers Mincio and Sarca, and the Lake of Benacus, now called Lago de Garda; from a little Town of that name, adjoining; by which parted from the Duchy of Millan on the East, with Friuli, and the Gulf of Venice; and on the North with the Alpes which divide it from Tirol, a Province of Germany. In the time of great Augustus Cæsar, this Tract together with Friuli the next neighbouring Province had the name of Venetia, from the Veneti, the old Inhabitants heretofore; and by that name made one of those eleven Regions, into which he then divided Italy. How it obtained this new name we shall see anon.

The principal Rivers of this Tract are, 1. Brenta, called anciently Mædacus Major, which rising in the Alpes not far from Trent, and watering the Fields of Padua, passeth into the Sea, near the City of Venice, making up the famous Haven of Malanuco. 2. Bacillo, called anciently Medacus Minor, which riseth also in the Alpes, and passing by Venezia, emptieth it self into the Brenta. And 3. Adige, now called Adige, which springeth also out of the Alpes not far from Trent, and having taken many lesser streams into its channel, passeth by Venona, and after is divided into two great branches; whereof the one falls into the Sea, the other leaveth it self in the midst of the Marishes.

The chief Cities of it are, 1. Venezia, one of the twelve Cities built by the Tuscani, or Hetrurians on this side of the Apennine; pleasantly seated on the banks of the River Bacillo, and another navigable water called Reteo (formerly Erato). The Territory of the City not more large than fruitful, abounding with all sort of fruits, and yielding an excellent kind of Wine, which from thence is vendued unto Venice. The buildings of it for the most part of polished stone, whereof the Fields adjoining afford special Quarries; and the Inhabitants generally an industrious people, making a great quantity of Silks, with which they do adorn themselves, and supply their Neighbours. 2. Trevizi, seated on the Banks of the River Silva, (which runneth through the middle of it) in the midst of a large and spacious plain abounding even to admiration, with most excellent Wheat, and all other Necessaries. A City of no ancient name, not mentioned by Pliny, nor others of the old Geographers; but of sufficient note in the later times, for being the Residence or Seat of those Provincial Governors (Marquesses they are sometimes called) which the Lombardian Kings sent hither to defend their Borders. Hence it gave name to all the Country, in Latine called Marca Treviziana, or Tarvisana, as some call it: taken by the Venetians, and lost again divers times; but was finally conquered Anno 1380, or thereabout; Antonia Veneti being Duke of Venice. 3. Padua, formerly called Patavinum, built by Antenor, whose Tomb is still here to be shewn. From him named Antenor, as some report, but after called Patavinum quasi Padavinum, from its nearness to the River Po, and the Fens thereof. Situate in so deleitable and sweet a soil, that Confutius Palseologus was used to say, that did not the authority of the Scriptures persuade him otherwise, he should look for Paradise no where else, than in persiana Patavinam amantem, amongst the flourishing and delightful sweetmeets of the Paduana field. A Town of great esteem in the time of the Romans, who much resorted to the same; and much frequented at the present for the University here established Anno 1220, famous for Physicians, who have here a Garden of Similes; of good name also for the birth of Livy the Historian, Julius Paulus a Civil Lawyer his Contemporary, L. Ammius Stella, and C. Valerius Flaccus, two famous Poets celebrated by Martial; and in the later times, of Marsilius Patavinus a Minorite Frier, who wrote so learnedly in behalf of the Emperor, against the Pope, Fr. Zabarella the Civilian, Mic. Savonarola the Physician, Maginus the Geographer, and divers others. It was much renowned in former times for the humanity of the Men, and chastity of the Women; which last eminent and famous, that ascribe to one of Padua, grew into a Proverb. Hereto alluded Lucretius, speaking of his lascivious Writings;

*Tu quoque, nequitia nostri ludisti libelli,
Vix puerula legeris, sit Patavina tect.*

Young Maids my wanton lines will long to see,
And read them o'er, though Patavians they be.

The City after much vicissitude of Fortune, fell into the power of the Venetians, with all her Territories, being in compass one hundred and eighty miles, An. 1409.

Michel

Michel Steno then Duke; Venezia being won about the same time also. 4. Brescia, the second City for bigness and beauty in all Lombardy. It is also the seat of an Archbishop, who is an Earl, a Marquess, and a Duke. Her Territories are in length one hundred, in breadth fifty Miles; which the Citizens, together with their Freedom, bought of Otho the Germanus Emperour, but lost it to Philip Maria Visconti, Duke of Millan, Anno 1421. to whom they yielded upon certain conditions; which being broken by the Duke, they gave themselves unto the Signeys of Venice, An. 1434. Francis Egisari being then Duke; under whom it continueth to this day. The City is very populous, the air found and good, the soil exceeding plentiful of Corn, Wine, and Fruits; and having in it Mines both of Iron and Copper, to the great enriching of the people. It was anciently the chief of the Comitani, who coming out of Gaul, drove the Tuscani hence, and seated themselves in their habitations, till finally conquered by the Romans. It is situate on a little River called Garcia, which runneth through the middle of it; and is said to contain at this time 50000 Inhabitants. 5. Venona, so called (as some conceit it) quasi vere mas; or as others, quasi venonia, because built by Vrennus; both false and frivolous alike. It is situate on the Banks of the River Adige, and is counted the first City of the second rank of the Cities of Italy: proud in the birth of Catullus, a well-known Poet; and in an Amphitheatre (a remainder of the Roman greatness) able to contain 80000 persons. The Territories hereof are sixty miles in length, forty miles in breadth, enriched with many medicinal Herbs, (especially on Mount Baldus, on the Hill thence) where the Physicians go a Simpling. 6. Bellunum, or Cladivacum, as some Writers call it, two days march from Venona, now a small Borough named Labiatis, and never of any great note when it was at the best. Remarkable in the Roman Stories for the seat here given by the Vitellians unto Otho's Army; and after by Vespasian's Forces unto those of Vitellius. By Tacitus called in that regard duabus Romanis cladibus notum & insuavis Vicus. 7. Crema, a Town of no great Antiquity, but situate in a wealthy soil, well peopled, and as well built for the private Edifices: so strongly fortified, that it is reckoned the chief Bulwark of the Signeys of Venice, against the Millanses, on the borders of which State it standeth. First built about the year 970, by some remnants of the Antropomorphites, who on the delivition of Parasius (a Town of Lombardy) where before they lived, abjured their Heresie, and were permitted to build here. Honoured in succeeding times with a See Episcopal; and either the birth-place, or pretirement of John Cremonensis, a Roman Cardinal. Who being by Pope Honorius sent into England, Anno 1250, divorced the Clergy-men from Marriage; and having in a Convocation of the Clergy, called for that purpose, highly advanced the honour of a single life, and shewed the inconvenience and unfitness of Marriage, in men preferred unto Holy Orders; was the night following (to the great discredit both of his cause and person) taken in Adultery. 8. Bergamo, a right ancient Town, but very well built, seated upon the side of an Hill, and having a very large and beautiful Suburbs; the Territory whereof hath many rough and craggy Mountains the spurs and excursions of the Alpes; but withal many rich and delightful Vallies intermingled with them. The people of this City and Country are said to speak the coarsest language of any in Italy: but to have as fine Wits as the best. Places of more intricate note are, 1. Este, (Astus in most Latine Writers) whence came the Family D'Este, late Dukes of Ferrara. 2. Livizium, a strong Garrison on the borders of Montana; as 3. Gastel-

Franco is towards Ferrara; and 4. Servato, of most remarkable for the great quantity of Armour which is therein made. 5. Feltri, which still preserves its name of Feltria; most memorable at the present for a Bishopric. 6. Alitina, a Bishops See also, but destroyed and ruined.

This Province being anciently a part of the Cisalpine Gaul, fell to the power of the Romans at the end of the second Punic War; and being conquered by the Romans, did continue theirs, till first the Gauls, and afterwards the Lombards became Masters of it. Afterwards in the fall of the Kingdom of Lombardy, it fell first unto the French, and after to the German Empire; from which by many mean conveyances, it came at last to Ottocarius, King of Bohemia and Duke of Austria, who bought the same of Ulricus the last Duke of Carinthia: whose Predecessor probably had been a Lized heretofore, from the time that Henry Son of Engelbert, Prince of Hilria, adopted by Henry of Ephezia Duke of Carinthia, or Karnten, succeeded him in that Estate. Upon a reconciliation made betwixt this Ottocarius and Rodolphus of Halsburg (then Emperour of Germany) it was agreed (together with Austria it self) unto the Patrimony of that Family, sold by Duke Leopold IX. to the Cararra's, then Lords of Padua; in ruin of whole Estate and Family, it fell (together with that City) into the power of the Venetians, who fill hold the same.

2. FRUOLI hath on the East the River Fornio, which parcel it from Hilria; on the West, Marca Treviziana, and a branch of the Alpes; on the North, the main body of the Alpes, which divide it from Germany; and on the South, the Adriatick Sea, or Gulf of Venice.

It is called Forum Julii in the Latine of which that of Friuli is derived; from Julius Cæsar, who conducting his Armies this way, built the Town so named; and from that march of his, the Alpes adjoining, as it is thought, had the name of Julia. By some Writers of the middle times it is called Regio Aquileensis, as appertaining for the most part, by the gift of the Emperours Otho and Conradus, to the Church, or Patriarchate of Aquileia; and by the common people of Venice for the most part, Patris, or the Country, because from these parts they derive their first Original. In which regard part of the Region of Venetia as before was said.

The Country is in a manner square, each side fifty miles; watered with the Rivers of 1. Hydra, heretofore of no small fame for the Silver Mines; 2. Tilicentum, rising from the Alpes, and navigable towards the latter end of its course; but broken into many Channels (even at least in number) which makes it not so Navigable as it would be otherwise; most of these Channels being shallow, and easily dried, but (twice and violent withal, by reason of their fall from the neighbouring Hills. 3. Natisio, neighboured by the famous City of Aquileia. 4. Tamurus, mentioned in the first of the Æneids, which rising out of the Alpes, and running under ground for the space of 330 furlongs, breaketh out again; and being branched into nine Channels, falleth into the Gulf or Bay of Trieste. By Niger it is now called Laricina; but by Leander named Timavo. The Soil sufficiently fruitful, except towards the Alpes, and yielding a very pleasant Wine, which Pliny did prefer before any in Italy.

Towns herein of most note and consequence, 1. Aquileia, or Aquilegia, as some call it, made the Metropolis first of the Province of Hilria and Venetia, by the Emperour Antoninus; as afterwards of the whole Dioceses of Italy, by the Western Emperours. Honoured in that regard with the seat of the Presidius Pretoris, or of his Vicarius or Lieutenant: translated from Millan to this City, as the

the Gate of Italy, by which the barbarous Nations were to make their entrance; never so like to be shut out, as by the power and presence of so great an Officer. After this time, and on this occasion, the Bishop hereof had the title of Patriarch. And here the Patriarchal See had not long continued; when the City was destroyed by Attila, that furious Hun; 37000 of the Citizens being slain with the Sword, the rest removing to some places of more safe abode. Re-edified afterwards by Narsetes, but never able to recover its former lustre. After which time fearing the like miseries from the hands of the Lombards, the Patriarchal See was removed to Venice; as the safer place, and seated in the Isle of Grada; yet so, that the succeeding Bishops of Aquileia (for they stayed at Venice only till the times were quiet) do still retain the dignity and name of Patriarchs, as well as those of Grada, and with better reason. For besides the honour which it had in being made the seat of the Presbyter Petrus; it had been formerly more honoured with the residence of Augustus Caesar, who here kept his Court; whence it had the name of Roma altera, or a second Rome; and of Tiberius who lived here, before his coming to the Empire. As for the City itself, it is situate on the River Natisso, but not well inhabited at the present; partly because of the ill Air, partly by the removal of the Patriarch thence, drawn by the Venetians of late times, for good reasons of State, to fix his dwelling in their City, and drawing after him a great resort of Bishops, and others of the Clergy of his Jurisdiction, principally by the neighbourhood of Venice, attracting all Trade unto it. Most memorable in old story for enduring that famous Siege against Maximianus, for the safety of the Empire, of Rome; and her Emperours Maximus, and Balbinus. In whose cause the Citizens hereof were so resolutely faithful, that they braved the women (willing to lose that invaluable ornament of their Sex, for the common good) of the hair of their heads to make Bowstrings of. Nor did this pious constancy of theirs want a happy issue. For they beheld the Tyrant headless under their walls (slain by the hands of his own Soldiers) and saw the Metropolis of the World preserved by their loyalty. And yet the matter was not ended with the death of the Tyrant, the Soldiers and people laying hands on his Children also, and putting all the Sword. On which cruelty being asked the reason, they returned this answer, That not a Whelp was to be spared of Juilianus; none of the brood of such a Cur; or in the language of the Author, Pessimi Canis Catulæ, none of the progeny of 2. Triste, of old called Tergilinus, from whence a spacious Bay adjoining had anciently the name of Sinus Tergilinus, and is now called Golfo di Trieste. The Bay replenished principally with the water of the River Timavus, which with many streams doth fall into, and is therefore by the Inhabitants of that Gulf for Bay called Pont Maris; as Polybius in Strabo telleth us. The Town of greater Antiquity than observation, mentioned by Pliny, and some others of the Ancient Writers, but not else considerable. 3. Monfalcon, famous for its medicinal herbs. 4. Porto Grinare, of old called Portus Romanus, an Haven-Town, as the name importeth. 5. Concordia, in former times of no small esteem; but to be demolished by Attila the Hun, that it is now nothing but a ruin. The people hereof basking themselves to the Islands in the Marishes of Venice, where they planted in Turcodan, Moriana, Constatiana, and some others were adjoining to them of which more hereafter. 6. Quina, or Uden, the fairest and largest at this time of all the Province, containing about five miles in compass, and about 15000 Inhabitants. Honoured for a time with the Patriarchal See, removed higher from Aquileia, at some Siege thereof: of which though long ago deprived, yet it is still the ordinary Seat of the Procurator or Principal Governour, sent from Venice thither. 7. Palma, a new Town, as being built by the Venetians no longer since than their year 1839. but held to be the best fortified of any in Italy. 8. Cividad de Austria, first built by Julius Caesar, in some of his marches towards Gaul by whom it was called Juliana, after Forum Julii, whence the name of Friuli (Diffrictus Fori Julij), as the Latins call it; came unto the Province. But being taken and repaired by some Princes of the Austrian Family (on the borders of whose Estate it standeth) it got this new name of Cividad de Austria.

This Province anciently was the Seat of the Eugenii, inhabiting this tract and part of Marchia Trevigiana. But those being vanquished by the Venti; and the Venti by the Cisalpine Gauls, it became finally subject to the State of Rome, and in the fall of that great Empire was one of the four Dukedoms founded by the Lombards, when they conquered Italy; the other three being Turin, Benevento, and Spoleto. The Family of the Berengarii were once Dukes hereof; three of which were of special fame, and two of them Competitors for the Kingdom of Italy. But this Family being supplanted by the Emperor Otto, he gave a great part of the Country to the Church of Aquileia; to which almost all the rest was added by the Emperor Conrad; yet so that there were divers petit Lords, who had good Estates in it; the name of Duke remaining unto some of the ancient race. One of which named Luitprand, envying to the Venetians their increase of Dominion, made War against them: which ended in the loss of his Country. Amatus 1020, or thereabout; ever since subject to that State: the Patriarch of Aquileia whose authority in this Country began to decline, in the rising of the State of Venice; considering all his interest also to that powerful Signory as better able to defend it against all Pretenders, Anno 1420. But notwithstanding this suzerainty, the Patriarch still had large Possessions and Revenues here, and still retains his Jurisdiction over the Prelates of this Country, and those of Hiria and Trevigiana (20 in all, or thereabout) six only which are those of the Isles of Venice, continuing at this day under him of Grada.

HISTORIA is invironed on the East, West, and South, with the Adriatick, in the manner of a Demy-Island, or Peninsula, save where it toucheth on Friuli; and on the North is parted from Carinthia, with the Alpes of Germany. The Country very woody, and full of quires, affording materials to Venice, both for Ships and Houses; not comparable for fertility to the rest of Italy; and of air to sickly and unwholesome, that the Venetians were compelled to hire people to dwell there, and afterwards to grant them many large immunities. It is two hundred miles in compass, watered with the River of 1. Fornia, which they now call Risano. 2. Nanpura, called at this day Quicero; and 3. Liburnia, which runneth into the Gulf of Quicero, called anciently Sinus Flanavius, and divides this Country from Liburnia, a Sclavonian Province.

The chief Towns of it are, 1. Cape de Trieste, called in Pliny's time Ægide; and being afterwards repaired by the Emperor Vespasian was called Justynopolis. But being taken and destroyed by the Grecs, and rebuilt again, it took the name of Caput Hiriæ, or Cape d' Hiriæ; because the principal of the Province and Bishops See. Of this See was Venerius Bishop, about the time of Luther's first preaching in Germany; who with Antonio de Dominis Archbishop of Spalato, were of most note of any of these these parts of the world, that fell off from the Church of Rome to the Protestant party, and therefore shall be spoken of in more particulars; Spalato in his proper place; and Venerius here. Being a man of great industry, and eminent parts, he was by many of the Popes employed in Germany against Luther. In which negotiation he behaved himself with such dexterity, and gave such content unto the Pope, that Paul 3. An. 1541. intended to have made him Cardinal; had not some who envied him that honour, accused him of Lutheranism. To purge himself he began to write a Book, entituled, Against the Apostates of Germany, in the pursuit whereof, pondering of Luther's reasons he became of his opinion; which being known, he was driven from Justynopolis. He submitted himself and his cause to the Fathers at Trent, but could not get a hearing. Thence he went to the D. of Mantua, from him to the State of Venice; but no where finding protection, he retired unto the Crispini, and there preached; till Crispian, Duke of Wittenberg, Anno 1548. placed him in his University of Tubing, and there allowed him a sufficiency of maintenance. It was built by Julianus (as before) the Nephew of Justinian the Emperor, as a Fortless against the incursions of the barbarous people, 2. Fela, built by the Calabrians, at their first coming thither, the name in their Language importing as much as the place of banishment. It was after made a Roman Colony, and called Pictus Julia; but being first destroyed by Attila, after by the Genoese, it recovered the old name again; and still continueth with the title of a See Episcopall. It abuteth upon Sinus Flanavius, or the Gulf of Quicero. 3. Paruzze. 4. Plinus, 5. Cita Nova, all of them seated in the Midland, and not much observable, but that Paruzze, and Cita Nova are Episcopal Sees: this last being anciently called Emonia, whence the Bishop hath the name of Emmonius. 6. Rovigno, in a little Island, and mounted on an high hill, not unfruitful in Olives, beautified with a convenient Port, and that defended also by a very strong Cavalie. The Town but poor, by reason of the ill neighbourhood of Venice, from which distant not above twenty miles; inhabited for the most part by Mariners, and skilful Pilots, hired by such ships as are bound for Venice, to conduct them safely over the Bars of Malinco. The Country adjoining mountainous and somewhat wild; but those mountains covered on the outside with Physical Simples; and yielding many Quarries of most excellent Marble, which do adorn the Venetian Palaces.

It is recorded that the Hiriani were a people of Colchis, who being sent by King Æetes to pursue Jafon and the Argonauts, were driven up this Gulf; and either for fear of the Kings anger, or not daring to venture their weak Vessel to so long a voyage, as from hence to Colchis whence they came; stayed in this Country. It was after that time called Lipigia, from Lipis an Æolian, who first planted here, and took the name of Hiria from the Hiri, a people on the banks of Jster, or Danubius; who made up a considerable part of this plantation. Siding with the Ætolians in their Wars against the Romans, and making many inroads and excursions on them; they were invaded first by Mithridates, without leave of the Senate; and him they charged with such a fury, that they beat him out of this Camp. Where finding plenty of Wine, and all store of Provisions, they fell roundly to it; till Mithridates having rallied his men again, charged them in their Camps, and killed 8000 in the place; their miserable King being by him partly by the Victors, that he was slain to kill himself for fear of Captivity. This was in Anno V. C. 575. Cl. Pulcher the next Consul persecuted the Conquest. Sonprunus long time after that, Æ. An. V. C. 625. reduced it to the form of a Province. So it continued to the time of Augustus Caesar, who joining it to that of Venice (or Ventia), made out of both the eleventh and last Region of Italy. Under the Romans they continued whilst that Empire stood; and after the decay thereof regained their liberties; which they enjoyed till by Piracy molesting the Venetians they lost many of their Towns to Duke Petro Candiano, An. 938; and the whole Country was made Tributary, by the valour of the Duke Henry Dandolo about the year 1190. After which many times rebelling, they were still re-conquered.

4. The fourth member of this Estate with respect to Italy, are some ISLANDS in the Adriatick; which being principally under the command of this Commonwealth, is commonly called the Gulf of Venice; a Gulf extending in length 700 miles, in breadth 140 miles, in some places less; so called of Adria once a famous Haven Town (as before was said) at the mouth of the Eridentus or Po. Concerning which we are to know, that though the East-Cut part of Dalmatia, where the Sea begetteth to take the name of the Ionian; yet Mare Adriaticum, or the Adriatick Sea was of greater length. Extended by the Ancients over the Ionian, and thence South-westward till it meeteth with the Tyrrhen Seas; and Southward till it come to the coast of Africk; inasmuch as Mare Libyæum, or the Sea of Africk, is by Orosius made a part of the Adriatick. For speaking of the Province of Tripolis (a Province of Africk) properly and especially so called, he boundeth it on the North with the Adriatick; as he doth the Isle of Creet, on the South-side of it, with the Libyan Sea, quod Adriaticum vocant, which they also call the Adriatick; as his own words are, The like might also be made evident out of other Authors, both Greek and Latin: which I note here, because Paul's being tossed up and down in the Sea of Adria, as is laid Att. 27. 27. and being after call on shore in the Isle of Malta; occasioned some to think this Mellie or Malta, to be that Island of Dalmatia, which is now called Melida being feated in the Bay or Gulf of Adria; whereas the Text speaks plainly of that Isle of Malta, which lieth in the furthest parts of the Adriatick Sea, on the Coasts of Africk. But to return to this Gulf, it was accounted heretofore to be very tempestuous and unsafe, as appeareth by Improbis secundum Adria, in the Venice, the Milice Adriaticæ, in Catulus; and in Herodotus the Milice, in Seneca's Tragedy. But when the Empress Helena had found the Cross on which CHRIST suffered, she caused one of the three Nails with which his body was fastened to it, to be thrown of purpose into this Sea; since which time, as Platina hath told us in the life of Pope Sylvester (and cites St. Ambrose for his Authority) it hath been very calm and quiet; the second nail being made into a Bridle for her Son Constantine's Horse, and a Crest for his Helmet of the third. But not to trust too much to the truth of this miracle, certain it is that the Venetians are Lords of it, by reason of their Naval Power; and that it is every year espoused to the Duke of Venice, by the solemn calling in of a Wedding Ring; and every year baptized on Epiphany-day, by the Bishop of Zant. When this last Ceremony took beginning, I am yet to seek. But for the first, which is performed with a great deal of state, every Holy Thursday, the Duke, and the Magnificos being rowed in the Bacantura (which is a rich and stately Gally made for such Solemnities, and capable of 200 persons, whence it had the name) it took beginning from Pope Alexander the third. Who being hardly put to it by the Emperor Frederick Barbarossa, dead unto Venice in the habit of a Cook; Sublatus Cygni being then Duke: in prosecution of whose quarrel, the Venetians encountered Otto the Emperours Son, vanquished him, and restored the Pope. The Duke returning back in Triumph with his Royal Prisoners, was thus fluted by the Pope. Cyani, take here this Ring of Gold, and by giving it unto the Sea oblige it unto thee: a Ceremony which on this day (the Aletion day) shall be yearly observed both by thee and thy Successors; that so posterity may know that you have purchased the dominion thereof by your valour, and made it subject to you, as a Wife to her husband.

The principal Islands of this Sea, lie on the other side thereof, on the coast of Dalmatia. Some few there are upon this side, but those (as well as those under the command of this Signeury) neither great nor famous. Of these the chief are, 1. MALAMOCO, in Latin Methuacum, situate at the South-west end of the Bank or Cauley called Il Lido; now only considerable for the Haven, which is large and deep, made by the influx of Meduacus being mentioned; in which the greater ships do ride, till they hire Pilots from Rovigno to cross the Bars. It was ennobled heretofore with the Duke's Palace, and an Episcopal See: the City of Padua being translated thither, at the lack of that City by the Lombards. But the Duke's Palace being removed to Rialto, and the Episcopal See to the Island of Chioggia; it is now inhabited for the most part by none but Seamen. 2. TORCELLAN, in which there is a little City of the same name, honoured with a Bishops See, (the Bishop of Altina with much people with him, for fear of the Il Lombards retiring thither.) but by reason of the ill air not very well peopled. 3. MURIANUM, or MURIANO, three miles in compass, but one from Venice, of a found air, and very well inhabited, the people whereof make the best Venice Gallies, so much used in all parts. 4. CHIOGGIA, called in Latin Ficus Clodia, a little West of Malamocco, at the very entrance into the Marishes from the Adriatic: distant from Venice 25 miles; to which it served instead of a Bulwark. There is a Town in it of the same name, to which the Bishops See was removed from Malamocco, Anno 1103, and near to which are many Saltpits, which yield great gain unto the people, and as much unto the Common-wealth. Near to this Island the Genoese so discomfited the Venitians in a Fight at Sea, that thereupon, (the taking of the Island following shortly after) they were offered a blank Charter to write what they would. But the Genoese being grown too insolent on their good success, made the City desperate; who putting all to hazard, fell again upon them, beat them, pursued them home, and there utterly crushed them; as we shall tell you more at large when we come to Genoa. 5. POVEGLIA, five miles from the City, first peopled by some who had raised a commotion in the City, on the death of Pietro Tradonico the thirteenth Duke. After which much increased both in wealth and buildings, till destroyed by the Genoese. It is called Pupilia by the Latins. 6. TUDECHA, (in Latin called Judaica) so named from the Jews who did there inhabit: not above half a mile from the City, and not very large; but liberally furnished with most pleasant Gardens. Thence and the rest reckoned as members of Trevisiana or dependants on it.

Between these Islands and the main land of Friuli, lieth a shoal of little Isles, in and amongst which standeth the renowned City of Venice, the head City of this Common-wealth, and the glory of Italy. These Isles 72 in number, but joined together by many Bridges, of which here are said to be 4000 at least, besides 10000 Boats for passage from one Isle to the other. The compass of the whole aggregate body laid to be eight miles, the buildings fair, and generally adorned with Glass-Windows; an Ornament not common in Italy; where the windows for the most part are made with Paper to let in the light: and that Paper oiled all over to keep out the wet. The number of the Inhabitants estimated at 300000. By the situation one would think, that it was denominated from Venetia, which in the old Latin signifieth the seething or frothing of the Sea. VENETIA maris exaltatio esse que ad firmum ventis, faith the old Glossary upon Isidore out of Marco Varro. But the truth is, that it was so called from the Veneti, the old inhabitants of the neighbouring Province of Friuli; who to avoid the fury of the barbarous Huns then threatening Italy, abandoned the main land and built this City in the bogs and Marishes of the Sea adjoining, and that it might afford them the greater safety, they not only built it in the most inward part of the Adriatick Sea, commonly called the Gulf of Venice; but in the midst of many Lakes of Salt-water, extending ninety miles in compass, and having on the East the said Adriatick Sea for the length of 550 miles: betwixt which and the said Lakes there is a Bank or Cauley which they call Il Lido, made as it were by nature to defend the Islands which lie in this Lake, from the violent fury of the Sea. A Cauley of 35 miles in length, bending like a Bow, and opening in seven places only, which serve as well to keep the Lakes always full of water, as for the passages of Vessels to and from the City. Known by the names of the Ports of 1. Brondolo, 2. Chiocia, 3. Malamocco, 4. The three Castles, or the Castles of Lio, 5. S. Erasimus, 6. Lito Maggiore, or the great shore; and 7. The Treports: of that of Brondolo lieth most to the Southwest, and that of Treports to the Northwest of the said great Cauley. And through every one of these there is a safe passage for Ships and Barks of smaller burden: the bigger being compelled to lie at Anchor, on the South side of the City, near to the Ports of Malamocco, and the Castles of Lio, which are very well fortified, and there must remain till they are brought in by skillful Pilots, who know the passages, which, by reason of the shifting of the Sands, change very often. On the West and North sides, it is compassed with very deep Marishes, about five miles distant from the Land; and on the South with many Islands in which are several Churches and Monasteries, like so many Forts, which lie between it and those parts of Italy, which are not under the obedience of the Common-wealth. So that it is impossible to be taken, but by an Army which can stretch 150 miles in compass. It is built, as before is said, on 72 Islands, 60 of which lie close together round about the Rialto, the other at a greater distance. Of these the principal, 1. Heraclea near the firm land of Trevisiana, peopled at first by such as followed Magnus Bishop of Udessa, who to avoid the fury of the Lombards came and planted here: calling the Island and the Town which they founded in it by the name of Heraclea, in honour of Heraculus the Eastern Emperour in whose time it hapned. Made by this means a Bishops See, and being grown populous withal, it was honoured with the first Seat of the Dukes of Venice, removed by Theodore the seventh Duke to Malamocco, and from thence finally to Rialto. Destroyed by Pepin King of Italy, Son of Charles the Great; it was re-edified in the time of Angelo Partitiano the tenth Duke, and called Cita Nova; more memorable at this time for the antiquity of the Bishops See, than the number of Citizens. 2. Jesulan, neighbouring to Heraclea, first planted by some Country people, who flying the fury of the Lombards, brought with them a great drove of Mares, and of Horses, whence it had the name of Equilone, or Equilina. Made afterwards a Bishops See also, by the name of Jesulanus or Equilensis. 3. Grada, on the same part of the City also, but more towards the North, inhabited at first by such of the City of Aquileia as betook themselves thither to avoid the tyranny of the Hunnes: but made more eminent than before, by Paul the Patriarch of that City, who flying the fury of the Lombards, transported to this Island the Reliques and Treasures of his Church; and settled where the Church of S. Euphemia had been built before. And though Helie who succeeded Paul, obtained of Pope Pelagius the 2. An. 580. that the Bishops of Grada should from thenceforth have the title of Patriarchs and be esteemed the Metropolitans of the City and Country of Venice: yet the Aquileian would not so be robbed of his ancient privileges, and therefore stirred up many suits and disputes about it. The business compromised at last to this effect, that the Patriarch of Aquileia should enjoy his ancient jurisdiction over all the Churches in the Continent which belonged unto him; and that he of Grada, with the title and stile of Patriarch, should have like jurisdiction over the Churches in the Islands; that is to say, the Bishopsricks of Heraclea (or Cita Nova) Equilina, Torcellan, Chioggia, Caprula, and Gallia Olinda. His habitation near the Church of S. Sylvestre, in the third Region of the City, called de Canaregio. 4. Caprula, towards the openings of the Adriatick, a Bishops See before the time of Charles the Great, but not else observable: none of these four, nor of the residue of the twelve, which be remote from the Rialto, being much inhabited at the present. Castello Olindo, or Olivaver as some call it; situate at the East end of the City, not far from the Cauley called Il Lido, of old a City of its self (as the name were) now joined by a Bridge to the rest of Venice; of most note for the Cathedral Church of S. Peter, and the Palace of the Venetian Patriarch: this City having been made a Bishops See by Pope Adrian the first Anno 774, with jurisdiction over the Isles of Olinda, Rialto, Luparia, and Dorsedura. His title first Castellanensis, but afterwards, the Bishop of Venice, because the best part of the City did belong unto him, invested by the Duke, and confirmed by the Patriarch of Grada, whose suffragans they were till the year 1450. At what time Pope Ingenius the 4. (a Native of the City of Venice) advanced the Bishops heretofore to the dignity and name of Patriarch; assigning the Churches of Dalmatia (of which they were entituled Primates) for their jurisdiction. By means whereof, and by persuading him of Aquileia to fix his dwelling here also, as before is said, there are no fewer then three Patriarchs which have their constant habitation in the City of Venice. 6. Rialto, which is of most esteem and reputation, so called quasi Rivo alto, because the Marishes are there deeper than in other places; or quasi Ripa alta, because it lay higher above the waters than the other Islands. For which reasons that Island getting reputation above the rest, most of the Gentlemen settled their dwellings in the same; and drew thither in the end, the Dukes palace also, inasmuch that in some ancient Writings, the whole City hath been called Rialto; many old Records being dated in such and such a year of the Rialto. But as they did increase in numbers, so were they fain to spread themselves from one Isle to another: till in the end they built on all the Islands which lay near together, and might conveniently be joined by Boats or Bridges. By this Rialto runs the passage called the Grand Canale, being in length about 1300 paces and some forty in breadth; adorned on both sides with stately and magnificent Palaces; and covered with incredible numbers of Boats called Gondolas, very neatly built, and veiled over with Cloth, so that the passengers may go unseen and unknown, without the molestation of Sun, Wind, or Rain. For publick Buildings it hath in it 70 Parish Churches, to each of which belonging a Market-place and a Well; 31 Cloysters of Monks, 28 of Nuns, besides Chappels and Alms-houses.

The principal Church of this City is that of S. Mark, the Patron of their Common-wealth, whose body they report to have been brought thither from Alexandria in Egypt, and intombed herein: affirmed by some to be the richest and goodliest Church in all the World. The building of Mosaic work, of which they boast themselves to have been the Authors. A kind of work by the Grecians called Αντακτα, and by the Latins writers Musiva, Musica, and Musica, wrought out of Stones or Metals of divers colours, into the shape of Flowers, Knots, Birds, Beasts, and other Fancies of the Workman; yet done with such exactness of skill and judgment, that it seemeth to be all one stone, the work rather of Nature than Art. A Church of admirable work both within and without, compacted of most rare pieces of Marble, Porphyrie, and a rich stone which the Lapidaries called Ophitis, because it is speckled like a Snake: adorned on the outside with 148 Pillars of Marble, and eight of Porphyrie near the door; besides 600 Marble Pillars of a lesser size, which carry up an open Gallery round about the Church; from whence the Magistrates and others of the principal Citizens, behold such shews as are presented in the Market-place, adjoining to it. The Church in length not above 200 foot of Venice measure, nor above 50 in breadth; the roof whereof being of an Orbicular form, lyeth open at the very top, where the light comes in, there being no Windows in all the Church, as commonly the Churches in Italy are exceeding dark, either to strike in the spectators a religious reverence, or to make their Candles shew the better. And for the inside of the Church, the riches of it are so great, Images so glorious, the furniture of the Altars so above comparison; that all the treasures of the State, may seem to be amassed in the decking of it. And yet as goodly and as glorious as the Fabrick is, it is still unfinisned; and as some think, is kept unfinished on purpose partly to draw on other Benefactors to advance the work, the benefit of whose liberality may be employed unto the use of the publick Treasury; and partly, lest Revenues which are given already should be refused by the Heirs of the deceased, if the work were ended. So infinitely doth the furniture of the Church exceed the sumptuousness and beauty of the Church it self.

Of other of the Publick buildings, the Council-house, the Ducal Palace, Monasteries, Churches, &c. I forbear to speak. Nor shall I here say any thing of their private houses, so large and beautified, that here are said to be no fewer than 200 (most of them on the Grand Canale) able to entertain and lodge the best King in Christendom. All I shall add, and so leave this City, will be a word or two of their Artificer, and publick Magazine. In the first of which they have in readiness 200 Gallies, with rooms for Cables, Mats, Sails, Victuals, and Ammunition of all sorts: as they thereby to let out a Navy to Sea, on the shortest warning. And in the other it is said, that they have Arms sufficient for 100000 Souldiers of all sorts; amongst which are affirmed to be a thousand Coats of Plate, garnished with Gold, and covered with Velvet; fit for the use and wearing of the greatest Princes. But of their power and forces both by Sea and Land, we shall speak more shortly. In the mean time I take my leave of this gallant City in this following Epigram of Sannazarus, one of our late Italian Poets, viz.

Viderat Adriacis Venetum Neptunus in undis
Stare urbem, & toto ponere jura mari:

*Nunc mihi Tarpeias quantum vis Jupiter, arces Obijce, & illa tui mania Maris, ait.
Si Pelago Tibirin præfer, Urbem affice utramque
Illam homines dicunt, hanc posside deos.*

In English thus:

*Neptune saw Venice in the Adrian land,
And all the Sea brought under her command;
Now Jove, said he, thy Roman Towers object,
And those proud Walls which Mars did once protect.
Before the Sea if thou prefer,
Behold both Cities, and thou wilt aver,
That men built Rome; the Gods plac'd Venice there.*

Proceed we now unto their story: and if we look upon them in their first Original, we shall find them to have been a people of Phoenicia (a Province of Asia the letter) called the Hentii, who aiding Prizmus King of Troy in his ten years Wars against the Greeks where they lost their King, named Philemon (or Philemon as some call him) chose rather to seek out new Dwellings, than return with shame unto their old. Upon this resolution they join themselves to Antenor, who with some remnant of the Trojans had the same designs and sailing as the Wind and Sea conducted them, arrived at last in those parts of Italy, now called Friuli. So wineth the Poet, saying,

*Antenor portus, mediis elapsus Achivis,
Illyricos penetrare Sinus, atque ultima tutus
Regna Libanorum, & fontes superare Timavi.*

*Antenor through the Greeks could force his way,
And safely piercing the Illyrian Bay,
Cross'd the Libanian Reclines, and conquer all,
From fierce Timavus Fountain, to his fall.*

Here landing they subdued the Euganei (who before inhabited this Tract) and possessed their Dwellings: the name of Hentii being changed into that of Veneti. But this perhaps not done till subdued by the Galls, and made part of Gallia Cisalpinia agreeably to the name of the Veneti, an old Gallick Nation, opposite to the Isle of Britain. When those Galls were vanquished by the Romans, the name and Nation of these Veneti, was so considerable, that their Territory had the name of Venetia; and together with Hiria, made one Province of the Roman Empire. And here they lived in peace and safety under the protection of the Empire, till the terrible Noise of the great Preparation of the Huns, for the Conquest of Italy occasioned many of the principal Men, with their several Retinues, to betake themselves to the Islands, and inaccessible Marishes of the Adriatick; where in the place now called Rialto, they laid the foundation of this City, March 25. Anno 421. Exceedingly increased by the Destruction of Aquileja, and the neighbouring Cities by Attila, and the said Barbarians, Anno 456. at what time it began to be called Venetia, by the name of their Nation. Not much encreased in Power and Greatness, at the fall of the Lombardian Kingdom: though for considerable at that time, that in the Division of Italy made by Charles the Great, betwixt himself, the Popes and the Eastern Emperors; the Venitians were left at liberty, as a Free-Estate: and they derived to be left in a free condition, considering how notably they had freed themselves from Papin, the Son of Charles, who invaded them with a puissant Army, and was well beaten for his labour, though at first successful. After which, making use of their situation, they grew not only rich in trade, but strong in shipping; and thereby did good service to the Western Princes, in their Wars against the Turks in the Holy Land. And they served themselves well by it too: getting in one Expedition only (that namely, in which the Empire of Constantinople was made a Prey unto the Laines, Anno 1200.) all the Islands which they have at the present, in the Adgean and Ionian Seas; many in those Seas which they have lost; and not a few good Towns in Peloponnus, since conquered from them by the Turks. Contending with the Genoese for the Sovereignty of the Mediterranean, they received for great a Blow at the Naval Battle near Chigiola, (spoken of before) that they had utterly lost it, the Enemy could have used his Fortune with Moderation. But being recovered of that War, after many various successes and Events of War, Anno 1381, they got the better of them, and made them quit: by means whereof being Lords Paramount at Sea, they next cast their Eyes on the main Land of Italy, which now they were at more Leisure to look after, than they had been formerly. The Hibrians had before infested them with Piracy, and were punished for it, in the time of Duke Pietro Candiano, by the loss of many of their Towns; but in the year 1390, the whole Country is brought under the command of this Common-wealth. Padaua with a great part of Trevigiana then dependent on it, they extorted from the noble Family of the Carviri Anno 1400. The City of Vicenza they possessed themselves of in the same year also; and not long after fully perfected their Conquest of Hiria, with the Revolt wherof they had before been often troubled.

But that whereby they most improved their Estate was by a constant watching of their Opportunities, taking advantage of the Factions and Frictions amongst their neighbours, and working their own Greatness out of others Ruines. By means whereof they came possessed of many places, of right belonging to the Empire, and the Church of Rome; as also of some Towns, pertaining to the Dutchy of Millain; and four of the best Havens in the Adriatick, which properly belonged to the Realm of Naples: not giving aid to any of their distressed Neighbours, without the Mortgage or Direct Sale of some Piece or other. Which forbid kind of Merchandizing, drew all the Princes of those parts (Confederated together in a League at Cambray Anno 1508.) to make War upon them; every one to recover by strong hand, what the Venitians had extorted from them in their necessity. And the Confederates thrived so well, that Maximilian the Emperor recovered to the Empire, the Towns and Territories of Padaua, Vicenza, Verona, Triest, Friuli, and whatsoever else he laid claim unto; the Popes in Right of the Church, regained Ravenna, Cercia, Rimini (or Ariminum) and Faventa; Lewis the 12. of France in Right of the Dutchy of Millain, Bergamum, Cremona, Brisa; the King of Spain in right of the Realm of Naples, Monferrato, Trent, Barletta, and Monopoli, all upon the Adriatick; the Duke of Ferrara gained Reggio, and the Duke of Mantua the Town of Aspidia. So that the Venitians being like the Jay stripped of all their Feathers, were fain to cut the firm land, and betake themselves unto the Isles and Marishes of their City; having not one Foot of all their whole Dominion left them in Italy, but but their Seas and Islands. And yet in very little time partly by working on the Pope to whom they quitted all their interest in the Towns aforesaid; and partly by dividing the rest of the Confederates from one another; they recovered all that they had lost, in a little time: except the Towns of Naples only, for which they were not willing to contend with the Crown of Spain.

The Government is Aristocratical, managed only by the principal men of all the City, both for birth and breeding; the common people having no authority in affairs of State. The chief Officers at the first were many, whom they called Tribunes: but experience being had of that confusion, which a multitude of Government carrieth for the most part with it, in the year 79, they made choice of one chief Officer, whom they called their Duke. Under these Dukes they have gotten that great Dominion which they now enjoy: The authority of which Dukes was at first more absolute, but by degrees restrained and limited within narrower bounds. He that beareth him in his Robes, his gravity and outward Port, and the respect given him by the people, would think no Prince could be more absolute and supreme. But look upon him in the exercise and power of Government and he is nothing in the world but an empty Title. For notwithstanding that he enjoyeth to great a dignity, yet hath he full power in nothing, nor being able to determine in any point, without the presence of his Counsellors (being six in number) who always sit with him, and dispatch affairs both publick and private; as namely giving audience to Ambassadors from Foreign States, receiving Letters from their own Ministers, granting of Privileges and the like; in which the Duke can do just nothing, if four (at least) of these Counsellors be not present with him. And yet these Counsellors without him may conclude of any thing. Nay he is restrained in all things to the power of the Senate, and to three Officers called the Capi, that he may not go out of the Town without their consent; and by them is prescribed an order in his own Apparel. So that he is but little better than a Prisoner, when within the City; and a Traytor, if he stir abroad: at the best, but an honourable Servant. And his Revenue is as little as his Authority; as being allowed out of the common Treasury, no more than 40000 Ducats a year, towards his expence and entertainment. As for the Sovereignty of the State, that resides wholly in the Senate; but representatively in the Duke, the six Counsellors, and the three Heads or Presidents of the Forty, which are the Officers (as I take it) whom they call the Capi. The Senate or Great Council, consists of all the Gentlemen of Venice, above five and twenty years of age, which may amount to the number of two thousand five hundred, though seldom more than two hundred assemble at once, by reason of their several employments in affairs of the Common-wealth, in other places: who usually do meet together every Sunday morning, and on the morning of other Festivals, where they chuse Magistrates, and distribute Government, and other matters of the State. But because such great Bodies move but slowly, and are not very capable of trust and secrecy, they parcel this Great Council into lesser Members; whereof the principal are the Pregadi, and the Council of Ten. That of the Pregadi consists of 120 in which they treat of, and determine matters of the greatest importance; and therein conclude commonly of such principal points, as formerly have been propounded and treated of in the great Assembly: And in this Council besides the 120 before mentioned, the Duke, the six Counsellors, and the Council of Ten, and all such as have born any publick Office, have their voice or suffrage. This is that Council which properly and more especially is called the Senate; in which nothing is to be concluded or passed into Acts, except four of the six Counsellors be present at them, and that fixty at the least of the whole number, give their suffrage to it. Then for the Council of Ten, their power is universal, over all affairs, such as the other Councils may not meddle with, as to conclude of War, or Peace, to put in execution what they think most necessary for the benefit of the Common-wealth, and other things of like weight and moment: which if they were first treated of in the General Council or Assembly, and after in that of the Pregadi, as they ought to be in common course; could not be possibly managed with such speed and secrecy, as the exigencies of the State require. And in this Council, with the Prince and his six Assistants, the supreme Majesty of the State doth reside especially. Some other Officers there are, and those of great authority and reputation, as the Procurators of St. Mark, which have the charge of the publick Treasures, and the Avogadori, or Tribunes (as one might call them) of the people, being three in all, one of which must be always present in all consultations, lest any thing should pass to the prejudice, and infringement of the Priviledges of the common people.

For the whole body of the City consisteth either of the Gentlemen, or of Artificers and Commons. These last are the descendants and progeny of such as came to settle here when the State was fixed; invited to dwell ere, and to follow their occupations, by several Priviledges and Immunities which were offered to them, and these they neither admit into any of their Councils, nor into any of the Offices of Trust and Power, except it be two, that namely of the Chancellor, and the principal Secretaries, which pertain only to the people. The other are the issue or descendants of those, who first laid the foundation of their City and Common-wealth; and these they have in high respect, and to high esteem, that to make any stranger (how great and eminent soever) a Gentleman of the City, is the greatest honour they can bestow; and not bestowed but upon the best deserving. Henry the 3. of France taking this City in his way out of Poland, thought himself graced with this attribute, which they are very daunt and sparing of, it being the highest honour which they vouchsafe to impart to such Commanders of their own, and Ambassadors of other Princes as have well deserved it. And that this honour may be kept up to the very height, and their Nobility grow not too cheap by being too numerous, neither the younger Sons of these Gentlemen within the City, or of the Noblemen in the Country are permitted to marry. But otherwise they suffer them to satisfy their lusts, with too much impunity; and for their fakes allow of Stews, as an evil not to be avoided on the former grounds.

Now, as Ordo in Tacitus said to the Prætorian Soldiers, Princeps & Senatus oritur, Senatus è volis: so out of these Gentlemen are chosen the Senators, out of them the Duke. His election by Contareus is described in this manner. In the vacancy of the place, all the Gentry above thirty years of age are assembled. So many as meet, cast their names into a pot; and in another are put many balls, of which thirty only are gilt. Then a child draweth for each, till the thirty gilt ones be all drawn, for which thirty the child draweth again the second time out of another pot, that hath only nine gilt balls. The nine to draw, nominate forty, out of which forty are twelve again selected by the same kind of lot. These twelve nominate five and twenty, out of which five and twenty are nine again by lot set apart. These nine nominate 45, who are by lot again reduced unto eleven. These eleven chuse forty one, of the best and and chiefest of the Senators; who after an Oath taken severally, to chuse whom they judge worthiest, write in a Circle every one whom he best liketh. The Scrolls are mingled together and then drawn, the fitness of the Persons then drawn is discussed, and he that hath most votes above five and twenty, is the man whom they pronounce to be elected, and adjudged with due solemnities to be created their Duke. By the like kind of Lottery do they chuse Gentlemen in the Senate, and make publick Officers, inasmuch that Consentors, who hath committed unto writing these publick Forins, conceive (I will not say how rightly) that the Venician Common-wealth was modelled by Plato's Platform.

But whether this be so or no, certain it is, that this Common-wealth thus constituted, and modelled, as before is said, hath lasted longer under one form of Government, than any Republick in the world, either Greek or Roman. Nor hath it only preserved it self in the same condition, but may most justly be accounted one of the strongest Bulwarks of Christianity against the incroachments of the Turks: the Wars whereof hath procured plenty to the Republick. Inasmuch, that it may well be said, that as Europe is the Head of the World, and Italy the face of Europe, so Venice is the eye of Italy; the fairest, strongest, and most active part in that powerful Body. As if the Genius of old Rome by some Pythagorical transmigration had passed into the body of this powerful State; and animated it with all the virtues of that City, but knit with a more permanent and constant temper. From to base and abject a beginning, is this City grown to be one of the best Supporters of the Arms of Europe.

As for the Religion of this State, they tolerate that of the Greek Church, but they themselves profess no other than that of the Church of Rome: yet with such caution and respect to their own authority, that they suffer not the Clergy to enjoy those privileges, which they possess in other Countries, to the publick prejudice. Hence grew the quarrel betwixt them, and Pope Paul the fifth, in which the Signeury stood stiffly to their ancient Rights, and caused Mals to be duly paid, notwithstanding all their Churches were under the interdiction; banished the Jesuites for ever out of their Dominions, for tickling too subtly in behalf of the Pope: and in the end prevailed to buy by their constant courage, that the Pope was fain to give over the cause, and reconcile them to the Church, without any submission. A notable example to all Christian Princes, how to behave themselves towards those of Rome; who are not to be gained upon but by such resistances. So as if a thing it is for men of constancy and courage, to shake off that yoke, which Papal Tyranny and Superstition hath imposed upon them.

In managing their Wars they anciently observed two Rules, which most conduced to the enlargement and security of their Common-wealth. The first was the exempting of their own Citizens from the Wars (not out of jealousy, but care of their preservation) unless compelled to the contrary by extreme necessity: the body of their Armies being compounded out of the Provincial Subjects, intermixt with Mercenaries. By means whereof they did not only keep their City in the same condition, able at any time, and at all times, to give Law to the rest of their Dominions: but warded the hot and boiling Spirits of their Subjects, in the Wars abroad; which otherwise might have made too much work at home. The other was the entertaining of some neighbouring Prince to be the General of their Forces; whom in the conclusion of the service they dismissed with honour and reward. And by this course they avoided faction, and prevented servitude: Either or both of which might have happened by employing any of their own great ones in the chief commands, who (after the example of Julius Caesar in the State of Rome) having a strong party within the City, and an Army without, might perhaps have made himself their Prince. But this was only in the conduct of their Wars in Italy, and in such times when the State was not so well balanced as it hath been since.

As for the Forces of the State, we may behold them in relation to Sea or Land. Their Land-Forces which they have in continual pay, for defence of their Dominion, consist of 28000 Foot, with Captains, and all other Officers enrolled and paid; and besides those, they have a choice Band of 4000 Musketeers, for exercising of which they keep yearly Musters, as well to improve them in experience, as to proportion them some gratuities, according to their well-deservings. And as for Horses, they maintain constantly 6000 men at Arms, well appointed and paid; the like whereof is not to be found in all Italy. And yet besides this constant and ordinary establishment, they are able to bring great Forces into the Field: as appeareth by their Army against Lewis XII. in which without diminishing any of their Forts and Garrisons, they had 2000 men of Arms, 3000 light Horse, 30000 Foot, most of their own natural Subjects; having that they were interlined with some Bands of Switzers to which people they give yearly pensions, to be assured of their aid upon all occasions. Then for the Sea-Forces, besides that they keep fifty Gallies in continual action, for defence of the Adriatick, and that they have no less than 200 more laid up in the Asiatick, with all manner of tackling and ammunition appertaining to them: they have 10000 men enrolled to serve at the Oar, and may raise as many as they please for those kind of services, out of those parts of Salavonia, which are subject to them. But the great evidence of the power they can make at Sea, was the great Fleet let out against the Grand Signiour for the War of Cyprus, An. 1570. in which they manned out one great Gallion, eleven great Gallies, five and twenty tall Ships, and one hundred and fifty Gallies of lesser burden; being in all one hundred and eighty seven Sails, fit for present service. To give the total Sum in brief: they held a War by Sea and Land for seven years together, against all the Princes of Christendom (excepting England) confederated against them by the League at Cambray: in all which time they neither wanted men nor money; and in the end, were the least losers by the bargain.

By this we may conjecture also at the greatness of the publick Treasury, and of the yearly income which supplies the same. For though it be conceived that their ordinary standing Revenue be but four Millions of Pacats yearly (which yet is more than any Christian Prince can boast of, except France and Spain) yet they have many other ways to advance their Treasury, by laying new Imposts on commodities as they see occasion, which needs must rise to vast and most considerable sums, in a City of the greatest Traffick of any in Europe, and perhaps in all the World besides. And yet besides such Customs and Imposts as they lay on Merchandise, there's nothing which the people do eat or drink, for which they pay not something to the publick Treasury: over and above which, the poorest Labourer in the whole Signiory payeth his Poll-money also. Inasmuch, that it is credibly affirmed, that the Christians generally do live in a better condition under the Turk, than under the Venicians. Without such helps, (though heavy and burdensome to the Subject) they could not possibly have spent twelve millions in the War against Selim II. and as many a little before that, in the enterprise of Ferrara, and the War raised against them by the League at Cambray, which was that formerly remembered.

As for the Dukes of Venice, though no Sovereign Princes, nor such as do succeed each other in the right of inheritance: yet being they are always men of most eminent note, and that in their names all the business of State is acted, and all writings dated, I will subjoin a Catalogue of them to this present; and to the end that meeting with their names in the course of History, we may the better know in what times they lived.

The principal Orders of Knighthood in this Republick are 1. of S. Mark, who is the Patron of this City, instituted in the year 1329, and renewed again (being grown somewhat out of use) An. 1662. The honour is commonly bestowed on the person present, sometimes by Letters Patents on a party absent; as lately upon Daniel Haigius, one of great eminence for Learning in the Netherlands. The person chosen is to be of noble blood, at the least a Gentleman; the Word or Motto of the Order is, Pax tibi Marce.

2. Of the glorious Virgin, first instituted by Bartholomew of Vincentia, An. 1222. Their charge is to defend Widows and Orphans, and to procure (as much as in them lies) the peace of Italy. It was allowed of by Pope Urban the Fourth, An. 1262. The Arms of this Order, are a Purple Cross, between certain Stars. The Habit a white Surcoat over a Russet Cloak; and seems to be as well a Religious as a Military Institution, like to the Spanish Orders, and that of Malta.

There are in the Provinces of this Commonwealth, before defined, Patriarchs 2. Bishops 16.

The Great Dukedom of TUSCANY.

HAVING thus run along the Coast of the Adriatick, or upper Sea, from the Lands of the Church unto the Alps, which divide Italy from Germany; let us next keep along the tract of the Tuscan or Lower Sea, from the said Lands of the Church, to that part of the Alps which divide Italy from France. And in the first place we meet with the Dukedom of Florence, or the Estate of the great Duke of Tuscany; divided on the East from S. Peter's Patrimony, by the River Fifio; on the West, from the Common-wealth of Genoa, by the River Macra, and the strong Fort of Sarazena; on the North from Romandula, and Marea Anconitana, by the Apennine Hills, and on the South-side it is bounded with the Tuscan or Tyrrhenian Seas.

It taketh up the greatest and goodliest part of all that which anciently was called Tuscany, from the Greek word Tusca, which signifieth a Sacrifice; of which act of Religious Worship, or rather of some superstitious Ceremonies appertaining to it, they are conceived to be the Authors. And to say truth, they were much given to Sooth saying, and Divinations, and such like vanities of Genilism: Tages, that Melus of the old World, first appearing here, from whom they learned the greatest part of their Superstitions. So that this name was adventitious and accidental. For properly and originally it was called Tyrrhenia, from Tyrrhus the Son of Aryx King of Lydia, who came and planted in these parts about the time that Gedon judged the Tribes of Israel. But these names signified the same both Country and people, though in divers Languages, and with respect to different Originations: the name of Tyrrhenia, and Tyrrhenia being most used by the Greeks; as that of Tyfi, and Tyscia, by their Neighbours of Rome, who also called the people Heirschi, and the Country Heirsria, from a particular Province of it was so entituled. Anciently it extended as far Eastward as the banks of Tiber, the other bounds being then as they are at the present; and in that tract gave dwelling to a potent Nation. Who not content to be restrained within the Apennine and the Tiber, waited three hundred Towns of the Umbris, the next bordering Nation; and built twelve Cities on the other side of the Mountains, that is to say, Ayda, Perona, Vincencia, Trent, Bergama, Mautina, Coma, Verella, Nozara, Parma, Bononia, and Rhegium; all of esteem and reputation to this very day. They were the first Nation that carried an Offensive War to the Gates of Rome, when they gave aid to the Tarquins under King Porfena; and held held it out on the Defensive as long as any : No people in all Italy standing more stilly in defence of their common Liberties, than the Palis, and Vicenza, two Hevurian Tribes. But nothing could withstand the Fortune of that growing Empire. Twelve Nations of them were brought under by Tarquinius Priscus, who from hence brought to Rome the Fseter and Triumphant Ornaments, and other embellishments of State : the Vezii and Palis, by the Sword of Camillus ; the Conquest perfected by the conduct of Valerius Corvinus, and Fulu Commalus, A. U. C. 455. So the Tuscani were subdued at last, after they had been governed by their own Kings 1132 years : that is to say, from Tarchon Priscus their first King, A. M. 2550, to Tuventus Celo their last King, A. M. 2668.

The chief Towns of it in those times were, 1. Vezii, and 2. Perusia, spoken of before. 3. Fesula, then of very great fame, now a poor Village hard by Florence. 4. Agellina, situate not far from the Lake of Tuscanum, which from hence was called Vadum Agyllinum : the chief Town of the Tuscans at the coming of Æneas into Italy, and the Seat Royal of Mecentius that noted Tyrant, so often mentioned by Virgil. First built by the Palis, a Greek People, and by them thus named, afterwards by mistake called Cere : by like mistake as Perr, Jucatan, and others of the American Provinces, got their present names : as shall here be shewn. For the Tuscans, or the Romans so others say, demanding in their language of a Country fellow, the name of the place, was answered in his language, χέρη, that is to say, God save you, or, God speed you : which word they taking for the name of the Town, did ever after call it Cere. Memorable in old time for the Baths adjoining, from hence called Paluca Cereana ; more for the preservation of the Vesul Fire, and the other holy things of Rome, when that Town was taken by the Galls, except right of Suffrage : from whence the Tables, in which the Roman Censors used to enroll the names of those whom they deprived of their votes in Senates, or any other public Council, were called Cerites Table. 5. Phleria, on the Sea-side, the principal Town of the Palis, of which there is some remainder extant in the Village called Palari. 6. Clusium, the Seat Royal of King Porcius : for aiding, which against the Galls, the Romans drew upon themselves the fury of that turbulent people. Pisa, Arezzo, and such others as are still in being, we shall speak of afterwards.

The Rivers and the Soil do remain as formerly, though the first altered in their names. The principal of which are, 1. Arno, spoken of before, in the general survey of Italy. 2. Serius, by Polomy called Boatini : a River which by the excellency of its Carps and Trouts, makes some amends unto the people for its violent Land-Roads. 3. Palis, as violent and dangerous as the other, but not so profitable ; which falleth into Tiber, near Orviette. 4. Marabia, by Polomy called Ofs. Here is also the Lake Volsinus, which is twenty four miles in compass ; and that called anciently Sabatena, but now Lago Braccini, from which Water was conveyed to Rome. By reason of these and other Lakes, and the frequent over-flowings of the Rivers, the Country in former times was full of Bogs, which made the air unhealthy, and the ways unpassable ; it being in the Flares and Marishes of Hevrania, that Amulius was tormented. Iosing here in the greatest part of his Elephants, and one of his eyes. But since those times, partly by the industry of the people, and the great providence of the Princes ; the Fens in most places are well drained, and the Bogs converted to firm land : whereby the air is rectified, and the ways made pleasant ; care being also taken, by great Banks and Ramparts, to keep the Rivers for the most part within their Channels. So that the Country is now full of very spacious Fields, and fruitful Vallies, swelled here and there with pleasant Mountains, little infertile in fertility to the richest Valleys ; abundantly well stored with delicious Wines, and plentiful, in a word of all the blessings of Nature : save that the parts about Florence are defective in Wheat, the want of which is supplied from the Fields of Sienna, where there is plenty enough of it for themselves and their Neighbours ; though no such superfluity, as to spare any of it unto other Provinces.

But to return unto the story, Tuscani being thus brought under the command of Rome, was made the second of those eleven Regions, into which Italy was divided by Augustus Cæsar. In the division of it made by Antoninus, and in that of Constantine, it made with Umbria one of the ten Provinces, which was immediately subject to the Præfect of the City of Rome. Afterwards in the declination of the Roman Empire : it became a member of the Kingdom of Lombardy, then of the French, and finally of the German Empire : during which times it was governed by an Officer of Trust and Power, whom I find sometimes called the Margrave, sometimes Duke of Tuscani ; who had here more or less Authority, as they could work on the Necessities of their several Princes. Tuscanus the last King of the Lombards, had been Duke of Tuscani, and was by Albericus in the time of the Barons ; and Guido is called Margrave of it, under the Reign of Horvius Asepis the German Emperor. Afterwards, as the Popes grew in Power and Greatness, so they made hold to intermeddle in the affairs of this Province : giving it one while to the Kings of Naples, another while to the Dukes of Anjou, making some Challenge to that Kingdom. In which Distractions the Florentines first bought their own Liberty, of the Emperor Rodolphus Halsburgensis ; and after purchased the Town and Territory of Cortona, of Ladislaus King of Naples ; that of Arezzo, for 40000 Florenti, of Duke Lewis of Anjou. After this time they busbanded their Affairs so well, that they became one of the most considerable Estates in Italy ; and at the last by taking in Pisa and Sienna, they got the absolute Dominion of the best and largest part of Tuscani : which now is under the command of the Great Duke, and may be branched most stily into these four Parts : that is to say, the Cities and Territories of 1. Florence, 2. Pisa, 3. Sienna, and 4. the Illynds situate in the Tuscan, or Tyrrhenian Seas.

1. And first, the Territory or Estate of Florence taketh up the North part of this great Dukedom, having the Apennine on the North, and the Estates of Pisa and Sienna on the South. So called from the City of FLORENCE, situate high unto the Conflux of the Rivers Arno and Chianus ; the former passing through the middle of the City, which is joined together with four Bridges of Stone. Encompassed with Mountains, which do serve as a Fortress against Invasions, and for defence against the Winds. First built by L. Sylla that bloody Dictator ; afterwards made a Colony by the Triumvirs, Augustus, Antony, and Lepidus ; from the flourishing situation of it being called Florentia. The Lombards upon some displeasure razed it to the Ground, but it was rebuilt by Charlemagne ; to whom and whose Successors they continued faithful, as long as they had any thing to do with the State of Italy : but after, they brook themselves to the Papal Faction, and were as rigid Guelphs as any. On this foundation it now stands, and is indeed a very fair and flourishing City, agreeable to the name ; the streets being very straight and large, paved with square stone, and always keep exceeding clean : the ordinary buildings beautiful above any in Italy, besides many fair and stately Palaces adorned with Statues, the principal of the Palaces is that of the Great Duke, taking up the room of fifty houses which were wont to stand there ; capable of a great retinue : and for the largeness of the building, the Architecture and Ornaments of it, as also for the Gardens, Fountains, Statues, and other Acccessaries, equalling, if not surpassing the goodliest Palaces in all Europe. The like may also be affirmed of the Cathedral, highly commended for the excellency of the Workmanship, but that especially of the Steeple, which both for stuf and structure is beyond compare. This Church is called commonly the Annunciata, and worthily accounted one of the chief Ornaments of Florence : in which City there are besides to many excellent pieces and curious rarities, that the Archduke Charles was wont to say, that it was a City not to be seen but on Holy days. As for the Inhabitants of this City and the parts adjoining, they are a very industrious people, and generally said to be of a very great wit, subtle hands, and of much insight into business : and yet Count Inhalt, a French Gentleman, was used to say, Nun s'avevo due configlii l'ingegno tanto celebrato di Fiorentini, that he could never find where that great wit of the Florentines lay. Guiccardine the Historian, was without doubt a notable Statesman ; and Machiavel, once the Recorder of this City, a man of as shrewd a brain as any ; and so were the two Cosmos of the house of the Medici : but whether all the Florentines, or the major part of them, be of such extraordinary wit as they say they are, I am not very well resolved ; nor is it much material to enquire into it.

The other Cities and chief places of this first division, are 1. Fesula, once a Roman Colony, now a small Village called Fiesolis situate in the straits of the Apennine, not far from Florence, which is thought to have risen chiefly from the ruins of it : most memorable for the great defeat here given by Scyllio to the great Army of the Gauls, conducted into Italy under Rhadagustus. 2. Pistoria, or Piseta, seated on the foot of the Apennine, but ruined with its own dissensions ; of which the greatest and most lasting, were those betwixt the Neri and  Bianchi (or the black men and the white) which divided Florence, and that between the Guelphs and Ghibellines, which here took beginning, and for a long time exercised the peace of Christendom. This last began (as some say) upon the quarrel of two Brothers, of which the one named Guelph, stood for the Pope ; the other named Ghibellin, declared for the Emperor. The quarrel spreading into Parties, called the Guelphs and the Ghibellines, became at last the wonder and amazement of all good people : inasmuch as some are of opinion, that the fiction of the Bispy and Goblins, wherewith we use to fright young children was derived from hence. As for the City it self, it is seated in a fair and goodly Plain, compassed with Mountains ; the Streets paved with Freestone, and the Church (which is Cathedral) with Marble. It was first walled by Desiderius the last King of the Lombards, when he was Governour of this Province ; but for all that, was forced to submit it self to the power of the Florentine, by whom it was subdued Anno 1150. when as yet themselves were not the absolute Masters of their own City. 3. Volterra built among the Mountains, the birth-place of Linus Successor to St. Peter in the See of Rome. It standeth on the top of an hill, the Walls thereof made of square stone six foot long, which are very nearly joynted together without Mortar ; and in those Walls have Gates for entrance, each Gate having near unto it a very fair Fountain. The Marble Statues, and some Epi-taphs in Tuscan Letters, do evidently declare it to be very ancient. In this Town was born Rodolphus Volterrano, one of the greatest Reformers of Learning in the West parts of the World. 4. Mont Pulciano, in Latine called Mont Pulitimum, a well fortified City and the birth-place of Angelus Politianus, the Reviver of the Latine or Roman Elegancies. 5. Prato, another strong piece of this part also. Neighbourd by a retiring place of the Great Dukes, called Pratolino, a right pleasant Village, beautified with a magnificent Palace ; in which besides many other singularities, are most curious Water-works, equal, if not superior unto those of Tivoli. 6. Cortona, an ancient City of the Tuscans, situate at the foot of the Apennine ; sold to the Florentines by Ladislaus King of Naples. 7. Arezzo or Arezzo, one of the ancient Cities of the Tuscan also, and sold to the Florentines as the other was, this being bought for 40000 Florenti of Lewis of Anjou, then the Pope's Viceroy in this Country. 8. Borgo San Sepulcro, seated on the Tiber, near, or within the Spelman Dukedom ; added to this Signory by Cosmo de Medici, the first of that name : by whom bought of Pope Eugenius IV. for the sum of 25000 Florenti, and laid unto the Patrimony of this Common-wealth, to which it serveth for a Bulwark on that side of this Country.

To this division also we may best refer the small, but rich Signory of Massa, situate on the borders of the State of Genoa. Chief Towns wherof. 1. Massa it self, which gives the title of a Marquess to the Lord thereof, of the Family of the Malaspina. 2. Carara, three miles off from Massa, and more near the Sea-side great fame for its Quarries of whitest Marble (much used in the time of the Roman greatness) and a breed of the fairest Women in Italy. The Prince hereof a Feudatory to the Duke of Florence ; but amongst his own vassals, Absolute enough.

2. The second member of this Estate, is the City and Territory of PIS A, lying towards the Sea, betwixt the Genoese on the West, and the Territory of Sienna on the East. The City first built by the Pisjs, a people of Elia in Greece ; who following old Nistor from Troy, were by the violence of the wind driven upon this Coast ; and here upon the River Arno, where it meeteth with Serebio, did erect this Town. In the distractions of the Empire it stood up for it self, and grew to potent, that at one time they waged War both with the Florentines, and Genoese. They were once Masters of Sardinia, Cosica, and the Baleares ; but finally, being discomfited by the Genoese near the Isle of Giglio, An. 1369, they submitted themselves to the protection of Charles IV. by whom it was made free. Not long after, it was taken by John Galeazzo the first Duke of Milain, Anno 1404. by John Maria his Son and Successor fold unto the Florentines, from whose command they freed themselves by popular violence. The Florentines upon this beliedged them, and brought them to that extremity of hunger, that they were ready to be starved. But such was the humanity of the Edifiers, that when they entered the Town, every man carried victuals in his hand in stead of Weapons, to beget, as it were, new life in that rebellious people. This victory the Florentines got by the valour and conduct of Sir John Hawkwood, whom the Italians call Giovanni di Agno ; who being first a Taylor in Effox, afterwards served Edward III. in French wars, where he was Knighted. And when upon the peace concluded after the battle of Poitiers, he wanted employment ; he entered with his Regiment into Italy, and put himself into the pay of the Florentines, then in war with this City : who for his valour, have honoured him with a very fair Tomb and Monument. When Charles VIII. went into Italy, the Pisani again revolted ; and were not without much labour and great Charges, reduced to their former obedience. As for the City it self, it is almost as big as Florence; this being five miles in compass, and that but fix; but very short of it in the number of people, Florence being said to contain 90000 souls, Pisa not a third part of that proportion; yet hath it very good advantages to make it populous, that is to say, the publick Arsenal for shipping, an University for Students, and the See of an Archbishop: the Cathedral Church of which, is a very beautiful piece of work the Gates thereof are of Brass, and the Steeple of it of such artificial and exquisite building, that it sheweth as if it were always falling. But the unwholesomeness of the air over-balls all these fair advantages.

The next place of importance within the Territory of this City is the Town and haven of Livorno, (Liburnum it is called in Latine) seated upon the influx of the River Arno, well fortified against the Genoese, by whom the Works were once flighted, Anno 1297. Upon a reconciliation made between those States, it returned again to its old Masters. And when the Pisani were sold over to the Florentines, by the Duke of Milan; Thomas Fregoso Duke of Genoa, seized upon this place, and sold it also to the same Chappin, for 120000 Ducats. By the care of Duke Cosmo and his two Sons it is much improved in strength and beauty; and so well fortified, that it is thought to be one of the strongest Cities in Christendom: Cities I say, and not Castles, the Castles of Stockholm in Sweden, and that of Milain, being held to be the strongest Forts in the World. After this comes in 3. Petra Sandia, on the West side of the Arno, (a place of great consequence and strength) one of the best pieces of the Pisani when a Free-Estate, against their old enemies the Genoese, towards whom it standeth. 4. Terracina, Eastward of Livorno, neighboured with a capacious Bay on the Mediterranean. 5. Castellana, an Episcopall See. 6. Porto Baratto, bordering on the Signeury of Siena, now nothing but a station for Ships (not much used for that) but heretofore beautified with one of the best Cities of the Tuscani, called P. Volturna.

3. The third member of this Dukedom is the City and Territory of SIENA, lying betwixt the Estate of Pisa, and the Land of the Church. The City said to be built by Brennus, who did there put his old sickly men to journey, and called it Sena; the birth-place of Enno Sylvius, called afterward Pope Pius II. of Francis Piccolomini, after Pope Pius III. and of Sisto (hence surname) Senensis, the greatest Scholar of the three, if not of all the Age he lived in. By Antoine in his Itinerary called Sena Julia, to difference it perhaps from another of that name near the Adriatick, called Sena Gallica. Built near the Spring, or Fountain of the River Arbia, now better known by the name of Tréffa; but built (which makes the situation of it exceeding pleasant) upon an high Hill, on which there is a Castle that commands the Town; the Streets thereof even and very plain, centring in a large and spacious Market-place; near to which is a very fair Palace used for a Senate house in the Free-Common-wealth, and on the South-side near the Walls the Cathedral Church, reputed to be one of the fairest in Italy, having only one door into it, to which there is an ascent by fair Marble Stairs, of which the Pavement is made also. Having long held the Gibeline or Imperial Faction, it bought its liberty at an ease rate, of the Emperor Rudolph I. After, it fell into the hands of the Spaniards, then of the French; and finally was made over to Cosmo de Medici Duke of Florence, by the King of Spain, Anno 1558. In consideration of the great charge he had been at to beat out the French and other services expected for the time to come. Cosmo being thus invested in it, deprived the people of their Arms, altered the Government, and was the first Prince who had the absolute command of it, after the constitution of their Common-wealth, neither the French nor Spaniards ruling here as Lords, but only as called in by their several Factions; and suffered to have Garrisons in it of their own people, by the agreement of their Party. And, to say truth, it stood with good reason of State, that the Florentine should use all his wit to get this City; and having got it, use all means to assure it to him. For, besides that great accession which it made unto his Estate; by adding thereto the yearly income of 150000 Ducats, above all expences: it was also to be carefully looked on as a Rival, which had long time stood in competition with it, for the sovereign command of Tuscany. Besides there had been mighty animosities between the Cities; the Florentine being always of the Guelphs, and the Siennoy of the Gibeline Faction. A Faction at last so generally distasted in all Italy, and so abominable to the Popes, that on an Ashwednesday, when the Pope being at Athens on the Heads of the Cardinals, was to have said, Memento, O homo, quod cinis es, et in cinerem converteris, according to the usage of the Church of Rome: seeing a Gibeline amongst them, he forgot himself, and said thus unto him, Memento, O homo, quod Gibellinus es, & cum Gibellinis morieris. Of chief note next unto Siena, are 1. Montalcino (Monte Alcinus in Latine) a place of great strength both by industry and situation. 2. Castro Cartale seated upon a lofty Hill, most memorable for the Birth and Sepulchre of John Boccaccio, one of the best wits of his time, as his Decamerone declareth; buried here with a sorry and unworthy Epitaph, not worth the labour of transcribing. 3. Sena, an Episcopall City; as also are 4. Pienza, 5. Grosseto, and 6. Chiusi, this last, the Chiusum of the ancient Tuscani spoken of before. Besides these are 26 walled Towns within this Signeury, but of no great observation in the course of business.

There belonged also unto this Common-wealth, when a State distinct, some Ports and Pieces on the Sea, which when it was configned over to the Duke of Florence, were retained by the Spaniards: partly thereby to keep those Princes at his devotion, but principally that by holding so many places of importance in his own hands, he might carry at his Girdle the Keys of Italy, and become Lord Paramount of those Seas. Of those the principal, if not all, 1. Piombino, in Latine called Plumbinum, from some Mines of Lead; adorned with a strong Castle, and a plentiful Territory: the Castle in the hands of the Spaniards, but the Town and Territory in possession of a Lord of its own, who receives the whole Rents of the Estate. 2. Port Telamon, Eastward of Piombino, so called of old from Telamon, an adjoining Promontory, and known by this name in Plutarch, in the life of Marine. Accounted the chief City of Tuscani in those elder times, but most remarkable for the great Battle fought near unto it betwixt the Romans and the Gauls, A.D.C.529. The Army of the Gauls consisting of 70000 Horse and Foot; that of the Romans little (if at all) inferior to it. A fight in which Antius, one of the Consuls being slain, the Victory was gotten by Emilius his Colleague, with the slaughter of 40000 of the Enemies, and the taking of 10000 Prisoners: Anerostus and Congolanius two Kings of the Transalpine Gauls being slain or taken. A Victory which drew after it the total subjugation of the Cisalpine Gauls, which followed within three years after. 3. Orbelsio, drawing more towards the East, the Cossa of the ancient Writers. 4. Monte Argentario, a Promontory or Peninsula, thrusting it self into the Sea, over against Orbelsio, by the

Latins

Latins called Monte Argentario: and thought by some who have observed the situation, strength, and extent thereof to be the fittest place for a Royal City to be built in, to command those Seas. 5. Port Hercule, which still retains its ancient name, imparted to it from some Temple of Hercules, which was founded in it; it situate near the Eastern Isthmus of the said Peninsula. 6. Porto Longone, a piece of special consequence for command of the Mediterranean; and for that cause of late times gotten by the French (then aiming at the Conquest of Naples) but again recovered by the Spaniards, who doth now possesse it.

The fourth and last member of this Estate, are the Islands in the Tuscan or Tyrrhenian Seas. The principal whereof is, 1. Elba, not above ten miles from Piombino, called anciently Arbutha, by the vulgar Elba. Pliny affirmeth it to contain in compass a hundred miles, but it proves upon a just measurement, to be but fifty. Not very well furnished with Corn, and less with fruits; but plentiful in Mines of Iron; as formerly for Steel and Copper: for which, especially for Steel, of great esteem in the time of Virgil, as appeareth by that passage in the tenth of his Æneids, where it is called

A noble Isle, and known full well, Fortinckhaunted Mines of Steel.

But for all that, the Steel now failing, the want thereof is supplied by Iron; which Iron is of so strange a nature, that every 25. year it reneweth again upon the Mines, and will by no means melt whilst it is in the Island, but must be carried somewhere else. It affordeth also Sulphur, Allom, Tin, Lead, Marble good plenty; and in some parts the Loadstone also. Formerly it belonged to the Lords of Piombino, who not being able to defend it against the Turks, it they should at any time invade it, it yielded it, by the Counsel of Charles V. unto Cosmo di Medici the Duke of Florence: referring to themselves the Revenues of it, and the Government of all the Towns and Villages therein, except those that were thought fit for Fortification. It hath a very fair Haven called Porto Ferravio, capable to receive any great Fleet that should come thither, and therefore it the Turks and Moss had been Masters of it, they might easily have commanded all the Coasts adjoining, as well in Provincia as Italy. For the defence thereof, there are two strong Castles, situate on two little Mountains, on each side one; so fortified by Art and Nature, that they are held to be impregnable, having also good store of Cannon, and all sorts of Warlike Ammunition. And not far off stands a strong Town built by the same Duke Cosmo, and by him called Cosmopolis; well fortified, and made the Seat of his New Order of St. Stephen, of which more hereafter.

The second Island of note is Giglio, called Iglium anciently, just opposite to Monte Argentario, and having some 25 miles in compass; near unto which the Genoese fo discomitted the Pisani in a fight at Sea, that they were never able to recover their former puissance. 3. Capraia, not far from Livorno, so called from its abundance of Goats; and for the late reason Ægilora, by the Greek Geographers: as, 4. Galiana, not far off, took name from abundance of Hens. Of the rest nothing memorable, but that some of them do occur in the ancient Writers, of which sort are 1. Meloria, heretofore Lancelus, in which there is a very good Haven. 3. Gorgona, 4. Tréja, and the small Islands which are called Fornice. 6. To these we may add also the Isle of Planasia, more memorable than the rest for the banishment and death of Agrippa Posthumus, the Nephew of Augustus Cæsar by his daughter Julia; here murdered by the command of Tiberius, to prevent all future competition to the State Imperial, situate somewhat nearer unto Cosima, than the rest of these Islands.

As for the MEDICES, whose Posterity are now Dukes hereof, they were in the Free-State (as Machiavel informs us in his Florentine History) accounted in the chief rank of the popular Nobility: those being such of the ancient Nobles, as, to be capable of the Magistracy, and publick Offices; then wholly flung among the commons had as it were degraded themselves; and became part of the Commonalty. About the year 1410. John de Medici, (the first great raider of this House) hourly maintaining the Liberties of the People against the great ones; was by them to be honoured and enriched; that he not only got a great Party, but almost a Sovereignty in the City. To him succeeded his Son Cosmo, one of the greatest Statesmen of those times; who did not only much reform the Civil Government, but enlarged the Territory of the State by the additions of Casentino, Borgo, St. Sepulchro, and some other pieces. Dying in the year 1464. he left the managery of the State to Peter de Medici his Son, whose whole time was consumed in suppressing such Factions, as had at home been confuted against him and at his death left all his power, and the great wealth which he had gotten (but with a greater measure of his Fathers virtues) to Lawrence and Julian his two Sons. The People after his decease, either desirous of Novelties, as most people are; or fearing to be made hereditary to this powerful Family; seemed to incline to one of the Soderini, a man of plausible deportment, and well beloved. But he judiciously considering, that new Houses as they are easily honoured, so are they as soon abandoned by the fickle multitude; conferred all the dependencies which were cast upon him, on these two young men of the Medici: as being defended from a Family which had long governed the City. Against these two the Pazzi, a potent House in Florence, conspired, and at Mats they flew Julian, but Lorenzo escaped: the blows which were flung at him, being received by one of his servants, whom two days before he had delivered out of Prison. For this fact the Pazzi were hanged at the Palace window, together with the Archbishop of Pisa, who had been of the Conspiracy. To revenge the death of this Bishop, Pope Paul II. excommunicated the Florentines, and Ferdinand King of Naples warred upon them. Lorenzo, to divert this mischief, went in person to Naples: where he grew so much into the good liking of the King, that there was a perpetual League made between them. After his death 1492, his Son Peter, having very impropriately delivered Pisa and Livorno with other pieces, to the French King; was, together with his whole Family, banished. John de Medici, the Son of Lawrence, the brother of Peter, being made Pope, by the name of Leo X. restored again his Family; who not long after his death were again exiled. This disgrace Julius de Medici, Son to the above named Julian, and Pope of Rome, by the name of Clement VII. not enduring, procured Charles V. to bulge it; which request was granted; and the City after two years resistance, yielded. The Emperor then gave it to Alexander Medici, Grandchild to Peter, by his Son Lawrence Anno 1531. And he to restrain the insolencies of the people, built a strong Citadel in the Town. This Alexander was a Prince of good parts enough, had he not been too much addicted to Luit and Wantonness; which being observed by Lawrence de Medici his own Cousin, he twined him to a secret place, under colour of bringing him to the bed of a beautiful Lady, and there basely murdered him. Which done, instead of calling the people to take Arms for recovery of their lost liberty, as he first intended; he fearfully left the City, and fled towards Venice. So that before the people had notice of the accident, the heads of the Medicei consulted together, and sent for Cosmo di Medicei dwelling in the Country with his mother (and then about eighteen years of age) to be their Prince: as being next heir-male which was left of the Family, according to the Entail (as our Lawyers call it) made by Charles the Emperour. This Cosmo proving an excellent Statesman, and a fortunate Commander, to (wayed the affairs of Italy, that Philip II. of Spain to be assured of his friendship, gave him the Signeury of Sienna, out of which he had lately driven the French; and Pius IV. had an intent to have crowned him King of Tuscany. But Philip of Spain (though otherwise his special friend) thwarted that intent, as both to have in Italy any more Kings than himself. After in the year 1570. Pius V. crowned the same Cosmo in the Court of Rome, with the title of Great Duke of Tuscany, for him and his Heirs for ever. In the new Duke's Coronet he caused to be engraven these words, Pius Quintus Pont. Max. ob eximiam dilectionem & religionis Catholicæ zelum, præcipuumque iustitiæ studium, donavit. Thus forward were these Popes to honour this Family; but their Successors have been otherwise affected to it. For when one of Duke Cosmo's Successors did first intimate a succeeding Pope, that he might be created King of Tuscany; the Pope not liking so Lordly a Title, made answer, that he was content, He should be a King in Tuscany, but not King of Tuscany. A Scholar-like distinction, but not so satisfactory to the point proposed.

The Princes of the House of Medicei, in the Free-estate.

- A. D.
1410 1. John di Medicei, the first advancer of the Family to publick greatness.
1433 2. Cosmo di Medicei, the Son of John, called the Father of the Common-wealth.
1464 3. Peter, the Son of Cosmo.
1472 4. Lawrence di Medicei, Son of Peter, the great advancer of Learning in Italy.
1492 5. Peter di Medicei, II. exiled upon the coming in of Charles VIII.
6. Lawrence di Medicei II. Son of Peter, exiled together with his Father; made Duke of Urbino by Pope Leo X. He was the Father of Catherine di Medicei, French Queen.

The Dukes of Florence, and Great Dukes of Tuscany.

- A. D.
1531 1. Alexander di Medicei, the Son of Lawrence, the first Duke of Florence.
1537 2. Cosmo II. the next Heir of Alexander, descended from Lawrence, a brother of the first Cosmo; the wisest Statesman of his time.
1574 3. Kenneth di Medicei, Son of Cosmo II. Father of Mary the French Queen.
1587 4. Ferdinand di Medicei, the Brother of Francis.
1609 5. Cosmo III. Son of Ferdinand.
1621 6. Ferdinand II. Son of Cosmo di Medicei, the twelfth of this Family, the sixth Duke of Florence, and the fifth of Tuscany.

The length of this Estate is 200 miles, the breadth in some places not much inferior, but growing narrower where it bordereth upon that of Genoa. In all which Tract, the Great Duke hath but one considerable Port on the main Land, which is that of Ligore; so that his strength in shipping is not very great: and yet might be greater than it is, if the Subjects did delight in Traffick, and not suffer their Commodities to be bought by Strangers (as generally they do in all this Country) and carried thence in foreign Vessels. For otherwise being an industrious people, and well trained in Manufactures, their power at Sea must needs be greater than it is: the Great Dukes Fleet consisting ordinarily of no more than twelve Gallies, two Gallions, and five Galliasses. And for his Power by Land, he hath in readines sixteen thousand Foot of his own Subjects, well trained and mulctured under experienced Commanders, to serve him upon all occasions; and an hundred men at Arms, and 400 Light-horsemen, well paid, as well in times of Peace as in time of War. And besides these, he keeps so many Forts and Towns in continual Garrison, that his Estate is said to be made of Iron.

What the Revenues of it were in the Free-Estate, I am not able to determine. That they were very great is manifest, in that having in those five years, wherein they waged War against the Duke of Milain, spent three millions and an half of Florens; their Treasury was so far from being exhausted, that the next year they belieged and endangered the City of Luca. Since the altering of the Common-wealth into a Dukedom, and the addition of a Territory and City of Sienna: the Revenues of the Duke are conceived to be a million and an half of Ducats yearly. Of which 600,000 Crowns are raised yearly out of the Dominion of the City of Florence; 150,000 more out of that of Sienna; the Customs arising out of the Port of Ligore, amount yearly to 130,000 Ducats, the toll of Mill-stones only, unto 160,000; that of Salt-Mines, and Iron, falls not short of that: in all a million and 200,000 Ducats. Then hath the Duke his Stock going amongst the Bankers, and trades as much as any in the way of Merchandizing; whereas in other Countries he loseth the privileges of a Nobleman, that betakes himself to Trade and Merchandize. He useth also to buy up almost all the Corn which is brought into the Country out of other parts, and sell it again at his own price; forbidding any to be sold till all his be vendid. The rest is made up by Excise upon all Commodities, even unto very Herbs, and Salads, which lies very heavy on the Subject, the poor especially; inasmuch that it was tartly said, and perhaps not untrue, Qui sub Medicis vivit, misere vivit; applying an old Rule in a new sense.

The only Order of Knighthood in this Estate, is that of St. Stephen, instituted by Cosmo di Medicei, An. 1561, and dedicated to St. Stephen, because upon the Festival of Stephen, Pope and Martyr, being the sixth of August he won the famous battel of Marciano. Pope Pius IV. confirmed it the same year, and granted them all the privileges which they of Malta enjoy: conditioned that those of this Order should make a vow of Charity, of Conjugal Chastity, and Obedience. They are to be nobly born, and in lawful Wedlock; of the Romish Church, and without note of infamy. The Robe is of white Camlet, with a red Crois on their left side, as well upon their military Garment, as their wearing Cloaks: intended principally against the Turks and *Moor*s, for which cause he first at Pisa, being near the sea; but after at Cosmopolis in the Isle of Iva. The number of them is uncertain: the Great Duke the Supreme Master of it. Other Orders are commonly simple, but this mixt; being partly religious, partly honorary.

The Arms are Or, five Torteaux Gules, two, two, and one, and one in chief Azure, charged with three Flowers de Lys of the reth.

Archbishops 3. Bishops 26.

The State of LUCA.

IN the West part of Tuscany, betwixt the Estate of the Great Duke, and the Common-wealth of Genoa, lieth the City of LUCA, so called from Lucuma, a King of the Tuscans, who is said to have built it: situate on the River Sechia, not far from the mountains of Luna, whence the Country is at this day called Lunagiana. It is about three miles in compass, and contains about 24,000 Inhabitants, who generally are a courteous and modest people, men of good judgment, and discreet, and by their widows have preserved themselves a free Common-wealth, notwithstanding the attempts of more powerful neighbours: and they are very industrious also, and well seen in Manufactures, especially in weaving Silks and cloth of Gold, which they taught the Florentines. The City seated in a Plain, compassed with Mountains on all sides except towards Pistoia: so strongly fortified by the help of Art and Nature, that this City Zara in Dalmatia, Canea in the Isle of Candy, and the Town of Ligore, were thought in former times (when the Art of Fortification was less known) to be the four strongest Towns in the Christian World. The streets thereof are narrow, but paved with broad Free-stone, and most easie to walk on: the buildings very fair, built of Free-stone also, and beautified with pleasant Gardens. On the North-west stands a very strong Castle, near which lieth the Cathedral, stately paved with Marble, but very dark, as most of the Papish Churches, to give the better colour to the burning of Tapers in the day.

In this Town was the meeting of the three great Captains, Cesar, Pompey, and Crassus, so pernicious to the Roman Republick. For Pompey desirous to maintain his authority Cesar to get honour, and Crassus to increase his wealth, here united their Councils: Pompey's authority to be upheld by Cesar's Arms, and Crassus his Riches; Cesar's continuance in his Province to be maintained by Pompey's Power, and Crassus his Money; and Crassus his Estate to be secured by Pompey's Greatness, and Cesar's Military Reputation. This done, they made a partition of the Roman Provinces among themselves, assigning Gaul to Cesar, Spain to Pompey, and to Crassus, Syria; which strong Confederacy was the cause of that alteration after followed in that State. For Crassus being slain not long after, Pompey and Cesar wanting a third man to poize the balance, fell first to discontents, then to Civil Wars, which at last made Cesar Lord of Rome. Upon which meeting, and the breach which succeeded afterwards, was grounded that so memorated speech of Cicero, that is to say, Utinam Pompeius cum Cæsare societatem aut nunquam inisset aut nunquam diremisset.

But to return again to the Affairs of Luca, in the declining of the Empire, it became possessed by the Gabrs, from them recovered by Narvis with the rest of Italy. After this it again followed the fortune of the Empire, till taken by Count Rossice the Father of that notable Virago, the Countess of Mathilda: who being deceased without Issue, and the Emperours pretending to it as to an Electate, the Citizens made a common purse, and bought their Liberty of their Emperour Rodolphus for 20000 Crowns. Some say the money was disbursed for them by a Cardinal. But notwithstanding this purchase and their title by it, the Emperour Lewis of Bavaria seized upon it again: under pretence of freeing it from the faction of Guelfus, who had made himself absolute Master of it. By a German Garrison there left it was sold to the Genoese; and having passed through many hands, the Emperour Charles IV. got it once again:

of whom they once more purchased their desired Liberties, for 25000 Florens of Gold; and to secure themselves thereof, demolished the Castle built by Castruccio. But being not able to maintain it by their proper strength they have put themselves under the protection of their Potent Neighbours; changing their Patrons, as conducted most to their preservation: and finding no security from Genoa, and as little from Florence, both which they severally tried; they put themselves at last into the Protection of the Dukes of Milain, and in that right are patronized by the Kings of Spain.

The Territories of this City extend in compass eighty miles, the chief Town next to Luca itself, being that of Luna, a Bishops See; all the rest ordinary Farms and Villages, but of a good air, and very well peopled: which yield a Revenue to the publick Treasury of 80000 Crowns per annum; and out of which the State is able to raise (if there be occasion) about 15000 Foot, and 3000 Horse. A great strength for so small a Signeury, but all too weak to save them from the Great Duke's clutches, if he did seriously attempt to force it, and would venture on the displeasure of the Catholick King: besides that, it is thought that he receives more profit than in gifts and presents, by letting it stand as it is; than it would yield (considering the charge of keeping it) if it were his own. As for the Government thereof, the principal Magistrate is called the Consulatore, changeable every second month, allotted by a certain and determinate number of Citizens, whom they change every sixth month also; during which time they live together in the Palace, or common Hall. Other inferior Officers I insist not on. And for the Government of the Church, they have two Bishops only, which acknowledge the Archbishop of Florence for their Metropolitan.

The Commonwealth of GENOA.

DIRECTLY West of Tuscany, from which it is divided by the River Macra, lieth the Country anciently called Liguria, now Riviera di Genoa, the Coast of Genoa, because it lieth along the Sea of Genoa; and by some, Il Genovesate, from Genoa the Metropolis of this Country and Commonwealth. A Commonwealth once of a large reputation and authority than it is at the present; commanding heretofore the Islands of Cosica, Sardinia, and the Balcars, in the Mediterranean; Lesbos, and Chia, with some others in the Greekish Seas; the Town of Capra, or Theodosia, in the Taurican Chersonese; Pera, on the other side of Constantinople; and a good part of Tuscany.

It was also then so strong both in Men and Shipping, that they sent seven federal Armies to the Wars of the Holy Land: and in the space of three days only armed once upon occasion of present service, eight and fifty Gallies, and eight Pamphyli; being Vessels of one hundred and forty, or one hundred and sixty Oars apiece; and at another time, one hundred and sixty six Gallies, at a sudden pinch. By the advantage of this strength, they beat the Pisans out of Sardinia, Cosica, and the Balcars, compelling them to pay 135,000 Crowns for their Peace; they got a good share in the division of the Empire of Constantinople, when that City was taken by the Tatars, and held a very strong hand over the Venizians. These last they had in so great an exigence, having vanquished their Fleet at Sea, and taken the Island of Chios, not far from Venice; that the Senate sent them a blank Charter bidding them write down what conditions they pleased, which should be readily condescended to. But Pier Doria, Admiral of the Genoan Fleet, unaccountably proud of his advantage, would have the City of Venice wholly at his own open disposal. Whereupon the Venetians, now made desperate, assault the secure Genoese, and took an hundred of their Boats and Gallies. After which they always had the worst, losing their Islands in the Mediterranean to the Kings of Aragon, Capua, and Pera with their Islands in the Greek Seas, to the Great Turks; and full of their Holds in Tusany, to the Florentines; their power at the last being broke by the Venetians, that in the end they were not able to fit out a Navy fit for an enterprise. But these Misfortunes were occasioned principally by their own Divisions; the City being miserably torn in pieces by continual Factions: first between the Doriai and Spicali on the one side, the Fisfi and Grimaldi on the other, Anno 1174. Secondly of the Nigri and Mollani, against the Salvatici and Emiliati, Anno 1289. Thirdly, between the Spicali and Doriai themselves, Anno 1336. And fourthly between the Nobility and the Commons, 1339. Which Factions did so weaken them both at home and abroad, that having lost the greatest part of their Estate, they were fain to put themselves on the protection of their Neighbours to defend the rest; having now nothing left them but Liguria, and the Isle of Corfica.

1. LIGURIA hath on the West, the River Varo rising about the edge of France; on the East, the River Magra, by which parted from Tusany: on the North the Apennine Hills; and on the South the Ligurian or Tyrrhenian Seas. It is in length an hundred and forty miles; that is to say, from the Port of Luna in the East, to that of Alonaco in the West, which lie near to Provence; but the breadth not answerable to the length: and is divided generally into two Parts or Provinces, the East, and the West, both centring upon Genoa the principal City.

The old Ligurians were a Stout and Warlike Nation, light and swift of Body, well practised in laying Ambushes, and not discouraged by an Overthrow, but forthwith ready to fight again: to which the Nature of their Country served them very well, being Rough, Mountainous, and Woody; full of fright and dangerous Passages; and in this Tract few open Towns, but many well-fortified Castles, so that without much Labour they could neither be taken nor besieged. And if at any time they were vanquished in theopen field, they had recourse to these Castles, and other places, hemmed round about with Woods and Mountains, in which they paid their after game, and tired out their Enemies and Invaders. The principal of their Tribes were the Decentii, Ossili, Eubariates, and Juganti; all at last vanquished by the Romans, after the second Punic War: but not without much Labour and pains, by reason of the Woods, and Marshes, and Mountains, within and behind which they retired and saved themselves, inasmuch that it was held a matter of more difficulty to find than to conquer them; Alquanto major erat labor invenire quam vincere, are the words of my Author. They did divers times, after this, much molest the Romans, till at last Pompeius so dispossessed them, that he scarce left them Instruments to plough the Earth. So in the end they grew obedient to their Masters. In the division of whole large Territories by Augustus Caesar, Liguria was made one of the eleven Regions of Italy; as it was also one of the fifteen Provinces, into which Italy was divided by the Emperor Constantine: Milain at that time the Metropolis or Head-City of it. What kind of men they were in the breaking of the Western Empire, may be known by their actions both by Sea and Land, spoken of before: now more addicted to Merchandise than war, but most of all to Usury. A Vice which the Christians learned of the Jews, and are now thought to equal, if not exceed their Teachers. It was the saying of a merry fellow, that in Christendom there were neither Scholars enough, Gentlemen enough, nor Jews enough. And when Answer was made, that of all these there was rather too great a plenty than any scarcity, he replied, that if there were Scholars enough, so many would not be double or treble benefited; if Gentlemen enough, so many Peasants would be bankrupt among the Gentry; and if Jews enough, so many Christians would not prolefs Gentry. The women are very fair and comely, wearing for the most their hair in tresses which they call over their backs: they wear no upper Garments but of Cloth, as being only allowed by the Laws; but their under Garments of the purest fluff. The women here are privileged above all in Italy, having free leave to talk with whom they will, and be courted by any that will, both privately and publicly. Which liberty it is likely they gained at such time as the French were Masters of this Estate; who do allow their Wives such excess of liberty, as no Italian would allow of: in a common Cartizan. And though it cannot be affirmed, that the women of the Country or the City it self, do abuse this liberty; yet the Italians being generally of a different humour, reckon them to be at fault as flame; as they esteem the German Merchants (who make little reckoning of their promises, if not bound by writing) to be men without faith. Of which and other things concerning this Estate, they have made this Proverb, Montagne senza legami, &c. that is to say, Mountains without Wood, Sea without Fish, Men without Faith, and Women without Shame.

The Country, as before said, is very mountainous in the In-lands, and full of craggy Rocks towards the Sea: so that by Sea and Land it is very ill travelling. But amidst those Hills are Valleys of as rich a soil, as most others in Italy, abounding in Citrons, Limons, Olives, and Granges, and the like fruits; with such variety of Flowers at all times of the year, that the Markets are seldom unfurnished of them in the month of December. It yieldeth also great plenty of most pleasant Wines, which the Inhabitants call La Vermozza; and another which they call Le Lagrime di Christo, or Lacryme Christi: this last is pleasing to the taste, that it is said, a Dutchman tasting of it as he travelled in these parts, fetcht a great sigh, and brake out into this exclamation: How happy had it been with us, St. Christ! lacrymatus esset in nostris regionibus, if Christ had shed some of his tears in the Country of Germany! Their greatest want is that of Corn and therewith they do supply themselves out of other places.

The principal Towns and Cities of it in the Eastern part, are, 1. Sarenzosa, a strong Fortres against the Florentines, and one of the best pieces of this Republick. 2. Porto-Renuiti (or Porto Renuiti, as the Latines call it) of as great consequence as that, but possessed by the Spaniards. 3. Lerigian (aven in the Tuscan or Tyrrhenian Sea, 4. Sevria, a reasonable good place, remarkable for a white Ecad, and as pleasant Wine as any in Italy. 5. Fino, a Haven or Port Town, not far from Genoa, anciently called Torvis Delfinum. Few of the Towns in this part are of any greatness: but they are set so thick, and intermingled with so many goodly houles both on the Hills and the Valleys, that for the space of twenty miles, the whole Country seems to be one continual building.

In the West part the Town of most importance are 1. Monaca, of old called Monaccus, and Portus Herculis beautified with a commodious Haven: belonging not long since to the Spaniards, who bought it for 100000 Crowns of the Grimaldi, then its proper Owners; but of late gotten by the French under colour of a late contract. 2. Ventimiglia, a good Town, and sweetly seated. 3. Savona, taken by the Genoese, Anno 1250, before which time it had a Prince of its own. Remarkable for the interview betwixt Ferdinand the Catholic and Lewis XII. of France, Anno 1507, who who having been deadly enemies, upon the taking of the Realm of Naples from the French by the Spaniards, met at this Town, and here most strangely relied upon one another: Lewis first boarding Ferdinand's Gally; and Ferdinand for divers days feasting with Lewis in this Town then in his possession, as Protector of the Estate of Genoa. Which kind of interview (I note this only by the way) as they chance but seldom; so when they do, they prove for the most part dangerous unto one of the parties: great enemies not being easily forgot by persons of a common Intellig. Nay, that notable Statesman Philip de Comines utterly disliketh all such meetings of Princes, though in amity and good correspondence with one another; as many times producing effects quite contrary to their expectations. And this he proveth by the example of Lewis XI. of France, and Henry of Castile: who meeting purposefully, Anno 1463, to change more friendly words together, took such dislike at each others persons and behaviours, that they never loved one another after it. The like example he bringeth of an interview betwixt Edward IV. of England, and the same King Lewis: and betwixt Frederick the Emperour, and Charles Duke of Burgundy; with divers others. His reason I purposely omit, as not pertinent to my present undertaking, and make haste again unto the Town: which is about a mile and an half in circuit, and hath many stately buildings in it. It was called anciently Sabato or Sabatia, and hath been under the command of divers Lords: being taken from the Genoese by the Visconti, and the Sforzas, Dukes of Milain, from them by the French, and at last recovered again by those of Genoa. I further note, that this one Town hath yielded to the Church of Rome three Popes, viz. Gregory VII. Julius II. and Sixtus IV. which is as much as Genoa it self can brag of. 4. Nola, upon the Sea-side, a commodious Haven. 5. Finali, a goodly Port-Town also, and very well fortified: honoured a long time with the Title of a Marquisate, one of the seven founded by the Emperor Obbo, (of which more hereafter) but taken from the last Marquis by the Count of Fuenter, then Governor of Milain for the King of Spain, and Garrisoned being put off with an Annual Pension, Anno 1602. 6. Nilefimo, a small Town adjoining, possessed upon the same right by the Spaniards also; who by these pieces hath a strong command on the Trade of Genoa. 7. But the great Ornament of those parts of Italy, is the City of Genoa, first built, say some, by Janus the Son of Samus, as others say, by Tamus Genim Priscus, an Italian or Tuscan King. But by whomsoever it was built, certain it is, that it was miserably destroyed by Mago the Brother of Anibal, repaired by Lacertius Servius, at the command of the Senate of Rome, for whose cause and quarrel it was ruined: once again spoiled and wasted by Roboris a great Prince of Lombards, Anno 650, or thereabouts: but built more beautiful than before by Charles the Great. On his foundation it now stands, situate on the shore of the Ligystic or Ligurian Seas, to which, being partly built on the declivity of an hill, full of stately Palaces, it giveth a most pleasant and magnificent prospect. It is in compass six miles, of an Obicular form, fortified towards the Sea by Art: towards the Land by Art and Nature: there being, but one way to come to it by Land, and that over steep and craggy Rocks. The Streets are narrow, paved with Flint, and most of them on the sides of the Hill; which is the reason that they use Horse-litters here instead of Coaches, and most of the better sort are carried on mens shoulders in Sedans or Chairs: which from hence came to be their into England. But that which they call La Strada

Nuova, or the New Street, reaching from the West to North-east, is of a very fair breadth: each house whereof is built with such Kingly Magnificence, that it is said the Buildings for the height of two Stories are made of Marble, curiously wrought; but the Laws forbid Marble to be used any higher: The Haven of it is very fair and capacious, safe from the violence of Tempests, and well fortified: so that the Spaniards use to say, that were the Catholic King absolute Lord of Milain in Provence, and Genoa in Italy he might command the whole World. After the re-creating of it by Charles the Great, the People here continued subject to his Successors; till the Berengarii, as Kings of Italy, were free, Anno 899. in which condition they remained till the year 1318. when being shrewdly weakened in their Estate, they were fain to give themselves to Pope John XXII. after to Robert King of Naples. But being soon weary of a foreign Government, the people in a popular tumult made choice of one Simon Boccanegra, to be their Duke, Anno 1339. which Government continued till the French were called in by the Guelph Faction, in the reign of Charles VII. under whom they continued thirteen years; and then expelling them the French for their many insolencies, they put themselves under the protection of the Dukes of Milain, Anno 1403. Long time they lived under the protection of those Princes, in great tranquillity, who never carried towards them any rigorous hand; save that once Duke Lodowick Sforza exacted of them a great mass of money. But as the tale goeth, his Agent being invited to the house of a Genoese, and walking in a Garden with him, was shewed an herb growing there, called Plantif, which froaking gently he smelt thence a most pleasing savour, but as unfavourable a smell when he strained it hard. The Genoese hereupon inferred, Sir, if our Lord Duke Lodowick will gently stroke the hand of his puissance against this City, it will prove pliant to him by obedience; but may chance to prove rebellious if he do oppress it. But Lodowick being taken Prisoner by King Lewis XII. they first came under the command of the French, and then of the Spaniards, according as those Nations had possession of the State of Milain; and after many changes and alterations, obtained again their freedom of King Francis I. Which being not able to preserve by their proper strength, they finally put themselves under the shelter of the Spaniards, who is now their Protector; and that not for nought; he being indebted to them, Anno 1600, a Million and an half of Gold; that being the remainder of 18 Millions, cut off by the Pope's Authority; that if the King might be indebted to that See, for most of his Lands were formerly engaged to the Money-Masters of this City. The same course of non-payment the King took with the rest of his Creditors in Florence, Augsburg, and the rest, inasmuch that it was commonly said in Italy, that the King of Spain had made more ill faces upon the exchange in one day, than Michael Angelo the famous Painter, had ever made good in all his life. And thus you see this great City which commanded the Ocean, the Lady of so many Islands, and a great Moderator of the affairs of Italy, fain to put her self into the protection of a foreign Prince, and that too at the charge of a great deal of Treasury: which he continually raiseth from them in the way of Loan, of which he often proves but a sorry Pay-master. And if the Wars he had with England did he drain their purses (for it was that War, and the War which he had in the Netherlands, that made him so indebted to the Banks of Genoa) no question but the revolt of Catalague, and the lasting Wars made against him by the French in so many places, places, have plunged him in as deep as ever. Which notwithstanding this people do to thrive under his protection, and draw to great commodity from their Trade with Spain, that it is thought their private men were never richer, the publick Treasury never fuller than it is at the present.

CORSICA is an Island in the Ligulick or Ligurian Sea, opposite to the City of Genoa, from whence it is distant about sixty miles; and lying juft North of the Isle of Sardinia, from which it is distant seven miles. It comprehends in length an hundred and twenty miles, in breadth, and three hundred twenty five in circuit; and lyeth under the fifth Climate, the longest day being almost fifteen hours.

The people are stubborn, poor, unlearned; fupposed to be more cruel than other Nations, and so affirmed to be by Cæsar in his Book of Commentaries; the Progeny, as some say, of the 52 Daughters of Thetis, who being all got with child in one night by Hercules, were by their Father put to the mercy of the Sea; by which they were brought unto this Island, after peopled by them. From one of these Sons named Cyrus, the Island had the name of Cyrus, by which it oftentimes occurh in some old Greek Writers. This is the conceit of Fabius Pictor, one of Annius his Authors. And that of Enstadius, a far more credible Writer, is not much unlike, who will have it called Corfica from a woman so named, dwelling in the coast of Liguria; who following her Bull hither, was the first that discovered it. But these Originals I look on, the first especially, as the worst kind of Romanesque: the name of Cyrus being more like to be derived from the Phœnic, Korashib, which signifies a horn or corner, by reason of the many Promontories with which it is fringed, as the Sea. Corfica insula multis promontoriis angulisq; est, as it is in Idore, lib. 15. cap. 6. And for the name of Corfica, I should derive it rather from the Corfi (by which name the Inhabitants heretofore are called in most Latine Writers) one of the two Nations of most note in the neighbouring Island of Sardinia. Celeberrimi in ea populum Balaris, & Corfi, as we find in Pliny. Corfi, or some of them, being overborn by some new Invaders (which the Island of Sardinia was seldom free of) were faine to shift their seat, and came over hither.

This Country yieldeth excellent Dogs for game, good Horses, fierce Mastiffs, and a beast called Musli, not found in Europe, excepting in this Island, and Sardinia only; but there called Misfones, or Murionas, (for I conceive they are the same under divers names) said to be horned like Rams, and skinned like Stags; whose skin is of such incredible hardness, that the beast being cast headlong against a Rock, receives no hurt, but nimbly flies from his Enemy to his Den.

The soil by reason of the Mountains (which every where are too thick and barren in it) is not very fruitful, producing Corn in its plenty, but the best Wines, and such as the old Romans will relish, in good measure. It produceth also Oyl, Figs, Raisins, and Honey; the first three in a mediocrity of goodness, the last somewhat bitter, and by many deemed unwholesome. The Tree called Taxus, whose poisonous Berries, though it is useless, are much set on by Bees, and therefore thought to be the cause of the bitterness of the Honey. In some few places where the Rivers have their currents, especially towards Liguria, it recompenseth by its fertility, in bearing all manner of grain, the barrenness of the mountains. Which mountains cutting through the midst of it, divide the whole Island into Cismontanium, being that towards Genoa; and Transmontanium, lying towards Sardinia; yet so, that the people on each side call themselves the Cismontanes, and the other the Transmontanes. Both of them speak a corrupt Italian, in which there is not a little mixture of French and Spanish.

For Rivers, there are none of note; the principal of those which the Island yields, being called Gelo, and Trasignano. And as for Cities, some of the Ancients reckoned 33; which Strabo doth conceive to be Castles on lyeth there being but four Towns or Cities in it in his time: of which four, two were Roman Colonies, the one planted by Marius, called Mariana; the other by L. Sylla, in the Town called Alleria; a place of some Antiquity before that time, and at this day a Bishop's See. But now the place of most importance, is the Town of Bastia, seated in the North-east part of the Island, opposite almost unto Alleria, with a commodious Haven to it, and a strong Garrison to defend it: as being the ordinary seat of the Governour sent hither from Genoa; and of the Bishop of Alleria, who makes there his residence. 2. Aiazze, a reasonable strong Town, and a Bishop's See; and so is also 3. Nebbi, called Chastum by Polomy. Then there is 4. Porto Tredici, built not long since in the place of an old decayed Haven, and peopled by a Colony sent from Genoa. 5. St. Florence a Port-town in the Northern part in the midst betwixt Nebbi and Mariana; and 6. St. Basijace, called by Polomy, Portus Syracusanus, juft opposite unto it in the South corner of the Isle; both of them places of good safety, and capable of the greatest Vessels that frequent those Seas.

Who were the first Inhabitants is not easily known. That the Phœnicians or Tyrians had some footing here, is manifest by that of Callimachus an old Greek Poet, who calleth it Βονίαια. Kuyō, the Phœnic Cyrus; and by that of Diodorus Siculus, affirming that the Carthaginians and Tyrrheni (which questionless he mistook for Tyrii) call the Phœnices out of this Island. But whether these Phœnices first inhabit, or only had a Colony in some part thereof, is not demonstrable from those Authors. The Carthaginians after this made a Conquest of it, and held it till the time of the first Punic War; when they were driven thence by the valour of Cælius Scipio. Yet was it not totally subdued, nor brought into the form of a Roman Province, till some time after; when it was fully conquered by C. Papirius, A. U. C. 541. This Island and Sardinia at the first being joined together, governed by one Pætor only; but afterwards made two distinct Provinces, immediately subject to the Pæfett of the City of Rome, and consequently members of the Roman Patriarchate. In the falling of the Roman Empire, it became a prey unto the Vandals, who used to send their condemned persons out of Africa hither, to fell Timber for shipping; the Country even till then being very much over-grown with Woods. Afterwards with the rest of the Islands of the Mediterranean, was under the power of the Saracens, against whom Adonis the Count or Governour of Genoa armed a Fleet of Gallies, and vanquished them in a fight at Sea, but lost his life in the action; which notwithstanding the Genoese following their good fortune, seized on the Island, and carried thence thirteen of the Enemies Ships. The Pisani after this got possession of it, but being vanquished by the Genoese in the fight near Giglia (before mentioned) they were faine to leave it to the Conquerors. Since that, it hath always followed the fortune of Genoa, save that it remained somewhat longer than that City did in the hands of the French, who in the year 1554. seized on it by the aid of the Turks, whom (to the great dishonour of Christianity) they entertained in their Wars against Charles V. but in the end, restored it to the Common-

Common-wealth, upon the peace made betwixt France and Spain, Anno 1559. And for securing of this Island to the state of Genoa, they fell upon this handsome project: employing none but natural Genoese to serve in the Garrisons of the Islands, the better to keep under this untractable People; and filling all their Garrisons upon the Continent with natural Genoese, whereby the Island is furnished of its ablest men, who also serve for Hypothec of the Publick Faith.

Having thus took a brief view of the several parts and members of this Commonwealth, let us next look upon the whole, as to the Government, Forces, and Revenue of it. First for the Government, the principal of their Magistrates hath the name of Duke; as titular as the Duke of Venice, but of less esteem: that Duke continuing in his Office for term of life, but this being alterable and removed at the two years end. So that he may be called most properly the Mayor of Genoa. For this two years he dwells in the publick Palace, and hath 500 German for the Guard of his Person; in nothing like a Prince but that: and for that time, he alone hath the power of propounding any thing to the Senate, which carrieth some resemblance of a Negative Voice. His time expired, he returns unto his house as a private Person, but so, that during life he hath the Office of a Procurator in the Common-wealth. To him there are assitant eight principal Officers, who fit upon the same Form with him, and continue in their Office for two years also; which eight, together with the Duke, are called the Signeury; but he, and they in matters of most weight and moment, subordinate to the General Council, consisting of 400 Persons, all of them Gentlemen of the City; who with the nine before remembered do constitute the body of the Common-wealth. Under this form they have continued, ever since by the power and Goodness of Andrea Doria (who might have made himself their Prince); they were discharged of their Subjection to the French, Anno 1581. never in danger of relapsing to their former servitude, but in the reasonable practice of the Fijchi, a remarkable Family of the City; who hoping to possess themselves of the Principality under Protection of the French, had so laid their plot, that Augustine di Fijchi, who was designed to be their Duke, had in the night time seized on the Navy, and slain John Doria who had the command thereof. But leaping from one Gally to another, to make sure of all, stumbled and fell into the Sea, where he and his ambitious treasons were both drowned together.

As for their Forces, there are within the Signeury 10000 men ready to arm at any time, as they see occasion; 25 Gallies already ready in the Publick Arsenal, and four continually at Sea for defence of their Trading. Sufficient strength to save them from a petty force, though not to guard them from the power of a strong Invader. But the chief strength which they rely on, is the King of Spain; whose protection, though it costs them dear, is worth their money; and they have professed to well by it, that notwithstanding all the Losses which they have sustained, it is supposed that the Revenue of the Common-wealth (besides the Treasury of St. George, which is very rich, and managed as a distinct body from the Publick, by its own Officers) amounteth to no less than 430000 Crowns per annum.

As for the Treasury of St. George, though it contain no part of the publick Patrimony, but be governed by its own Officers, as a State distinct; yet is it of such ready use, so able at all times to furnish the Republick with vast sums of money; that the security and preservation of this Common-wealth depends much upon it. The Institution and Administration whereof, together with the benefit which from hence reboundeth unto this Estate, I cannot better present to the Readers View, than in the words of Machiavel, the greatest Politick of his times; who in his History of Florence hath expressed it thus: "Fuit ditissimum illud bellum quod Genoenses maius abbas cum Venetis gesserit, &c. After that tedious War between the Genoese and Venetians, was ended in the year 1281. and that the Genoese found themselves unable to repay those moneys, which they had taken up of their private Citizens in pursuit thereof, they thought it best to assign their ordinary Taxes over to them, that so in read of time the whole debt might be satisfied; and for that end allotted them a Common Hall, there to deliberate and determine of their Affairs. These men, thus made the Masters of the publick Taxes, elect among themselves a Common-Council of an hundred; and over them eight Officers of especial power, to order and direct the rest, and to dispose of the Intrada: which Corporation so established, they intituled St. George Bank. It happened afterward, that the Republick wanting more moneys, was glad to have recourse unto St. George; who growing wealthy by the orderly managing of his stock, was best able to relieve them in their necessities: and as before they assigned their Taxes over to him, he now dischargeth them from oppressing them, they mortgaged all their Domain. So that St. George continually waxing richer, and the State poorer, this Corporation became possessed at last, of almost all the Towns and Territories of the Common-wealth: all which they governed by their own Magistrates, chosen by common suffrage from among themselves. It followed hereupon, that the common People bearing less respect unto the Publick, applied themselves unto St. George; this being always orderly and prudently governed; that many times inclining to Tyranny; this never changing Officers, or form of Government, that subject to the proud ambitious lusts of each Ultrap, whether Domestick or Foreign. Insumuch that when the two potent Families of the Freggi and Adorni, contended for the Sovereignty in this Estate, most of the People looked upon it as a quarrel which concerned them not: St. George not medling more in it, than to take an Oath of the prevailing Faction, to preserve his liberties. Rarissimi sunt exopto, &c. A most excellent and rare thing (saith he) never found out by any of the old Philosophers in their imaginary Forms of a Common-wealth, that in the same State, and the same People, one may see at the same time both Tyranny and Liberty, Justice and Oppression, Civility and Misgovernment: This only Corporation preserving in the Common-wealth its ancient Laurels. So that in case St. George should in the end become possessed of the remainder of the Patrimony and Estate thereof, as it is possible it may, the State of Genoa might not alone be equalled with that of Venice, but preferred before it. So far, and to this purpose that great Master of Statecraft; a man of less impicity, and more regular life, than some of those who have traduced him for an Atheist.

Here are within this Common-wealth,
Archbishops 1. Bishop 14.

The Estates of LOMBARDY!

LOMBARDY is bounded on the East with Romandolia, and the Estate or Territory of Ferrara; on the West, with that part of the Alpes, which divides Italy from France; on the North (reckoning Marca Trevigiana within the bounds heretofore) with that part part of the Alpi which lieth towards Germany; and on the South, with the Apeninæ, which parteth it from Liguria, or the State of Genoa.

It was called anciently Gallia Cisalpina, whereof we shall speak more anon; and took this new name from the Lombards or Longobardi, a people of Germany (of whom we have already spoken), but shall speak more at large when we come to Hungary, who coming out of Pannonia possessed themselves of a great part of Italy, but left their name to this Tract only. A Tract of ground of which it may be truly said, that Italy is the Garden of Europe, for Lombardy is the Garden of Italy, or the fairest Flower in all that Garden. A Country of so rich a mixture, that such another piece of ground for beautiful Cities, goodly Rivers, for Fields and Pastures shaded with such excellent fruits, for plenty of Fowl, Fish, Corn, and Wine, cannot be found again in our Western World. So that it is no wonder, that the two great Kings of France and Spain, have strived so eagerly, and with such an effusion of Christian blood for the Duchy of Milain, a part only (though the richest part) of this goodly Country; and but a spot of Earth compared to their own Dominions.

Anciently it was of more extent than now it is, containing besides the Principalities hereafter mentioned, the Provinces of Romandiola, and Trevisiana; even all, which in the infancy and growth of the Roman Empire, had the name of Gallia Cisalpina: Called Gallia from the Gauls, who being drawn over the Alpi by the taste of the sweet Italian Wines, in the time of Tartaricus Priscus King of Rome, under the conduct and command of Telozeus Son of Ambrigenus King of the Celte, subdued the Natives, and possessed themselves of all the Country, from the West parts of the Tyber Sea and Apenine Hills to the Adriatick; and from the Alpi to the River Rubicon on the Northeast, and the River Arno on the South-East. Cisalpina it was called because it lay on that side of the Alpi which was near to Rome, to difference it from Gallia on the other side of the Mountains; which had the name of Transalpina. It was also called Gallia Togata because the people of it being civilized, conformed themselves to the Roman habit: that on the other side of the Alpi being called Breacata because they kept themselves to their former Mantles (resembling those now worn by the vulgar Irish) which by the Latines were called Breacæ. For though the word Breacæ in some of our common Dictionaries be rendered Gally-flops or Breaches (and possibly the word Breaches may be thence derived) which made me conceive that the habit heretofore of those Gauls was a kind of Trowsers, such as those usually worn by the Irish Foot-men: yet when I find in approved Authors, that it was Tunica Sago impolita, a Garment which they wore over their Coats and Calfs, I conceive I had good reason to translate it otherwise.

They were generally divided into four great Nations, that is to say, 1. the Isabres, inhabiting from the Alpi to the River Arno, and consequently spreading over the Dukedoms of Milain, Parma, Modena, Mantua, Piemont and some part of the Dukedom of Florence: 2. The Cenomani and who lay next the Isabres, possessing the greatest part of Trevisiana: 3. The Boii, taking up the rest of Trevisiana, with the Dukedom of Ferrara, and so much of Romandiola as lieth on the North-West side of the River Rubicon: 4. The Senones, who passing over the Rubicon inhabited the rest of Romandiola and the Dukedom of Urbino. Of these the Senones (or Semnonæ as Ptolemy calls them) were of greatest fame. These were the men that under the conduct of Brennus, having defeated the Roman Armies at the Battle of Alia, followed their victory unto Rome, which they sacked and burned: nothing made good in all the City but the Capitol only, which also had been taken by them, ni anseris diu dormitibus vigilasset, as S. Augustine tells it; the Geese had been more watchful than their Gods or Guards. Failing herein they compounded for 1000 pound weight of Gold to forsake the City: but before the money was received, they were assaulted by Camillus, driven out of the Town, and vanquished in a set Battle, about eight miles off; who is therefore called Rome's second Founder. This happened Anno U. C. 364. Vanquished again at the River Arno, by T. Quintius the Dictator: and after that Anno U. C. 404, by the said Camillus being then 80 years of age, in the Pontine fields: they got the Boii to assist them, and after joined with the Sannites, Tuscani, and other Nations in a common War. But being for the most part beaten, and the War carried to their own doors a little before the coming of Pyrrhus into Italy, by M. Curius, the Consul: they were by him driven out of their own Country; and finally got slaughtered by Dolabella at the Lake of Vadimon, Anno U. C. 470, that there was scarce any left of that Nation, to brag that any of their Ancestors had set fire on Rome.

The Senones being thus destroyed, the Romans suffered the rest of the Gallick Nations to remain in quiet till the end of the first Punic War, when being grown of more strength, and at very good leisure, they took up Arms against the Boii, who fearing the like fortune as the Senones had found before, called to their Aid both the Isabrians and Transalpines; making in all an Army of 50000 Foot, and 20000 Horse. An. U. C. 528. Discomfited by Emilius the Roman Consul, near Talamon a City of Tuscany, with the slaughter of 40000 of their men; they were set upon in their own Country shortly after by the Consul Flaminius, vanquished and maled with the loss of one half thereof: most of them after this disaster passing into Germany, where we are like to hear more of them. And for the Isabres and Cenomani, being thus left unto themselves (the remainders of the Transalpines excepted only) they were invaded the next year after, (Anno U. C. 431) under the Consuls M. Claudius Marcellus and Cornelius Scipio: to whom upon the loss of their Armies, and some of their best Towns, they did yield themselves: the Romans to becoming Masters of all this Country. And yet it was accounted as a Province divided from Italy, until the settling of the Empire in Augustus Caesar, who dividing Italy into eleven Regions, made three of them out of this Cisalpina; that is to say, Gallia Venetia, and Italia Transpadana: as afterwards it made up four of the seven Provinces of the Dioecesis of Italy, according to the distribution of it which was made by Constantine. How it came with the rest of Italy into the power of the Lombards, and how from them taken by the French, with the rest of that Kingdom, had been shewn already. Won by the French, and from the French transferred with the Empire to the Kings of Germany: it did so far preserve the reputation of a Kingdom, that the Emperours were sometimes Crowned at Milain with an Iron Crown for the Kingdom of Lombardy: as at Alger (a Town of Cleveland) with a Silver Crown for the Realm of Germany; and with a Golden Crown at Rome, for the sacred Empire. But the Emperour being weakened by the Artifices of the Popes of Rome, this goodly Country was torn from it; and parcelled, in conclusion, amongst many Princes, as it still continueth.

The Lombards being Masters of it, and having given it their own name, divided it by the River Po into Longobardia Cispadana, lying betwixt the Po and the Apenine Mountains: and Transpadana, lying betwixt the Po and the Alpi: the first of which the old Romans called Emilia, from Emilius Lepidus, the

Founder

Founder of the City of Reggio (then called Regium Lepidi) once Proconsul of it. In the division of Italy by Augustus Caesar it had the name of Gallia. The other was by him honoured with the name of Italia Transpadana, by which name it was known in the times of Tacitus; and by him called, Florentissimum Italie latæ, the most flourishing part of all Italy. But this division being long since worn out of use, and the whole Country being cantoned into many Elates, as before was said, we will consider it at the present as it stands divided into the Dukedoms of Milain and Mantua, which with Trevisiana, described already, make up Transpadana; and those of Modena, Parma, and Monferrat, which with the Principate of Piemont, make up Cispadana.

The Dukedom of MILLAIN.

THE Dukedom of MILLAIN hath on the East, the Elates of Mantua and Parma; on the West, Piemont, and some part of Switzerland, one of the Provinces of the Alpes; on the North Marca Trevisiana; and on the South, the Apeninæ which parteth it from Liguria, or the State of Genoa. In elder times the habitation of the Isabres, originally a Tribe of the Hedui inhabiting in those parts of the Gallia above the Alpes, which now make up the Dukedom of Burgundy: but crossing the Mountains with the rest of the Gallick Nation, spoken of before, they settled here, built the City of Milain, and finally became one of the greatest Tribes of the Cisalpinae Gauls: from thence, this Country hath the name of Isabrian Ducatus in some of the nearer Modern Writers; but commonly is called Ducatus Mediolanensis, from Mediolanum, or Milain, the chief City of it.

Principal Rivers of it, 1. Padus, 2. Addua, 3. Olliv, and 4. Ticinus; of which some what hath been said already; and besides those it hath also in it the Lake called anciently Lacus Larius, but now Lago di Como (from the City of Como which it neighboureth) 60 miles in length.

The chief Cities and places of note are, 1. Modetum, not far from Milain, of more fame than greatness; the fame thereof arising from the Iron Crown kept in a Monastery here, wherewith some of the Emperours have been crowned by the Archbishops of Milain. A custom taken up from the Kings of Ostrogoths, who are said to have first used the same, in testimony that they had won their Estates by Iron. 2. Pavia, or Papia, seated on the Flood Ticinus, united to Milain by John Galeazi, the first Duke thereof, made an University by Charles IV. Anno 1361. And famous for the Battle in which Francis I. of France was taken Prisoner by Charles V. Anno 1555. It is seated, as before was said, on the Flood Ticinus, about four miles from the Po, or Padus: the River carrying at this City so great a breadth, that the Bridge over it is no less than 200 walking paces long, built of Free-stone, and covered over-head with a roof supported all along with Pillars. From this River the City it self was anciently called Ticinum: and took the name of Papia from its great affection to the Popes; or, as some say, quasi Patria piærum (the two first syllables of those words being joined together) by reason of the many goodly men it did produce. It lieth in length from East to West, a very fair Street dividing it in the very midst: on the West side whereof are two handsome Marbled-palaces, and a strong Castle built by Galeazi, the first Duke of Milain; whose Tomb, together with that of Leopoldus King of the Lombards, are here still remaining; the Kings of Lombardy being so pleased with the situation of the place, that they made it the Seat-Royal of that Kingdom. The Cathedral here is one of the best endowed in Italy, if not in Europe; the Revenues of it amounting to 30,000 Crowns per annum. 3. Como, the birth-place of both the Plinies; a rich and handfom Town situated on the South-side of the Lacus Larius, which from this Town hath now the name of Lago di Como: into which Lake and through it runs the Addua, and yet the waters do not mingle: that of the River passing over those of the Lake. About this Lake are many fair Houses and handfom Villages, which do much beautifie the places; and in the midst thereof an Island called Comacina, in which there was a strong Fortress in former times, wherein the Longobardian Kings did preserve their Treasure. 4. Lodi, or Lauda in the Latine, seated in a prosperous foil, and blessed with a painful and industrious people. 5. Novara, situate upon a high hill, in which live many ancient and noble Families: of right belonging to the Spaniards, as Dukes of Milain; but at the time when Magnum wrote, consigned over upon some conditions to the Dukes of Parma. But this Town, though it appertained to the Dukes of Milain, is situate within the Dukedom of Monferrat; and so is, 6. Alexandria also, once a poor small Village, known by the name of Robertum from a Grove of Oaks adjoining to it: afterwards being raised to its present greatness, by the joint Purges of the Citizens of Cremona, Milain, and Placentia; in honour of the Emperour it was called Cæsaræa. But in short time these people siding with the Popes, drew on themselves the anger of the Emperour Frederick Barbarossæ; who having in a manner demolished the City of Milain, the people thereof, at the destruction of the City, retired to this Town; calling it in honour of Pope Alexander III. whose part they then took against the Emperour, by the name of Alexandria, which it still retaineth. It is now the strongest outwork of the whole Duchy, well fortified against all assaults and batteries, which may come from France. 7. Marignan, situate South from Milain, remarkable for the great defeat here given the Swissers, by King Francis I. and now the title of a Marquis. 8. Cremona, situate on the Banks of the River Po, in a very rich and fruitful soil; an ancient Colony of the Romans, but a beautiful City to this day; and of such fidelity to its Prince, that it hath got the name of, Cremona the faithful. It was built in the first year of the second Punic War, and burnt to the ground by Vespassian Soldiers; after the defeat of Publius his Forces: which defeat was given under the Walls of this Town. For when Antoniæ, Vespassian General, hath after his Victory entered into it, he went into a bath to wash away the sweat and blood from his body: where finding the water so hot, he made too cold, he laid by chance, that it should anon be made hotter. Which words the Soldiers applying to their greedy desires, set fire on the Town, and spent four days in the pillage of it. By the encouragement of Vespassian it was again re-edified, and is now grown famous for the high Tower, from which the by-word, Una turris in Cremona, ætæ Petri in Roma, omni portus in Onagra. 9. Milain, a fair Town, once the Metropolis of the Province of Liguria, and afterwards of the whole Dioecesis of Italy; called therefore Mettepòlis; τῆς Ἑλλάδος, the Metropolis or Mother-City of Italy; as Dionysius one of the Bishops heretofore is called the Metropolitan of Italy by S. Athanasius. At this time the fairest and the biggest of all Lombardy, having a Castle so strongly fortified, with natural and artificial Ramparts, that it is deemed impregnable. A City very populous, containing 200000 persons; and of great Trade, here being private Shops equalling the publick Store-houses of other places; the people consequently so rich, that the Wife of every Mechanick will flant in her Silks and Taffeties. This City is said to have been built by the Cauis, 359 years before Christ. It is seven miles in circuit, and honoured with an University, wherein flourished Hermolaus Barbarus, Celsus Rhodogianus, and Cardanus. Scattered it is, in as commodious a Soil as any in Italy, environed with Water by two great Channels; the one drawn from the River of Adina, the other from the Tesoro Adisio; which run hard by it, and convey all things to the City in so great abundance, that things there are of very cheap rates; and add much also to the industry of the Inhabitants in the vending and differenting of their Manufactures, which are of great esteem in most parts of the World. The buildings of the City generally are fair and flatly, but three especially commended for their magnificence; that is to say, The Castle, the Hospital, and the Cathedral. For matter of Religion it doth use to glory, that Barnabas the Apostle was its first Bishop, and St. Ambrose one of his Successors; that formerly their Bishop stood on even terms with the Popes of Rome, and their Church as much privileged as that; and that since those times they have given unto the World four Popes, that is to say, Alexander II. Urban III. Celsine V. and of late Gregory XIV.

As for the fortunes of it, it continued in the power of the French, and the King of that Nation, from the destruction of the Lombards, till the Kingdom of Italy fell from the house of Charles the Great, and came at last into the hands of the German Emperours. Under them it continued till the time of Frederick Barbarossa, from whose obedience it revolted Anno 1156, in behalf of Pope Alexander III. The Emperour divers times defacing the City, and the people still ministering fresh occasions of dislike and quarrel. Beatrice the Wife of Frederick coming to see the City, without any ill intentions to it, was by the irreverent people first imprisoned, and then most barbarously used. For setting her upon a Male, they turned her face towards the tail, which they made her hold instead of a Bridle; and having thus shewed her up and down the City, they brought her unto one of the Gates, and there kicked her out. To revenge this horrible affront, the Emperor besieged and forced the Town; adjudging all the people to die without mercy, but such as would undergo this ransom. Between the butchers of a skittish and kicking Male, there was faineed a bunch of Figs; one or more of which, such as desired to live must snatch out with their teeth, their hands bound behind them, as the Male was pacing through the streets. A condition which most of them accepted; and thereupon gave occasion to the custom used of the Italians: who when they intend to scoff or disgrace a man, are wont to put their thumb betwixt two of their fingers, saying, Ecco La Fico; a disgrace answerable to that of making Horns (in England) to him that is suspected to be a Cuckold. The City after this rebelling, and again taken by the Emperour, he levelled it unto the ground, pulled down the Walls, and caused the whole ground on which it stood, to be plowed up, and sowed with Sals, seeming to threaten by that Emblem, that it should never be re-edified. Which notwithstanding the City was not only new built again, but the Pope, with the help of the Milanese and Venetians, had at last the better of the Emperour; whom he enjoyed, after a vile submission, to undertake a journey to the Holy Land. Freed from the Emperour they began to live after the form of a Republick, in which condition they continued about 56 years: when Orso, surnamed Visconti (quasi his Comes, because he was Lord of Milain and Angona) assumed the title to himself, and settled it upon that Family after his decease; but so that for the most part they were under the command of the German Emperours, and to them accountable. Galeazzo I. so called (as some write) because the Cocks crowed more than ordinarily at the time of his birth, thad to the Estate hereof the Cities of Crema, and Cremona. In the person of John Galeazzo it was advanced unto a Dukedom by the Emperour Wenceslaus, for 100000 Crowns in ready money; which John increased to mightily in wealth and power, that he had 29 Cities under his Command; and died as he was going to Florence to be crowned King of Tuscany. To him succeeded John Maria, and after him his brother Philip: who in his life had married his only daughter (but illegitimate) to Francisco Sforza, the best Commander of his times; and at his death appointed Alfonso of Aragon, King of Naples, for his Heir and Successor. Before Alfonso could take any benefit of this designation, Sforza was quietly possessed both of the City and the loves of the people. This Francis Sforza (I must needs crave leave to tell this story) was the Son of James Attendolo, a plain Country man, who going to his labour with his Axe in his hand, whilst a great Army was passing by him, compared the misery and unprofitableness of his present condition, with those fair probabilities which a Martial life did present unto him. And being in a great dispute with himself what were best to do he presently fell upon a resolution of putting the question to the determination of the Heavenly Providence; by calling his Axe unto the top of a Tree next to him: conditioning with himself, that if the Axe came down again, he would contentedly apply himself to his wonted labour; but if it hung upon the boughs, he would betake himself unto higher hopes, and follow the Army then in passage. He did so, the Axe hung upon the boughs, he went after the Army, and thrived to well in that employment, that he became one of the best Captains of his times (surnamed de Cotoviglia from the place of his dwelling, and Sforza from the greatness of his noble courage. By Amonea the Daughter of Francis di Casalis, the Lord of Cortina, he was the Father of this Francis Sforza whom now we speak of, who was so fortunate a commander in the Wars of Italy, that to oblige him to his Party, Philip the Duke of Milain bestowed his daughter upon him, and thereby a fair title to this great Estate, which he successfully obtained against all Pretenders. In his Line it continued till the coming of Lewis XII. of France, the Son of Charles, and Nephew of Lewis, Dukes of Orleans, by Valentina the sole Daughter of John Galeazzo the last Duke: who getting Duke Lodowick Sforza the last Duke (into his hands, carried him prisoner into France, and possessed himself of the Estate. Outred not long after by the Confederate Princes of Italy, who were jealous of so great a neighbour; he left the cause and quarrel unto Francis I. his next Successor in that Kingdom: in pursuance whereof, it is said by Bellay a French Writer, that the use of Muskets was first known. But Francis being in conclusion taken at the Battel of Pavia, and carried prisoner into Spain; for his release, was forced to release all claim unto this Estate. A release long before endeavoured by some French Politicians, because the pretensions hereunto had brought such damage unto that Crown; and no less eagerly opposed by Chancellor Prax (on the same reason that Scipio Nasica did oppose the destruction of Carthage, that is to say, because it did not only keep the French Nation in continual discipline of War; but served for a purgation of idle and superfluous people. Yet notwithstanding this release, Francis renewed the War again; and laid siege to Milain, then under the command of Antonio di Leva, and a Spanish Garrison: during which which War, the wretched Milanese, endured the worst of miseries. For first the Governour, under colour of providing pay for his Souldiers, got all the victuals of the Town into the Castle, to be sold again at his own price; which many of the poorer sort not able to pay, perished of Famine in the streets. And on the other side his Souldiers which were quartered in most parts of the City, used when they wanted money, to chain up their Hosts, and then to put them to a ransom. Such as upon this barbarous usage fled out of the City had their Goods confiscated: on which there followed such a disconsolate delation, that the chief streets were over-grown with Nettles and Brambles. In this miserable estate it continued, till Charles the Emperour having totally driven out the French, restored it to Francis Sforza, brother to the last Duke Maximilian, and Son of that Lodowick, who to advance himself unto this Estate, had most imprudently taught the French the way into Italy. But this Francis dying without issue, and the house of Sforza failing in him, the Emperour entered on the Dukedom as right Lord thereof, and left the same to his Successors in the Realm of Spain. This said, we will sum up the whole story of this Estate, in the ensuing Catalogue of

The Lords and Dukes of Milain.

- 1277 1. Obo Visconti Archbishop of Milain.
- 1295 2. Matthew, Brothers Son to Obo, confirmed in his command of Milain by Albertus the Emperour.
- 1322 3. Galeazzo Visconti Son of Matthew, disfiled of his command by Lewis of Bavaria Emperour.
- 1329 4. Atio Visconti, Son of Galeazzo, confirmed in his Fathers power by the same Lewis the Emperour.
- 1339 5. Lucchino Visconti, Brother to Galeazzo.
- 1349 6. John Visconti, the Brother of Lucchino.
- 1354 7. Galeazzo II. Son of Stephen, the Brother of John.
- 1378 8. John Galeazzo, Son of the first Galeazzo, created by the Emperour Wenceslaus, the first Duke of Milain, An. 1395.
- 1402 9. John Maria, Son of John Galeazzo, slain by the people for his horrible tyrannies.
- 1412 10. Philip Maria, the last of the Visconti, which commanded in Milain; a Prince of great power in fwaying the affairs in Italy. He died Anno 1446; the Milanese for some years retaining their former liberty.
- 1446 11. Francis Sforza in right of his Wife Blanch the base daughter of Philip, seconded by the power of the Sword admitted Duke by the general consent of the people of Milain, one of the Knights of the noble Order of the Garter.
- 1461 12. Galeazzo Sforza, a valiant but libidinous Prince cruelly murdered by his own Subjects.
- 1477 13. John Galeazzo Sforza, privately made away (as it was supposed) by his Uncle Lodowick.
- 1494 14. Lodowick Sforza, the Son of Francis, and Brother of Galeazzo, who to secure himself of his ill-got Dukedom, drew the French into Italy.
- 1501 15. Lewis XII. of France, Son unto Charles, and Nephew to Lewis Duke of Orleans, by Valentina Daughter to John the first Duke of Milain; vanquished Lodowick, carried him prisoner into France, and took the Dukedom to himself.
- 1513 16. Maximilian Sforza, the Son of Lodowick, restored to the Dukedom by the power of the Switzers, and Venetians; but again ousted by Francis I. Son-in-law and Successor to King Lewis XII. in the Kingdom of France. 1529 17. Francis Sforza, Brother of Maximilian, restored to the Estate, and the French expelled by the puissance of Charles V. who after the death of this Duke Francis (the last of the Sforzas) An. 1535, united it for ever to the Crown of Spain.

This Dukedom is not now of such great extent, and power as in former times; there being but nine Cities remaining of those 29, which were once under the command of the Dukes hereof; the rest being gotten in by the State of Venice, the Florentines; the Dukes of Mantua, and Parma. And yet is this accepted the prime Dukedom of Christendom (as Flaunders was accounted the prime Earldom of it) as the Annual Revenue of 800000 Ducats to the King of Spain. A good Revenue, might it come clear unto his Coiffers. But what with the discharge of his Garrison-souldiers, the defraying of his Vice-roy, the Salaries of Judges and inferior Ministers; it is conceived that he spends more on it than he getteth.

The Arms hereof are Argent a Serpent Azure, Crowned Or; in his Gorge, an Infant Galea. Which was the Coat-Armour of a Saracen, vanquished by Orso the first of the Visconti in the Holy Land.

The Dukedom of MANTUA.

THE Dukedom of MANTUA, is bounded on the West, with Milain; on the East, with Romandiola; on the North, with Marca Trevigiana; and on the South, with the Dukedom of Parma.

The Country about Mantua is reasonably good, and yieldeth all sorts of Fruits being well manured: plentiful in Corn and Pastures, the very high-ways by the fields being planted with Elms, to train up the Vines which grow there intermingled in every place, as generally it is in all parts of Lombardy. But the Inhabitants are conceived not to be of civil and well-bred, as the rest of Italy childish in their apparel, without manly gravity, poor in the entertainment of their friends, and exacting all they can from strangers.

The places in it of most note are, 1. Mercaris, bordering next to Milain. 2. Fozzila, a small, but pleasant habitation, belonging to some Princes of the Ducal Family; built with fair Cloysters towards the Street, in which Passengers may walk dry in the greatest rain. 3. Petula, a small Village, but as famous as any, in regard it was the place wherein Virgil was born: but generally said to be born in Mantua (Virgilius gaudet, as the old Verics) because the Village is so near the City of Mantua, being but two miles distant; that his birth might very well be ascribed unto it. 4. Mantua, seated on the River Nincina, now called Sarca; which coming out of Lago di garda falleth not far off into the Po, from whence there is a passage unto Venice. By Nature strong, environed on three sides with a running water, half a mile in breadth; and on the fourth side with a Wall. The Dukes to take their pleasure on the Lakes and Rivers, have a Barge called the Eucenaur, five stories high, and capable of two hundred persons (whence it had the name) furnished very richly both for state and pleasure. Ours the Son of Manto the Prophetess, the Daughter of Trefius, is said to have been the Founder of it, and to have given unto it his Mother's names; but I more than doubt it, though Virgil a Native of those parts do report port it so; this City being one of those which the Tuscan built beyond the Apennine, as the founders Antriquari do affirm. Made memorable (by whose ever built at first) in the declining times of Christianity, for a Council holden in it, An. 1059, wherein it was decreed, that the choosing of the Pope should from thenceforth belong unto the Cardinals. A Prerogative which of old belonging to the Emperours, was first by Constantine III. furnished Paganus, given to the Clergy and People of Rome, in the time of Pope Benedict III. Anno 684, returned by Charles the Great, when he came to the Empire; and now appropriated only to the College of Cardinals. But to return unto the Town: on the East-side of a Bridge of about 500 paces long, covered over head and born up with Arches, stands the Duke's Palace for the City; and not far thence the Doms, or Cathedral Church of St. Peter. The Palace very fair and stately, but far short for the pleasures and delights thereof, of his Palace at Mimirsola, five miles from the City: which though it be of a low roof (after the manner of ancient buildings) yet it is very richly furnished, and adorned with very beautiful Gardens: able to lodge, and give content to the best Prince in Christendom. Here are also many other Towns, as 5. Caprasia, and 6. Lucera, of which nothing memorable.

As for the fortunes of this Dukedom, it is to be observed that Mantua followed for long time the fortunes of the Western Empire; till given by Obbo II. Son to Theobald Earl of Canosse, for the many good services he had done him. Boniface who succeeded him had to Wife Beatrice the Sister of Henry II. and by her was the Father of Matthias, that famous Warriour, who carried to great a Stroke in the battle of Italy. Being dispossessed of her Estate by Henry III. the joyed in faction with the Popes, recovered all her own again, and dismembered from the Empire many goodly Territories, which at her death (having had three Husbands, but no Issue) she gave in Fee for ever to the See of Rome, Anno 1115. After her death, Mantua continued under the protection of the Empire. But that protection failing them, by little and little it was brought under by the Family of the Bonacelli: who Lording it over a Free-people with too great severity, contracted such a general hatred, that Paffavino, the last of them, was slain in the Market-place by the people, under the command and conduct of Lewis de Gonzaga, a noble Gentleman; who presently with great applause took to himself the Government of the Estate, Anno 1328, which hath continued in his house to this very day, with a great deal of lustre. Whose Successors take here as followeth, under the several titles of

The Lords, Marquesses, and Dukes of Mantua.

- A. Chr.
1238 1. Lewis Gonzaga, the first of this Line, Lord of Mantua.
1566 2. Guido, Son of Lewis.
1569 3. Lodowick, or Lewis H. Son of Guido.
1581 4. Francis Gonzaga, Son of Lewis H. highly extolled by Pagius the Florentine for his Wisdom and Learning; who valiantly repulged the attempts made against his Estate, by John Galeas, the first Duke of Milain.
1407 5. John Francisco Gonzaga, created the first Marquess of Mantua, by the Emperour Sigismund.
1414 6. Lodowick, or Lewis III. Son of John Francisco, who entertained the Emperour Frederick, and the King of Denmark, with great magnificence.

- 1478 7. Frederick, Son of Lewis III.
1484 8. Francis II. Son of Frederick.
1519 9. Frederick II. Commander of the Armies of the Pope, and Florentines, entertained Charles V. with great solemnity; by whom he was made Duke of Mantua, 1530, and declared Marquess of Montferrat; in right of his Wife.
1540 10. Francis III. Son of Frederick, the second Duke of Mantua, and Marquess of Montferrat.
1550 11. William, the Brother of Francis III. created the first Duke of Montferrat.
1587 12. Vincent, Son of William, Duke of Mantua and Montferrat.
13. Francis IV. Son of Vincent, had to Wife Margaret the Daughter of Charles Emmanuel Duke of Savoy, and by her a Daughter named Mary; in whose behalf the Duke of Savoy undertook the War against her Uncle, for Montferrat.
1613 14. Ferdinand, the Brother of Francis IV. succeeded him in both Estates, notwithstanding the opposition of the Duke of Savoy.
15. Vincent II. the Brother of Ferdinand, and of Francis IV.
1628 16. Charles Gonzaga, Duke of Nevers in France, by his Mothers Line; and of Mantua, and Montferrat by his Father Lewis Gonzaga, the third Son of Frederick I. Duke of Mantua; succeeded on the death of Vincent II. but not without great opposition of the Spanish Faction, who lacked Montferrat, dislaid Casal, and much impoverished both Estates. But the Business was at last composed by the Power of the French, and the Investiture conferred upon him, by the hands of the Emperour.

The Territories of this Duke (reckoning in that of Montferrat also) are in circuit nigh unto those of Florence; but his Revenues fall much short, which amount to about 500000 Ducats only; but might be greater, if either the Duke would be burdensome to his Subjects, as Florence is; or if he were not on all sides Land-locked from Navigation and Traffick.

The chief Order of Knighthood in these Dukedoms, is of The Blood of our Lord JESUS CHRIST, instituted Anno 1608. The Author of it was Duke Vincent Gonzaga, when the Marriage was solemnized between his Son Francis and Lady Margaret, Daughter to the Duke of Savoy. It consisteth of twenty Knights, whereof the Mantuan Dukes are Sovereigns; and was allowed by Pope Paul V. The Collar hath Threads of Gold laid on red, and interwoven with these words, Dominus Prohibiti. To the Collar are pendent two Angels, supporting three drops of Blood, and circumscribed with Nihil ista trister recipio. It took this name, because in St. Andrews Church in Mantua, are said to be kept as a most precious Relique, certain drops of our Saviours Blood (thou canst not, O Reader, but believe it) with a piece of the Sponge.

The Arms of Mantua are Argent, a Cross Peter Gules, between four Eagles Sable, member of the second, under an esccheon in Fesse, charged quarterly with Gules a Lion Or, and Or three Bars Sable.

There are in this Dukedom Archbishops 1. Bishops 4.

The Dukedom of MODENA.

THE Dukedom of MODENA containeth the Cities of Modena and Reggio, with the Territories adjoining to them: both of them situate in that part of Lombardy which is called Cispadana; and consequently partake of the pleasures and commodities of it.

The people of this Dukedom are said to be better natured than most of Italy: those of Modena being quick in their resolution; calm to be pacified when wronged, and friendly in their entertainment of Strangers; the Reggians being affable, of present wits, and fit for any thing they can be employed in: the women in both Towns of a mild disposition, neither too courtly, nor too forward, as in other places.

The first principal City is that of Modena, anciently better known by the name of Mutina, and famous in those times for the first battle betwixt Antony and Augustus Caesar; this latter being then not above eighteen years of age, and yet made head of a new League against Antony, whom the Senate and people looked upon as a common Enemy. The managing of the War was left to Hirtius and Pansa then Consuls; the fortune of the day to equal, that Antony left the field, and the Consuls their lives leaving Augustus the absolute command of a powerful Army, into whose favours he so cunningly did work himself, that he made them the foundation of his future greatness. It was at that time a Roman Colony, but being ruined by the fury of the Goths and Lombards was afterwards new built at the charge of the Citizens, situate near the Apennine in a very good soil, and of indifferent fair buildings. In the distractions of Italy betwixt the Emperours and the Popes, Guido the Pope's Legate, and then Bishop thereof, consigned it over to Azzo of the house of Este, Lord of Ferrara, Anno 1304, the Pope himself consenting so, upon the payment of a yearly tribute of 10000 Crowns: since which time it hath been for the most part in the power of that house: Borcius the Marquess of Ferrara, being by Frederick III. made Duke of Mantua, 2. Reggio, the second Town of note, hath tasted much of the same fortune; at first a Roman Colony called Regium Lepidi, afterwards ruined by the Goths when they came first into Italy, repaired and compassed with a Wall by its own Inhabitants, and for a time under the command of the Earls of Canosse. But being weary of that yoke, they recovered their liberty; which being unable to maintain in those bustling times, they gave themselves unto Obizzo the Father of Azzo, Anno 1292; and after that in the year 1326, to the See of Rome. Passing through many other hands, it was at last sold for 60000 Ducats to the Vicenti, Lords of Milain, Anno 1370; and in the end recovered by the house of Este, Anno 1409, and gave the title of a Duke to the aforesaid Borcius, whom Frederick III. made Duke of Modena and Reggio, 1452.

The Successors of this Borcius are before laid down in the succession of Ferrara; who held the whole Estate together till the death of Alphonso the last Duke. He dying without lawful Issue, Anno 1595, left his Estate to Cesar de Este, his Nephew by a base Son, called Alphonso also; betwixt whom and Pope Clement VIII. a War was threatened for the whole: but at last compromised upon these conditions, That the Church of Rome should have Ferrara, with all the Lands and Territories appertaining to it, as an Estate anciently holden of that See; and that Modena, and Reggio, being Imperial Fiefs, should remain to Cesar; but to be held in fee of the Papal Throne. Duke Cesar to have leave to carry away all his movable goods, to sell such of his Lands as were not of the ancient domain of the Dukedom; and to have one half of the Ordnance and Artillery. By which agreement the Cities of Modena and Reggio, became a new erected State, distinct, and independent of any other: each City being well fortified, and garrisoned, and furnished with Ordnance for defence thereof. But what they yield unto the Prince in the way of Revenue, and what Forces he is able to raise out of his Estates, I cannot positively determine: but by the Tribute formerly paid unto the Popes for the City of Mutina, and the rich Territory of both Towns, and the great Revenues of the Dukedom of Ferrara, I conceive they cannot yield less than 100000 Crowns of yearly Income. The Arms of this Duke the same with those of Ferrara, before blazoned.

The Dukedom of PARMA.

THE Dukedom of PARMA hath on the North the Dukedoms of Milain and Mantua, from which it is parted by the Po, on the South the Apennine, which divideth it from Liguria; on the East the Country of Modena, and Romandiola, from which last parted by the River Soulenna, now called Parano; on the West Montferrat: situate, as Modena is, in Lombardia Cispadana; and much of the same nature both for soil, and air, and other the commodities of those parts of Italy.

The principal Cities of it are, 1. Parma, an ancient City, and made a Colony of the Romans at the end of the second Punic War; as Mutina and Aquileia at the same time were. It is seated on a small River of the same name, which runneth almost through the midst of it; beautified with very handfome buildings, and peopled by a race of ingenious men, whether they do betake themselves unto Arts or Arms. The grounds about this City are of excellent Pasturage, and yield great plenty of the Cheese which is called Permesan. 2. Placentia, seated on the Po, one of the first Colonies which the Romans planted amongst the Chalpine Gauls, and famous for the resistance which it made both to Annibal, and Alfribal, who severally in vain besieged it: made afterwards the Metropolis of the Province of Emilia, yet nothing the less beautiful for to great an age. The fields adjoining have the same commendation with those of Parma, for most excellent Cheese; but go beyond for Salt-pits and Mines of Iron, which the other wanteth. 3. Mirandula, a proper Town built in the time of Constantine the Son of Constantine the Great: the Patrimony of the noble Family of the Pici (of which was Picinus de Mirandula that renowned Scholar) but held by them as Feudatories to the Dukes of Parma; 4. Briscella, called anciently Briscellum, not far from the chief City of Parma; of no great note at the present time, but memorable in the Roman story for the death of the Emperour Obbo, who here killed himself. For hearing here that his Forces were overthrowen by Valens, and Cedina, Commanders of the Forces of Vitellius, then his Competitor for the Empire; he rather chose to fall by his own Sword, than that the Romans should be forced, for his sake, to renew the War. And this he did with so much honour to himself, that many of his Soldiers flew themselves at his Funeral Pile; not out of consciousness of crime, or for fear of punishment, but to testify their affections to him, and to follow such a brave example as was laid before them. So as we may truly say of him, as he is said by Tacitus to have said of himself, viz. Atti diutius imperium tenuerunt, nemo tam fortiter reliquit. 5. Monticella, in the middle way almost between Parma and Placentia, and and opposite unto Crenona, a chief Town of the Dutchy of Millain, from which parted by the River Po.

These Towns (as others in these parts) have been partakers of the diversities of fortune, as being (after the declining of the Western Empire) sometimes under the Venicians, most times under the Millanys; and at last conquered by Pope Julius II. in the confusions and destructions of the Dukedom of Millain, under the two last Princes of the House of Sforza. By Paul III. being of the House of the Farnesii, the Cities of Parma and Placentia with their Appendices, were given unto his Son Petro Aloisii (or Petrus Aloisius, as the Latinæ call him) with the title of Duke, Anno 1549. The Signatory of Camerino, which he had lately taken from the Dukes of Urbino, being given in recompence to the Church. This Petro being a man of most vicious life, had amongst other villanies committed an unpeakeable violence on the person of Cosmus Chirius the Bishop of Favenna; and from affection of Cosmus the Bishop of Favenna was, for a further poyned him. For which most detestable Fact, he received no other chastisement of his Father than this, Hæc via me non committitur didici, that he was sure he had not learnt those vices by his example. But going on in these wicked courses, he was slain at last by Count John Agucenda, and Placentia, after a short siege, yielded to Ferdinand Gonzaga (Viceroy in Millain for the Emperor Charles V.) conceived to be privy to the murder. Ottavian, the Son of Petro Luigi, hearing what had happened, fortified himself in Parma as well as he could; but being hated by the new Pope, and distrustful, not without good cause, of the Emperor's purposes, he had quite lost all, if Henry II. of France, had not taken him into his protection. For the Emperor Charles fully determined notwithstanding that Ottavian had married his base Daughter, to have made himself Lord of the Town: and the French King was loth to see so great a strength added to the Emperor's possessions in Italy. When the War had now lasted four years, Philip II. (who afterward succeeded Charles) considering how necessary it was for his affairs in Italy, to have this Ottavian his friend, restored unto him the City of Plaisance or Placentia, and he withdrew him from the French Faction, Anno 1557. Yet because he would be sure to keep his house in a perpetual dependence on Spain, he restored it not absolutely at the present, but held the Citadel thereof with a Spanish Garrison, till the year 1583, when in regard of the good services, which Alexander Prince of Parma had done him in his Wars against the Hollanders, and others of the revolted Provinces; he caused it to be surrendered into his hands of his Father Ottavian. By which, and by his settling upon this house the Town and Territory of Nosara, in the Dukedom of Millain, and other personal favours which they have conferred on the Princes of it; the Kings of Spain seem to have given some satisfaction to this House for stepping between them and the Kingdom of Portugal; to which they might have made such a probable title, as would have troubled his Estate, had they stood upon it.

The Dukes of Parma.

- A. Chr.
1549 1. Petro Luigi Farnesii, Son to Paul III. made by the Pope, his Father, the first Duke of Parma.
1550 2. Ottavian Farnesii, Son to Petro Luigi, married Margaret base daughter to Charles V. afterwards Governor of the Netherlands.
3. Alexander, Son of Ottavian and Margaret of Anstria, one of the most renowned Soldiers of his time, Governor of the Netherlands for King Philip II.

- 1592 4. Raimundus Farnesii, Son of Alexander and Mary of Portugal, eldest Daughter of Edward Son to King Emanuel; one of the Competitors for that Crown.
5. Odoardo Farnesii, Son of Raimundus.

The Dukedom of MONTFERRAT.

THE Dukedom of MONTFERRAT, is situate between Lombardy and Piemont, on the Rivers of Tanarus and Po, on the East, and West; extended North and South, in a line or branch, from the Alps to the borders of Liguria; of which last it was sometimes counted part, and called Liguria Cisalpina for distinction sake.

It took this name either a monte ferrato, from some Mountain of it strewed with Iron; or else a monte feraci, as some rather think, from the fertility of the Mountains. And to say truth, though the whole Country seem to be nothing else than a continual heap of Mountains; yet are they Mountains of such wonderful fruitfulness, that they will hardly give place to any Valley in Europe.

The principal River of it is the Tanarus, above mentioned, which springing out of the hills about Baretti, a Town of the Marquisate of Saluzzese, falleth into the Po not far from Pavie. The principal Cities of it are, 1. Alba, called by Pliny Alba Pompeia, situate on the banks of the said River, in a rich and fertile soil, but a very bad air: near to which, in a poor Village called Zabia the Emperor Perinax was born. Who being of mean and obscure Parents, after the death of Commodus, was called by the Conspirators to the Roman Empire. But being over-zealous to reform the corruptions of the Soldiers, he was by the Prætorian Guards (hating their Princes for their virtues, as much as formerly for their vices) most cruelly murdered, and the Imperial dignity sold to Julianus, for 25 Sesteriis; a man. 2. Casal, vulgarly called St. Vast, from the Church there dedicated to St. Eusebius (or St. Vast, as they speak it commonly) the strongest Town in all this Country; well built and peopled with many ancient and noble Families, of which the Family of St. George is one of the principal; and made a Bishops See by Pope Sixtus IV. Anno 1474. It was in former times the chief seat of the House of Montferrat, and for that cause compassed with a strong Wall, and a fair Castle: but of late fortified after the modern manner of Fortifications, and strengthened with an impregnable Citadel by Duke Vincent Gonzaga, as the first Key of his Estate, in which new Citadel the Governour of the Province holds his usual residence. 3. Aigue, in Latine Aquensis, famous for its Baths or Fountains of hot and Medicinal waters. 4. St. Saviour, where there is a very strong Fortress, as there is also in 5. Ponfleur, or Pont d'Strua, so called of the River Strua. 6. Osioniano, anciently Occimianum, the old seat of the first Marquesses of this Montferrat. 7. Belzale, 8. Liburni, and many others of like note.

Here are also within the limits of this Dukedom, the Towns of Asti, Cherian, and Chivasco, belonging to the Dukes of Savoy, in the description of whole Country we may speak more of them, together with Nosara and Alexandria, appertaining to the Dukedom of Millain, which we have spoken of already. And henceunto also I refer the strong (and in those times) impregnable Fortresses, by the Latine Historians called Fraxinetum, from some Grove of Athens near unto it: situate in the advantages of the Mountains, and not far from the Sea, by consequence consequence better able to defend it self and admit relief; and therefore made the receptacle or retreat of the Saraceni, at such time as they had footing in these parts of Italy. First took and fortified by them in the year 891. recovered afterwards by the prowess and good Fortune of Obbo the Emperor, deservedly furnished the Great, about sixty years after. Of great note in the stories of those middle times. By Luiprandus placed near the borders of Provence; by Blondus, and Leander, near the River Po, and the Town of Valenza, once called Forum Fulvis; and finally by Sigonius in the Collina Alper: and so most fit to be referred unto this Country, though now so desolated that there is no remainders of the ruins of it.

This Country was made a Marquisate by Obbo II. 985. one of the seven by him erected and given to the seven Sons of Waleran of Saxony, who had married his Daughter Adelheid. A Military Family, conspicuously eminent in the Wars of Greece, and the Holy-Land; where they did many acts of singular Merit: inasmuch as Baldwin and Conrade, issuing from a second branch hereof, were made Kings of Jerusalem; and Boniface one of the Marquesses, got the Kingdom of Theffaly, and many fair Estates in Greece. But the Male-issue failing in Marquess John, the Estate fell to Theodorus Paleologus, of the Imperial Family of Constantinople, who had married the Heir-General of the House; continuing in his name till the year 1534. when it fell into the hands of the Dukes of Mantua. In the person of Duke William Gonzaga raised to the honour of a Dukedom, as it still continueth the best and richest part of the Duke's Estate, and the fairest flower in all his Garden. The residue of the story may be best collected out of the following Catalogue of

The Marquesses of Montferrat.

- A. Chr.
185 1. William, one of the Sons of Waleran and Adelheid, made the first Marquess of Montferrat.
2. Boniface, the Son of William.
3. William II. who accompanied the Emperor Conrade III. and St. Lewis of France to the Holy Land.
1183 4. Boniface II. Son of William II. his younger Brother, William being deposed King of Jerusalem, and Reynier another of them made Prince of Theffaly, succeeded his Father in Montferrat. Aiding his Nephew Baldwin, the Son of William, in recovering the Kingdom of Jerusalem; he was took prisoner by Gay of Lusignan, Competitor with him for that title.
5. William III. Son of Boniface, poisoned in the Holy-Land, where he endeavoured the restoring of his Brother Conrade, to that languishing Kingdom.
6. Boniface III. Son of William III. for his valour in taking of Constantinople, made King of Theffaly.
1254 7. Boniface IV. Son of Boniface III. added Vercellin and Epedrium unto his Estate.
8. John, surnamed the Just, the last of this house.
9. Theodore Paleologus, Son of the Emperor Andronicus Paleologus the elder, and Toland his Wife, Daughter of Boniface IV.
10. John Paleologus, Son of Theodore.
11. Theodore II. Son of John, a great builder and endower of Religious houses.

12. Jacobus Johanner, Son of Theodore II.
13. John III. eldest Son of Jacobus Johanner.
1464 14. William IV. Brother of John III. Founder of the City and Monastery of Casale.
1487 15. Boniface V. Brother of John and William, the two last Marquesses, invited by the Emperor Frederick IV. Blanca Maria, the Daughter of William, surrendering her Estate unto him.
16. William V. Son of Boniface V.
1518 17. Boniface VI. Son of William V.
1530 18. John George, Brother of William V. succeeded his Nephew in the Estate; which he held but four years. After whose death, Anno 1534. this Marquisate was adjudged to Frederick, the first Duke of Mantua, who had married Margaret, Daughter of William V. and next Heir to George.

Whole Successors may be seen in the former Catalogue of the Dukes of Mantua.

The Arms hereof are Gules, a Chief Argent.

Here are in this Estate, Archbishops 0. Bishops 4.

And now according to my method, I should proceed to the description and story of the Principality of Piemont, the last and most Western part of Italy. But being it lieth partly in, and partly at the foot of the Alps, was anciently a part of the Province called Alpes Cœniæ, and is now part of the Estate of the Duke of Savoy; we will defer till we come to those Alpes Provincie, which are next to follow. And so much shall suffice for Italy, in which there are, besides those of Piemont,

OF THE ALPES.

BEfore we can come out of Italy into France, we must cross the Alps; a ridge of Hills where-with (as with a strong and defensible Rampart) Italy is assured against France and Germany. They are said to be five days journey high, covered continually with Snow, from the whiteness whereof they took this name; that in the Sabine District being called Alpium, which in the Latine was called Albium.

They begin about the Mediterranean or Ligustick Seas, and crossing all along the Borders of France and Germany, extend as far as to the Gulf of Cornero, in the Province of Istria and are in several parts as they lie in order from the Mediterranean to the Adriatick. And first those which lie nearest to the Mediterranean, are for that cause called Maritime, from the nearness to Liguria, called by some Liguria. 2. Then follow those called Coſtie, from Coſtia, a King of the Allobroges: And 3. Those named Græve, from the passage of Horatius and his Græcon Followers, of which both amongst the Poets and Historians, there is very good evidence. 4. After we come to the Pennine, so named from the march of Annibal and his Carthaginians, whom the Latine Writers call by the name of Pæni; or from the Mountain-God Pannus, worshipped by the Veragri, the Inhabitants of it. 5. Next come we to the Lepontine, so named from Lepontius, who did there inhabit: As 6. the Rætice, which lie next to them, from the Ræti, once a powerful people of that mountainous tract. 7. Then follow those called Julie, from the passage of Julius Cæsar over them, in his march towards Gaul: and so at last we come unto those called Carnica, extending to the shores of the Adriatick, denominated from the Carni who did here inhabit, and who gave name also to Carniola, an adjoining Province.

The ancient Inhabitants of these mountainous Countries, besides the Allobroges, Veragri, Leponti, Ræti, and Carni, (spoken of before; were the Sedani, Salis, Valenses, Vacanti, and divers others of less note and estimation: all vanquished by the indomitable industry of the Romans. After whose subjugation, and the settlement of the Roman Empire, these Mountains, and some part of the Vales adjoining, made five several Provinces; viz. The Province of the Celtic Alps, containing Wallisland, and Piemont. Secondly, of Rætia Prima, comprehending the Grifions, and part of the Dukedom of Milain, now in possession of the Switzers, both which were members of the Diocese of Italy. Thirdly, of the Alpi Maritime, now part of Danubiana and France. Fourthly, of the Græve and Pennine Alps, and the greatest part of Maxima Sequanorum, including some part of Savoy, and most part of Switzerland: both which were members of the Diocese of Gaul. And fifthly, of Noricum Mediterraneum; comprehending Carniola, Carinthia, and the parts near hand, which were members of the Diocese of Ilyricum Occidentale. The people anciently, as now, by reason of their drinking Snow-water, dissolving from the tops of the Hills, and sometimes falling thence with as great a violence as the Cataract of Nilus are said to do; were generally troubled with a swelling in the throat, which the Latines call Struma: being the same with that which we call the King's Evil: because by special privilege curable by the Kings of France and England. Quis tumidum guttur miratur in Alpibus? as the Poet hath it.

Of these vast Hills, the lowest are the Carnica and Maritime, lying nearest to the several Seas before remembered: The Coſtie and the Græve not so high, but that the passages lie open for the most part of the year. The rest, by reason of their deep and dreadful precipices, their tedious and steep ascents, narrow ways, dangerous craggy Rocks, fierce whirlwinds, and huge balls of Snow, tumbling with an incredible violence from the tops of the Mountains, are hardly passable by Horse, not at all by Waggons. And yet amongst these dreadful hills, there are observed to be some Valleys of great fertility, not giving ground for fruitfulness to the best in Europe; and for the sweetness of the temperature going much beyond them. With such an equal hand, doth the heavenly Providence dispense the benefits of Nature to his whole Creation: that plenty bordereth upon want, and pain on pleasure.

And yet for all the Difficulty and Danger of these Alpine Passages, Covetousness, or Curiosity, or Desire of Conquest, have found a way to make them passable in many places; and that not only for private and particular Passengers, but for vast Multitudes and numerous Armies, such as those led by Annibal and Julius Cæsar. But especially the barbarous people found out five ways to break into Italy, which have been since much travelled by diverse Nations, of which three be out of France, and two out of Germany. The first from France is through France, and so close to the Ligustick Stars: easiest for private Passengers, but too strait and narrow for great Armies: there being many passages in the Country of Nizza, so narrow, that ten men may make head against ten thousand; as in that called the Pace of the Virgin lay out. The second is over the Hills called Gencure, into the Marquisate of Saluzzes, and to the other parts of Lombardy: which was the way that Charles VIII. marched towards Naples, and by the Italians, is commonly called Strada Romana, because the ordinary Passage 'twixt France and Rome. The third way is over the greater Cenis, (which some call the lesser St. Bernard) to the Ad, or Turin: which (if we may believe antiquity) was first opened by Hercules, and after followed by Annibal: who found the Passages so closed up, that he was forced to break his way (as Plutarch telleth us) with Fire and Vinegar: whence that so memorable saying, Viam Annibal, aut invenit, aut facit. From the passage of those Worthies, this Tract, and that adjoining were called Alpes Græve, and Pennine. Or if (as others think) Annibal took the former way, and came directly upon Turin, which Town it is most certain that he took in his march: then these Pennine must take name from the Passage of Adrubat, or of some part of Annibal's Army, which probably was too great to go all one way: or else from the Mountain God Panninus, as before was said.

The first way out of Germany into Italy, is through the Country of Grifions, by the Valtoſia, which the Spaniards select into his hands. So that by the keeping of the Valtoſia, or Valtoſia, and manning of the Fort Fuenter, which he also erected; he was in a manner the Lord of this passage: not only to the discontent of the Natives, but to the distaste of the Savoyards and Venetians. The other way out of Germany into Italy, is through the Country of Tiroſia, by the Towns of Innsbruck, and Trent. This passage is commanded by the Castle and Fort of Eresberg, seated on the Confines of this Country towards Suecia, and from Innsbruck, is two days journey distant. Which Fort, in the War which the Protestant Princes made against Charles V. was surprized by Captain Scherstine, so to hinder the coming of the Pope's Forces into Germany: for which the Emperor so hated him, that when all the rest of that Faction were pardoned, he only continued a Proscript, his head being valued at 4000 Crowns. The taking also of this Fort, and the Castle adjoining, by D. Maurice of Saxony, made the said Charles then being in Innsbruck, to fly out of Germany: and shortly after to resign his Empire to his Brother Ferdinand.

Out of these Mountains rise the Springs of many of the most renowned Rivers in these West parts of the World, as, 1. The Rhine, which springeth from two several Fountains, the one which they call the Nearer Rhine, out of the Lepontine; and the other which they term the Farther, or further Rhine, out of the Rætice, which meet together about a Dutch mile from Chur the chief Town of the Grifions, and so go on by Constance to Germany. 2. Rhone, which riseth in that part of the Lepontine, which is called Die Pénchen, about two Dutch miles from the head of the Nearer or Farther Rhine, and so through Wallisland into France. 3. Padus, or Po, which hath his head in a branch of the Catinus or Celtic Alps, heretofore called Mont Vesulus, and so through Piemont into Italy. Out of these also spring the Rivers of Raff, Panone, and Adster, the first a Dutch, the second a French, and the third an Italian River also; not to say any thing of others of inferior note. The great Lakes which are found in this mountainous Tract, we shall hereafter meet with in their proper places.

Let us next look upon the Countries and Estates here situate, which bordering upon Italy, France, and Germany, and partaking somewhat of them all, do belong to neither; but reckon themselves to be free and absolute Estates, Supreme, and independent upon any others, as indeed they are. Such other of these Alpine Countries, which are under the command of the German Princes, as some parts of Schlesien and Bavaria, together with Tiroſia, Carniola, and the rest which belong to Austria, shall be considered in the History of those States and Princes, to which of right they do belong. But for the rest, which as they lie entire together without intermixture, so they are absolute in themselves, and owe no suit nor service unto any other, we will consider them in this place, under the name of the Alpes, or the Alpine Provinces.

The ALPES S then, or the Alpine Provinces, call them which you will, are bounded on the East with Tiroſia in Germany, and the Dukedom of Milain and Monferrat in Italy, on the West with France, Danubiana, and La Bresse, parts of the Continent of France, on the North, with the County of Burgundy in France, and Suecia or Schlesien in High Germany; and on the South, with Lombardy, and a branch of the Mediterranean Sea. Called in the middle times by the name of Burgundia Transjurana, because it contained that part of the Kingdom of Burgundy, which lay beyond the Mountain Jura. A Mountain which beginning near the City of Besl, and not far from the Rhine, passeth South-westward by the Lakes of Biel-Zee, Neuenburger-Zee, and that called Comne, till it come almost unto the Rhuse: dividing by that means the Provinces of Switzerland, and Savoy, from the County of Burgundy.

It lieth under the sixth Climate, and some part of the seventh, so that the longest day in Summer is fifteen hours and three quarters. Of different nature, in regard both of Soil and People; which will best tell us in the survey of the several Provinces, into which divided; that is to say, 1. the Dukedom of Savoy, 2. the Signatory of Geneva, 3. the Republics of Wallisland; 4. the Cantons of the Switzers; and 5. the Leagues of the Grifions. Which several States, though they be reckoned to belong to the German Empire, and that the Bishops of Chur, Sion, and Besl are generally accounted for Princes of it: yet they neither come unto the Diet, nor are subject to the publick Taxes, nor comprehended within any of those ten Circles into which the Empire is divided.

The Language herein spoken, partakes somewhat of all three, as before was said: the French being wholly spoken in Savoy, the lower Wallisland, and generally by the Switzers, bordering on the Lake Lemane; the Dutch being common to the greatest part of the Switzers, the Grifions about Chur, and the upper Wallisland: and finally the Italian used by the generality of the Grifions, the Præfectures appertaining unto them, and the Switzers both in Piemont, and those parts of Savoy which lie next unto it.

The principal Souldiers of these mountainous Provinces, 1. Rodolph, Earl of Habburg, the Founder of the present Austrian Family. 2. Thomas, and 3. Peter, Earls of Savoy, this last surnamed Charles VIII. 4. Emmanuel Philibert, one of the later Dukes heretofore, Commander of the Armies of the King of Spain. 5. John Tzerelin, commonly called Count Tilly, General of the Imperial Armies in the War of Germany. For Scholars of more special note, for which we are beholden to these Countries, we have 1. Philipp Theophrastus Bombastus a Boerhaam, commonly called Paracelsus, the Author, or In-ventor of Chymical Physick; born in the Mountains of Helvetia, as he saith himself: a man of most prodigious parts, and of no mean virtues. 2. Zuinglius, one of the chief Agents in the Reformation. 3. Mylæus, and 4. Oecampadus, two Divines, his Seconds. 5. Henry Bullinger, one of the same profession also. 6. Sebastian Cyslius, of as much learning as the best of them, though of different judgment. 7. Dan. Tossanus the Hebræist. To which we may add S. Calvin also, who though he had his birth in France, had his being here; and never grew to any eminency in Fame or Learning, till he was settled in Geneva.

For matter of Religion, it is of a very mist condition also, in all these Countries: that of the Romish only having publick countenance in the Dukedom of Savoy, and Piemont; but so that the Reformed is tolerated some parts thereof; especially in the next parts of Dan- phine, to which the neighbourhood of Geneva gives a great increase. In Switzerland there are four Cantons which are wholly for the Reformation, viz. Zurich, Bern, Basle, and Schaffhausen: Seven that stand wholly for the Doctrine of the Church of Rome, i.e. Vren, Schwyz, Unterwalden, Lucern, Zug, Friburg, and Solothurn: in Appenzel, and Glaris, they allow of both. The Grisons are confusedly divided between both Religions; but the Italian Prelates admit no other but the Romish. The cause of which division came upon the preaching of Zuinglius, a Canon of the Church of Zurich: who being animated with Luther's good success in Germany, began about the year 1519 to preach against the Mass, and Images, and other the corruptions of the Church of Rome. In which his Party so increased, that on a publick Disputation, which was held at Zurich, the Mass was abrogated in that Canton by the authority of the Senate, Anno 1526. and Images destroyed at Bern, 1528. After which prosperous beginnings, the Reformation began to spread it self amongst the Confederates; and had prevailed further both in France and Germany, but for a difference which arose betwixt him and Luther about the Sacrament of the Supper: in which Luther did not only maintain a real Presence, but a Consubstantiation also in the sacred Elements; which Zuinglius maintained to be only a bare sign and representation of Christs blessed body. For reconciling this difference, wherein the enemies of both did extremely triumph; a Conference was held between them at Marburg, a Town of Hesse, by the procurement of that Landgrave, but without success: Luther professing that he durst not agree in that point with Zuinglius, Ne principis suos interpretationes interpretentur Pontificis exosa, magis inviolis reddere; for fear of drawing too great hatred on the Princes of his own profession. From this time forwards all brake out into open flames, the names of Ubiqunitarians, and Sacramentarians, being reciprocally cast upon one another; to the great hinderance of the cause which they had in hand: yet to that the Lutheran opinions got ground in Germany, the Zuinglians amongst these Mountains, and in France it self, and finally prevailed by the means of Calvin in many parts in Germany also. But hereof more hereafter in convenient place.

As for the story of those Countries, before they were divided into so many hands, we are to know that the old Inhabitants hereof (mentioned before) were conquered severally by the Romans: as shall be shewn in the description of the several Provinces. Won from the Romans by the Burgundians, in the time of Honorius the Western Emperor, they became a member of their Kingdom; except the Country of the Grisons, and some parts of Switzerland, which fell under the Aims: united afterwards in the new Kingdom of Burgundy, of the French erection, when subdued by that Nation. But Charles the Bald, the last of the French Kings of Burgundy, having united it to the Kingdom of France, divided that Kingdom into three Estates; that is to say, the Dukedom of Burgundy on this side of the Saône, the Dukedom of Burgundy beyond the Saône, and the Dukedom of Burgundy beyond the Jura. This last, containing the greatest part of all these Alpine Provinces (except Piemont only) was by the said Charles given to Conrad a Saxon Prince, the Son of Witkind III. and younger Brother of Robert, the first Earl of Anjou; by the name of Earl of Burgundy Transjurane or Burgundy beyond the Jura. Rodolph his Son and Successor, by Eudes the King of France, his Cousin German, was honoured with the title of King: to make him equal at the least, with Boson Earl of Burgundy beyond the Saône, whom Charles the Great, about the same time had made King of Arles.

But Rodolph finding it offensive to the German Emperor, abandoned it on the death of Eudes, and took to himself the title of Duke. The residue of the story we shall have in the following Catalogue of

The Earls, Dukes and Kings of Burgundy Transjurane.

1. Conrad the first Earl of Burgundy Transjurane.
2. Rodolph, Earl, King, and Duke of Burgundy Transjurane.
3. Rodolph II. elected King of Italy against Berengar; which title he exchanged with Hugh de Arles, who was chosen by another Election, for the possession of the Kingdom of Arles and Burgundy, on the assuming of which Crown, he reigned this Dukedom Brother Boson.
4. Boson the Brother of Rodolph II. succeeded his Brother in the Dukedom of Burgundy, beyond the Jura; as afterwards he succeeded Rodolph, his Brothers Son, in the Kingdom of Arles and Burgundy.
5. Conrad II. Son of Boson, King of Arles and Burgundy and Duke of Burgundy Transjurane.
6. Rodolph III. Son of Conrad, who dying without Issue, left his Estates to Henry furnished the Black, the Son of his Sister Gisela, by Conrad II. Emperor and King of German; united so unto the Empire, till by the bounty and improvidence of some following Emperours, it was Cantoned into many parts; of which more anon.

It is now time to lay aside this discourse as to the general condition and affairs of these Alpine Provinces; and to look over the particulars: beginning first with the Estate of the Duke of Savoy, situate wholly in the Mountains, and lying next to Italy, where before we left.

The Dukedom of SAVOY.

THE Dukedom of SAVOY is bounded on the East with Milan and Montferrat in Italy; on the West, with Dauphine in France; on the North, with Switzerland, and the Lake of Geneva; and on the South, with Provence, and the Mediterranean. The Country of it different nature, that it cannot be reduced under any one Character: and therefore we must look upon it in the several parts into which divided; that is to say, 1. the Principality of Piemont, and 2. Savoy, especially so called.

1. PIEMONTE, in Latine called Regio Pedemontana, because situate at the foot of the Mountains (as the name in both Languages imports) is bounded on the East, with Milan, and Montferrat; on the West, with Savoy, on the North, with the Swissers; and on the South, it runneth in a narrow Valley to the Mediterranean, having Montferrat on the one side, Provence and a part of the Alpes upon the other. The Country wonderfully fertile compared with Switzerland, and Savoy. which lie next unto it; but thought to be inferior to the rest of Italy. It containeth, besides Barones, and Lords, 15 Marquises, 52 Earldoms, 160 Castles or Walled places; and is so populous withal, that once a Piemontese being demanded the extent of his Country, he answered, that it was a City of three hundred miles in compass.

The

The principal Cities of it are, 1. Turin, called of old Augusta Taurinorum, because the head City of the Taurini, once the Inhabitants of this Tract: from which Taurini, it deriveth the name of Turin, and not as some conceive from the River Duria, on whose banks it standeth. In this City is the Court and Palace of the Duke of Savoy (who is the Lord of this Country) the See of an Archbishop, and an University, in which the renowned Scholar Erasmus took his degrees in Divinity. It is situate on the River Po, in a place very important for the guard of Italy; for which cause the Romans sent a Colony thither, and the Lombards made it one of their four Dukedoms. Adjoining to it is a Park of the Dukes of Savoy, watered with the Duria, Stura, and Po, six miles in circuit, full of Woods, Lakes, and pleasant Fountains; which make it one of the sweetest situations in Europe. 2. Mondovi, seated on the swelling of a little hill, with very fair Suburbs round about it; in one of which the Dukes of Savoy built a Church and Chappel to the blessed Virgin; intended for the burial place of the Ducal Family. It is the best peopled Town, for the bigness of it, of any in Italy. 3. Augusta Pretoria, now called Aost, situate in the furthest corner of Italy to the North and West. 4. Verelli, a strong Town bordering upon Milan, to which it formerly belonged; and was given first in Dower with Blanch the Daughter of Philip Maria Duke of Milan, to Amade III. Duke of Savoy; anciently the chief Town of the Libyei, who to gether with the Salassi and Taurini, were the old Inhabitants of this Country. 5. Ivrea, called by Polony Eporadia, situate at the very jaws of the Alpes, an Episcopal City. 6. Nives, or Nivese, an Haven on the Mediterranean, at the influx of the River Varo, which divides it from Provence; beautified with a Cathedral Church, the Bishops Palace, a Monastery of Nuns, and an impregnable Citadel. A place so naturally strong, that when as yet the Fortifications were imperfect, it resisted the whole Forces of Barbarossa the Turkish Admiral, Anno 1449. lying before it with a Navy of two hundred sail, and battering it continually with incredible fury. First fortified by Duke Charles, upon occasion of some words of the Duke of Bourbon, who passing this way with his Army, beheld, faith he, a situation of which they know not the importance: the Citadel being after added by Emanuel Philibert, and Garrisoned for the most part with 400 Souldiers. 7. Susse, seated in the ordinary thorough-fare betwixt France and Italy, called of old Segovia; and honoured in those times with a stately Sepulchre of King Coligny, a King of the Albiges: one of the seven Marquises in the middle times erected by the Emperor Otto. 8. Pignerolle, fortified with a Castle of great importance, which commandeth all the adjoining Valleys, fold by Duke Charles Emanuel to Lewis XIII. of France, together with the Fort and Valley of Perouse, (and in them both to the number of ten or twelve Towns and Villages) for the sum of 49,000 Crowns, to be for ever in the propriety and Sovereignty of the Kings of France; and thereby giving to the French a commodious pass from Dauphine into Italy upon all occasions, and no small influence and command on his own Estates. 9. Gisors, adorned with many goodly Churches, fair Convents, and noble Families. 10. Ville Franche, a place of great strength, more towards the Sea. 11. Savilian, seated in so pleasant a Country, that Duke Emanuel Philibert had once a purpose to settle his abode in it, and make it the chief of his Estate. 12. Enjuque, a Marquise, another of the seven erected for the Sons of Valeran. 13. Hereunto we may add the City of Ait (though properly within the limits of Montferrat) anciently a Colony of the Romans; and now to be compared, for the greatness and beauty of her Palaces, to the most stately Cities of Lombardy; situate betwixt the two Rivers of Po and Tanarus, very rich and populous.

Here is also in this Country the Marquise of Saluzzero, (of the same erection as the former, but a greater Estate) the cause of so many differences betwixt France and Savoy. The principal Town whereof is called also Saluzzero (from the Salassi, questionless who dwelt herabouts) seated about the Spring of the River Po; reasonably big, and fortified with a very large Cattle, fitted with rooms for all uses, and for every fashion. 2. Carmanoglia, which gave name to that famous Captain who carried to great a way in the Wars of Italy. A Town so fortified and stored with all sorts of Ammunition, that it is thought impregnable. 3. Ravelle, a well fortified place. 4. Doglian, the thorough-fare for the greatest part of the Trade which is driven betwixt Piemont, and the River of Genoa. The Arms heretofore Argent, a Chief Gules.

The ancient Inhabitants of this Country were the Salassi, Libyei, and Taurini, as before is said, all vanquished by the Romans, and their Country made a Province of that Empire, by the name of the Province of Alpes Cottie, in the time of Nero; of which Genoa was the Metropolis or principal City. The present are defended, for the most part, of the Heruli, who under the conduct of Odoacer conquered Italy; whereof he was proclaimed King by the Romans themselves, but Odoacer being vanquished near Verona, by Theodoric King of the Gots, the Heruli had this Country allotted to them by the Conqueror for their habitation. They had not held it long when subdued by the Lombards, of whose Kingdom it remained a part, till given by Arispert the seventeenth King of the Lombards to the Church of Rome; affirmed by some to be the first temporal Estate that ever the Popes of Rome had possession of. But lying far off, and the Donation not confirmed by the Kings succeeding, the Popes got little by the gift: so that in the subverting of the Kingdom of the Lombards, it was at the devotion of the Kings of Italy, of the house of Charles the Great; and afterwards of his Successors in the Empire, by whom distracted into several Estates and Principalities: Thomas and Peter, Earls of Savoy, made themselves Masters of the greatest part of it, by force of Arms: the former in the year 1210, the latter in the year 1256. Since that time the first Son of Savoy is styled Prince of Piemont. The Marquise of Saluzzero, containing almost all the rest, was added by the marriage of a daughter of this Marquise, with Charles Duke of Savoy, Anno 1481. Of which Marriage though there was no issue, yet the Savoyards always held it as their own, till the French upon a good title possessed themselves of it: Recovered by the Savoyards, Anno 1588. The Civil Wars then hot in France. But finding that he was not able to hold it against Henry IV. (who looked upon it as a door to let his Forces into Italy) he compounded with him, Anno 1600. the Country of Bresse being given in exchange for this Marquise: of which, together with the residue of Piemont, and some pieces of importance in the Dukedom of Montferrat, that noble Family of Savoy doth now stand possessed.

The Arms of this Principality are Gules, a Cross Argent, charged with a Label of three points Azure.

2. SAVOY, strictly and specially so called, is bounded on the East, with Wallisland, and part of Piemont; on the West, with Dauphine, and La Bresse; on the South, with some parts of Dauphine only; and on the North with Switzerland, and the Lake of Geneva.

The Country is for the most part hilly and Mountainous, tainous, overspread with the branches of the Alpes, healthy enough, as commonly all Hill Countries are, but not very fruitful, except some Valleys which lie nearest to the Western Sun, and the plain tract about the Lemanian Lake, lying towards Geneva. By reason of the difficult and narrow ways, and those full of Thieves, it was once called Malvay; but the passages being opened by the coit and industry of the people, and purged of Thieves by good Laws and exemplary Justice, it gained the name of Savoy, or Salvay, quasi salva via: as Maleventum, a Town of the Realm of Naples, on the like considerations got the name of Benevent. By the Latines of these later times it is called Sabaudia, a name not known to any of the ancient Writers; who knew it by no other name than that of the Allobroges, or Allobrogum Regio.

The common People are naturally very dull and simple, so gross of understanding for their continual converse with other Nations, who take this Country in their way to Italy; that they believe the Duke of Savoy to be the greatest Prince in the World: and so unworlike, that a few men of another Nation, well trained and disciplined, will make a great number of them flee. But on the other side, the Gentry are of a very pleasing conversation, civil, ingenious, and affecting all good exercise: so that there may be daily seen in Chambers as much good company, and as well appointed and behaved, as in many of the best Towns of France or Italy. The number of both sorts (taking in Piedmont who are not intermixed in the first place of this character) are thought to be 800000.

The chief Cities are, 1. Chambery, situate on the banks of the River L'Arche, in a very pleasant Valley, compassed round with Mountains; the principal of the Dukedom on that side of the Alpes: honoured with the Dukes Court when he resideth in this Country, the ordinary seat of Justice, and many neat houses which belong to the Gentry, fortified of late with a strong Castle and sufficient Outworks; but not recovered of the damage it received, Anno 1600. when it was forced by King Henry IV. of France, in his Wars with Savoy. 2. Tarentaise, an Archbishop's See, situate in the midst of the Mountains, heretofore the Metropolis of the Province of the Alpes Graie, and Pennine, and called by Antoninus, Civitas Centronum, from the Centrons who inhabited about this Tract. 3. Lombard in the Country of the old Medullis betwixt which and Suse, a Town of Piedmont, lieth the most ordinary road betwixt France and Italy. 4. Aigue belle, situate at the foot of a craggy Rock. 5. Kapelle, a sweet and fruitful situation, on the South-side of the Lake Lemanus, the chief Town of the Signory of Fiefogney: where Amadee I. Duke of Savoy, having given over his Estate, lived a Monastick life, and was thence chosen Pope by the Fathers at Basil, Anno 1440. 6. Nyon or Nevindan (by some of the old Latines called Nivindanum) an ancient City, laid desolate in or before the time of Julius Cæsar, repaired again in the Empire of Vespasian, the Seat of late times of the Bishops of Geneva, since their expulsion out of that City. 7. Belle, on the Rhodanus, or Rhône. 8. Albon, founded about the year 456. 9. Conflans, fortified by the late Dukes of Savoy; but otherwise of small importance. 10. Annunziata, not much observable, but for being the seat or place of Solemnities, for an Order of Knights called by that name. 11. Maurienne, or St. John de Maurienne, an Archbishop's See, situate in the Valley of the Alpes: so called; the chief City of the old Medullis, who dwell hereabouts; from whence the Prince of this house were first entituled Earls of Maurienne only. 12. Charbonnières, a well fortified place. Here is also the strong Town and Fort of Montmelian, which held out four Months against Henry IV. and many thousand shot of French Cannon, Anno 1600, and the impregnable Forts of St. Catharines, which yet submitted to that King; the Government whereof being denied to the Duke Byron, plunged him in discontent and Treason, to the loss of his head.

The many Tribes in and about this Mountainous Country, of which we have mentioned some before, pass generally in most ancient Writers, by the name of Allobroges; because the most powerful of them all. Of whom the first mention which we find in story, is the Atonement made by Hannibal in his passage this way, between Bruncus and his Brother, about the succellion of the Kingdom. Afterwards siding with the Sallii a Gallick Nation, in a War against Marsilius, then a Confederate of the Romans, they drew that people on their backs: by whom they were in fine subdued, with the loss of no less than 120000 Gauls, under the several conducts of Cicilius Avobarbus, and Qu. Fabius Maximus: by which last, Bituntis, or Bituntis King of the Avernus, one of the Confederates, was led in triumph unto Rome. The Country and people at that time were much alike, Cælon atrox pervicacia ingenio, a sharp air, and a stubborn people, as it is in Florus: not without commendation in the following Ages, for discovering Catiline's conspiracy, by which the whole Roman State was in danger of ruin. After which we find Collus, one of the Kings of these Allobroges, to have been in special favour with Augustus Cæsar: affirmed to be the Founder of twelve Cities in this mountainous Tract; whence it had the name of Alpes Cællie; and by that name reduced into the form of a Province, by the Emperor Nero. In the declining of that Empire, this Province became a part of the Kingdom of Burgundy; and passed, with other rights of that falling Kingdom, to the Emperors of Germany, by the gift of Rodolph the last King. To them it did continue subject till the year 999. in which Berald of Saxony, Son of Hugh of Saxony (which Hugh was Son of Obbo, and Brother to Obbo III.) for killing Mary the lascivious Wife of his Uncle, fled from Germany; and settled himself here, near France. His Son Humbert, (surnamed Blanchmanis, that is Whitehand) was by the special favour of the Emperor Conradus Salicus, made Earl of Maurienne; which is a Town of this Country, Anno 1027. And by his Marriage with Adela, the Daughter and Heir of the Marquess of Suse, added that noble Marquise (one of the seven erected by Obbo II. and given amongst the Sons of Wateran) unto his Estate. Humbert II. gained by Conquest the Town and Territory of Tarentaise; as Ame, or Amadee III. did the Counties of Vauks, and Chablais, Anno 1240. or thereabouts. Ame, or Amadee IV. by the Marriage of Sibylle, Daughter and sole Heir of Ulric Earl of Bresse, added that Earldom to his House: as Ame or Amadee IX. did the Town and Territory of Perelli, upon the Contract betwixt Philbert his Son and Successor, with Blanch the base Daughter of Philip Maria Duke of Milain, who afterwards was married unto Francis Sforza. Ame, or Amadee II. Earl of Maurienne was by the Emperor Henry V. invested with the Title of Savoy; and Amadee VIII. created the first Duke, by the Emperor Sigismund, Anno 1397. But the main improvement of the power and patrimony of this House came by the valour and good success of the two Earls, Thomas, who in the year 1310, and Peter one of his Sons and Successors (for his manifold Conquests, surnamed Charlemain the Junior) An. 1256. by conquest got a great part of Piedmont; to which the Marquise of Saluzzes, containing almost all the rest, was united by a marriage of the daughter of the Marquise, to Charles Duke

Duke of Savoy: and though he died without Issue by her, Anno 1489, yet his Successors still kept the possession of it, till Francis I. pretending some title to it in the right of his Mother (a Daughter of the House of Savoy) laid it into the Crown of France; from which it was again recovered by the Savoyard, during the French Civil Wars, Anno 1588, and now is peaceably possessed. The Country of Bresse being given to the French, for their pretension to this Marquise, Anno 1600. These Dukes of Savoy have a long time been devoted to the Faction of Spain, especially since the French Kings took in the latter States bordering on them, as Burgundy, Bretagne, &c. Charles III. sided so constantly with the Emperor Charles V. that denying Francis I. a passage for his Army through the Country into Italy; he was by the said King deposed of his Estates An. 1536. The Emperor to recover it left nothing undone, but in vain; for the French encountering his force in the open field, vanquished them, with the slaughter of fifteen thousand of his men. In the year 1558, peace being made between Henry and Philip, Successors to those great Princes: Emanuel Philibert, Son to Duke Charles, was restored to all his Rights. His Son and Successor having married Katherine the Daughter of King Philip II. depended wholly upon Spain, notwithstanding many quarrels which did grow betwixt them; his Sons receiving thence many great Penions and preferments. For at the same time, Prince Amadee Vittorio the second Son, during the life of Philip his elder Brother, was chief Commander of that King's Gallies; and had in Pension a hundred thousand Crowns per annum; Philbert the third Son, was Vice-roy of Sicily; Maurice IV. a Cardinal, had a moiety of the Revenues of the Archbishopric of Toledo; and Don Thomas, a young man, had his Penions also. But Amadee Vittorio, who succeeded him, marrying Madam Christine, a Daughter of King Henry IV. of France, changed his dependences; and held more close to France than any of his Predecessors: but whether to the hurt or benefit of his Estates, future times will show. For leaving his Heir a Minor, in the hands of his Mother, the French upon pretence of preserving the Country for him, against the incroachments of the Spaniards, have made themselves Masters of the greatest parts of it: which when they will restore to the proper Owner, is beyond my cunning to determine. But now behold the Catalogue of the

Earls and Dukes of Savoy.

- 999 1. Berald of Saxony.

- 1559 26. Emanuel Philibert, restored upon his Marriage with Margaret the Daughter of King Francis I. made Knight of the Garter by Queen Mary.
- 1580 27. Charles Emanuel.
28. Ame X. called also Amadee Vittoria, Son of Charles Emanuel, married Christiane the Daughter of King Henry IV.
- 1637 29. Charles Emanuel II. Son of Amadee Vittoria, or Ame X. at the age of three years succeeded his Father.

The Forces of this Duke consist especially in his Forts and Garrisons, whereof he hath good store in Savoy, and Piedmont, well fortified and plentifully furnished with all manner of Ammunition. And it concerneth him so to have, considering, what dangerous neighbours he hath near him, and that his Country is a continual thoroughfare, for the Armies both of France and Spain, upon all occasions. Nor doth it less conduce to his preservation, that he hath to many retreats of natural strength, as are not easily accessible by a conquering Army; of which last fort is, amongst many others, the Valley of Asti (which some reckon for a part of Savoy, and some of Piedmont) so strong by reason of the narrow entries, the uneasy passages, and the great multitudes of the people which inhabit in it; that those who have made themselves Masters of the rest of the Country, durst never attempt it. And of the first, besides those formerly described, is the Town of Nizze, so fortified and flanked upon all accesses, that it seems rather to be an assembly of Forts, than a single Fortified. Out of which Garrisons, the Duke is able to draw great Forces for present service; besides the readiness of the Piedmontese upon all occasions, which are for the most part taken to Arms.

The ordinary Revenue of this Dukedom (taking Piedmont) are said to be above a Million of Crowns per annum. But his extraordinary is so great, that Duke Charles Emanuel, during the Wars with Henry IV. in a very few years drew out of Piedmont only 11 Millions of Crowns; besides the charge which they were put to in quartering of Soldiers, by which it may appear, that the Dukes are not like to want money to serve their turns; when they shall desire it of their Subjects; and yet not charge them more than they are able to bear.

The only Order of Knighthood in this Dukes estate is that of the Annunziata ordained by Amadee the first Duke, at what time he defended Rhodes from the Turks, An. 1409. Their Collar is of fifteen Links, to shew the fifteen myriades of the Virgin; at the end is the portraiture of our Lady, with the history of the Annunziata. Instead of a Motto, these letters, F. E. R. T. id est, Fortitudo Ejus Rhodum Tenuit, are engraven in every plate or link of the Collar; each link being interwoven one within the other, in form of a True-lovers knot. The number of the Knights are fourteen, besides the Duke, who is the Sovereign of the Order: the solemnity was held anciently on our Lady-day, in the Castle of St. Peter in Turin; but of late time in the Town of Annunziata, from hence so denominated. So from this victory (for every repulse of the besieger, is a victory to the be-figged) there arose a double effect; first, the institution of this Order; secondly, the assumption of the present Army of this Duchy, where are G. a Crofs A. This being the Crofs of St. John of Jerusalem, whose Knights at that time were Owners of the Rhodet. Whereas before, the Arms were Or, an Eagle displayed with two heads, Sable, Armed Gules supporting in Fesse, an Escutcheon of Savoy, that is Barwise six pieces Sable and Or, a Bend flowered Vert. A Coat belonging to the Emperours of the house of Savoy, from whom the first Earls of Savoy did derive themselves.

3. The Signeury of GENEVA.

GENEVA is a City in the Dukedom of Savoy, formerly subject to its Bishops, acknowledging the Dukes of Savoy for the Lord chief: now reckoned as a Free-Estate, bordering close upon the Switzers, and with them Confederate; and so more properly within the course and compass of the Alpine Provinces. It is situate on the South-side of the Lake Lemane, opposite to the City of Lozane in the Canton of Bern, from which it is distant six Dutch miles: the River Rhofne having passed through the Lake with a clear colour, that it seemeth not at all to mingle with the waters of it: runneth through the lower part thereof, over which there is a passage by two fair Bridges. This lower part is seated on a flat or level, the rest on the ascent of an Hill: the buildings fair and of Free-stone, well fortified on both sides both by Art and Nature; in regard of the pretensions of the Duke of Savoy (whom they suffer not to arm any Gallies upon the Lake) and other jealousies of State. The compass of the whole City is about two miles, in which there are supposed to be about sixteen or seventeen thousand souls. One of their Bridges is more ancient, and better fortified than the other, belonging anciently to the Switzers (or Helvetians), the old Inhabitants of that tract; but broken down by Julius Cesar, to hinder them from passing that way into Gallia.

The people of the Town are generally of good wit in the managery of publick business, but not very courteous towards Strangers, of whom they exact as much as may be; modest and thrifty in Apparel, and speak for the most part the Savoyard, or worst kind of French. So that the great resort of young Gentlemen thither, is not so much to learn that Language (which is no where worse taught) as out of an opinion which their Parents have, that the Reformed Religion is no where so purely practised and professed as there. By means whereof, the Jry or seminary of our Gentry being seasoned in their youth with Genevan Principles: have many times proved disaffected to the forms of Government (as well Monarchical as Episcopal) which they found established here at home: to the great embroilment of the State, in matters of more near concernment. The Women are said to be more chaste (or at least more reserved) than in any other place in the World: which possibly may be ascribed to that severity, with which they punish all Offenders in that kind. Dancing by no means tolerated in publick or private: Adultery expiated by no less than death: Fornication, for the first offence with nine days fasting upon bread and water in prison; for the second, with whipping; for the third, with banishment. But notwithstanding this severity, they make love in secret, and are as amorous in their dalliances, as in other places.

The Territories of it are very small, extending not above two Leagues and an half from any part of the Town: but the soil, if well manured, bringeth Grain of all sorts, and great store of Wine. There is likewise plenty of Pasture and feeding grounds, which furnish the City with flesh-meats, Butter, and Cheese, at very reasonable rates: the nearness of the Lake affording them both Fish and Wild-Fowl in good measure, and amongst others (as some say) the best Carps in Europe.

But the main improvement of this State is by the industry of the people, and the convenient situation of the City itself: the City being situated very well for the Trade of Merchandize, in regard it is the ordinary passage, for transporting Commodities out of Germany, to the Marts at Lions; and from thence back again to Germany, Switzerland, and some parts of Italy. And for the industry of the people, it is discernable in that great store of Amour, and Apparel, and other Necessaries, brought from hence yearly by those of Bern; and their Manufactures in Satin, Velvet, Taffate, and some quantities of Cloth, (fine, but not durable) transported hence yearly into other places.

The Sovereignty of this City was anciently in the Earls heretofore, at first Imperial Officers only, but at last hereditary Princes of it. Betwixt these and the Bishops (Suffragans to the Metropolitan of Vienne in Dauphine) grew many quarrels for the absolute command thereof. In fine, the Bishops did obtain of the Emperour Frederick I. that they and their Successors should be sole Princes of Geneva; free from all Taxes, and not accountable to any but the Emperour. Which notwithstanding, the Earls continuing still to molest the Bishops, they were fain to call unto their aid the Earl of Savoy; who took upon him first as Protector only, but after by degrees as the Lord in Chief. For when the rights of the Earls of Geneva, by the Marriage of Thomas Earl of Savoy, with Beatrice, a Daughter of this Earl's, fell into that house then Ame or Amade VI. of that name, obtained of the Emperour Charles IV. to be Vicer-general of the Emperour in his own Country, and in that right superiour to the Bishop in all Temporal matters: and Ame or Amade the first Duke, got from Pope Martin to the great prejudice of the Bishops) a grant of all the Temporal jurisdiction of it. After which time the Bishops were constrained to do homage to the Dukes of Savoy, and acknowledge them for their Sovereign Lords: the Authority of the Dukes being grown so great (notwithstanding that the people were immediately subject to their Bishop only) that the Money in Geneva was stamped with the Duke's Name and Figure: Capital Offenders were pardoned by him; no Sentence of Law executed till his Officers were first made acquainted; nor League contracted by the people of any validity, without his privacy and allowance: and finally the Keys of the Town presented to him as often as he pleased to lodge there; as once (for instance) to Duke Charles III. coming thither with Beatrice his Wife, a Daughter of Portugal. And in this state it stood till the year 1528, the Bishop being all this while their immediate Lord, and having jus gladii & alius civilis jurisdictionis partes, as Calvin himself confesseth in an Epistle to Cardinal Sadolet. But in that year, Religion being then altered in the Canton of Bern, near adjoining to them, Vire and Farel did endeavour it in Geneva also. But finding that the Bishop and his Clergy did not like their doings, they forced themselves into the people, and by their aid in a popular tumult compelled the Bishop and his Clergy to abandon the Town. And though the Bishop made them many fair overtures, out of an hope to be restored to his Estate; yet would they never hearken to him, nor admit of him any more being once thrust out. Nor did they only in that tumult alter the Doctrine and Orders of

of the Church before established; but changed the Government of the State also: disclaiming all Allegiance both to Duke and Bishop, and standing on their own Liberty, as a Free-Commonwealth. And though all this was done by Vire and Farel, before Calvin's coming to that City, which was not till the year 1536, yet being come, sufragio suo comprobavit, as he saith himself, no man was forwarder than he to approve the Action.

But Calvin being come amongst them, made their Divinity Reader, and one of the ordinary Preachers, he first negotiated with them to abjure the Papacy, and never more admit their Bishop; to which he found a cheerful and unanimous consent in all the people. Then finding that no Ecclesiastical Discipline was in use among them, he dealt with them to admit of one of his own composing: which at last he obtained also, but with very great difficulty: and got it ratified by the Senate, July 20. 1537. The next year after, the people weary of this yoke, and he and his Colleagues (Farel, and Coradus) as resolute to hold them to it; they were all three banished the Town in Popular humour; and with little levy fled to, to return again: to which he would by no means yield, except they would oblige themselves by a solemn Oath, to admit of such a Form of Discipline, as he with the advice of their other Ministers, should prescribe unto them. This being condescended to by that fickle multitude, he returns in triumph to Geneva, September the thirteenth, 1541. and got his new Discipline established on the twentieth of November following. The sum of the Device was this: All Ministers to be equal amongst themselves; two Lay-men to be super-added unto every Minister; the Minister to continue for term of life; the Lay-Elders to be annually chosen: these being met together to be called the Presbytery; and to have power of Ordination, Censure, Absolution; and whatsoever else was acted by the Bishop formerly. Hitherto is related to Geneva only, which being but one City, and a small one too, was not capable of more than one Presbytery. The names and notions of Claical, Provincial, and National Assemblies, came not in till afterwards, as it got ground in Kingdoms, and larger Provinces. This Platform though of purpose framed to content the people; yet since the Lay Officers were to be but annual, and after subject to the lay like other Mortals; it gave but sorry satisfaction unto wilful men. And being built withall on a false foundation, was for a long time hardly able to stand alone, and fain at twelve years end to borrow a support from Zurich, and others of the Protestant Cantons: whom Calvin earnestly solicited to allow his project, against which one Perinus, and some principal Citizens, had begun to spurn. And so we have the true beginning of the Genevan Discipline, begotten in Rebellion, born in sedition, and nursed up by Faction.

Being born in the World by the means aforesaid, some other helps it had to make it acceptable, and approved of, in other Churches. As first the great content it gave to the Common People, to see themselves entrusted with the weightiest matters of Religion; and thereby an equality with, if not (by reason of their number, being two for one) a superiority above their Ministers: Next, the great reputation, which Calvin for his diligence in Writing and Preaching, had attained unto; made all his Disciples as authentick amongst some Divines, as ever the Popes Pix did in the Church of Rome. Whereby it came to pass, in a little time, that only those Churches which embraced the Doctrine and Discipline authorized by Calvin, were called the Reformed Churches: those in High Germany, and elsewhere, which adhered to Luther, being generally called by no other names than the Lutherans, or the Lutheran Churches; as not reformed enough from the dregs of Rome. Then comes in his endeavour to promote that Platform, in all other Churches, which he had calculated from the Meridian of Geneva only: commending it to Gasper Olivianus, Minister of the Church of Triers, as appears by his Letters dated April the twelfth 1560. congratulating the reception of it in the Churches of Poland, as appeareth by others of his Letters. And for the last help, comes in Beza, who not content to recommend it as convenient, for the use of that Church (beyond which Calvin did not go) imposed it as a matter necessary upon all the Churches: for necessity, ut ab ea recedere non magis liceat, quam ab ipsius Religionis placitis, that it was utterly as unlawful to recede from this, as for the most natural points of the Christian Faith. So he, Epist. 83. By means whereof their followers in most of the Reformed Churches drove on so furiously, that rather than their Discipline should not be admitted, and the Episcopal Government destroyed in all the Churches of CHRIST, they were resolved to depose Kings, ruin Kingdoms, and to subvert the fundamental Constitutions of all Civil States. And henceunto their own Ambitions gave them spur enough, affecting the Supremacy in these several Parishes; that they themselves might Lord it over God's Inheritance, under pretence of setting CHRIST upon his Throne. Upon which love to the preheminent they did not only pre against the Bishops, with malicious words (as Diotrophes for the same reason did against the Apolles) but not therewith content, neither would they themselves receive them, nor permit them that would, casting them out of the Church with reproach and infamy. Which proud ambition in the ordinary Parochial Minister, was cunningly fomented by some great persons, and many Lay-Persons in all places, who under-hand aimed at a further end: the one to raise themselves great fortunes out of Bishops Lands; the other to keep those Tythes themselves, to which by the Law they only were to nominate some deserving Person. Such were the helps by which this new device of Calvin was dispersed and propagated.

But to return unto Geneva, though Calvin for his time did hold the Chair as a perpetual Moderator, and Beza too, until Dauver set him beside the Cushion: yet after that, the power of the Presbytery was shrewdly lessened in Geneva, and the good members so restrained in the exercise of it; that they have no power to conveny any man before them, but by the authority of a Synodick, or Civil Magistrate. And as for maintenance, they hold their Ministers so strictly to a foryptance, as would be sure to keep them from presuming too much on their power in the Consistory. Tythes of all sorts were to be taken up for the use of the State, and laid up in the publick Treasury; and stipends issued out to maintain the Ministry: but thole so mean, that Beza stipend whilst he lived, hardly amounted to eighty pounds per annum, the residue of the City Ministers not to sixty pounds, those of the Villages adjoining, having hardly forty pounds; enough to keep them always poor, and miserably obnoxious to the wealthier Citizens. And that they may not steal the Goose, and stick up a Feather, the State doth use to make some poor allowance to the Wives and Daughters of their deceased Ministers, if they die poor, or leave their Children unprovided; or otherwise have deserved well in the time of their lives. In respect hereof though the Ministers are very strict in forbidding Dancing, and have writ many Tracts against it; yet to give some content to the common people (who have not leisure to attend it at other times) they allow all Manlike exercises on the Lord-days, as shooting in Piques, Long-Long-bows, Cross-bows, and the like, and that too in the morning, both before and after the Sermon, to be no impediment to them, from coming to the Church at the times appointed.

As for the Government of the State, it is directed principally by the Civil or Imperial Laws; the Judge whereof is called the Lieutenant-criminal; before whom all causes are tried, and from whom there lieth no Appeal; unless it be unto the Council of two hundred, whom they call the Great Council, in which the supreme power of the State resideth. Out of this Council of two hundred, there is chosen another lesser Council of five and twenty, and out of them four principal Officers whom they call the Syndicks, who have the sole managing of the Community, except it be in some great matter, as making Peace or War, offensive or defensive Leagues, hearing Appeals, and such like general concerns: which the great Council of two hundred must determine of. They have a custom superadded to the Civil Law, that if any Malefactor from another place flee to them for refuge, they punish him after the custom of the place in which the crime was committed. Otherwise their Town being on the borders of divers Princes, would never be free from Vagabonds. Examples herof I will assign two: the first of certain Monks, who robbing their Convents of certain Plate, and hoping for their wicked pranks at home to be the welcome thither, were at their first acquaintance advanced to the Gallows. The second is of a Spanish Gentleman, who having fled his Country for clipping and counterfeiting the King's Gold, came to this Town, and had the like reward. And when for defence he alleged, that he understood their City being free, gave admittance to all Offenders; True (said they) but what an intent to punish them that offended: a distinction which the Spaniard never till then learned, but then it was too late.

As for their ordinary Revenue, it is proportionable to their Territory, if not above it, conceived to amount to 60000 pounds per annum; which they raise upon the domain of the Bishop, and the Tythes of the Church, and on such impositions as are laid upon flesh and Merchandise. But they are able to raise greater sums if there be occasion, as appears plainly by the finding of 45000 Crowns to King Henry III. before they had been long settled in their own Estates.

And as for Military Forces, they are able to impress two thousand men, and have Arms of all sorts for many in the public Magazine: as also twelve or fourteen Pieces of Ordnance, with all manner of Ammunition appertaining to them; and on the Lake some Gallies in continual readiness, against the Gallies threatened them by the Dukes of Savoy. And for the greater safety of their Estate, and the preservation of their Religion, they joined themselves in a constant and perpetual League with the Canton of Bern, Anno 1582. communicating to each other the Freedom of their several Cities; and by that means, are reckoned for a Member of the Commonwealth of the Switzers, which is no small favour to their affairs. But their chief strength, as I conceive, is, that neighbouring Princes are not willing to have it fall into the hands of that Duke, or any other Potentate of more strength than he. Inasmuch that when that Duke belleged it, Anno 1589, they were aided from Venice with four and twenty thousand, and from England with thirteen thousand Crowns, from Florence with Intelligence of the Enemies purposes. Another time, when the Pope, the French King, the Spaniard, and Savoyard had designs upon it; the Emperor offered them assistance both of Men and Money: yea, and sometimes the Dukes of Savoy have assisted them against the others, as being more desirous that the Town should remain as it doth, than fall into any other hands than his own. So ordinary a thing it is for such petty States, to be more safe by the interest of their jealous neighbours, than any forces of their own.

The Arms of Geneva, when under the command of the Earls thereof were Or a Cross Azure. But for the title of Geneva after it had been born a while by the Earls of Savoy, it was given to Philip youngest Son of Anne or Anne de la Roche, to Janus the third Son of Louis the second Duke; and finally, to Philip Duke of Nemours, the fourth Son of Philip the seventh Duke of Savoy, in whose Posterity (Dukes of Nemours) it doth still continue.

4. WALLISLAND.

EASTWARD from Savoy, in a long and deep bottom of the Alpes Pénine, lieth the Country of WALLISLAND: so called either quasi Wallenland, or the Land of the Valenses, once the Inhabitants of the Country about Martinach, a chief Town heretofore, or quasi Valley-land, or the Land of Valley, of which it totally consists. It stretcheth from the Mountain de Furken, to the Town of St. Maurice, where again the hills do close, and shut up the Valley; which is so narrow in that place, that a River laid from one hill to another (under which the River Rhofne doth pass) is capable of no more than one Arch only, and that defended with a Castle and two strong Gates. On other parts it is environed with a continual Wall of steep and horrid Mountains, covered all the year long with a crust of Ice; so passable at all by Armies, and not without much difficulty by single Passengers: so that having but that one entrance to it, which before we spoke of, no Citadel can be made so strong by Art, as this whole Country is by Nature. But in the bottom of those craggy and impassable Rocks, lies a pleasant Valley, fruitful in Saffron, Corn, Wine, and most delicate fruits; and happily enriched with Meadows, and most excellent Pastures, which yield a notable increase of Cheese and Butter: and in the Country about Sion they discovered in Anno 1544. a Fountain of Salt; and have also many hot Baths, and medicinal waters very wholesome. Oil Springs, and River-water, they are very delicate; having scarce any but what they fetch from the Rhofne, with a great deal both of charge and trouble (the common people using snow-water for the most part for domestick uses) which made one pleasantly observe, that they pay dearer for their Water, than they do for their Wine. Cattel they have sufficient to serve their turn, and amongst others, a wild Buck, equal to a Stag in bigness, footed like a Goat, and horned like a Fallow Deer, leaping with wonderful agility from one Precipice to another, and so not easily caught but in Summer time, for then the heat of that season makes him blind.

It is divided into the Upper and the Lower Wallisland: the Upper lying towards the Mountain de Furken, in the very bottom of the Valley; and the Lower stretching out to the Town of St. Maurice, which is at the opening of the same: the length of both laid to be five ordinary days journey, but the breadth not answerable. The Upper Wallisland containeth the seven Rejorts, of 1. Sion, or Sedun, 2. Leuch, 3. Brig, 4. Nice, 5. Ravenn, 6. Sider, 7. Gumbei, in which are reckoned thirty Parishes, the Lower comprehending the six Rejorts of 1. Gardis, 2. Ardis, 3. Salen, 4. Martinach, 5. Juremont, and 6. St. Maurice: in which are 24 Parishes. The people in both parts laid to be courteous towards strangers, but very rough and churlish towards one another.

It

The several Rejorts before mentioned, are named according to the names of their principal Towns: which according to their reckoning are thirteen in number. The chief of which are 1. Sedunum, Sitium, or Sion, a Bishop's See, suffragan to the Metropolitan of Tarvennise; the chief of all this little Country: of no great beauty in it self, but neat and gallant in respect of the Towns about it. Situate in a Plain on the River of Rhofne, under a Mountain of two tops; on the one of which being the lower, is seated the Cathedral Church, and the Canon's houses; and on the other, looking downwards with a dreadful precipice, a very strong Castle, the dwelling place of the Bishop in the heat of Summer; which being built upon a Hill of so great an height, and so hazardous an ascent, is impossible almost to be took by force; the sharpness of the Rocks keeping it from the danger of assaults and the highness of the Hill from the reach of the Gun-shot. 2. Martinach, by Cesar called Obodurus, and Civitas Valensium by Antonius, remarkable for its antiquity only. 3. St. Maurice, or St. Moritz, anciently Auganum, the Key of the whole Country; but in Winter especially, when all the other passages are frozen up, that there is no other entrance but by the Bridge at this Town, which for that cause is very well manned and fortified to avoid surprisal; and therefore also chosen for the seat of the Governour of the Lower Wallisland.

This Country now called Wallisland, is in most Latine Writers called by the name of Vallesia, but corruptly, as I think, for Vallesia, as the Dutch or English name for Wallisland: which name I should conceive it took from the Valenses, the old Inhabitants of this Valley, of whom Obodurus (now called Martinach) is by Antonius made to be the Metropolitan, or principal City. It was made subject to the Romans by Julius Cesar, at such time as the Helvetians were conquered by him: and falling with the Western parts of the Roman Empire unto Charles the Great, was by him given to Theodulus Bishop of Sion, Anno 805. Under his Successors they continued to this very day; but so, as that the Deputies of the seven Rejorts have not only voices with the Canons in his Election, but being chosen and invested unto the place, they joyn with him also in the Diet for choosing Magistrates, redressing grievances, and determining matters of the State. The Lower Wallisland obeyeth the Upper, made subject by long War, and the chance of Victory, and hath no way in the publick Government, but takes for Law that which their Governours agree of. The same Religion is in both, being that of Rome. For maintenance whereof they combined themselves with the seven Popish Cantons of Switzerland, Anno 1572. or thereabouts: as also for their mutual defence and preservation against Foreign Enemies, and keeping amity and concord amongst one another.

5. SWITZERLAND.

NEXT unto Wallisland lieth the Country of the *SWITZER*s, having on the East, the Grisons, and some part of the Tirol, in Germany; on the West, the Mountain Jura, and the Lake of Geneva, which parts it from Savoy, and Burgundy, on the North, Suevia, or Schwaben, another Province also of the upper Germany; and on the South, Wallisland and the Alps, which border on the Dukedom of Milain.

The whole Country heretofore divided into three Parts only, that is to say, 1. Argon, so called from the River Aaz, whose chief Town was Lucern: 2. Wissburgergon, so called from Wissburg an old Town thereof, the chief City whereof is Bern: And 3. Zurichgon, so named from Zurich, both formerly and at this present the Town of most note in all this Tract; but since the falling of these Countries from the house of Austria, divided into many Cantons and other members; of which more anon.

It is wholly in a manner over-grown with craggy Mountains, but such as for the most part have grassy tops, and in their bottoms afford rich Meadows, and nourishing Pastures, which breed them a great flock of Cattel, their greatest wealth. And in some places yields plenty of very good Wines, and a fair increase of Corn also, if care and industry be not wanting on the Husbandmans part, but neither in so great abundance, as to serve all necessary uses, which want they do supply from their neighbouring Countries. And though it stand upon as high ground as any in Christendom, yet is so place more stored with Rivers, and capacious Lakes; which do not only yield them great abundance of Fish, but serve the people very well in the way of Traffick, to disperse their several Commodities from one Canton to another. Of which the principal are, Bodensee, and the Lake of Call, made by the Rhene; Genslersee, or the Lake of Geneva, by the Rhofne; Wallatsee, and the Lake of Lucern, made by the Russe; Namoburger and Bietsee, by the Orbe; and Zurichsee, by the River of Limas, or Limachus.

It is in length two hundred and forty miles, an hundred and eighty in breadth; conceived to be the highest Country in Europe (as before is said) the Rivers which do issue from it running through all quarters of the same; as Rhene, through France and Belgium, North; Po, through Italy to the South; Rhodanus, through part of France, to the Western Ocean; and the Inn, which falling into the Danubius passeth through Germany, and Hungary, into Pontus Euxinus.

And as the Country is, such are the Inhabitants of rude and rugged dispositions, more fit for Arms than any civil occupations, capable of toyl and labour, which the necessities of their Country do insure them to, not able otherwise to afford them an hungry livelihood: the poverty whereof makes them seek for service, which they shift and change according as they like the conditions of their entertainment; and having no way to vent their superfluous numbers by Navigation, are able to spare greater multitudes to a Foreign War, than a man would easily imagine. In a word, the people are naturally honest, frugal, and industrious, impartial in the administration of Justice, and great lovers of liberty.

In matters of War, they were once of such a reputation, on the defeats given by them to Charles of Burgundy, that no Prince thought himself able to take the Field, or stand his own ground in defence of his Dominions, if he had not Switzers in his Army: And to advance their reputation, the Wars which followed in Italy about the Duchy of Milain, served exceeding fitly. For being borderers on that Country, they could be hired better cheaply the French, or Spaniards, than any Army could be brought out of France, or Spain. And having had some good successes to increase their fame, they grew formidable at last; that the Spaniards in the War of Guien were more afraid of one band of Switzers, than of all the rest of the French Army. But being found withal to be false and treacherous, and easily bought off by the betters (which they most evidently discovered in betraying Duke Lodowick Sforza, who had put himself and his estate into their hands) and those Italian Wars growing unto an end, they did decay for fast in their reputation.

T 2 that that first the neighbouring Princes could do well without them; and at last used them not at all, or at least very sparingly. And now it is their honour that they are chosen of the Guard to the French King, and the Popes of Rome, and the Dukes of Genoa; and that the greatest Princes of Europe give them yearly Pensions. Which Pensions were given heretofore to be assured of their aid upon all occasions, but now to keep them from engaging on the other side.

For matter of Religion it is proportionably mixt; some of the Cantons being wholly Popish, some wholly Protestant; in others, both Religions used promiscuously. At first the differences were so eagerly pursued on both sides that notwithstanding the mediation of some potent Neighbours, it broke out into a Civil War, the Cantons of Switz, Uren, Underwald, Lucern, and Zug, (which the Latine Writers of this story call the Quinquagages) arming against Zurich, Bern, and others which adhered to Zuinglius. In the beginning of which War, the Protestant Party was discomfited, Zuinglius himself slain in the head of the Battle, and his body burnt: his heart remaining in the midst of the fire, whole and untouched as Archbishop Crammer's also did, when all the rest of his body was consumed to ashes. But those of the Reformed Party would not so give over. Another field they fought for it, and therein had the better of the adverse Party. Wearied at last with reciprocal defeats, they agreed the business indulging each to other the free exercise of their own Religions. So it continueth at this day, diversity of opinions not drawing them from a due care of the publick interest, nor giving any interruption to that bond of peace which was so firmly knit amongst them in their first Confederacy.

Now for the body of their State, it consists of three distinct parts, or members, which are to be considered in this discourse, viz. the Swiss themselves, the Præfectures which are subject to them, and the States that are Confederates with them. The Swiss are subdivided into thirteen Cantons, that is to say, Switz, Uren, Underwald, Lucern, Zug, Bern, Zurich, Basel, Friburg, Solothurn, Apenzel, Glaris, and Schaffhausen. These properly make the body of that Common-wealth, enjoying many rights, privileges and preeminences which the others do not; as power to determine of War and Peace, to dispose of the Præfectures, and divide amongst themselves the spoil of the Enemy. The first Confederacy was made betwixt the Cantons of Switz, and Underwald, Anno 1315. Of which the Swiss being the most potent, the most exalted, and that which did most hotly prosecute the combination, gave to the rest the name of Swissers, first made for ten years only in defence of themselves against the violence of Albert I. Emperor and Duke of Austria; intending to alienate them from the Empire, and add them by strong hand to his own Estates, Anno 1309. but made perpetual after their great victory obtained against Duke Leopold Son of Albert in the fields of Morgarten, of which more anon. Lucern was added to the three, Anno 1332. Zug, Zurich, and Glaris, came not into the Confederacy till the year 1352. nor Bern until the year next after. Friburg and Solothurn came in Anno 1. 81. Basel and Schaffhausen united with them in the year 1501. And Apenzel, which was the last which was admitted into their Confederacy, Anno 1513. So that there passed within little of two hundred years, from the first beginning of these Leagues, to the finishing of them.

The second Member of this body, are the Towns and States Confederates with them, for the preservation of their common Liberties, viz. the Town and Abbot of St. Gall, the Towns of Kunzel, Mulhausen, Mueberg, and Biel, situated on the Lake thence named: (of which the first belonged heretofore to the Earls of Longeville in France, the latter to the Bishops of Basel) with the City and Signeury of Geneva: And of these, Kunzel and Mulhausen are confederate with all the Cantons save the rest, with some particulars only. The Abbot of St. Gall first entered into League with Zurich, Lucern, Switz, and Glaris, for the preservation of his Lands and Towns then revolting from him: and the Town following his example, confederated with Zurich, Bern, Switz, Lucern, Zug, Glaris, the better to preserve themselves from the power of their Abbot, who was before their natural and immediate Lord. This was in Anno 1452. Kunzel, and Mulhausen, two Imperial Towns in the Province of Schawben, confederated in a perpetual League with all the Cantons, the first, Anno 1515, the other, 1519; Neuenberg, Biel, and Geneva, with Bern only.

As for the Præfectures of the Swissers, they are such lesser parcels and additaments, as have accreted to their Estate, and are subject unto their authority: either by gift, purchase, or the chance of War: some lying in Switzerland itself, some amongst other parts of the Alpes, and some in Italy. These are the Towns and Countries of Baden, Bregenz, Millingen, Rappenswil, Wagenbil, interposed here and there amongst the Swissers: the Town and Country of Sargans, lying amongst the Rhetian Alps, not far from the Grisons; and Rhodes, lying in a Valley of the Alpes, on the left shore of the Rhen, near the Lake of Constanz; and finally, the Valleys of Locarno, Magia, and Lugano Mendrisio, and Belinzano, situate in and amongst the Alpes, near the Dukedom of Milain, to which they formerly belonged. Of which the Præfectures of Baden, and Millingen appertain to the eight first Cantons: Wagenbil, the Sargans, and Rhodes to the seven first Cantons: Rappenswil to Uren, Switz, Underwald, and Glaris; and Thurgow, unto the ten first Cantons: Belinzano to the three first only; and all the rest of the Italian Præfectures to the Cantons generally, excepting Apenzel, which was not entered into the confederacy when these Præfectures were given unto the Swissers, by Maximilian Sforza Duke of Milain: which was in Anno 1513. some months before the taking in of Apenzel to the rest of the Cantons.

Such is the number of the Cantons, Præfectures, and States confederate, amongst all which there are few Towns or Cities of any note: there being no City nor walled Town in the Cantons of Switz, Uren, Underwald, Glaris, Apenzel, nor in any of the States confederate situate amongst the Swissers, but St. Gall only; not in any of the Præfectures but that of Baden. So that the places worthy of consideration are not like to be many. Of those that are, the principal are, 1. Zurich, a large City, and a renowned University, situate on both sides of the River Limn, where it issueth out of the Lake called Zurich See. It had anciently two Monasteries in it, in one of which Huldricus Zuinglius was a Canon, slain near this Town in the Battle spoken of before, Anno 1531. now giving name to the most honourable of the Cantons, to which belongeth the authority of summoning the general Diet; as of those also of the Protestants; the Legats thereof presiding in both Assemblies. 2. Friburg, situate on the River Sana, on the declivity of an uneven and rocky hill, founded by Bernard the fourth Duke of Zeringen. 3. Solothurn, (the Solothurn of Antonine) on the River Aar famous for the Martyrdom of S. Ulrich, and his 66 Theban Souldiers in the time of the Emperor Dioclesian. A Town of great Antiquity, but not so old by far as the people make it: who would have it to be built in the time of Abraham. 4. Basel, so called either of a Basiliak slain at the building of the City; or from the German word Pascl, signifying a path; or of Basileus, signifying Kingly. It was built Anno 382. and is famous for an University founded by Pius II. Anno 1459. It was made a Canton, Anno 1501. and is honoured with the Sepulchres of Oecampadius, Erasmus, Pontanus, Glarinus, and Hatonian the famous Civilian. In this City, Anno 1431, was held that notable Council, wherein though the Papal authority was then at the height, it was declared that a general Council was above the Pope. What was then enacted, was immediately put in practice; the Council deposing Pope Eugenius IV. and placing in his room Amadeus Duke of Savoy, afterward called Felix IV. who having held the See nine years in a time of Schism did willingly in order to the peace of Christendom, resign the *Pope*dom to Nicolas V. who had before been chosen by the opposite Faction. The City is great, rich, and populous, sometimes a Town Imperial, fill a Bishops See: the Bishop being subject to the Archbishop of Basel, in the County of Burgundy: seated upon the River Rhene (where it receiveth Wes and Birs, two lesser Brooks) by which it is divided into the greater Basel lying towards France, and the lesser lying towards Germany. 5. Lucern, situate on both sides of the Russe, where it issueth out of the Lake of Lucern; so called from Lucern, i. e. the Lamborn, which was placed here on an high Tower, to give light to Water-men in the night. A City well traded and frequented by strangers, because the ordinary road from Germany into Italy, passing from hence through the Country of the Grisons; and in regard that the Diet for the Popish Cantons, which heretofore were held at Uren, are removed thither. Not far from this Town is the Mountain called Pilatus hill, of Pontius Pilate, whose ghost (as the common people are made to believe) doth walk once a year on the banks of this Lake in his Judges Robes. And to be sure the fiction shall not be confuted, they add, that whoever seeth him shall die that year. 6. Bern, compassed almost round with the River Aar, and taking up the whole extent of a little Mountain; the Houses of Free-men, neatly and uniformly built. A Town which gives name to the largest and most potent of all the Cantons; one of the first which did embrace the Reformation, and the first of all which purged it self of Images, those excellent Instruments of Superstition and Idolatry: defaced here in a popular tumult, Anno 1548. 7. Lausanna in the Canton of Bern, a Bishops See, Suffragan to the Archbishop of Basel, seated on the banks of the Lake of Lemane, and compassed with mountains always covered with Snow, which open themselves on the East side only, which is towards Italy. 8. Schaffhausen, the only Town of all the Cantons, which lieth on the other side of the Rhene; of right belonging unto Saxonia or Schawben, a Province of Germany, and reckoned as a part thereof, before it was incorporated into this Confederacy.

German

Next for the Præfectures, and Confederate States: they have not many Towns of note (excepting Ratzen, and Miltingen, two Imperial Cities, which properly belong to another place.) Of those which be, the principal amongst the Confederates, lying within the bounds of this Country, is the Town of St. Gall, (Sengal as they corruptly call it) an Imperial City, situate amongst the Mountains near the Boden See. A rich, populous, and well-governed Town, taking name from the Monastery of St. Gall a famous Seat, and the Apostle of those parts, Anno 630, or thereabouts: the Abbot of which having great possessions in this tract (before Apenzel, and this Town revolted from him) was a Prince of the Empire. The Anabaptists were once very prevalent here, in so much that one of them cut off his brothers head in the presence of his Father and Mother, and said (according to the humour of that Sect, who boast much of dreams, visions, and Emphusisms) that God commanded him so to do. The principal amongst the Præfectures is the Town of Baden, or (to difference it from Baden a Marquisate in Germany) the Upper Baden: seated on a little Mountain near the River Limn, almost in the middle of the Country: and for that cause the place of meeting for the Council of Estate of all the Confederates. It taketh name from the Baths here being, two of which only are publick, the rest in private houses: conscious, as it is thought, to much lasciviousness. For whereas it is said of Adrian, that Lavares pro sibiis separavit; here men and women promiscuously bath together; and which is worst, in private: whences Munster telleth us, Cernus viri uores trallari, cernunt cum alienis loqui, & quidem solum cum solo; and yet are not any of them disturbed with jealousy. The Baths are much frequented, yet not so much for health as pleasure. Their chiefest virtue is the quickening power they have upon barren women. But as the Friers use to send men whose Wives are fruitless, in pilgrimage to St. Joyce, the Patroness of fruitfulness; and in the mean time to lie with their Wives: so it may be with good reason thought, that in a place of such Liberty as this is, the lusty young Gallants that haunt this place, produce greater operation of barren women, than the waters of the Bath it self. No other Town of eminent note amongst the Præfectures of the Swiss, except Rhodes it self, the seat of the Governor for the Swissers, situate near the Lake of Constanz: and none of any note at all amongst the Italian Præfectures, except Belinzana, and Locarno neither of them containing four hundred Houses, and those none of the handiomest.

Within the limits of this Country, and in that part thereof which was called Argow, containing the now Cantons of Uren, Switz, Underwald, Glaris, and Lucern; with some of the adjoining parts of Germany, and some part of the Dukedom of Savoy; did sometimes stand the famous and renowned Castle of HABSPURG: from the Lords whereof the House of Austria, and most of the Kings and Princes of the Christian World do derive themselves. First founded, as some say, by Ottobert the third Prince of this Line, at or before the year 700. as others say, by Rapato the Son of Bezeline, about the year 1020. Situate on the River Aar (by the Latines called Arula) near a Town called Bruck; now so decayed, that there is no tracing of the ruins. Preserved in memory by the Lords and Princes of it, descended in a direct line from Segebert the eldest Son of Theobert King of Metz, or Austrasia; first French in these parts by Claire the second, King of the French, with the titles, as some say, of Duke of Upper Almain (the Lower Almain being that which is now called Suecia or Schawben, an adjoining Province of Germany.) Being grown weary of that empty, but invidious title, they were sometimes called Earls of Habburg, by the name of this Castle: sometimes Earls of Attenburg, another Castle not far off, of their own foundation. And after, closing in with the Kings of Burgundy Transjuran, and the German Emperours, they received of them a great part of the Country of Argow: from which some of them were called Earls of Argow. Not known distinctly by the title of Earls of Habburg, till the time of Rapato above-mentioned; when those of Attenburg and Argow became discontinued. Howsoever we will here lay down the whole succession of this famous family, either Earls, or the Progenitors of

The Earls of Habspurg.

- A. Chr.
635 1. Sigibert, Son of Theodobert King of Metz, by Clotaire the second of that name, French King, dispossessed of the Kingdom of his Father, and afterwards by him endowed with a great part of those Countries, which are now called Switzerland, with the title of Duke of Upper Almain.
2. Sigibert II. Son of Sigibert I. Duke of Upper Almain.
3. Ottobert, or Obert, the Son of Sigibert II. the founder, as some say, of the Castle of Altemburg, and Habspurg, of which promiscuously called Earl.
4. Bebo, the Son of Ottobert, the last Duke of Upper Almain; which title he exchanged for that of Earl of Altemburg, and Habspurg.
5. Robert, or Rotber, as some call him, the Son of Bebo, Earl of Altemburg.
- 766 6. Hertspert, the Son of Robert, who added unto his Estate that part of Schwaben, or Suevia, which is called Brissgou.
7. Rampert, the son of Hertspert, who flourished Anno 814. at what time he procured the Canonization of S. Trupertus.
8. Gunttram, the Son of Rampert, Earl of Altemburg.
9. Luithard, the Son of Gunttram.
- 900 10. Luithfride, the Son of Luithard.
- 929 11. Hunfride, the Son of Luithfride, who added unto his Estates the Territory now called Sungou, bordering on Alfania, a Province of Germany; recovered after his decease by the Dukes of Schwaben.
- 950 12. Gunttram II. Son of Hunfride, the first who took unto himself the title of Earl of Argow; from whose second Son named Berthold, descended the Dukes or Earls of Zeringen, possessed of almost all Brissgou, and a good part of Switzerland, which they inherited from Berthold, the Son of Gibiro the third Son of Gunttram; Who having founded the Castle of Zeringen, and acquired great possessions in adjoining parts of Schwaben, left them at his decease (being childless) to Berthold the Son of Berthold, and his Cofin German.
13. Bezo, or Betzeline, the eldest Son of Gunttram II. Earl of Argow.
14. Rapato, son of Betzeline, the founder or repaire of the Castle of Habspurg, from whence both he and his Successors were constantly called Earls of Habspurg. Great Grand-father by Theodobert his youngest Son, of Rodolph Earl of Khmsfelden, and Duke of Schwaben, elected Emperor (as the insinuation of the Pope Jagamit Henry IV.
15. Warner, by some called Crenger, or Beringarius the Son of Rapato.
- 1096 16. Olbo, the Son of Warner or Beringer.
- 1108 17. Warner II. Son of Olbo, enriched by the Emperor Henry IV. with some fair Estates belonging to the Dukes of Schwaben.
18. Albert, the Son of Warner II. surnamed the Rich.
19. Albert II. surnamed the Wise, Son of Albert I. added to his Estates a great part of the Upper Alfania; which he had by the Right of Hedwig his Wife, one of the Daughters and heir of Simon the last Earl thereof.

1238 20. Rodolph, the fortunate Son of Albert II. added to his Estate the rest of the Upper Elfate, elected Emperor of the Romans, Anno 1273. Of which he made so good advantage that he added unto his Estates the great Dukedom of Austria, with all the incorporate Provinces thereto belonging, and laid the first foundation of the Austrian greatness, of which more in Germany. Here only note, that besides the following Princes of the House of Austria, those of the line Collateral still retained the titles of Earls of Habspurg (according to the ill custom of Germany) increased with the addition of the Earldom of Kyburg, of which more hereafter: and so continued till the expiring of that Line in the person of Rodolph IV. the last that bare the title of Earl of Habspurg, Anno 1356, by whose death many fair Estates were added to the Austrian Family.

Having on the occasion of these Earls of Habspurg, beheld so much of the affairs of this Country, as related unto that puissant and illustrious family, let us go forward to the rest: first taking in our way the ancient Estate hereof, in the time of the Romans. At what time this whole mountainous tract, containing many several Nations (some of them spoken of before) was comprehended under the general name and notion of the Helvetii; the greatest and most populous of all the rest: so called, as Vertegau will have it, Quasi Hel-vites, or the Vites of the Mountains, to difference them from the Vites of the lower parts, inhabiting in that part of Cimbric Chersonese, which is now called Frisland; and from those dwelling in the middle, betwixt both extremes in the little Province still called Vosland. Grown by long peace, and want of opportunity by traffick into foreign parts, to go great a multitude, that the Country barren of it self, was no longer able to maintain them, they set fire on their Towns and Houses, and with a general resolution went to seek new dwellings. The total number of men, women, and children, which went upon this desperate action, are said to have amounted to the number of 3680000, whereof 900000 were fighting men. They had not long before overthrowen L. Cassius Roman Consul, slain the Consul himself, and sold his Soldiers for Bond-slaves: upon the apprehension of which good success, they thought no body able to withstand them. But they found Cesar of a stronger metal than L. Cassius. Who having stopped their passage by hewing down the Bridge of Geneva, till he was grown thorough to bid them battle; fo waited them in several skirmishes and defeats, that they were forced to crave leave of him to go home again, and to rebuild those Towns and Villages which they had destroyed before this enterprize: which he upon delivery of Hostages, did vouchsafe to grant. It is conceived, that at the least two Millions of men perished in this journey, and not so much by the Sword (though that spared them not) as for want of necessities. After this they continued Members of the Roman Empire, till conquered in the times of Honorius and Valentinian III. by the Burgundians and Alamans, betwixt whom divided; the River Rosi parting their Dominions. From them being taken by the French, it was made a part of the Kingdom of Burgundy; some parts first taken out: and given to the Progenitors of the Earls of Habspurg, as before was noted. Given with the rest of that Kingdom to the Emperor Courade the the second, by Rodolph the last King thereof: parcelled out by the German Emperours (as their custom was, into divers States, most of the which were drawn in by the Dukes of Schwaben, the Earls of Habspurg, Kyburg, Werdenburg, &c. and the Dukes of Zeringen; as afterwards in the fall of the one, and as heirs to many of the other, by the Dukes of Austria. By means of which united titles the Austrian Family was possessed of so much of this Country, as now makes up five Cantons; and as many of the principal Præfectures; that is to say, the Cantons of Zug, Glaronia, Lucern, Friburg, and Schaffhausen; the Præfectures of Baden, Bregentien, Mellingen, Wagenball, Rapperswil; together with a great part of the Country of Torgau, wherein stands the City of St. Gall, now a Confederacy with the Switzers; some of the rest, as Uren, Switze, Underwalden, being brought under by the power of the Emperor Albert, the Son of Rodolph of Habspurg, who had a purpose to unite them to the house of Austria; because obnoxious also to the power of those Princes. But the people being at last over-burthened by the tyranny of those Governors, whom the Dukes of Austria and their other Lords had sent among them; rising withal the Empire by the Pope's Fulminations distracted into many Factions, and the Austrian Family weakened by a sub-division of that great Estate into many parcels; they contracted an Offensive and Defensive League amongst themselves, for defence of their Liberty, into which first entered those of Switze, Uren, and Underwalden, Anno 1385. Not all united into one Confederation till the year 1513: as before noted. At their first beginning to take Arms, Frederick, one of the many Dukes of Austria (to whose share they fell) sent his Brother Leopold against them with a puissant Army which they encountered near Morigarten a Village of the now Canton of Underwalden, and there overthrow him: but more by the convenience of those narrow passages, through which his Army was to march, than by any valour. In which it was no small help to them, that the ways were all so filled with Ice, that he was able to do no service with his Horse, and his Soldiers so amazed at the present difficulties, that the Confederates only casting stones on them from the tops of the Mountains, made them leap into the Lakes adjoining. This hapned in the year 1315. Grown confident by this success, they brought the new Canton of Lucern into their Confederacy by the force of Arms, Anno 1332: and that of Zurich by their reputation and like hope of Liberty, Anno 1351. in which year those of Zug, and Glarn invaded by the former five, and willing to discharge themselves of their Lordly Masters, were united to them, as was the new Canton of Basle in the year next following. In the year 1381. the Towns of Solaburn and Friburg, descended from the House of Zeringen, (at the expiration of that Line) upon those of Habspurg, revolted from their natural Lords and admitted Cantons, occasioned Leopold Son of Albert the short, and Brother of Albert IV. Dukes of Austria, to make War upon them: in which War being vanquished and slain near Sempach a Village of the Canton of Lucern, with the Flower of his Nobility and Gentry, Anno 1386. and the succeeding Dukes not venturing any more against them, the residue of the Cantons and Confederates were in time made up.

Having thus cleared themselves of the House of Austria, they continued free and unmolested, but never came to any reputation for their valour, till the War made upon them by Charles Duke of Burgundy, whom they discomfited in three great Battels, and flew him also in the third. A War commenced by him at the first on small occasions, and left hopes: the Country being so barren, and the people so poor, that their Embassadors to the Duke (as Comines reporteth) protested, that if all their Country-men were taken; they would not be able to pay a Ranom, to the value of the Spurs and Bridle-bits in his Camp. Certainly at that time they were so poor, that they knew not what riches was. For having won the first Battle at Granson (the other two were those of Morat and Nancy) one of the goodliest Pavilions in the World was by them torn in pieces, and turned into Breaches and Side-coats: divers silver plates and dishes they sold for a French Sous (each Sous a little more than an English Penny) supping them to be but Pewter; and a great Diamond of the Dukes, which was the goodliest Jewel in Christendom, was sold to a Priest for a Guilder; and by him again to some of the Lords of the Country for three *Frank*s. After their valour shewed in these Battels, Lewis XI. took them into Pension, giving them yearly forty thousand Crowns, viz. twenty thousand to the Cantons, and twenty thousand to particular persons: and bowed so much beneath the Majesty of the most Christian King, as to term himself one of the Burgesses of their Corporation; and to contend with the Duke of Savoy, which of them should be held for their first Allie. By these Arts, and the earnestness of their Forces for those occasions, he wrested Burgundy out of the hands of Mary the Daughter of Charles; and Lewis XII. won Millain from Ludowick Sforza, whom they peridiously betrayed as was said before. Upon the merit of these services, they required an augmentation of their Pensions: which when this Lewis XI. denied, they withdrew themselves from the Amity of the French, and entered into the service of Pope Julius II. who therefore filled them the Defenders of the Church, Anno 1510. The fruits of which entertainment was the defeat of the whole Forces of King Lewis, and the loss of Millain; into which Maximilian Sforza, the Son of Ludowick, was solemnly re-installed by the Confederates: who to oblige the Switzers more firmly to him, gave them those Towns and Valleys in the Alpes of Italy (formerly members of that Dukedom) which now belong unto the Switzers, reckoned amongst the Præfectures of their Common-wealth. Francis I. in pursuance of his claim to Millain, gave them a great and memorable overthrow at the Battle of Morigarten. Yet afterwards considering what damage his Realm had sustained by the revolt of the Auxiliaries to his Enemies, he renewed the Confederation with them: on condition that he should restore the ancient Pension of forty thousand Crowns; secondly, that he should pay unto them at certain terms, six hundred thousand Crowns; thirdly, that he should entertain four thousand of them in his pay continually; fourthly, that for the restoring of such places as they had taken from the Dutchy of Millain, he should give unto them thirty thousand Crowns; fifthly, that he should give them three months pay beforehand: sixthly and lastly, that Maximilian Sforza, whom they had elected in Millain, and were now going to dispossess, might by the King be created Duke of Nemours, endowed with twelve thousand *Frank*s of yearly revenue, and married to a daughter of the blood royal. On these conditions, as honourable to them as burthenfome to the King, was the League renewed, Anno 1522. since which time, they have obtained, that six hundred of their Country are to be of the French King's Guard; five hundred of which wait without at the gates of the Courts, the other hundred in the great Hall. And yet the French Kings did not so ingross the Market, though they raised the price of the commodity, but that all other Princes might have them also for their Money: the Kings of Spain and others bidding fair for them, but never never going so high as the French had done. At last, upon the differences which grew amongst themselves in point of Religion they grew to be divided also in point of Pension: the Popish Cantons taking Pensions of the Pope, and the King of Spain; the Protestants of the French, the mixt, of both; and all of the Venicians, by which means being bribed and corrupted by all, they came in very little time to be trusted of none. Which sudden sinking of that fame and reputation which they had attained to, together with the reasons of it: that notable Statesman and Historian Guicciardine doth describe as followeth: "The name (saith he) of this wild and uncivil Nation hath got great honour by nature, Concord, and glory by Arms. For being herce by nature, injured to War, and exact keepers of Military discipline, they have not only defended their own Country, but have won much praise in Foreign parts: which doubtless had been greater, if they had fought to enlarge their own Empire, and not for Wages to enlarge the Empire of others; and if nobly they had propounded unto themselves any other ends than the gain of money; by the love whereof being made abject, they have lost the opportunity of becoming fearful to Italy. For since they never came out of their Confinnes, but as mercenary men, they have had no publick fruit of their Victories: but by their covetousness have become intolerable in their actions where they overcame, and in their demands with other men; yea, at home forward and obnoxious in their conclusions, as well as in following their commands under whose pay they serve in War. Their chief men have Pensions of several Princes to favour them in their publick meetings; and for private profit being preferred before the good of the publick, they are apt to be corrupted, and fall at discord amongst themselves, with great lessening of their reputation which they had gotten amongst strangers. So he, relating the occurrences of the year 1511, which the following issue of affairs hath fully verified.

As for the Government of this State, it is merely popular, and that not only in the particular Cantons, but the aggregate body of their Council: the Gentry and Nobility being either rooted up in those long wars which were betwixt them and their Vassals, justly provoked by those intolerable preffures and exactions which they laid upon them; or else worn out of memory and observation, for want of sway and suffrage in the Councils of the Common-wealth. Only in Schaffhausen, Basel, and Zurich, are some Gentry left, not capable of any place or suffrage in the Senate of the said Cantons (from which they are excluded by the Common people, because they joynted not with them in their first revolve) unless they waive their Gentry, and be enrolled amongst the number of Plebeians. The rest they have (it seemeth) in so poor esteem, that Porters and Mechanicks of the meanest Trades, in all occasions of War, are numbered with, and amongst these Gentlemen; making up one Society only, and joyning with them in electing the Master of their Company, who is one of the Senate. But because that every Canton hath his proper Magistrates, but more or fewer, according as it is in greatness, or in the number of its several Reforts, or sub-divisions; it will not be amiss to shew what number of Reforts are in every Canton: that is to say, in Undersalden only two, in Switz six, in Oven ten, in Zug five, in Glaris or Glarona fifteen, in Aperzel six, in Lucern seven, in Solothurn more than one, in Friburg nineteen, in Basel and Schaffhausen but one apiece (the Cantons there and in Solothurn, reaching but little further than the Towns themselves) in that of Zurich thirty one, and thirty in that of Bern; in all one hundred forty and eight. Of these consists the body of this Common-wealth. In ordering whereof, every particular Canton hath its proper Magistrate, chosen by the Commonalty of that Canton (whom they call the Wismann) together with a standing Council affilant to him, chosen out of the people, for the directing and disposing of their own affairs; which meet and sit in the chief Town and Village of that Distrikt. But if the cause concern the Publick, then every Canton sendeth one or more Commissioners to the general Diet; where they determine of the business which they meet about, according to the major part of the Votes: the Commissioners of every Canton having one Vote only, though many may be sent from each, to add the greater weight to their Consultations. The place of meeting is most commonly at the Town of Baden, in respect of the commodity of the Inns and Houses, the pleasant situation and famous Medicinal Baths; and because it is situate in the very centre of Switzerland, and subject to the eight first Cantons. And here they do determine of War, Peace, and Leagues, of making Laws, of sending, receiving, and answering Embassadors; of Governments, and distributing the publick Offices; and finally, of difficult Causes and Appeals, referred unto the judgment of the Great Council, in which the City Zurich, chief of the Cantons, hath the first place, not by antiquity, but dignity, and of old custom hath the greatest authority of calling together this Great Council, signifying by Letters to each Canton, the cause, time, and place of meeting: yet so, that any Canton think it for the publick good, to have an extraordinary meeting of their Commissioners, they write to them of Zurich to appoint the same. That which the greater number do resolve upon, is without delay put in execution.

The Forces of these Swiss consist altogether of Foot, Horse being found unserviceable in this Mountainous Country. And of these Foot, Peters reckoneth that they are able to raise sixscore thousand. Which possibly may be true enough, if it be understood of all that are able to bear Arms. For otherwise de facto, the greatest Army that ever they brought into the field, consisted but of one and thirty thousand men, which was that where-with they aided the Confederate States of Italy against the French, and restored Maximilian Sforza to the Dukedom of Milain. Their ordinary standing Forces are conceived to be sixteen or seventeen thousand, which they may bring into the Field, leaving their Towns and Forts well furnished. And for their Revenue, it is not like to be very great, considering the poverty of their Country, and their want of Traffick with other Nations. That which is ordinary and in common, ariseth out of the Annual Pensions which they receive from Foreign States the profits arising out of their Dutch and Italian Prefectures, the Imposts laid on Wines sold in Taverns, and Corn used by Bakers; and the Rents of a dissolved Monastery called Kings-field (or Conings-field) because many Kings and Queens have been cloyestered there, amounting to forty thousand Guldaus yearly. Which Monastery was built in the year 1580. in memory and honour of the Emperour Albertus, slain by his Nephew Spanibach, not far from Basel. Their extraordinary doth consist of spoils that be gotten in the War; which if it be managed in common, are divided in common; but if by two or three of the Cantons only, the rest can claim no share in the booty gotten.

But this is only in relation to the Swissers themselves. For otherwise taking in the Confederate States as well without as within the bounds of that Country, they are able to raise fifty or threecore thousand men; that is to say, the Swissers themselves seventeen thousand men, the Grisons ten thousand; those of Wallisland six thousand, the Abbot and Town of St. Gall four thousand, the City of Geneva two thousand; besides what Romell and Mulhausen, two Imperial Cities, are able to contribute towards it; the Dukes of Savoy being bound by their ancient Leagues to aid them with six hundred Horses, at his own charges; besides two thousand six hundred Crowns in Annual Pensions. But the Revenue of those States is ordered by it self apart, and never comes within the computation of the publick; unless it be on the repelling of a common Enemy, in which they are equally concerned. In which case, and others of a general interest, they communicate both heads and purses: the Delegates and Commissioners of all the States of this Confederacy, meeting together to consult of the Common Cause, which meeting they entitle the Greatest Council. But this is very seldom held, publick affairs being generally ordered by the Commissioners of the Swissers only: though they themselves disclaim the name of Swissers, as too mean and narrow, and call themselves Eidenssessen, that is to say, Partakers of the sworn Leagues. More of this Common-wealth he that lists to see, may satisfie himself in Simler, who purposely and punctually hath described the same.

The Leagues of the GRISONS.

THE Country of the GRISONS comprehendeth all that part of the Alpes, which lieth between the Springs of the Rivers Rhone, Inn, Adice or Abiss, and Adnaa; being bounded on the East, with the Country of Tirol; on the West, with Switzerland; on the North, with Suevia or Schoben, and a part of the Swissers; on the South, with Lombardy. A Country far more mountainous than any of this Alpine tract, and having less natural commodities to boast it self of, more than the Fountains of those Rivers before mentioned.

The People of it by most Latin Writers of these times, are called by the name of Rheti, the Country Rhetia; and so far properly enough, as that the ancient Rheti did inhabit all the Lands possessed by the Grisons: though the Grisons do not inhabit a fourth part of those Lands, which were possessed heretofore by the ancient Rheti: For anciently the Rheti did extend their dwellings as far as from the Alpes of Italy, to the River of Danube; comprehending besides this of the Grisons, a great part of Suevia or Schoben, Tirol, Bavaria, and so much also of the Swissers, as was not in possession of the old Helvetic. Within which Tract there were not only many rich Valleys and fruitful Fields; but a most pleasant race of Wines called Vina Rhetica, much drunk of by Augustus Cesar, and by him preferred before all others; which no man can conceive to grow in this barren Country. More properly Ammonius Marcellinus calleth this Tract by the name of Campi Canini, Mountainous fields, which the continual Snow made to look of an hoary hue; and by allusion therunto, the Dutchmen call this Nation at the present by the name of Grampuntner, that is to say, the hoary or gray Confederates.

As for the Rheti, take them in the former latitude, they were subdued by Drusus and Tiberius, the Sons-in-law and adopted children of Augustus Cesar, A.U.C. 739. And in the time of Antoninus made up two Provinces of the Empire, viz. Rhetia prima, and Rhetia secunda, both of them appertaining by Constantine new Model, to the Diocti of Italy. A Nation in the first Original, of Italian race, and so more properly to be assigned to that Diocti; but had inhabited this Tract, from the time that Bellerophon the Gall led on part of Tusany, expelling thence the ancient inhabitants thereof: who under the conduct of Rhemus, a great man amongst them, possessed themselves of these Mountains, and afterwards of the Vales adjoining, which they called Rhetia, by the name of their Captain General. This hapned in the time of Tarquinius Priscus, in the first cradle, as it were, of the Roman Empire; in the declining age whereof, during the reign of Valentinian III., and Augustus, those parts which lay nearest unto Germany, and were worth the conquering, were subdued by the Alamans, and Boarians; by them incorporated with the rest of their several States. The residue of this Mountainous Tract; as not worth the looking after, continued a member of the Empire, till given by Charles the Great to the Bishop of Chary; whose Successors, being several ways molested by their potent neighbours, confederated with the Swissers for their mutual aid and preservation, Anno 1497. By whose aid they so valiantly made good their ground against the Austrians, that at the last, after the loss of twenty thousand men on both sides, the points in difference were accorded, and a peace concluded.

This is the substance of this story, as to former times, to which there cannot much be added in the way of History; little or no alteration hapning in their affairs, but a more perfect setting of them in a form of Government. Concerning which we must observe that this whole Tract is cast into three Distinctions: that is to say, the Upper League or Liga Grisa, 2. Liga Cadi Dina, or the League of the House of God, 3. The Lower League called also Liga Diuturna, or the League of the ten Commonalties. The eight Italian Prefectures will make a fourth. Their buildings generally in the three first being cold and mountainous, are of free-stone, but low, and for three parts of the year covered with Snow: the Windows thereof glazed and large, of which for the said three parts of the year they only open a little quarry of Glass, and presently shut it close again; the outside of the Windows having leaves of wood, to keep the heat of their Stoves from going out, or any cold from coming in. And as for travelling, the ways are for the most part unsafe and dangerous, by reason of the straight passages, dreadful precipices, and those almost continual Bridges which hang over the terrible falls and Cataracts of the River Rhone, descending with great violence from the highest Mountains: huge hills of Snow tumbling into the Valleys, with a noise as hideous as if it were a clap of thunder.

For the particulars, the Upper League lieth in the highest and most mountainous parts of the Alpes of Italy, having therein those vast Mountains of Lucknamier, and Der Vogel; out of which the two streams of the Rhone have their first Original. By the French it is called Liga Grise or the Gray League, (the word Gray, or Grise, in that Language, being Gray in ours) in the same sense as the Dutch call it Grampuntner, that is, Confederate cant, which we may render properly the Confederate Grisse-pans: either because the Mountains are continually covered with a periwig of hoary Hefles, or from the heads of the people, Gray before their time. It consisteth of nineteen Reforts or Commonalties, according to the number of their Vales and Villages of which four only speak the Dutch, all the rest a corrupt Italian: and was the first which did confederate with the Swissers, from whence the name of Grison came unto the rest, who after joynted with them in the same Confederacy. It hath no City nor Town of note. The principal of those that be, are 1. Ilant, the place ometimes of the General Diets for these Leagues.

 2. Disfrut; where is a very rich Monastery. 3. St. Bernardus, situate at the foot of the Mountain Vogel.
 4. Mafur, sometimes an Earldom, giving name to the Valley Mafur-tal. 5. Galmotier, whence the Vale is named, inhabited by none but Basket-makers. 6. Ruffa, situate on the River Mufja, near Belinzano, on the skirts of Italy.

2. The second League, is Liga Cadi Dio, or the League of the House of God, so called because it was the proper Patrimony of the Bishop and Church of Chur: and may be called the Middle League, as being situate between the Upper League on the West, and the Lower League upon the East. It is the greatest of the three, containing twenty one Refforts or Commonalties: of which nine lie on this side the tops of the Mountains towards Germany, the rest towards Italy: and yet two only speak the Dutch, the others a corrupt Italian. The places of most note are, 1. Tumet, the Timetto of Antoninus, seated amongst high and inaccessible Mountains, betwixt Chur and the Valley of Bergel. 2. Mur, (called Mura by the same Antoninus) in the Valley of Bergel: a Valley extending from the head of the River Maira, towards Chiavenna, one of the Italian Prefectures. 3. Stalla, called Bröia by the Italians, because the way doth in that place divide it self. 4. Jacomo (in the Valley of Compatsch) called Travafede by Antoninus. 5. Sinuada, in the Valley of Engadin. And 6. Chur, by some Caira, but more truly Curia, so called from the long stay that Constantine the Great made here with his Court and Army, in a War intended against the Germans; built afterwards by some part of his Forces which continued here, Anno 357, about half a Dutch mile from the meeting of the two streams of the Rheue, in form triangular, the buildings indifferent in themselves, but not uniform with one another. High on a Hill; in one corner of which standeth the Cloffe, and therein the Cathedral Church, a stately Edifice, but more in accont of the Natives who have been no fairer, than it is with strangers: and near the Church the Bishop's Palace, and the houses of the Canons, all well built, and handsomely adorned. The Bishop of this City, and of all the Country of these Leagues (for they received their Bishop and the Faith together, Anno 489,) acknowledgeth the Archbishop of Metz for their Metropolitan; is reckoned for a Prince of the Empire, and the rightful Lord both of this City and the whole League: but on the introduction of the Reformed Religion, which they had from the Switzers and Genevians, the Citizens withdrew themselves from their obedience to the Bishop, and govern the City in the manner of a Free State. So far conformable to him, for their own preservation, that as the Bishop and his Canons, with the rest of this League, upon occasion of the wrongs done them by the House of Austria: Lords of the neighbouring Tirol; joyned in confederacy with the seven first Cantons of the Switzers (which was in the year 1498.) So did the Citizens of Chur, after they had withdrawn themselves from the command of their Bishops, concur with them at last in that mutual League.

3. The third League of these Grisons is the Lower League, called also Liga Dittura, or the League of the ten Jurisdictions; situate close upon Tirol, in the Northeast part of the whole Country. Of all the ten, two only, which are those of Malans and Meienfeld, obey the joyned commands of the three Leagues of the Grisons: the other eight being subject to the Arch-Duke of Austria under whom they are suffered to enjoy their ancient privileges, for fear of uniting with the Switzers; which hitherto they have not done. Only they did unite together in one common League, Anno 1436, conditioning their mutual defence against all Enemies, preservation of their peace, and maintenance of their privileges; reserving, notwithstanding their obedience to their natural Lords. In which respect, and by reason of the interest and society which they have with the rest of the Grisons, they are in friendship with the Switzers, but in no confederacy. City or walled Town they have none. The chief of those they have, are 1. Castels, the seat of the Governour for the Arch Duke of Austria; 2. Malans, and 3. Meienfeld, both bordering upon the Rheue. 4. Tanase, giving name to the first and greatest of the ten Jurisdictions, the chief Town of this League, in which are held the General Diets for the same; and where are kept Monuments and Records which concern their Privileges. In this League is the Mountain called Rhetico mons, by Pomponius Mela, but now Pretigower-borg, because it is at the end of the Valley which the Dutch call Pretigow.

4. As for the Italian Prefectures they are eight in number, and were given unto the Grisons by Maximilian Sforza, Duke of Milain, Anno 1513. at such time as he gave the like present to the Cantons of Switzerland. Of these the first is called Plava, so called from the chief Town of the same name, in Latine Plava, once seated in a Plain at the foot of the Alpes, near the River Maira, the chief of sundry Villages lying in the same bottom; now nothing but a deep and bottomless Gulf. For on the 26 of August 1617, an huge Rock falling from the top of the Mountains, overwhelmed the Town, killed in the twinkling of an eye 1500 people, and left no sign or ruine of a Town there standing; but in the place thereof a great Lake of some two miles length. 2. Chiavenna, situate in a pleasant Valley so called, near the River Maira, and ten Italian miles from the Lake of Como. Antoninus calleth it Clavenna, and the Dutch Clevenertal, or the Valley of Cleuvu, more near unto the ancient name. 3. The Valtellina, Valis Tolina in the Latine, a pleasant Valley, extending threecore miles in length, from the head of the River Adsa, unto the fall thereof in the Lake of Como: the Wines thereof are much commended, and frequently transported on this side the Alpes. It is divided into six Prefectures, according to the names of the principal Towns. The chief whereof, are 1. Bormio, seated near the head of the River Adsa. 2. Tis, the chief Fortrefs of the whole Valley. 3. Sondrio, the chief Town, and the Seat of the Governour, or Lieutenant General of the whole Country. This Valley lying opportunely for the passage of the King of Spain's Forces, out of Milain into Germany, by the practices and treasons of Rodolphus Planta, one of the Natives of it, and of the Romish Religion; was delivered to the Duke of Feria, being then Governour of Milain, Anno 1622. the whole Country brought under the obedience of that King. Chur it self forced and taken by them, and the Religion of Rome settled in all parts thereof. But two years after, by the joyned Forces of the French, Venetians, and Savoyards, the whole Valley was recovered from the Spaniards, and after a long treaty between France and Spain, the Grisons re-estated in their just possessions, Anno 1630. save that the Spaniard still holds the Fort of Fventers, for the safer passage of his Forces, if occasion be.

Such is the state of the three Leagues considered severally and apart from one another. In reference to the whole, they make up one Government, or Commonwealth; for ordering whereof they hold a General Diet, once in every year, consisting of threecore and three Commissioners: that is to say, 28 from the Upper League, 23 from the League of the House of God, and 14 from the League of the ten Jurisdictions. These these have authority to determine of Appeals from the common Prefectures, to conclude of Peace and War, Confederacies, Embassies, and Laws, which concern the publick: yet so, that in a point of Judicature, it is lawful to appeal unto the Commonalties of every League, who have authority if need be, to reverse the Sentence; the causes being severally propoed, and passed by the major part of voices. The Government of each League, popular, as amongst the Switzers.

There are in these Alpine Provinces, have been received from the Romans; and the German words, at the coming in of the Frank and Burgundians; but the Welsh words which they have, we can give no reason, but that they are the remainder of their ancient Language; of which Welsh words, which still continue in that Language, Camden in his Britannia, reckoneth not a few. 2. It is laid by Tacitus, that the Britanni were the Descendants of the Gauls; and this he proveth, as by other Arguments, so from the identity or near resemblance of the Language which both Nations speak. Drisvique sermo haud multum diversus, as his own words are. And 3. it is laid by Cæsar, That the Gauls used to pass into Britannia, to be instructed in the Rites and Learning of the Druids; which sheweth that both People spake but one common Tongue; there being, in those times, no one Learned Language which other Nations studied, besides their own.

The foil is extraordinary fruitful, and hath three Load-fines to draw riches out of other Countries. Corn, Wine, and Salt; in exchange for which, there is yearly brought into France 12000000 li. sterling, the Custom of Salt, only to the Kings, being estimated at 700000 Crowns per annum. And indeed, the benefit arising on this one Commodity, is almost incredible; it being constituted by the King's Edict, (which is all in all.) That no man shall have any Salt for Domestic uses, (except by special Privilege, and that dearly paid for) but that he must buy of the King's Officers, and that upon such prices too, as they please to sell it. Nor can it be very well stored with Fish: for, besides the benefit of the Seas, their Lakes and Ponds belonging to the Clergy only, are said to be 135000. Their other Merchandizes are, Bees, Hogs, Nuts, Wood, Skins, vast quantities of all sorts of Linnen. And, to say truth, there are not many Countries in the Christian World, to which Nature hath been so prodigal of her choicest blessings, as the hath to this; the Fields thereof being large and open, and those to be intermingled with Corn and Vine, and every hedge-row to be sowed with choice of Fruits, that never any covetous or curious Eye, had a fairer object. And yet so miserable is the condition of the common Peasant; partly, by reason of the intolerable Taxes laid upon him by the King; and partly, by those great, but uncertain Rents, which are let upon him by his Landlord, (for the poor husbandman is Tenant only at the will of his Lord) that there is many one amongst them, who farmeth yearly thirty or forty Acres of Wheat and Vines, that never drinks Wine, nor eats good Bread, from one end of the year unto the other.

The Christian Faith was planted first amongst the Gauls, by some of St. Peter's Disciples, sent hither by him at his first coming to Rome; Xylius, Fronto, and Julianus, the first Bishops of Rhemes, Perigors, and Mantis, (Cenomanensium, in the Latine) being laid to be of his ordaining in the Martyrologies. The like may be affirmed (not on furer grounds) of Trophimus, the first Bishop of Arlers. For, on a Controversie betwixt the Archbishops of Vienna and Arlers, for the dignity of Metropolitan, in the time of Pope Leo I. it was thus pleaded in behalf of the Bishop of Arlers Quod prima inter Gallias, &c. That Arlers of all the Cities of Gaul, did first obtain the happiness of having Trophimus ordained Bishop thereof, by the hands of St. Peter. Nor is St. Paul to be denied the honour of sending some of his Disciples thither also to preach the Gospel; Crescent sent by him, as he telleth us, 2 Tim. 4. into Galatia, being the first Bishop of Vienna, spoken of before, as not the Martyrologies only, but Ado Viennensis, an ancient Writer of that Church, doth expressly say. And that it was in this Country that he sent that Crescent at that time, and not unto Galatia in Asia minor, the testimonies of Epiphanius and Theodoret, which affirm the same, and that which hath been said before of this name of Galatia, may confirm sufficiently. But Christianity being destroyed by the French at their first coming hither, was again planted by the industry of St. Remigius, the first Bishop of Rhemes; Clovis, or Claudianus V. King of the French, giving way unto it for his Wives sake, who was zealous in it; and after taking unto himself that holy Calling, on a great victory which he won against the Almaini; by whom, being over-laid in the day of Battle, he made his prayer to CHRIST, whom his Wife Clotilda worshipped; wishing to be of that Religion, if he got the Victory: Which Vow he had no sooner made, (as the Story telleth us) but Almaini invaded timor, a sudden fear fell upon the Almaini, and the French were Conquerors.

At this time they are divided in Religion, as in other places; some following the Doctrine of the Church of Rome; and others, that of those Reformed Churches which adhere to Calvin. But this division is more ancient than Calvin's days; the same opinions (as they relate unto the Errors in the Romish Church) being maintained formerly by the Albigenses, the Waldenses, or Pauers of Lugduno, (the Vaudes, as the French Writers call them) of whom we shall speak more, when we come to Lyon. Suffice it in this place to note, That the Doctrine of the Reformed Churches was not new in France, when Zuinglius first preached against the superstitions of the Mass, and the worship of Images; and Calvin travelled in advancing the Reformation, though much suppressed as to the outward profession of it. But, being revived by their endeavors, it sprung out again, and spread it self so speedily in this Kingdom, that there were reckoned in the year 1560, above 1240 Churches of them; which cannot, in such a long time, but be wonderfully augmented, though few any of them having escaped some Maffacre or other. Of these Massacres, two are most memorable, viz. that of Merindol and Chabrier, as being the first; and the Massacre of Paris, as being the greatest. That of Merindol happened in the year 1545; the Instrument of it, being Minier, the President of the Council of Aix: for, having condemned the poor people of Heresie, he mustered a small Army, and set fire on the Villages. They of Merindol, seeing the flame, with their Wives and Children fled into the Wood; but were there butchered, or sent to the Gallies. One Boy they took, placed him against a Tree, and shot him with Calivers; 25 which had hid themselves in a Cave, were in part stifled, in part burned. In Chabrier, they so infernally dealt with the young Wives and Maids, that most of them died immediately after. The Men and Women were put to the Sword; the Children were re-baptized, 800 Men were murdered in a Cave, and 40 Women were put together in an old Barn, and burned. Yea, such was the Cruelty of these Soldiers to these poor Women, that when some of them had clambered to the top of the Houle, with an intent to leap down, the Soldiers beat them back again with their Pikes. The Massacre of Paris was cunningly plotted. A Peace was made with the Protestants, for the assurance whereof, a Marriage was solemnized between Henry of Navarre, chief of the Protestant Party, and the Lady Marguerite the King's Sister. At this Wedding, there assembled the Prince of Conde, the Admiral Coligni, and divers others of chief note; but there was not so much Wine drunk, as Blood shed; at it there midnight the Watch-bell rung, the King of Navarre and the Prince of Conde are taken prisoners, the Admiral murdered in his bed, and 30000, at the least, of the the greatest and most potent men of the Religion, sent by the way of the Red Sea, to find the nearest passage to the Land of Canaan, Anno 1572. Yet notwithstanding these Massacres, and the long and frequent Wars which were made against their Kings, they grew so numerous, and got unto to great a Power, that partly by Capitulations with the French Kings; at the end of every Civil War; but principally, by the convenience of King Henry IV. who was sometimes the Head of their Party, they had gotten above three hundred Walled Towns and Garrisons, and were absolute Masters, in effect, of all those Provinces which lie along the Aquas shore, and the Pyrenes, from the Mediterranean Sea, to the River of Loyre. But, being grown too insolent by reason of so great a Strength, and standing upon terms with the King, as a Free Estate, (the Commonwealth of Rochel, as King Henry IV. was used to call it) they drew upon themselves the Jealousie and Fury of King Lewis XIII. Who seeing that he could not otherwise dissolve the Knot of their Combination, than by the Sword, drew it out at last; and was so fortunate in the success of his Undertakings, that in two years (viz. Anno 1611, 1622.) he stripped them of all their Walled Towns, except Montban and Rochel only; and those two he reduced not long after, by the power of his Arms, leaving them nothing to rely on for their future security, but the Grace and Clemency of their King, promoted by their Obedience and Integrity. And it hath sped so well with them since that time, that they never had the exercise of their Religion with so much freedom, as they have hitherto enjoyed since the reducing of their Forts and Garrisons to the Kings obedience.

The other Party in Religion, having the countenance of the State, and the protection and possession of so many years to confirm the same, is so as prosperous a condition both for Power and Learning, as any that acknowledge the Authority of the Popes of Rome. In point of Patrimony, the Author of the Cabinet computes the Tythes and Temporal Revenues of the Clergy, besides Provisions of all sorts, to 80 Millions of Crowns; but this account is disallowed by all knowing men. Bodin reporteth from the mouth of Monsieur Almain, one of the Presidents of Accounts in Paris, that they amount to 12 Millions, and 300000 of their Livres, which is, 12000000 li. of our English money; and he himself conceiveth, that they possess seven parts of twelve, of the whole revenues of that Kingdom. The Book, entitled Comment d'Eljas, gives a lower estimate; and reckoning that there are in France 200 millions of Aspens (which is a measure somewhat bigger than our Acre) altogether 47 Millions, which is near a fourth part of the whole, to the Gallican Clergy. And then it is resolved by all that the Basileians, (as they call it) which consists of Officers, Churchings, Burials, Diriges, and such like Casualties, amounteth to as much per annum, as their standing Rents. Upon which ground Sir Edwin Sandys computes their Revenue at six millions yearly. And to say truth, there needs a very great Revenue to maintain their numbers; there being reckoned in this Kingdom, 13 Arch-bishops, 102 Bishops, 1450 Abbots, 540 Arch-Priorities, 12320 Priors, 567 Monasteries, 720 Convents of Friars, 59 Conventualities of Malta; besides the Colleges of the Jesuits, which being of a late foundation, are not here accounted. And for the Parish-Priests, they are reckoned at 130000 of all sorts, taking in Deacons, Sub-deacons, and all those of Inferiour Orders, which have some Ministry in their Churches, the number of which was reckoned, in the time of King Lewis XI. to be little less than 100000. But then 'tis like, that Chanteries and Free Chappels went in that account; or else the Hugonots in the Wars have destroyed more Churches than they are like to build again in halfe, there being found in France on a just Account, no more than 27400 Parish-Churches, besides Oratories and Chappels of Esse appearing to them. In which there are supposed to live 15 millions of people, whereof the Clergy, and the Ministers depending on them, do make up 3 Millions, which is a fifth part of the whole. And for their Power, the Gallican Clergy stands more stoutly to their natural Rights against the Usurpations and Encroachments of the Sec of Rome, than any other that lives under the Pope's Authority; which they acknowledge so far only, as consistent with their own Privileges, and the Rights of their Sovereign. For neither did they in long time submit to the Decrees of the Council of Trent, nor have they yet admitted of the Inquisition; nor yield such force of Grift to the Pope's Mill, as probably might redound to him from so rich a Clergy. And for his Temporal Power over Kings and Princes, it is a Doctrine so averred from the Politicians and Principles of the Gallican Church, that in the year 1610, the Divines of Paris published a Declaration, in which it was affirmed, that the Doctrine of the Pope's Supremacy was an erroneous Doctrine, and the ground of that Hellish Position, of Deposing and Killing Kings. And this, indeed, hath constantly been the Doctrine of the Gallican Church, since the time of Gerson, maintaining the Authority of a Council, above that of the Pope.

But to proceed; The men most eminent for Learning of either side, have been, (besides those mentioned in the Alpine Provinces) Peter du Moulin, highly commended for his Eloquence, by the Pen of Balfus; Fr. Junius, a moderate and grave Divine; Chamier the Controverser, and Philip de Morsey, Lord of Elfiger. Of the other Party, Claudian Efigence, a Sarbo Doctor, the famous Cardinal of Peron; Genardus the Historian, Petrus a learned Jurist, &c. In the middle times, St. Bernard, Abbot of Clareval; Pe. Lombard, Bishop of Paris, John Gerson, Chancellor of that University. More lately, Proffer of Aquidain, Cassianus the Hermit, Ireneus the renowned Bishop of Lyon, (though not here a Native). And as to men of other Studies, Anstus the Poet, Harman and Gaufredus, the Civilians; Duarenus the Canonist, Barn. Brissinnus the great Antiquary, Isaac Casaubon that renowned Philologist, Budeus that great Master of the Greek Language, Tennant the Historian, Laurentius the Anatomist, &c. And as for Military men, it hath been famous for the valour of Clovis the first Christian King of the French, Charles Martel, that stout Champion of the Church against the Sarazens; and Charles the Great, the Fourth of the Western Empire. In the middle times for Godefrey of Vauillon, one of the Nine Worthies, (as they call them) the Son of Estace, Earl of Boulain in Picardy; and in the latter days, for King Henry IV. Francis and Henry, Dukes of Guise; Charles Duke of Bayonne, Charles Duke of Biron, &c.

The Laws of this Kingdom are either Temporary and alterable at pleasure; or Fundamental, which neither King nor Parliament (as they say) can alter. Of this last sort, the principal are, the Salique Law, and the Law of Apanage. By that of the Apanage, the younger Sons of the King are not to have partage in the Kingdom with their Elder Brother. Which Law was made by Charles the Great, before whose time we find the Children of the Kings elevated in their several Thrones, and the Realm parcelled out among them, to many Kingdoms. But by this Law, they are to be entailed to come Dutchy or County, (though they are content sometimes with Annual Penfions) with all the Rights Rights and Profits thereunto belonging; all matters of Regality (as Levying Taxes, Coyage, and the like) excepted only which, upon the failing of the Maleline, do return again unto the Crown. The name therefore derived from Albanus, a German word, signifying a Portion.

But the main Law they stand on, is the Salique Law, by which the Crown of France may not descend unto the Females or fall from the Lance to the Distaff, as their saying is. Which Law, one undertaking to make good out of Holy Writ, urged that Text of St. Matthew, where it is said, Mark the Lilies, (which are the Arms of France) and see how they neither labour nor spin. This Law they pretend to have been made by Pharamond the first King of the French; and that the words Si aliquis, so often used in it, gave it the name of the Salique Law. But Hailian, one of their best Writers, affirms, That it was never heard of in France, till the time of Philip the Long, Anno 1315. and that it could not possibly be made by Pharamond; who though he was the first King of the French, had not one foot of Land in France: Clodion, the Son of Pharamond, being the first of the French Kings which passed over the Rhine, their third King, Morvus, the first that ever fixed his seat in the Modern France. Others say, it was made by Charles the Great, after the Conquest of Germany, where the incontinent lives of the Women, living about the River Sala, (in the Modern Misissipi) gave both the occasion, and the name. De terra vero Salica, nulla portio hereditatis mulieri veniat, sed ad virilem Sexum tota terra hereditas perveniat, are the words thereof. This Terra Salica, the Learned Selden in his Titles of Honour, Englisheth, Knights-Ere; or Land that is holden by Knights Service, as our Lawyers call it; and proveth this Interpretation by a Record of the Parliament of Bourdeaux, cited by Bodin; where an old Will or Testament being once produced, in which the Testator had bequeathed unto his Son all his Salique Land; it was resolved by the Court, That thereby was meant, his Land holden in Knights Service. And then the sense thereof must be, That in Lands holden of the King by Knights Service, or the like Military tenure, the Male-children should inherit only, because the Females could not perform those Services for which those Lands were given and by which they were holden. And for this there may be good reason, though in England we deal not so unkindly with the Female Sex, but permit them after the age of 15 years to enjoy such Lands, because they may then take such Husbands as are able to do the King those Services which the Law requirith. But this Interpretation (how good and genuine indeed soever it be) cannot stand with the French Glofs. For then the Crown, being held of none but God, and so not properly to be called a Fee or Fief, could not be brought within the compass of the Salique Law, because not to be counted for Salique Land. Give them therefore their own Glofs, their own Etymology and Original; and let us see by what right their Kings Daughters are excluded from their succession to the Diadem. For first, supposing that to be the Salique Land which lyeth about the River Sala, in the Modern Misissipi; I would fain know how it could reach unto the King's Daughter in France, so far distant from it; or with what honesty they can lay on them the like brand of Incontinency, as was supposed to have been found in those Women of Germany? And next, supposing that the Law had been made by Pharamond, I would fain learn how it can be applied to the Crown of France, to which Pharamond had then no title, nor so much as one foot of Land on that side of the Rhene. And finally, supposing that the Law was made in such general terms, as to extend to all the Countries, which the French in time to come should conquer, and consequently unto France when once conquered by them: I would then ask, Whether it did extend to the Crown alone, or all subordinate Estates which were holden of it? It useth to all Estates holden of that Crown, I would fain know with what pretence they could give sentence in behalf of Charles of Blois, against John de Montfort, in the Succession to the Dukedom of Bretagne: Charles of Blois claiming by his Mother, the Niece of Arthur II. by his second Son Guy; whereas John de Montfort was the third Son (and the next Heir-male) of the said Duke Arthur. If only to the Crown of France, it would be known by what right they detain that Dukedom from the true Heirs of Anne the Dutchess, whose Daughter and Heir, the Lady Claude, being married unto Francis I. had issue, Henry II. and other Children. Which Henry, besides Francis II. Charles IX. Henry III. and Francis Duke of Anjou, all dying without Issue, had a Daughter named Isabel, or Elizabeth, married to Philip II. King of Spain, by whom she was made the Mother of Isabella, the late Arch-Dutchess, and of Katharine, the Wife of Charles Emmanuel, the late Duke of Savoy. Not to say any thing of the pretensions of the House of Lorraine, descending from the Lady Claude, the second Daughter of King Henry II. and Sister of Isabel or Elizabeth, Queen of Spain. Nor do we find, that the French so stand upon this Law, as not to think, that a Succession by and from the Females is, in some cases, their best Title. For thus we read, That Pepin having thrust his Master Childeric into a Monastery, to make good his Title to the Crown, (or some colour for it) derived his Pedigree from Phylbilda, one of the Daughters of Clotaire I. married to Austregis the Grandfather of that Arnulfus, who was the first Mayre of the Palace of Charles's Family. As also, how Hugh Capet, putting aside Charles of Lorraine, the right Heir of this Pepin, to make his lawless Action the more seemingly lawful, drew his descent from some of the Heirs General of Charles the Great; his Mother Adelheid, being the Daughter of the Emperor Henry I. famed the Fowler; who was the Son of Otto Duke of Saxony, by Luitgardis, the Daughter of the Emperor Arnulfus, the last Emperor of the Romans (or German) of the House of Charles. And it is said of Lewis IX. so renowned for sanctity amongst them, That he never enjoyed the Crown with a quiet Conscience, till it was proved unto him, That by his Grandmother, the Lady Isabel of Hainault, he was descended from Herningrade, the Daughter of Charles of Lorraine. Add here, that this supposed Salique Law, not only crisheth the received Laws of all Nations else, which admit of women to the succession in their Kingdoms, where the Crown descends in a succession; and have a greater respect both unto their Persons and Posterities in such Kingdoms also where the Kings are said to be Elective, as in Poland, Hungary, and Bohemia: but that even France it self hath (submitted to the Imperious Command of two Women of the Medicis; and at the present, to the Government of a Spanish Princess. So that it is evident, that this Law, by whomsoever made, and how far soever it extended, is of no such force, but that the Labels of it may be easily cut in pieces by an English Word well whetted, if there were no other bar to the Title of England, than the Authority and Antiquity of the Salique Law.

But for my part (if it be lawful for me to dispute this point) I am not fatished in the right of the English Title supposing the Salique Law to be of no such force as the French pretended, and measuring the succession in the

Crown

Crown of France, to be according to successions in the Realm of England, on which King Edward III. seemed to ground his claim. For if there were no Salique Law to exclude succession by the females, as the English did pretend there was not: yet could not Edward coming from a Sister of the three last Kings, which reigned successively before him, at least defend himself of them) had had their turns in the succession of that Kingdom. Of the three Brethren two left issue, viz. Lewis and Philip. Lewis turnamed Hainaut, Son of Philip the Fair and Joan Queen of Navarre, had a Daughter named Joan, married to Philip Earl of Evreux, who was King of Navarre in right of his Wife; from which marriage issued all the succeeding Kings of that Realm, the rights whereof are now in the House of Barboun. Philip the second Brother, surnamed the Long, by Joan the daughter of Othelin Earl of Burgundy, had a daughter named Marguerite, married to Lewis E. of Flanders; from whom descended those great Princes of the race of Burgundy, the rights whereof are now in the House of Spain. If then there were no Salique Law to exclude the Women and their Sons, Charles King of Navarre the son of Q. Joan and of Philip of Evreux, descended from Lewis Hainaut the elder Brother, and Lewis de Malgrine Earl of Flanders and Burgundy, the son of Lewis E. of Flanders, and of Marguerite the daughter of Philip the Long, the second Brother, must have precedence of title before King Edward III. of England, descended from a Sister of the said two Kings, their issue severally and respectively, before any claiming or descending from the said King Edward's side. So that K. Edward III. had some other Claim than what is commonly alleged for him in our English Histories: or else he had no claim to that Crown at all: and I conceive, to wife a King would not have ventured on a business of so great consequence, without some considerable title; though what this title was is not declared for ought I know, by any Writers of our Nation. I believe therefore, that he went upon some other grounds, than that of ordinary succession by the Law of England, and claimed that Crown, as the eldest heir-male and nearest Kinsman to the last King. For being Sisters Son to the King deceased, he was a degree nearer to him than either the K. of Navarre or the E. of Flanders, who were the Grandchildren of his Brethren: and having priority of either in respect of age, had a fair title before either to the Crown of that Kingdom. And on these grounds K. Edward might the rather go, because he found it a valued case, in the dispute about the succession in the Kingdom of Scotland. For though K. Edward I. measuring the order of succession by the Laws of England, and perhaps willing to adjudge the Crown to one who should hold it of him; gave sentence in behalf of John Baliol, the Grandchild of the eldest daughter of the E. of Huntingdon: yet was this Sentence disavowed and protested against by the other Competitors. Robert Bruce son of the second daughter of the said Earl of Huntingdon, as a degree nearer to the last King, though descended from the younger Sister, who not only thought himself wronged in it, but had the unanimous consent of his Son was called to the Government of the Realm of Scotland, during the life of Baliol and his Patron both. Proximity in blood to the King deceased, was measured by nearness of degrees, not descent of birth, and on this Plea, though different from the Laws of England, as Bruce had formerly possessed himself of the Crown of Scotland; so on the same, though different from the Laws of Castile, did Philip II. ground his claim to the Crown of Portugal. For being eldest son of Mary the Sister of Henry the last King (and this was just King

Edward's side to the Crown of France) he thought himself to be preferred before the Prince of Farma, and the Duke of Braganca, descended from the daughters of Edward the said King's Brother; because the eldest male of the Royal Blood, and nearer to the said K. Henry by one degree. In the paritance of which title, as Philip openly fore Philip of Valois, against whom he claimed, he served in court, before the Daughters of those Kings (or the matter at least depending of them) had had their turns in the succession of that Kingdom. Of the three Brethren two left issue, viz. Lewis and Philip. Lewis turnamed Hainaut, Son of Philip the Fair and Joan Queen of Navarre, had a Daughter named Joan, married to Philip Earl of Evreux, who was King of Navarre in right of his Wife; from which marriage issued all the succeeding Kings of that Realm, the rights whereof are now in the House of Barboun. Philip the second Brother, surnamed the Long, by Joan the daughter of Othelin Earl of Burgundy, had a daughter named Marguerite, married to Lewis E. of Flanders; from whom descended those great Princes of the race of Burgundy, the rights whereof are now in the House of Spain. The chief enemies to the French have been the English and Spaniards. The former had here great possessions, divers times plagued them, and took from them their Kingdoms; but being called home by civil divisions, lost all. At their departure, the French cunningly set an English Captain, when they would return? Who lastingly answered, When your fax is greater than ours. The Spaniards began but of late with them, yet have they taken them from them Navarre, Naples and Milan: they displaced them in Florida; poisoned the Dauphin of Venice (as it was generally conceived) murdered their Soldiers in cold blood, being taken prisoners in the Isle of Terceira; and by their Faction raised even in France itself, drove Henry III. out of Paris, and most of his other Cities; and at last caused him to be murdered by Jacques Clements, a Dominican Friar. The like they intended to his Successor, K. Henry IV. whose coming to the Crown they opposed to their utmost power, and held a tedious War against him. Concerning which last War, when they fled with the Duke of Mayenne, and the rest of those Rebels which called themselves the Holy League (t'w' which the D. of Guise was the Author) against the two Kings Henry III. and IV. a French Gentleman made this excellent Allusion. For being asked the cause of these civil broils, hercelled, they were Spania and Mania; seeming by this answer to signify Spain, penury, and Movick, Jury; which are indeed the causes of all intestine tumults; but covertly therein implying the King of Spain, and the Duke of Mayenne: since which time the French, upon the turn of Fortune, (notwithstanding the cross Marriages between the Kings of both Kingdoms, and their several Sisters) have had as great a hand upon the Spaniards, outing them by their plots and practices of the whole Kingdom of Portugal, and the Country of Catalagne in the main Land of Spain it self, and of many of the best parts of Arrion, Hainault, and other of the Belgick Provinces, by the force of Arms. So little constancy there is, either in the favours of Fortune, or the affection of great Princes, that no wife man can trull the one, or depend safely on the other. For in the former times, as we read in Comines, there were no Princes more friendly than these two, the Kings of Castile and France: being the nearest confederate Princes in Christendom. For their League was between King and King, Realm and Realm, Subject and Subject; which they were all bound under, especially since the beginning of the Wars betwixt Charles V. and Francis I. for the Dukedom of Milain: there have not been greater animosities, nor more implacable enmities betwixt any Nations, than betwixt France and Spain. Which seconded by the mutual jealousies they have of each other, and the diversity of Contestations under which they live; hath produced such diffimilitude between them in all their ways, that there is not greater contrariety of temper, carriage, and affections, betwixt any two Nations in the World, than is between these Neighbours, parted no otherwise from one another, than by passable Hills. First, in the Actions of the one, the one Allice and Mercurial, the other Speculative and Saturnine: the one sociable and discursive, the other reserved and full of thought; the one open, that you cannot hide him to keep a secret; the other close, that all the Rhetorick in the World cannot get it out of him. Next in their Fashion and Apparel, the French wears his hair long, the Spaniard short; the French goes to and open to the very shirt, as if there were continual Summer, the Spaniard to wrap up and close, as if all were Winter; the French begins to button downward, and the Spaniard upwards; the last always constant in his Fashion, the first intent to much on nothing as on new fancies of Apparel. Then for their Gare, the French walk fast, as if pursued on an Arrest; the Spaniard slowly as if newly come out of a Quarantine; the French go up and down in Clusters, the Spaniards but by two and two at the most; the French Laqueys march in the Rere, and the Spanish always in the Pan; the French sing and danceth as he walks the streets, the Spaniard in a grave and solemn posture, as if he were going a Procession. The like might be observed of their Tune, their Speech, and almost every passage in the Reader to the ingenious James Howell's Book of Instructions for Travel, than insist longer on it here. Only I add, that of the two so different humours, that of the Spaniards seems to be the more approvable. Inasmuch as the Neapolitans, Milaneses, and Sicilians, who have had trial of both Nations, chuse rather to submit themselves to the proud and severe yoke of the Spaniards, than the lusts and infidelities of the French, not sufferable by men of even and well balanced spirits. And possible enough it is, that such of the Netherlands, as have of late been won to the Crown of France, will find too little comfort in the change of their Masters, as may confirm the relidue to the Crown of Spain, to which they naturally belong.

The chief Mountains of this Country, next to the Pyrenees which part France from Spain, the Jour or Jura which separates it from Savoy and Switzerland, and the Vange or Vogels, which divides it from Lorraine; are those which Cesar calleth Gebenna, Ptolomy Commen, being the same which separate Auvergne from Languedoc; called therefore the Mountains of Auvergne: the only ones of note which are peculiar to this Continent of France, which for the most part is plain and champaign; the others before mentioned, being common unto this, with the Bordering Provinces.

This Country is wonderfully stored with Rivers, the chief whereof, 1. Sequana or Sene, which arising in Burgundy, watering the Cities of Paris and Ram, and receiving into it nine navigable streams, disburdeneth it self into the Brittish Ocean. 2. Some, in Laine called Samana, which rising near the Town of St. Quintin, first cutteth between Picardy and Artois, afterwards passeth through the fair City of Amiens, and the goodly Town of Abbeville, and finally having received eight lesser rivers, loseth it self in the same Sea also. 3. Legris or Loyre, on which are seated Nantes, and Orleans. It riseth about the Mountains of Auvergne, (being the greatest in France) and having run 600 miles, and augmented his Channel with the entertainment of 72 lesser Rivulets, mingling his sweet waters with the brackish Aquitane Ocean. 4. Rhodanus, or the Rhone, which springeth from the Alpes, three Dutch miles from the head of the Rhen, passeth by Lions and Avignon; and having taken in thirteen lesser Brooks, falleth into the Mediterranean Sea, not far from Arles. 5. The Sosne, by the old Latins called Araris, which rising out of the Mountain of Vogels or Vange, in the borders of Lorraine and Alsacia, divideth the two Burgundies from each other; and falleth into the Rhone at the City of Lions. 6. Garonna or the Garonne, which issuing out of the Pyrenean Mountains, passing by Toulouse and Torrendane, and having swallowed up sixteen lesser Rivers (of which the Dordogne in the chief disburdeneth it self into the Aquitane Ocean, near the Town of Blay: that part hereof which is betwixt the main Ocean, and the influx of the River Dordogne, being called the Charente. Of these it is said Proverbially, that the Seine is the richest, the Rhone the swiftest, the Garonne the greatest, and the Loyre the sweetest. And by these and many other Rivers this Kingdom is enriched with 34 excellent Havens having all the properties of a good Harbour: thus to say, 1. Room, 2. Safety, 3. Easiness of defence, 4. Resort of Merchants.

As for so much of the Story hereof as concerneth the whole, it was first peopled, if we may give credit to Annius, (as I think we may not in this point) by Samahis the sixth Son of Japhet (as affirmed by them, and such as adhere unto them), to be that Son of his, who in the Scripture is called Methuselah in the year of the world 1806. But those which are better conversant in the course of History have utterly laid aside this device of Annius. Even Festinus, though a great Boresan, does confels ingeniously, Quis hic Samothetes fuerit, incertum est; that it is unresolved who this Samothetes was. And Vigier a French Antiquary does confels with Festinus, Mais en ne seoy qu'il il estoit, that no body can tell us who he was. They who have better studied this point than Annius derive the Gauls from Gomer, Japhet's eldest Son, whose offspring were first called Gomerians; afterwards Commerians, at laint Cimbr: first planted (as before was said) in the Mountainous places of Albania, where the Mountain called Gimmeris long preserved his memory, and after changing that unfruitful and unpleasant densling for the Plain of Phrygia, wherein the City of Timar did retain some what of his name; in the times of Elivy. Afterwards his proceeded further in the lesser Asia, and in long tract of time filled Germany, Gaul, and Britain, with his numerous issue: the Gauls and Cimbri being clearly of the same Original, though known amongst the Romans by two different names. From whence they had the names of Gauls, and Celters, and Galata hath been shewn before. It shall suffice us now to add, that being originally of the Cimbri, and having somewhat in them of the blood of Hercules, they proved a very valiant and warlike Nation, without whole love, no King could secure himself from eminent dangers. They were very sparing in their diet, and used to fine any one that outgrew his Girdle. With these men the Romans fought at first for their own preservation, rather than out of any hope by the conquest of them to improve either their Fame or their Dominions. Inasmuch that when they had invaded Italy with a numerous Army, in favour of the Cisalpine Gauls, under the conduct of Aureolus and Conciliatus, two of their Kings, and pierced as far as Clamot a City of Tuscany, the Romans thought they had done enough in discomfiting their Forces, and clearing their own Provinces of them; not holding it for a point of wisdom to pursue them, or invade their Country, though by the conquest of Liguria, but few years before they had enlarged their Dominions to the borders of it. But to enumerate more particularly their great achievements in the Wars, were they who under the conduct of Edmonius, passing over the Alpes, conquered the neard parts of Italy, called afterwards Gallia Cisalpine; and under that of Segusius, over-run all Germany, and following their successes as far as Scythia, founded the potent Nation of the Celto-Scythae. These were the men, whose Issue under the command of Frennus, discomfited the Romans, at the River Alia; lacked the City, and besieged the Capitol, An. M. 357. U.C. 365. In which action they so terrified the Romans, that after their expulsion from Rome by Camillus, there was a Law made, that the Priests, though at all other times exempted from Military employments, should be compelled to the War, if ever the Gauls came again. And finally, these were the men, who under the command of Belgicus, and another Brennus, ransacked Illyricum, Pannonia, Thrace, and Greece, in which they spoiled and plundered the Temple of Delphos; for which Sacrilege they were visited with the Pestilence. Such as survived this Plague, went into Asia, and there gave name to that Country now called Galatia, of whom thus Dion Barts:

The ancient Gaul in roving every way.

As far as Phrygia darts his Golden Ray.

Sciz'd Italy; the World's proud Mithras fack't,

Which rather Mars than Romulus compact.

Then spoils Phrygia, Mysia does cultural;

And midst of Asia plants another Gaul.

Yet at last the Romans undertook the War, but not till they had conquered almost all the residue of the then known World. Attempting first by Fulvius Flaccus, a Roman Consul, called in by the Mistificus to assist them against the Sallii their unquiet Neighbours, A. U.C. 628 that part hereof which afterwards was called Narbonensis, being brought into the form of a Roman Province at the conclusion of the War against the Allobroges and Averni, (undertaken on the like complaint of the Hedui) about two years after. Not totally subdued until the time of Julius Caesar, and not easily then. For though the War was managed then by the ablest Captain that ever the State of Rome gave life to; yet was it not more easily vanquished by the valour and fortune of the Romans, than by want of good intelligence and correspondence amongst themselves. Nor did they sell their liberty to good cheap, as those other Nations, with whom the Romans had to deal: Cesar himself affirming, That he had slain 119,200 of them before they would submit to the Roman yoke. But at the last they were brought under the power of Rome, by whom the whole Country was divided into these four parts, viz. 1. Narbonensis, called so from the City of Narbon, then a Roman Colony, containing Languedoc, Provence, Dauphine, and some part of Savoie, called also Braccata at the first conquest by the Romans, from the usual habit of the people (resembling the Mantles used by the Wild Tribe) called in Latine, Bracca: attempted first by Fulvius Flaccus, in his War against the Sallii as before is said; and finally subdued, A.U.C. 633, by Fabius Maximus and Cn. Domitius Ahenobarbus, in their War against the Allobroges, and their Confederates, before mentioned, about 70 years before the coming in of Julius Caesar. 2. Aquitania, so called from the City of Augusta (now D'Aqu, in Guine) lying upon the Pyrenees, and the wide Ocean, which comprehendeth the Provinces of Cajazzo, Guine, Xaintonge, Limousin, Quercy, Perigord, Berry, Bourbonnais, and Auvergne; extending from the Pyrenees to the River Loyre, and consequently stretching over all the middle of Gaul. 3. Celtica, so named from the valiant Nation of the Celts; as called also Lygudunensis, from the City of Lyon; and Comata from the long hair worn amongst this people, extending from the Loyre to the Brittish Ocean, and comprehendeth the Provinces of Bretagne, Normandy, Angou, Touraine, Main, La Beauce, the Ile of France, part of Champagne, the Dukedom of Burgundy, and the County of Yonne, 4. Belgica, from the belge, a potent Nation of that Tract, taking up all the East parts of Gaul, viz. Picardy, the rest of Champagne, the County of Burgundy, together with so much of Germany and the Netherlands, as lieth on this side of the Rhen, belonging now unto the Empire and the Kings of Spain. In the new modelling of the Empire by Constantine the Great, Gaul was appointed for the seat of one of the four Præfetti Prætorio, designed the four Quarters of it. His Title Præfetti Prætorio Galliarum; his Government extending over the Dioceses of Gaul, Spain, and Britain: this Diocese of Gaul being callt into seventeen Provinces, that is to say, 1. Lygudunensis Prima, 2. Secunda, 3. Tertia, 4. Quarta, 5. Belgica prima, 6. Secunda, 7. Germania prima, 8. Secunda, 9. Narbonensis prima, 10. Secunda, 11. Aquitania prima, 12. Secunda, 13. Novempopulana, 14. Ulcinensis, 15. Maxima Sequanorum, 16. Alpe Graia & Pennina, 17. Alpes Maritimæ. Of these seventeen, Germania prima & Secunda, all Belgica prima, and a great part of Secunda all that of the Alpes Graia & Pennina, and so much of Maxima Sequanorum, as lieth in Switzerland, are now dismembered from the name and account of France. What principal Nations of the Gauls, and what Provinces of the present France, the rest contained, shall be declared in our Survey of the particulars.

But long it stood not in this list: for within fixty years after the death of Constantine, during the Reigns of Honorius and Theodosius, the Burgundians a great and populous Nation, were called in by Stilico, Lieutenant to Honorius the Western Emperor, to keep the borders of the Empire against the French; then ready with some other of the Barbarous Nations to invade the same. The Goths not long after by agreement with the same Honorius, leaving their hold in Italy, were vested in Gaul Narbonensis, by the gift of that Emperor; with a good part of Tarconensis, one of the Provinces of Spain: Aquitania being after added, in regard of the service they had done the Empire, in driving the Alans out of Spain, then likely to have made a great impression on that Country. And in the reign of Valentinian the third, the French who had long hovered on the banks of the Rhens, taking advantage of the distractions of the Empire, ventured over the River; first made themselves Masters of Gaul-Belgick; and after, spread themselves over all the rest of the Provinces which had not been subdued by the Goths and Burgundians; excepting a small corner of Armorica, then possessed by the Britons. So that the Romans being outed of all the Country, it was divided between the Nations above mentioned, and that with more equality than could be imagined: The Goths possessing all Aquitain, and Narbonensis, containing now the Provinces of Provence, Languedoc, Cofcoigne, Guienne, Antwoigne, Poitou, Berry, Limousin, Perigord, Quercy, and Auvergne; the Burgundians having for their share, the Alpine Provinces, together with Nivernois, Bourbon, Beau-Jolois, Forreft, the Counties of Lyonsis, La Breffe, Daulphine, and both the Burgundies, from them so denominated. The rest (except that part thereof which we now call Bretagne) was possessed by the French, who in short time repelled the Vifigabes, or Western-Goths, (then buſie in the Conquest of Spain) out of all the Provinces of the Roman Aquitain; by the Valour of Clodius the Great, their first Christian King, before they could challenge a Preſcription of 60 years. Nor was it long, before Provence also was resigned to Theodoric the French King of Metz by Amalasenta, Queen of the Oftho-Goths, or Goths of Italy; nothing being left unto that Nation, of all their Gallick Conquests, but Languedoc only. In which respect, together with so much of the Burgundia which was after laid to West-France, shall pass in the account of the French part of this Country; the rest of the Burgundian Conquests which lie within the bounds of the Modern France, (having Provence added to them) shall be considered by themselves in the description and affairs of the Kingdom of Burgundy, a distinct Realm from that of France, and not reduced but by piece-meal, and by several Titles, and yet not wholly (to neither) to the Crown thereof. Finally, of the French themselves, and the succession of their Kings, we will speak at last, when we have brought all the chief parts and Provinces of this flourishing Country into their poss. Poss. The principal Provinces are, 1. France, specially so called, 2. Champagne, 3. Picardy, 4. Normandy, 5. Bretagne, 6. The Elates of Anjou, with its members, 7. La Beaulle, 8. Nivernois, 9. The Dukedom of Bourbon, with the Provinces dependant on it; being all (excepting Bretagne) the first acquits of the French. Then follow the chief Provinces of the Gallish Kingdom; that is to say, 10. Berry, 11. Poitou, 12. Limousin, 13. Perigord, and 14. Quercy, 15. Aquitain, with the members of it; and 16. Languedoc; and last of all, the Burgundian Kingdom, of which there now remain in France, the Counties of 17. Provence, 18. Daulphine, 19. La Breffe, 20. Lionsis, 21. The Dutchy, and 22. the County of Burgundy. 23. The Islands of the Aquitain, and Gallick Ocean, in the cloſe of all. Of some of which, La Noire, a French Author, hath passed this sentence: The men of Berry, are Lechers; they of Tourain, Thieves; they of Languedoc, Traitors; they of Provence, Atheists; they of Rhemes, (or Champagne) Superstitious; they of Normandy, insolent; they of Picardy, proud; &c. &c. &c. But here we are to understand that all these Provinces (though passing by the name and account of France) are not under the Command of the French King; the Isles of Jersey and Guernsey, being possessed by the English; the Counties of Burgundy and barrois, by the King of Spain; the Dutchy of Bar, belonging to the Dukes of Lorraine; the Principality of Orange, to the House of Nassau; and Avignon, to the Popes of Rome. And on the other side, the French Kings are possessed of some Towns and Cities, not lying within the bounds of France, as the Imperial Cities of Metz, Toul, and Verdun; lying within the Dukedom of Lorraine, the Fort and Pass of Pignerolle, in the Dukedom of Savoy, and the Port of Monaco, in Liguria; Baſe Navarre, in Spain; not to say any thing of their late acquits in Spain and Flanders, which I lock not on as parts of the French Dominions.

FRANCE, specially so called.

THE first place which the Franks or French, had for their first Habitation was by that People honoured with the name of FRANCE; the first great Tract of Gallick ground, by which they took liberty and ſeiſin of all the rest. A Province now bounded on the East, with Champagne; on the North, with Normandy; on the West and South, with La Beaulle. To difference it from the main Continent of France, it is called the Iſle of France, as being circled almost round with several Rivers; that is to say, the Oiſe on the North, the Eure on the West, the Velle on the East, and a vein-river of the Seine, towards the South. A Country not so large as many of the French Provinces; but such as hath given name unto all the rest; it being the Fate of many small, but puissant Provinces, to give their names to others which are greater than they, it conquered and brought under by them. For, thus we see the little Province of Poland, to have mattered and given name to the Mazovii, Pruteni, and other Nations of Sarmatia Europæa, as that of Mosco, to the Provinces of Aſiaticæ. And thus have those of Sweden conquered and denominated almost the great Peninsula of Scandia, whereof it is one of the smallest Provinces. And thus this Island, being the Seat-Royal of the French, in Gallia, gave name to all the residue of it, as they made it theirs. A Country generally so fruitful and delcetable, (except in Gastinois) that the very Hills thereof are equal to the Valleys in most places of Europe; but the Vale of Montmorency (wherein Paris standeth) scarce is to be followed in the World. An argument whereof may be, That when the Dukes of Berry, Burgundy, and their Confederates, besieged that City with an Army of 100000 men, neither the Aſſailants without, nor the Citizens within, found any ſcarcity of Victuals; and yet the Citizens, besides Soldiours, were reckoned at 500000.

It was formerly part of the Province of Belgica ſecunda, & Lugdunensis quarta; the chief Inhabitants thereof being the Parifii, the Bellici, and the Silvanici; and is now divided into four parts, that is to say, the Dukedom of Valois, 2. Gastinois, 3. Heurepoix; and that which is properly called the Iſle of France; by some, the Præſtoris, or County of Paris.

1. Dukedom or County of VALOIS, lieth under Picardy; the principal Cities of it, 1. Senlis. (in Latine, Silvanicum) 2. Compiègne, Compennum) ſeated on the River Oiſe, a retiring place of the French Kings for hunting, and other Country pleasures. 3. Beauvais the chief City of the Belluci, by Pholoy called Casromagus; a fair, large, well-traded Town; from which the Country round about hath the name of Beauvoisin. The Patrimony, in former times of Roger, the third Son of Theobald, the second Earl of Blain, and younger Brother of Odon, the first Earl of Champagne, who enjoyed it with the Title of Earl of Beau- vois; and at his death, gave it for ever to the Bishops herof; for anciently this City was a See Episcopall; the Bishop whereof is one of the Twelve Peers of France. Philipp, one of the Bishops here in times succeeding, a Military man, and one that had much damming the English Borders, was fortunately taken by King Richard I. The Pope being made acquainted with his imprisonment, but not the cause of it, wrote in his behalf unto the King, as for an Ecclesiastical person, and one of his beloved Sons. The King returned to the Pope the Armour in which the Bishop was taken in, and their words engraved on the same, Vide an hec fit iusticia filii tui, vel non; being the words which Jacobs Children spake to him, when they presented him with the Coat of their Brother Joseph, which the Pope viewing, Iwore, that it was rather the Coat of a Son of Mary, than a Son of the Church; and so left him wholly to the Kings pleasure. 4. Clermont, a Town of good note in the County of causovis; memorable for giving the Title of Earl of Clermont, to Robert the fifth Son of the King St. Lewis, before his marriage with the Daughter and Heir of Bourbon; afterwards, to the eldest Sons of that Princely Family; and finally, to Catherine de Medicis, created Countess of Clermont and Boislogis, at her marriage with Henry Duke of Orleans, Successor to King Charles I. in the Realm of France. 5. Lucarch, a Town belonging to the Count of Sailly. 6. Brenoville, 7. St. Lomp, on the Confines of Picardy, so called from a Monastery dedicated to St. Lomp, Bishop of Troy in Champagne, sent into Britain with St. Germanus, to suppress the Pelagian Heresies, which were there beginning. But of this part of France, nothing more observable, than that it gave denomination to the Royal Family of the French Kings, (thirteen in number) from hence entitled de Valois, beginning in Philip de Valois, Anno 1328, and ending in Henry III. Anno 1579. As for the Earls herof, from whom that adjunct or denomination had its first Original) the first who had the Title of Earl of Valois, was Charles, the second Son of Philip III. in right of his Wife, Earl of Anjou also; after whose death, it descended upon Philip de Valois, his eldest Son, who carried the Crown of France from our Edward III. On his assuming of France from that Charles V. amongst the Titles of which House, it lay dormant, till the expiring of that Line in King Lewis XII. and lately given unto the Montfaucon, or Duke of Orleans, Brother to Lewis XIII. and Uncle to King Lewis XIV. now reigning, upon the first reconciliation made betwixt him and his Brother; adding thereby to his Estate, not less than 10000 pounds sterling of yearly Rents, which make up 10000 Frank or Livres, in the French account. Only add, that Charles, the first Earl of this Family, as he was the Son of Philip III. Brother of Philip IV. furnished the Fair; and Father of Philip de Valois: so was he Uncle to Lewis Huiz, Philip the Long, and Charles the Fair, all in their order Kings of France. In which regard it was said of him, That he was the Son, Brother, Father, and Uncle of Kings; yet no King himself.

2. The second part of this Province, is called HEUREPOIX, beginning at the little Bridge of Paris, on the River of Seine, and going up along the River, as far as the River of Verne, which divides it from Gastinois. The chief Towns of it are, 1. Charenton, three Miles from Paris, where the French Præſtoris of that City, have their Church for religious exercises, it being not permitted them to hold their Assemblies in any Walled Cities, or Garrison Towns, for fear of any sudden surprize, which so great a multitude might easily make. Which Church (or Temple, as they call it) being burnt down by the hot-headed Parisians, on the news of the Duke of Mantua, dead, slain at the Siege of Mantua, Anno 1622, was presently re-edified by the command of the Duke of Mantua, then Governour of the Iſle of France, at the charge of the State: to let those of the Reformed Party understand that it was their Disobedience, and not their Religion, which caused the King to Arm against them. 2. Corbeil, ſeated on the confluence of Seine and Essons, which gives the Title of an Earl to one of the natural Sons of Henry IV. begotten on the Daughter and Heir of the former Earl. 3. Melun, by Cesar called Melodunum, the principal of this Heurepoix, and the place of the Balliff for this Tract. Here is also in this part the Royal Palace of Fountainbleau, so called from the many fair Springs and Fountains amongst which it standeth; but otherwise ſeated in a solitary and woody Country, fit for Hunting only; and for that cause much visited by the French Kings in their times of leisure; and beautified with so much cost by King Henry IV. that it is absolutely the fairest and most magnificent Pile of Building in all France.

3. GASTINOIS, the most dry and barren part of this Province, but rich enough, if compared with other places; lieth between Paris, and the County of Orleans. The chief places of it are, 1. Etampes, in the middle way betwixt Paris and Orleans, on the very edge of it, towards La Beaulle, a fair large Town, having in it five Churches, and one of them a Collodge of Chanoines, with the ruins of an ancient Castle; which together with the Walls and demolished Fortifications of it, shew it to have been of great importance in the former times. Given, with the Title of an Earl, by Charles Duke of Orleans, then Lord herof, to Richard, the third Son of John of Montford, Duke of Bretagne, in marriage with his Sister the Lady Marguerette; from which Marriage issued Francis Earl of Etampes, the last Duke of Bretagne. 2. Montleberry, famous for the Battle betwixt King Lewis XI. and Charles Earl of Charolais, (after Duke of Burgundy) in which both sides ran out of the field, and each proclaimed it self the Victor. It standeth in the road betwixt Paris and Etampes. And so doth, 3. Caftrès, of the bigness of an ordinary Market-Town; not to be mentioned in this place, but for a Chamber or Branch of the Court of Parliament, here settled by King Henry IV. for the use and benefit of his Subjects of the Reformed Religion; in Latine called Camera Calvinista. 4. Nemours, upon the River of Loire, the chief of Gastinois in name, but not in beauty, (wherein inferior to Etampes) a Town which hath given the Title of Duke to many eminent persons of France. Here is also in this part, the County of Rochfort, and the Towns of 1. Milly, 2. Montargis, &c. More there occurreth not worth the noting, in this part of the Country, but that being part of the possessions of Hugh the Great Countess of France and Earl of Paris. It was given by him, together with the Earldom of Anjou, to Geoffrey, famous Grosfoin, a high noble Warrior, and a great stickler in behalf of the House of Anjou, then aiming at the Crown it self, which at last they carried. Continued in his Line till the time of Fulk II. (the fifth Earl of Anjou of this Family) who gave it back again to King Philip I. that by his help he might possess himself of the Earldom of Anjou, from his part where-in he was excluded by his elder Brother. Never since that, dismembered from the Crown of France, in Fact or Title.

4. But the great glory of this Province, is that which is more properly called the ISLE OF FRANCE, and sometimes καὶ Ἰσθμῶν, the Isthme, caused by the Circlings and embracements of the Rivers of Seine and Marne; the abstract of the whole Beauties and Glories of France, which in this rich and pleasant Valley are summed up together.

Chief places in it, 1. St. German, seated on the summit of a Hill seven miles from Paris, down the waters of a pretty neat and handsome Town, honoured with one of the fairest Palaces of the French Kings, which being built (like Windsor) on the top of a fine Mountain, on the Rivers side, affordeth an excellent prospect over all the Country. The excellent Water-works herein, have been described on occasion of those of Tivoli, a Town of the Popes in Campagna di Roma, so much extolled by the Italians. It was first built by Charles V. furnished the Wife; beautified by the English when they were possessed of this Country: but finally, re-edified and enlarged by King Henry IV. who brought it into that Magnificence in which we now see it. It took name from St. German, Bishop of Auxerre, Companion with St. Lupus before mentioned, in the British Journey against Pelagius. 2. Poissy, upon the same River, or rather on the confluence of it, and the Marne which falleth into the Seine; situate not far from St. German, a Bailiwick belonging to the Provost of Paris, and one of his seven Daughters, as they use to call them. 3. Chantilly, the chief seat of the Dukes of Montmorency, the ancientest and most noble Family of all Christendom, whose Ancestors were the first fruits of the Gospel in this part of Gaul, and used to stile themselves, Les premiers Chrétiens & plus anciens Barons de la France, i. e. the first Christians and most ancient Barons of France. A Family that hath yielded unto France more Admirals, Constables, Marshals, and other like Officers of Power, than any three in all the Kingdom; now most unhappily extinct in the person of Henry the last Duke, executed by the command of the late Cardinal of Richlieu, for siding with the Moufieur (now Duke of Orleans) against King Lewis XIII. his Brother. The Arms of which illustrious and most noble Family, (for I cannot let it pass without this honour) were Or a Cross Gules, cantoned with sixteen Alions Azure, four in every Canton. What these Alions are, we shall see in Lorraine: take we notice now, that from the great possessions which this Noble Family had in all this Tract, it was, and is still called the Val de Montmorency. 4. St. Denis some three miles from Paris, so called of a Monastery built here by Dagobert, King of France, about the year 640. in memory of St. Denis, or Dionys, the first Bishop of Paris, martyred (on Mount-martyr, an Hill adjoining) in the time of Domitian. Some of the French Kings, because it lay so near to Paris, bestowed a Wall upon the Town, now not defensible; nor otherwise of any consideration, but for a very fair Abby of Benedictines and therein the Sepulchres of many of the French Kings and Princes: neither for Workmanship nor Cost, able to hold comparison with those at Westminster. But being the Sepulchre of their Kings, the French men use to lay factiously, that to this place none of their Kings do ever go with a good will. In this Town also is the Church of St. Macien, where the Kings, with a Fast of Nine days, and other Penances, use to receive the famous Gift of healing the King-Earl, with nothing but a Touch: a Privilege enjoyed only by those Kings, and the Kings of England. 5. St. Cloud, (or the Town of St. Claudin) unfortunately memorable for the Murder of King Henry III. who lying here at a Siege of Paris, from whence he was compelled to flee by the Gustian Faction, was wretchedly assassinated by Jacques Clement, a Monk, employed in that service by the Heads of the Holy League. 6. PARIS, the chief City, not of this Isle alone, but of all the Kingdom. By Cæsar, and Ammonius Marcellinus, called Civitas Parisiorum from the Parisians, by Strabo called Λατινία, Λατινία, by Pliny, quasi in Lupa, i. e. as some conjecture from the dirtiness of the soil in which it standeth. A soil so dirty, (as commonly all rich Countries are) that though the Streets hereof are paved, (which they affirm to be the work of King Philip Augustus) yet every little dash of rain, makes them very slippery; and worse than so, yields an ill favour to the nose. The Proverb is, Il défiant comme la fange de Paris. It stinketh like the dirt of Paris: but the Author of the Proverb might have changed the word, and turned it to Il pen, &c. It stinketh like the dirt of Paris: no flink being more offensive than those of Paris in Summer. It is in compass about eight miles, of an Obicular form, pleasantly seated on the divisions of the Seine: a fair, large, and capacious City, but far short of the brags which the French make of it. It was thought in the time of King Lewis XI. to contain 500,000 people of all sorts and ages; which must be the least: the same King at the entertainment of the Spanish Embassadors, shewing 140,000 of this City in Arms, all in a Livery of red Cocksfoot, with white Crosses. A gallant sight, though possibly the one half of them were not fit for service: the Parisians being for the most part an effeminate people, wanton enough, and apt to mutiny upon all occasions; but little addicted to the Wars, as appears plainly by their suffering King Henry IV. to hold St. Dennis so long against them, with no considerable Garrison, and by their means to shut them up from all relief on that side of their City. And yet their multitudes, which since the time of that King, must needs be very much increased, are the chief strength of the Town; the Fortifications being weak, and of ill assurance: Insomuch, that when once a Parisian bragged, that their Town was never taken by force, an English man returned this Answer, That was, because on the least distress it did use to capitulate. It is seated (as before was said) on the River Seine, which serveth it with Boats and Barges, (as the Thames weithard doth London) in the River ebbs and flowing no higher than Pont de l'Arche, 75 miles distant from the City.

We may divide it into four parts; The Town, the City, the University, and the Suburbs. La Ville, or that part of it which is called The Town, is situate on the North side of the River; the biggest, but poorest part of the Four; inhabited by Artizans and Trademen of the meaner sort. In this part are the Hôtel de Ville, or the Guild-Hall, for the use of the Citizens; the Arsenal, or Armory, for the use of the King; and that magnificent Building called the Place-Royal, new built and beautified at the charges of King Henry IV. by Tiles and Turnaments, and such Solemnities of State. And in this also, near the banks of the River stand the Kings Palace of the Louvre; a place of more Fame than Beauty; and nothing answerable to the reputation which goes commonly of it. A Building of no elegance or uniformity; nor otherwise remarkable; but for the vast Gallery begun by King Henry IV. and the fine Gardens of the Tuileries adjoining to it. The City is that part of it which takes up the Circumference of a little Island, made by the embracements of the Seine; joined to the other parts on both sides, by several Bridges. The Paris or Latetia of the old Gauls was no more than this, the Town on the one side, and the University on the other, being added since. This is the richest part, and best built of the whole Compositum. And herein stand the Palaces, or Courts of Parliament; the Chapel of the Holy Ghost, and the Church of Nygre-Dame, being the Cathedral; of ancient times a Bishops See, but of late raised unto the dignity of a Metropolis. On the South-side of the River lieth that part which is called the University, from an University here founded by Charles the Great, An 792 at the perswasion of Alcuin an Englishman, the Scholar of Venerable Bede, and the first Professor of Divinity here. It consisteth of 52 Colleges or places for study, whereof 40 are of little use; and in the rest, the Students live at their own charges, as in the Halls at Oxon, or Inns of Court, or Chancery at London; there being no Endowment laid unto any of them, except the Sorbonne, and the College of Navarre. Which possibly may be the reason why the Scholars here are generally so debauched and insolent: a ruder rabble than the which, are hardly to be found in the Christian world. Semble of this mischief, and the cause thereof, Francis I. when the French call the Father of the Misery, at the perswasion of Reuchlin and Budanus, those great restorers of the Greek and Hebrew Languages, intended to have built a College for 600 Students, and therein to have placed Professors for all Arts and Sciences, endowing it with 50000 Crowns of yearly Revenue, for their continuance maintenance. But it went no further than the purpose; prevented by the inevitable stroke of death, from pursuance of it. In bigness this is little inferior to the Town of Vile, and not superior to it for wealth and beauty, few men of any wealth and credit, affecting to inhabit in a place of little Government. The fourth and last part, is the Suburbs, or the Faux-bourgs, as the French call them; the principal whereof is that of St. Germain, (so called from an ancient Abby of that name) the best part of the whole Body of Paris, for large Streets, sweet Air, choice of the best Company, magnificent Houles, pleasant Gardens, and finally, for all those Contentments which are wanting commonly in the throngs of most populous Cities.

There are also in this Isle, the royal House of Madrid, a ruling-place of the Kings, built by King Francis I. at his return from his imprisonment in Spain. 2. Ruel, a sweet Country-houle of the late Queen-Mothers. And, 3. Bois de Vincennes, remarkable for the untimely death of our Henry V. I add this only, and to end; That this Isle hath always followed the Fortune of the Crown of France; never dismembered from the Sovereignty of the same, though sometimes out of the possession of the French Kings, as when the English kept it against Charles VII. and the Leaguers against Henry IV. A thing which hardly can be said of any other of the Provinces of this flourishing Country; the French Kings of the Race of Méranie, and Charles the Great, alienating from the Crown, many goodly Territories, contented only with a bare and titular Homage from them. By means whereof, more than three parts of the whole Kingdom was shared first amongst the great Princes of the French; which afterwards, by inter-marriages, and other titles, fell into the hands of strangers; most of them enemies of this Crown, and jealous of the Grandeur and Power thereof. Which kept the French Kings generally very low and poor, till by Arms, Confiscations, Marriages, and such other means, they reduced all these Rivallers to their first and original Chancel; as shall be shewn in the pursuance of this Work.

2. CHAMPAGNE.

CHAMPAGNE is bounded on the North, with Picardy; on the South, with the Dukedom of Burgundy; on the East, with Lorraine on the West, with France specially to be called.

The Country, for the most part, very plain, and pleasant, (whence it had the name) adorned with fair Woods, and delectable Meadows, fruitful in Corn, and not deficient in Wines. The Seat, in elder times, of the Tricassers, Catalauni, Remi, the Luigiens, and Senones, (of which last Tribe or Nation, were those Cisalpine Gauls who sacked Rome under the Conduct of Brennus) part of them, Celts; and part, Belgians; and so accordingly divided of: the Belgians, into the Province of Belgica secunda, the Metropolis whereof was Rhemes; the Celts into Lugdunensis quarta, of which the Metropolis was Sens; both Cities seated in this Country. The chief Rivers of it, 1. Seine, 2. Marne, 3. Tonne, 4. Saône.

Chief places of that part hereof which belonged to Belgica secunda, or the Province of Rhemes, are 1. Chalon, on the River Marne, an Episcopal See, suffragan to the Arch-bishop of Rhemes; called anciently, Civitas Catalaunorum, 2. Juvenille, situate on the same River, belonging to the House of France; the eldest Son of which Family, is called Prince of Juvenille: in the Castle whereof, seated upon an high and inaccessible Hill, is to be seen the Tomb of Claude, the first Duke of Guisse, the richest Monument, of that kind, in all France. The Barony of William Lord Juvenille, third Son of Eustace, Earl of Burgundy, and of Isabel his Wife, who brought the Dukedom of Basilion for her Dowry or Portion; and Brother of Godfrey and Baldwin, Dukes of Lorraine, and Kings of Jerusalem. But whether it came to him by the gift of his Mother, as part of the Dukedom of Basilion, or that he had it by his Wife, a daughter of Theobald Earl of Champagne, I am not able to determine. Left by him after his decease, to Godfrey his youngest Son (Thierry his eldest Son, succeeding his Uncle Baldwin in the Dukedom of Lorraine;) upon the failure of whose Line, it fell unto the Duke of Lorraine, as next Heirs thereof, and so unto the Dukes of Guisse descended from them. 3. St. Urban, a Town of the Territory of Juvenille, from which it is about two Leagues distance. 4. Pierre-Fort, defended with a Castle of 10 great strength, that in the Civil Wars of France, An 1614, it endured a 100 shot of Cannon, and yet was not taken. 5. Vassy, upon the River Blaise; a Town as sweet a situation, as most in France. The last situate in that part of Champagne which is called Vallage; so named, as I conceive from the River Vesle. 6. Troyes, upon the confluence of the Saône and Marne, the chief Town and Bailliege of that part which is named Parisis Ager Potenensis in the Latine; so called of 7. Pierre, another Town thereof, but now not so eminent. 8. Champan, upon the Marne, the chief Town of Basseigne, and strangled with a Castle mounted on a craggy Rock. 9. Deziers, or St. Desir, (Sancti Desiderii) royally fortified after it had been ruined, An 1544. 10. Rhemes (Durocorium Rhemorum) an Archbishops See, who is one of the Twelve Peers of France, lying on the River of Vesle. At this City, the Kings of France are most commonly crowned, that so they may enjoy the Union of a sacred Oyl, kept in the Cathedral Church hereof; which, as they say came down from Heaven and never decreaseth. How true this is, may be easily seen, in that Gregory of Tours, who is so prodigal of his Miracles, makes no mention of it, but specially (for Argumentum ab auctoritate negative parum valet) since the Legend informeth us, that this Holy Oil was sent from Heaven at the anointing of Clod, the first Christian King of the French. Whereas Du Hailan, the Father of their most judicious Writers, affirmeth Pepin, the Father of Charles the Great, to have been their first anointed King; and that there was none of la premiere ligne oint, my sacre à Rheims, my ailleurs, none of the first or Merovigian line of Kings had been anointed at Rheims or elsewhere. But sure it is, (let it be true or false, no matter) that the French do wonderfully reverence this (their sacred) Oil; and fetch it with great solemnity from the Church in which it is kept. For it is brought by the Prior, sitting on a white ambling Palfrey, and attended by his whole Convent; the Archbishop herof, (who by his place is to perform the Ceremonies of the Coronation) and such Bishops as are present, going to the Church-doors to meet it, and leaving for it with the Prior, some competent Pawn; and on the other side, the King, when it is brought unto the Altar, bowing himself before it with great humility. But to return to the Town; it took this name from the Rhemi, once a potent Nation of these parts, whose chief City it was, and now an University of no small esteem: in which among other Colleges, there is one appointed for the education of young English Fugitives. The first Seminary for which purpose, (I note this only by the way) was erected at Dormy, An. 1568. A second at Rome by Pope Gregory XIII. A third at Valladolid in Spain by King Philip II. A fourth in Levain a Town of Brabant. And a fifth here (so much do they affect the gaining of the English to the Romish Church) by the Dukes of Guis. 11. Ligni, upon the River Saart.

In that part of it which belonged to Lugdunensi quart, or the Province of Sters, the places of chief note are, 1. Senis, Civitas Senonensis in Autunnum, antiently the Metropolis of that Province, by consequence the See of an Archbishop also. The Country hereabouts called Le Paris Senonensis, was part of the habitation of the ancient Senones, some of which passing over the Alpes, with other Nations of the Gauls, planted those parts which afterwards were for long time called Gallia Cisalpinia. Of which the Senones were the most valiant, though far less in numbers; as those which had not only the honour of facing Rome, but of managing an offensive War against that State, for the space of 100 years and upwards. What afterwards became of them hath been then already when we were in Lombardy. 2. Langres or Civitas Lingunensium, by Polomy called Andomatunum situate in the confines of Burgundy, not far from the fountain or spring-head of the Seine; the See of a Bishop, who is one of the Twelve Peers of France. 3. Troy, Civitas Tricassinorum, seated on the Seine; fair, strong and well-traded City, honoured with the title of the Daughter of Paris, a See Episcopal, and counted the chief of Champagne next Rhemes. A City of great note in our French and English Histories, for the meeting of Charles VI. and Henry V. Kings of France and England, in which it was agreed, that the said King Henry espousing Katharine daughter of that King, should be proclaimed Heir apparent of the Kingdom of France into which he should succeed on the said King's death, and be the Regent of the Realm for the time of his life, with divers other Articles, best suited with the will and honour of the Conquerour. 4. Provins, (by Cesar called Agendicum) seated upon the Seine, in a pleasant Country, abounding in all fragrant flowers, but especially with the sweetest Roses, which being transplanted into other Countries, are called Provins-Roses. 5. Meaux, seated on the River Marne, antiently the chief City of the Meldi, whom Pliny and others of the old Writers mention in this tract, now honoured with a Bishops See, and neighboured by 6. Mousses, beautified with a magnificent Palace built by Katharine de Medices; Queen-Mother of the three last Kings of the House of Valois. 7. Montreux, a strong town on the confluence of the Seine and the Tonne. 8. Chasteau-Thierry, (Castrum Theodoricum, as the Latins call it) situate on the River Marne. These five last, situate in that part of Champagne which lieth next to Brie specially so called, known of long time by the name of Brie; which being the first or chief possession of the Earls of Champagne, occasioned them to be sometimes called Earls of Brie, and sometimes Earls of Brie and Champagne. Add here 9. Auxerre, in former time a City of the Dukedom of Burgundy, but now part of Champagne; of which more hereafter. And 10. Fontenay, a small Town in Auxerriis, in the very borders of this Province; memorable for the great battle fought near it, An. 841. between the Sons and Nephews of Ludovicus Pius, for their Fathers Kingdoms; in which so many thousands were slain on both sides; that the Forces of the French Empire were extremely weakened; and had been utterly destroyed in pursuit of this unnatural War, if the Princes of the Empire had not mediated a Peace between them; allotting unto each some part of that vast Estate, dismembered by that means into the Kingdoms of Italy, France, Germany, Lorain, Burgundy; never since brought into one hand, as they were before.

Adjoining unto Champagne also, where it looks towards Lorain, lies the Country and Duchy of BARI, belonging to the Dukes of Lorain, but held by them in chief of the Kings of France. The Country commonly called BARROIS, environed for the most part with the two streams of the River Marne; of which the one rising in the edge of Burgundy, and the other in the borders of Lorain, do meet together at Châlons a City of Champagne. Places of most importance in it, 1. Bar le Duc, so called to distinguish it from Bar on the River Seine, and upon the River Albi; a well fortified Town. 2. La Motte, 3. Ligni, 4. Argon, of which nothing memorable, but that they are the chief of this little Dukedom. Of what antiquity this Dukedom is, and by whom first founded and made an absolute Estate, I am yet to seek; though probable it is, that it might take its first rise (as many other perit Signories did) out of the ruin and dismembering of the Kingdom of Lorain, or otherwise might be erected by the Earls Palatines of Champagne, out of some part of that Estate. But whether it were so or not, certain it is, that it came first to the present House of Lorain, by the gift of Rene Duke of Anjou, and titular King of Naples, Sicily, &c. who succeeded in it in the right of Isabel or Violant his wife, who succeeded in it in the right of Isabel or Violant his wife, and Mother, Daughter of Don John I. King of Aragon, and of Isabel or Violant, the Heir of Bar; and dying gave the same, together with the towns of Lambedge and Orgon, to Rene Duke of Lorraine, his Nephew by the Lady Violant his Daughter. From this Rene, it was taken by Lewis XI. who having put a Garrison into Bar, repaired the Walls and caused the Arms of France to be set on the Gates thereof. Restored again by Charles VIII. at his going to the Conquest of Naples: to buy him out by that means (if I might be true) of his pretensions to that Kingdom, which were fair and specious, since which time quietly enjoyed by the Dukes of Lorain, till the year 1633, when seized on by Lewis XIII. upon a Judgment and Arrest of the Court of Parliament in Paris, in regard the present Duke had not done his Homage to the King as he ought to have done.

The Arms herof are Azure, two Barbels back to back, Or. Some of Cross Croiset, Fitch, of the second. But to return again to Champagne; it pleased Henry Cesar at his coming to the Crown of France, to give the same to Eudes or Odons, Earl of Blais, whose Daughter he had married in his private Fortunes, before he had attained the Kingdom) with all the Rights and Privileges of a County Palatine. Which Eudes, or Odons, was the Son of Theobald Earl of Blais, and Nephew of that Gerlon, a noble Dane, to whom Charles the Simple gave the Town and Earldom of Blais, about the year 920, and not long after the time, that he conferred the Country of Neustria upon Rollo the Norman, whose Kinsman and assistant this Gerlon was in harassing and wasting the coasts of France. In the person of Theobald the third, the Earls herof became Kings of Navarre, descended on him in right of the Lady Blanche his Mother, Sister and Heir of King Sancho the eighth, Anno 1234. By the Marriage of Joan Queen of Navarre, and Countess of Champagne, to Philip the Fourth of France, furnished the Fair, both these Estates were added to the Crown of France: enjoyed by him and his three Sons one after another, though not without some prejudice to the Lady Joan, Daughter and Heir of Lewis Hutin. But the three Brethren being dead, and Philip of Valois succeeding in the Crown of France, he restored the Kingdom of Navarre to the said Lady Joan; and for the County of Champagne (which lay too near the City of Paris to be trusted in a foreign hand) he gave unto her and her Posterity, as in the way of exchange, some certain Towns and Lands in other places; though not of equal value to so rich a Patrimony.

The Arms of these Palatines of Champagne, were Argent, two Beads cotized, potentice and counterpoitence of three pieces, Or.

3. PICARDIE.

PICARDIE hath on the East, the Dukedom of Luxemburg, and Lorain; on the West, some part of Normandy, and the English Ocean; on the North, the Counties of Artois and Hainault; and on the South, Champagne, and France strictly and specially so called. A Country so well stored with Corn, that it is accounted the Granary or Store-house of Paris; but that it is the Wines which it produceth are but harsh, and of no good relish, especially in the Northern and colder parts of it.

The ancient Inhabitants of it were the Suessetor, Ambiani and Veromandri, considerable Nations of the Belge; and therefore reckoned into the Province of Belgica Secunda; but why they had the name of Picards, I am yet to seek. Omitting therefore the conjunctures of other men, some of which are groundless, and the rest ridiculous; I only say, as Robert Bishop of Arras, hath affirmed before me, Seni Seni, Seni Picardos appellet, seni Belge dicendi sunt, qui postmodum in Picardum transi erant.

The whole Country as it lieth from Calais to the Borders of Lorain, is divided into the bigger and the lower: the lower (subdivided into Saintes, Ponthieu, Boulainvill, and Guisnes: the higher into the Fidamite of Amiens, Veromandri, Rethelais, and Tiersache; in every of which there are some places of importance and consideration.

In Lower PICARDIE and the County of GUINNES, the chief Towns, 1. Calais, by Cesar called Portus Ictius (as the adjoining Promontory, Promontorium Ictius, by Plutony) a strong Town close upon Artois, at the entrance of the English Channel: taken by Edward the third after the siege of eleven months, Anno 1347, and lost again by Queen Mary in less than a fortnight, Anno 1557. So that had Musificus de Cordet then lived, he had had his wish; who used to say, That he would be content to live seven years in Hell, on condition that Calais were taken from the English. The loss of which Town was a great blow to our Estate, for till that time we had the Key of France at our Girdles: and as great a grief unto Queen Mary, who sighing presently upon it, said to those which attended her, That, if she were dead, they should find Calais near her heart. 2. Hammes, a strong place, one of the best Out-works of Calais. 3. Fleures, on the borders toward Artois, which with the County joining to it made an ancient Barony; the Patrimony in times past of the Earls of S. Paul, by whom given to Theobald the younger, Brother of Lewis Earl of S. Paul and Confessor of France, (of whom more hereafter) and from that Family conveyed to the house of Egmond, by the marriage of Francis his heir-chose to John Earl of Egmond, who died in the year 1528, and was the Father of that Earl, who after was beheaded by the Duke of Alen, Anno 1568. 4. Andres, more towards the borders of Ponthieu, memorable for the interview of Henry the Eighth, and Francis the First; and many meetings of the English and French Commissioners. 5. Guisnes, which gives name to this Division, called the County of Guisnes of which the Land of Oye wherein Calais stood (by the French called commonly Fais de Calais) was clefted a part). The Earldom antiently of the illustrious house of Grais, of which more anon.

2. In BOULOGNOIS, neighbouring on the Country of Guineux, the places of most note, 1. Blackney, a strong Fort on the Sea-side, betwixt Calice and Boulogne. 2. Chantilly, opposite to Boulogne, on the other side of the water. 3. Baillenhe, more within the Land, an Out-work to Boulogne. 4. Boulogne, by Pliny called Portus Giffricus, part of the Country of the Morini, spoken of by Cæsar: divided into the Basi or Low Town lying on the shore-side, well built, and much frequented by Pasfengers, going to, or coming out of England; and the High Town standing on the rise of an Hill, well garisoned for defence of the Port: neath it, and honoured with Bishops See, translated thence from Tonnay when that City was taken by the English. The Town and Country taken by King Henry the eighth, with infinite expence of treasure, Anno 1544, but yielded not long after by King Edward the sixth: the French redeeming it at less than a fourth part of the money, which the gaining of it had cost the Crown of England. As for the fortunes of this Country, it was once an Earldom of its self, during which time it gave one King unto Hiersusalem, and another to England. The first Earl of it which we meet with, was that Eustace, who by his marriage with Ida, the Daughter of Geoffrey or Godfrey the second, Duke of Lorraine, added the Duchy of Bouillon in Gaul-Belgick to his Earldom of Boulogne. To him succeeded in both these Titles and Estates, Godfrey, firnamed of Bouillon his eldest Son: who after the death of Godfrey the third his Cousin-german attained unto the Dukedom of Lorraine, and finally was the first and most renowned King of the Western Christians reigning in Hiersusalem. Godfrey being dead, Eustace the youngest of his Brethren became Earl of Boulogne: whose daughter Maud brought this Estate and Title to Stephen of Blais, who afterwards was King of England. Eustace the only Son of Stephen dying without issue, the rights hereof remained in his Sister Mary, the Abbess of Ramsey, married to Matthew Brother of Philip of Elfsaz Earl of Flanders. And though Matthew was commanded by the Pope to restore her again unto the Abbey out of which he had taken her; yet he kept this Country for her Children. Conveyed by Ida the eldest Daughter of this Bed to Reginald of Cheshire her third husband; by Maud his daughter to Philip second Son of Philip Augustus King of France, by another Maud (he dying without issue) to Alonso of Portugal, who succeeding after in that Kingdom, lent her back to Boulogne, and finally by Joan daughter and heir of William, this Alfonso Grandchild to Philip Earl of Artois; the Son of Eudes Duke and Earl of Burgundy; to whom he brought Philip their only Son, successful to his Grand-father in the said Estates, and to his Mother in this Earldom. But he deceasing without issue, An. 1361, and Joan not leaving any children by King John of France, whom she married after the death of her first Husband, it fell by some other of the Heirs General to the De la Tour of Auvergne (the Ancestors of the now Dukes of Bouillon) continuing in that Family till the year 1477, when bought by Lewis the eleventh of France of Bertrand de la Tour, the better to assure his Kingdom on that side against the English then possessed of the Country of Guineux. The purchase being made, Lewis the now Proprietor, did Homage for it to the Virgin Mary, in the chief Church thereof called Nigre Dame, bare-headed, on his knees, without Spurs or Girdle: and offered to her Image a massie Heart of gold of 2000 ounces; capitulating that from thenceforth he and his Successors would hold that Earldom of her only, in perpetual Homage; and at the change of every Vassal present her with a golden heart of the same weight. Since which time never aliened from the Crown of France; nor giving title unto any but to Katherine de

Medici Wife of Henry the Second, created Countess of Boulogne and Clermont, when first married to him, before then Duke of Orleans only.

The Arms hereof under the ancient Earls of Boulogne, were Or, a Banner Gules, tufted Purple: those of 'De la Tour, being a Tower embattled Sable; but the colour of the Field I do not where find.

3. PONTIEVE, so called from the Bridges, built for convenience of passage over the moorish Flats thereof, belonged formerly to the English: to whom it came by the Marriage of Eleanor Daughter of Ferdinand of Castile, by Joan the Daughter and Heir of Simon the last Earl hereof, to King Edward the first. Towns of most note in it, 1. Abbeville, seated on the Somme, well fortified and as strongly garisoned, as a Frontier Town upon and on one side unassailable by reason of a deep and moorish Fen, which comes up close to it; beautified with a fair Abbey, whence it had the name (Abbatin Villa in the Latin) and the See of a Bishop. 2. Montreuil, a well fortified Town, in the way betwixt Abbeville and Paris. 3. Crispien, where King Edward the third decaied the great Army of Philip de Valois, in the first onset for that Kingdom. Anno 1343. And 4. Trepas, a small Haven on the East of S. Valeris. Some place the Earldom of S. Paul in this Country of Ponthieu, others more rightly in Artois, where we mean to meet with it. The Arms hereof were Or, three Bends Azure.

4. And as for the Country of SAINTERRE, which is the fourth part of the Lower Picardy, the chief Towns of it are 1. Peronne, upon the River Seme, where Lewis the eleventh, the greatest Master of State-craft for the times he lived in, put himself most impudently into the hands of Charles of Burgundy, who as improvidently dismissed him. 2. Roy, and 3. Mont Didier, (Mont Desiderius in Latin) both of them strong Towns upon the Frontier; but otherwise of little fame in former Stories.

In the Higher Picardy being that part of this Country which lieth furthest from the Sea, the first division which occurs, is the Vidamie of AMIENS, so called of the fair City of Amiens, and the Vidame or chief Governor of it. Which honour as it is peculiar to the French only, so Mills in his Edition of Glovers Catalogue of Honour, will have but four at all in France, viz. this of Amiens, Chalons, Gerborgy, and that of Chartres. But certainly in France there are many more of them; as Rheims, Mans, &c. and formerly as many as it had Bishops; the Vice-dominus, or Vice-demes, being to the Bishop in his Temporals, as the Chancellor in his Spirituall; or as the Vice-comites (Vicomites) were anciently to the Provincial Earls in their Courts of Judicature: or to give you an example nearer home and of more resemblance, these French Vidames were unto their several and respective Bishops, as the Temporal Chancellors (in this Realm) of the Bishopricks of Darham, or the High Steward of the Bishopricks of Ely, to those several Bishops.

Places of most note herein, 1. Corbie, a Town of great importance, and strongly garisoned, situate on the Frontier towards the Netherlands: 2. Chaux, on the same Frontier also, but of less consideration, the Honorary seat and Title of the present Vidame; 3. Pignigni, situate on a pretty ascent of ground overlooking the Somme, on the left hand of the River betwixt Amiens and Abbeville, the ordinary seat of the former Vidames; more famous for the interview of Edward the IV. of England, and Lewis the XII. than for giving the name of Picardy to all the Province; which Mercator only of all writers doth ascribe unto it. 4. Crany an obscure Village now, but formerly of

special note for a goodly Castle, commanding over the adjoining Territory, and giving name to the illustrious Family, hence surnamed of Crany, descended from the Kings of Hungary, and the Progenitors of the Dukes of Archeat, and Princes of Chimay in the Netherlands; before their translating to which Countries by the Dukes of Burgundy, they were entituled Earls of Guise. 5. Amiens it self, seated upon the Somme above Pignigni, the River being there divided into many streams for the use and service of the Town; well built, with very strong walls and deep ditches: the loss whereof, when taken by Archduke Albert, much hazarded the affairs and reputation of King Henry the fourth, and therefore when he had regained it, he added to the former Works an impregnable Citadel. But the chief glory of this City is in the Cathedral, the fairest and most lovely structure in the West of Europe: so beautified within and adorned without, that all the excellencies of Colt and Architecture, seem to be met together in the composition. The Fronts of our Cathedrals of Wells and Peterburgh, the rich Glais in the Quire at Canterbury, the costly Imagery, and arched Buttresses in the Chappel at Wimbor (before the late defacements of those Cathedrals) might serve as helps to set forth the full beauties of it. The Towns and Territories anciently under the command of the Bishops of it, whose Officers for the Temporal government hereof called Vice-dominus or Vidames, were at first eligible by the Bishops, and accountable to them, but by degrees engrossing all power unto themselves, they became Hereditary, and gave the name of the Vidamie of Amiens to this part of Picardy. The present Vidame of it is the Duke of Chaux, who being one of the younger Brothers of Monsieur de Luyne (chief favourite to K. Lewis 13.) obtained in marriage the Daughter and heir of the former Vidame, with whom he had the Town and Castle of Pignigni, the chief command of these parts, and a rent of 9000 l. per annum, honoured the reason by the power and favours of his Brother with the title of the Duke of Chaux and Peer of France, Anno 1620, or thereabouts.

II. But not to dwell on this place too long, pass we on next to VEROMANDUIS, the ancient habitation of the Veromandri, the fairest and largest part of both Picardies; and not a whit inferior to the best of France in the number of neat and populous Cities.

The principal Towns hereof are, 1. Soissons, called anciently Augusta Suessiomum, the chief City of the Suessones or Suessiones; and the last Hold which the Romans had in all Gaul; lost by Stagnius, Governor for the Western Emperor, to Clodius the fifth King of the French. In the division of his Kingdom, made the last Royal of Clodius the Son of this Clodius; and of Aripert, and Chilperick the Sons of Clodius, from hence entituled Kings of Soissons; the Kingdom containing the whole Province of Belgica secunda, or the Provinces of Artois, Picardy, and Champagne as we call them now. But Soissons having long since lost the honour of a Regal Seat, hath of late times been made the honorary Title of the Counts of Soissons, a branch of the Royal stock of Bourbon: a Bishops See, and the Bishop whereof is one of the Twelve Peers of France, and Earl of Laon the Town in Latin, Laodunum. 3. Noyon, an Episcopal See also. 4. Chapelie, a strong place, one of the best out-works of Paris against the Netherlands. 5. Dourlans, 6. La Fere, and Haut, places of great strength also, but more near the Frontiers. And 7. S. Quintin, anciently the chief City of the Veromandri, then called Augusta Veromandorum: called afterwards S. Quintin, from that Saint here worshipped, as the Patron Deus tutelaris of it. A place of great importance for the Realm of France; and so esteemed in the opinion of the Earl of Chorlois, (after Duke of Burgundy) and King Lewis the first who first never digested the rethorick of it to that King, being pawned unto his Father (together with Corbie, Amiens, and Abbeville) for no less than 400000 Crowns the latter never would forgive the Earl of St. Paul for detaining it from him, though under colour of his service. A Town of greater note in succeeding times, for the famous battel of S. Quintin, Anno 1557, wherein King Philip the second of Spain, with the help of the English, under command of the Earl of Pembroke; overthrew the whole Forces of the French, made themselves Masters of the Town, and thereby grew so formidable to the French King, that the Duke of Guise was in post haste sent for out of Italy (where his affairs began to prosper) to look unto the safety of France it self. As for the Fortunes of this part it was once an Earldom of its self, and an Earldom of as great Antiquity as the most in France, it being once Heribert or Hebert Earl of Veromandri, who in pursuance of the quarrel of the House of Anjou surprised Charles the Simple, and carried him Prisoner to Peronne, where he after died; for which he cruelly changed by Lewis surnamed Transtramarine the Son of Charles, when he became possessed of his Fathers Kingdom; and by the Daughter and Heir of another Hebert, conveyed in marriage unto Hugh surnamed the Great, one of the younger Sons of King Henry the first of France, succeeding in her right into the title and estate of Earl of Veromandri, and by that name renowned in the first wars for the Holy Land, by Elizabeth the Necece of this Hugh, the Daughter of Rodolphus his eldest Son married to Philip of Elfsaz Earl of Flanders, it was added unto that estate; but shortly after given by the same Philip (having no children of his own) in Dowry with Isabel his Necece, daughter of Baldwin Earl of Hainault unto Philip Augustus King of France, and since united to that Crown, not giving since that time the title of Earl or Duke to any, for ought I can find.

III. More towards Hainault and Lorraine lieth the Country of RETHELOIS, so called of Reisel the chief Town; well fortified as the rest of the Frontier places, but of most note among the French, in that the eldest Sons of the Dukes of Nevers, have usually been entituled Earls and Dukes of Reisel; united to that Family by the marriage of Lewis of Flanders, Earl of Nevers, with the daughter and heir of James Earl of Reisel, An. 1312, or thereabouts. 2. S. Moubaud a Town of consequence and strength. 3. Sygnit, a strong piece belonging to the Marquels of Vieuville. 4. Chastelle-Portion, of more beauty, but of little importance. The Arms of the Earls and Dukes of Reisel were Gules, three Rakes-heads indented Or.

IV. Finally in the Duchy of TIERASCHE, the last part of the higher Picardy, we have the Town of Guise, of some note for the Castle, but of more for the Lords thereof, of the Ducal Family of Lorraine (on the borders whereof it handeth) from hence entituled Dukes of Guise. A Family which within a little compass of time produced two Cardinals, the one entituled of Guise, the other of Lorraine six Dukes, that is to say, the D. of Guise, Mayenne, Amial, Elbeuf, Aguillon, and Chevrense; the Earl of Samarrie; and besides many daughters married into the best houses in France, once married to James the 6th King of the Scots. The first, and he that gave the rise unto all the rest of this potent Family, was Clauud, Son to Rene the second Duke of Lorraine, who passing into France to take possession of the Patrimony allotted to him, followed King Henry the first in the War of Italy, where he behaved himself so valiantly at the Battel of Marignan, in which he had the chief command of the German Auxiliaries, that the King always after held him in a great esteem, and married him to Anto Rette of Bourbon, daughter ter of Francis, Earl of Vendôme; in respect of which alliance, and his other merits, he was honoured with the title of Duke of Guise. The Father (amongst other children) of Mary Q. of Scots, wife of James the fifth, and Grandmother of James the sixth, the first Monarch of Britain. The second was Francis, who endangered the Realm of Naples, scilicet the siege of the Emperor Charles at Metz, drove him out of Provence, took Calce from Q. Mary, and was at last treacherously slain at the siege of Orleans, by one of the Hugonots named Poltrois. (On the instigation of some of the chiefs of that faction) An. 1463. The third was Henry that great enemy of the Protestants, who contrived the great Massacre at Paris, and almost dispossest Henry the third of all France: He began the holy league, and was finally slain at Blais, by the command of King Henry the third. But we must know that this Town did anciently belong to the Dukes of Lorraine: and had given the title of Earl of Guise to Frederick the second Son of John, and Charles the third Son of Rene, both the first of those names; before Claud of Lorraine was advanced to the title of Duke: as being part of the Estate and Patrimony of the Barons of Jainville, of whom we spake before when we were in Champagne. Of most note next to Guise it self, is a Ripemont on the South of Guise. 3. Chasteler upon the borders towards Luxembourg, a strong Town, and none of the best out-works of France. 4. Mazures, upon the Mas or Meuse, a place of great strength and like importance; belonging properly to the Dukes of Nevers (as chief Lords thereof) in right of their descent from the house of Rabai: fortified with a strong Citadel for defence of the place, and that Citadel well garrisoned by the French King, for defence of this border; laid to the Government of Champagne, though a Town of Picardy, and therefore made by some to belong to that Province also.

As for the state of this whole Province, I do not find that it was ever passed over by the French Kings unto any one hand: as almost all the rest of France had been at some time or other, but distracted unto divers Seigneuries and several Lordships (all of them absolute in themselves, and scarce affording to the French King the slight tribute of Homage) the particulars whereof we have seen before: some of which fell to the Crown of France by confiscations, some by lawful marriages, and others by conquest; some held of England, some of the Earls of Artois, and others of Flanders, and lastly of the Dukes of Burgundy, as Lords of those Provinces: these which depended upon England, being seized on by Charles the 7. on the loss of Normandy by the English; as those which held of Burgundy, were by Lewis his Son, immediately on the death of Duke Charles, at the Battle of Nancy, Anno 1476.

4. NORMANDY.

NORMANDY is bounded on the East with the River Some, and part of Picardy, on the West with Bretagne, and some part of the Ocean, on the North, with the English Channel, by which divided from England; and on the South, with France specially so called, and the County of Main. It made up the whole Province of Lugdunensis Secunda, in the time of the Romans; the Metropolis whereof was Rouen: and in the greatness of the French Empire had the name of Neustria, corruptly so called for Neustria, the name of Wetitia or Wetionis, being given by some to this part of the Realm of Wetfrance, as that of Austria or Ostentrich to a part of East-

France. Afterwards being bestowed upon the Normans by Charles the Simple, it was called Normandy.

This flourishing and rich Dukedom of Normandy, for largeness of Extent, multitude of People, number and stateliness of Cities, fertility of Soil, and the commodiousness of the Seas, may worthily be accounted the chief of France. Well watered with the River Seine which runneth quite through it; as do also 2. the Orne, and 3. the Aven: not to say any thing of 4. Robes, 5. Ante, and 6. Reinde, and many others of less note. In length it reacheth about 170 miles, and about 60 in breadth, where it is narrowest: containing in that round the largest and fairest Corn-fields that are to be seen in all France. Of all other natural commodities it is extrem plentiful, excepting Wines; which the Northern coldness of the Climate admits not of, or sparingly at the best, and of no perfection. The people of it formerly renowned for feats of Arms, the Conquerors of England, Naples, Sicily, and the Kingdom of Antioch in the East; at this time thought to be of a more sharp and subtle wit, than the rest of the French; Scævans an pissibile ed proceps & plaudis (saith Orellius of them) especially in the quillets of Law.

It is divided into the Higher and the Lower: the Lower containing the Sea-coasts, and the Higher, the more inland parts. Principal Cities of the whole, 1. Constance a Bishop's See, the Spire or Steeple of whose Cathedral, is rarely discernable afar off, both by Sea and Land; and serves Sailors for a Land-mark. From hence the Country hereabouts hath the name of Constance. 2. Avranches, situate on a Rock with a fair prospect over the English Channel, but more near to Bretagne, than the other, the chief City of the Abrincates, called Ingenia by Ptolomy; now a Bishop's See. 3. Caen (Cadomum in Latin) an Episcopal See, as the other; strong, populous, and well built, seated upon the River Orne, second in reputation of the whole Province, but more especially famous for the Sepulchre of William the Conqueror, the University founded here by King Henry the fifth of England, and for the long resistance which it made against him, in his Conquest of Normandy. 4. Baieux (the Civitas Baiocorum of Antoninus) from whence the Country round about hath the name of Bessin. Memorial of a long time for a See Episcopal. One of the Bishops whereof, called Odo, Brother unto William the Conqueror, by the Mother's side, was by him created Earl of Norm; and afterwards, on some just displeasure committed prisoner. For which, when quarrelled by the Pope, (the Clergy being then exempted from the Secular Powers) he returned this answer, That he had committed the Earl of Norm, not the Bishop of Bayeux: By which distinction he avoided the Popes displeasure. 5. Rouen, of old Rothomagus, pleasantly seated on the Seine, and watered with the two little Rivers of Robes, and Reinde, which keep it very sweet and clean. The City for the most part well built, of large circuit, and great trading; the second fair bigness, wealth, and beauty, in all France: anciently the Metropolis of this Province, and an Archbishop's See; and honoured of late times with a Court of Parliament, erected here by Lewis the twelfth, Anno 1501. In the Cathedral Church hereof (a reverend, but no beautiful Fabric) is to be seen the Sepulchre of John Duke of Bedford, and an envious Court for King Henry the sixth: which when an envious Courtier persuaded Charles the 6. to deface; God forbid (saith he) that I should wrong him, being dead, whom living all the power of France was not able to withstand, adding withal, That he defaced a better Monument than the English had bestowed upon him. And to say truth, the Tomb is but mean and poor, short of the merits of the man, and carrying no proportion to so great a virtue.

6. Falaise,

6. Falaise, upon the River Ante, once of strength and note; the dwelling-place of Arlette, a Skinner's daughter, and the Mother of William the Conqueror; whom Duke Robert, passing through the Town, took such notice of, (as he beheld her in a Dance amongst other Damocels), that he sent for her to accompany him that night in bed, and begot on her William the Barlard, Duke of Normandy, and King of England. Her immorality that night laid to befo great, that either in regard thereof, or in spite to her Son, the English called all Strumpets by the name of Harlots, the word continuing to this day. 7. Vernerville, (Vernulium in Latin) in former times accounted one of the Bulwarks of Normandy, against the French. Of which it is reported, that when news was brought to Richard the first, that Philip furnished Augustus, the French King, had laid siege unto it, he should say these words; I will never turn my back, till I have conquered these cowardly Frenchmen. For performance of which Princely word, he caused a passage to be broken through the Palace of Westminster, and came to unexpectedly upon his Enemies, that they raised their siege, and halted homewards. 8. Alanson, of most note for giving the title of Earl, and Duke, to many Princes of the Royal Family of Valois, beginning in Charles de Valois, the Father of Philip de Valois, French King; and continuing for eight successions, till the death of Charles the Fourth, Duke of this line: conferred occasionally after that, on many of the younger Princes of the Royal Family. 9. Lysieux, on the North east of Alanson, a Bishop's See, the chief Town of the Lexovii; as 10. Caen, of the Caletes, both placed by Cæsar in these parts. 11. Eureux, an Episcopal See also, by Ptolomy called Mediolanum, the chief City anciently of the Eburones, and still rich and flourishing Town; the third in estimation of all this Province, and made an Earldom in the person of Lewis a younger Son of Philip the third; whose Son, called Philip, by his marriage with Joan Daughter of Lewis Hutin, attained unto the Crown of Navarre. But this Town, with many fair Estates in this Country which depend on it, being seized on by the French in the time of Charles the Son of this Philip, for some practices against that Kingdom; there was after given to Charles the third and last King of this house, in compensation for the same, Anno 1406, the title of Duke of Nemours, with a good sum of ready money, and a pension of 12000 l. Dieppe, yearly, issuing out of the Revenues of Brie and Champagne. 12. Guise, a strong Frontier Town towards France, whilst Normandy was in the hands of the English, or under its own Duke and Prince: notable for the many repulses given unto the French. And 13. Pontivy, another Frontier upon France; so called of the Bridge on the River of Oye, (which divides France from Normandy) on which the Town is situate, and by which well fortified on that side; but taken at the second coming of Charles the seventh, after an ignominious flight hence, upon the noise only of the coming of the Duke of Tork, Commander at that time of the Province, and the English Forces. 1. Albemar, contractedly Amert, most memorable for giving the Title of Earl to the Noble Family de Fortibus, Lords of Holdersby in England; and of Duke to Edward Earl of Rutland, after Duke of Tork. More towards the Sea, 15. S. Valeris, seated on a small, but secure Bay, betwixt Dieppe and New-baven. 16. Dieppe, at the mouth of a little River so named, opening into a large and capacious Bay: a Town of Trade, especially for the New-found-Land: remarkable for its fidelity to Henry the fourth in the midst of his troubles; when the Confederates of the Guissan Faction, called the Holy League, had ousted him of almost all the rest of his Cities, compelled him to betake himself hither, (from whence he might more easily have fled for England) and called him in derision, The King of Dieppe. 17. New-Haven, the Port-Town to Rouen and Paris, situate at the mouth of the River Seine, from hence by great Ships navigable as far as Rouen; by lesser, unto Pont de l'Arch, 70 miles from Paris: the Bridge of Rouen formerly broken down by the English; to secure the Town, lying unprepared to this day, by means of the Parisians, for the better trading of their City. By the French it is called Havre de grace, and Franciscopolis by the Latins: repaired and fortified. (the better to confront the English) by King Francis the First, and from thence so named. Delivered by the Prince of Conde, and his faction, into the hands of Queen Elizabeth of England, as a Town of caution, for the landing of such Forces as she was to send to their relief, in the first Civil War of France about Religion: and by the help of the same Faction, taken from her again, as soon as their differences were compounded. By means whereof, the Hugonots were not only weakened for the present, but made incapable of any succours out of England for the time to come: and the next year were again warred on by their King, with more heat than formerly. 18. Harfleur, and 19. Honfleur, both situate on the banks of the Seine, but of little notice at the present, because not capable of any great shipping; nor useful in the way of Trade, by reason of the interposition of New-baven, betwixt them and the Sea: the former, famous notwithstanding in our English Stories; as the first Town which that Victorious Prince King Henry the Fifth, attempted and took in, France. 20. Churburg, (the Latin call it Cæsaris Burgum) on the Sea-side also, the last Town with the English held in the Dukedom of Normandy: belonging properly and naturally to the Earls of Eureux, advanced unto the Crown of Navarre; till alienated by Charles the third of Navarre, on the composition before mentioned; but being garrisoned by the English for King Henry the sixth, it held out a siege of seven Months against the Forces of France.

Here are also in this Kingdom, the Towns of 21. Tanherville, and 22. Ewe, which have given the title of Earl, to the noble Family of the Greys, and Bonchiers, in England: as also those of 23. Harcourt, 24. Longueville, and 25. Amal, which have given the title of Duke and Earl, to some of the best Houses in France.

In this Country also is the little Signeury of IVIDOT, heretofore said to be a free and absolute Kingdom; advanced to that high dignity by Clotaire, the seventh King of the French; who having abused the Wife of one Gautier de Isidot, (so called because of his dwelling here) and afterward (to prevent revenge) killed the man himself, to make some satisfaction to his Family for so great an injury, created the Lordship of Isidot, to the estate of a Kingdom; and gave unto the Heirs of this Gautier (or Walther) all the Prerogatives of a free and absolute Monarch, as, to make Laws, coin Money, and the like. From hence the French call a man that hath but small domains to maintain a great title, a Roy d'Isidot. At last, but at what time I know not, it fell again to a Lordship, and belongeth now to the house of Belay in Bretagne.

There belongeth also to this Dukedom, but rather as subject to the Dukes of Normandy, than part of Normandy it self, the County of P E R C H, situate betwixt it and the Province of La Beausse, of which now reckoned for a part: and was divided into the higher and the lower. The chief Towns of it, 1. Nogent le Rotrou, of which little memorable, but that it is the principal of Perch Gouet, or the lower Perch, and that it took that adjunct from Rotrou, the second Earl of this County, the Founder or Repairer of it, to difference it from another of that name, called Nogent le Roy, a Town of Champagne. 2. Mortaigne, or Mortion, a Town of the higher Pereh, especially for giving the title of an Earl to John, the youngest Son of King Henry the second, after King of England; as in the times succeeding to the Lord Edmund Beaufort, after Duke of Somerset. The whole, first made a distinct Estate, in the person of Arnulph of Hesdin the first Earl thereof. Whole Son and Successor, named Raton, (of great note in the Wars of Spain against the *Moor*s, in behalf of Alfonso King of Navarre and Aragon, An. 1110) by Maud the natural daughter of Henry the first of England, unfortunately drowned with her Brother William, as they crossed the Seas; had one only daughter, named Margaret, (or as some say, Margaret) the Wife of Garcia, the seventh King of Navarre, and Mother of K. Sancho, surnamed the Wise, from whom all the Kings of Navarre have since descended. But this Family being extinct in a short time after, the Estate fell unto the English, as Dukes of Normandy; and so continued till the seizure of Normandy by the French, in the time of K. John. After which time, the title of Earl of Pereh was given to Charles Earl of Valois and Alanson, Father of Philip de Valois, French King, of Lewis Earl of Artois, and of Charles de Valois, Earl of Alanson in which house of Alanson it continued, and was commonly the title of the eldest Sons of the Dukes thereof.

But to return again to the Country of Normandy, the ancient Inhabitants thereof were the Calates, Eboracens, Leuvis, Abrinantes, spoken of before; the Belloaci, or Vendicaci, about Rouen; the Salares and Baiofices, about Sees and Baieux; all conquered first by the powerful Romans; the Romans after by the French, and the French by the Normans. These last, a people of the North, inhabiting those Countries which now make up the Kingdoms of Denmark, Switzerland, and Normandy, united in the name of Normans, in regard of their Northern situation; as in our History and Description of those Kingdoms, we shall shew more fully. Out of those parts they made their first irruption about the year 700, when they so ravaged and plagued the Maritime Towns of France and Belgium, that it was inserted in the Litany, From Plague, Pestilence, and the fury of the Normans, good Lord, &c. To quiet these people, and to secure himself, Charles the Simple gave them a part of Nenhris, (from them since called Normannia) or Normandy, together with the Sovereignty of Bretagne; enjoyed by them and their Posterity for many Ages. Their first Duke was Rolla, An. 912, from whom, in a direct Line, the sixth was William the Barlard, Conqueror, and King of England, An. 1067. After this Normandy continued English till the days of King John, when Philip Augustus seized on all Estates in France, as forfeitures, An. 1202. The English then possessing the Dukedom of Normandy and Aquitaine; the Earldoms of Artois, Tourain, Maine, Payen, and Lisieux; being in all a far greater and better portion of the Country, than the Kings of France themselves possessed. The English after this recovered this Dukedom, by the Valour of King Henry the fifth; and having held it thirty years, lost it again in the unfortunate Reign of King Henry the sixth: the English then distracted with domestic factions. After which double Conquest of it from the Crown of England, the French distrustful the affections of the Normans, and finding them withal a stubborn and untractable people, have miserably oppressed them with Tolls and Taxes, keeping them always poor and in a low condition; in-somuch as it may be said of them, that they are the most beggary people that ever had the luck to live in so rich a Country. But it is time to look on

The Dukes of Normandy.

- An. Chr.
- 912 1 Rolla of Normandy, made first Duke of Normandy, by Charles the Simple; by whose perswasion baptized, and called Robert.
- 917 2 William, surnamed Longflee, from the length of his Sword.
- 942 3 Richard, the Son of Longflee.
- 980 4 Richard the II. Son of the former.
- 1026 5 Richard the III. Son of Richard the Second.
- 1028 6 Robert the Brother of Richard the Third.
- 1035 7 William the bale Son of Robert, subdued the Realm of England; from thence called the Conqueror.
- 1093 8 Robert the II. eldest Son of William the Conqueror, put by the Kingdom of England by his two Brothers, William and Henry, in hope whereof he had refused the Crown of Hierusalem, then newly conquered by the Forces of the Cyberian Princes of the West. Outed at last, imprisoned, and deprived of sight by his Brother Henry; he lived a miserable life in the Castle of Cardiff, and lieth buried in the Cathedral Church of Gloucester.
- 1102 9 Henry the first, King of England.
- 1134 10 Stephen, King of England, and D. of Normandy.
- 11 Henry Plantagenet, D. of Normandy, and after King of England; of that Name the second.
- 1161 12 Henry the III. surnamed Court-mantle, Son of Henry the second, made D. of Normandy by his Father.
- 1189 13 Richard I. surnamed Cœur de Lion, King of England, and D. of Normandy, Son of Henry the second.
- 1199 14 John the Brother of Richard, King of England, and D. of Normandy, outed of his Estates in France, by King Philip Augustus, An. 1202, before whom he was accused of the Murder of his Nephew Arthur, found dead in the Ditches of the Castle of Rouen, where he was imprisoned; but entered causa inaudita, for his not appearing. After this, Normandy still remained united to the Crown of France, (the title only being born by John de Valois, afterwards King, and Charles the fifth, during the life-time of his Father) till the Conquest of it by the Valour of King Henry the fifth, Anno 1420, which was 218 years after it had been seized on by King Philip Augustus, and having been holden by the English but 30 years, was lost again, An. 1450, in the unfortunate reign of King Henry the sixth. Never since that, dismembered from the Crown of France; having that Lewis the eleventh, the better to content the Confederate Princes, conferred it, in Appenage, on his Brother Charles Duke of Berry, An. 1465; but within two Months after, took it from him again, and gave him in exchange for it, the Dukedom of Guyenne, which lay further off from his Associates.

What

What the Revenues of this Dukedom were in former times, I can hardly say. That they were very fair, and great, appears by that which is affirmed by Philip de Comines; who faith, that he had seen raised in Normandy, 95000 l. sterling money; which was a vast sum of money in those times. As also by this testimony of the D. of Burgundy, who held King Lewis the eleventh to be weakened a whole third part in his Estate, by giving Normandy in portion to the D. of Berry. Now they amount unto as much as the Kings Treasures and Toll-masters are pleased to draw out of it.

The Arms of Normandy were Gules, two Leopards Or, which with the fingle Leopard, or Lyon, being added for the Dutchy of Aquitain, make the Arms of England.

5. BRETAGNE.

BRETAGNE is bounded on the East with Normandy, and the County of Maine; on the South with Artois, and Poitou; on all other parts with the English or Gallick Ocean. Watered upon the South-side with the Loir, which divides it from Artois; but so, as part of this Dukedom, called the County of Raiz, lieth on the South-side of that River, betwixt it and Poitou.

It was first called Armorica, from its situation on the Sea, as the word importeth in the old Language of that People. But how it came by this new name, is not well agreed on. The general opinion is, That it took this name from the neighbouring Britons, brought over hither by the Tyrant Maximus, rebelling against the Emperor Gratian, Anno 389, by whom this Province was subdued; and from them named Britannia Minor, Little Britain. An Argument whereof may be, that the Language of this people hath still no small affinity with the Welsh or British; there being a Tradition also, that the Britons who first came over hither, and married the Women of this Country, cut out their Tongues, for fear they should corrupt the Language of their Posterity. And to this Conquest by the Britons, these old Verses give this further countenance.

Vicit Atremoricas animas Britannia gentes,
Et dedit imperio, nomina prisca, jugo.

That is to say,

Gaul-Armorick, the Britains overcame,
And to the conquered Province gave their name.

Notwithstanding, the most probable opinion seemeth to be, That it took this name from the Britains, an old Gallick people, mentioned by Pliny in Gaul-Belgica; retiring hither on the Invasions and Incursions of the Barbarous Nations; though possibly those Britains of Gallia-Belgica, might be as well some Colony of the Island-Britains, as the Belge, a great Nation in the Isle of Britain, are said to have been a people of Gallia-Belgica. The reason is, because there was no Author before Geffrey of Monmouth, who takes notice of this transporting of the Island-Britains, by the Tyrant Maximus; no ancient Author, Greek or Latin, making mention of it. And for the Welsh or British words, which are still remaining in the Language, they are conceived to be of no other than a remainder of the old Gallick Tongue, which was originally the same with the ancient British, as is elsewhere proved.

The Province is in compass 200 French Leagues, pleasant and fruitful; beautified with many shady Woods; and spacious Downs; sufficiently well stored with all manner of Grain; but delitute of Wine and the choicest Fruits, by reason of the Northernly situation of it. Divided commonly into Haut or High Bretagne, and Bess or Low Bretagne: the first containing the more Eastern, and the last the Western parts hereof. Neither of the two much furnished with navigable or notable Rivers: the defect of which, the Neighborhood of the Sea supplieth, affording more capacious Havens; and convenient Ports, than any one Province in this Kingdom.

To begin therefore with the Havens: those of most note in the Higher Bretagne, are 1. S. Malo, built on a Rock within the Sea, wherewith at every high-water it is encompassed. A Bishops-See, and a Port very much frequented by the French and Spanish, who use here to barter their Commodities; oftentimes spoiled by the English, in the Wars with France, especially since the time of K. Henry the seventh. 2. Blauet, a safe, but little Haven, on the mouth of a little River of the same name also. Impregably fortified by the Spaniards, An. 1590; when taking opportunity of the broil in France, and pretending a good title to this Dukedom, on the expiring of the Male-Issue of King Henry the second, he thought by this door to have entered on the whole Estate; but quitted it again on the general Peace made between the Crowns. 3. S. Brieux, (by the Latin called Pannu Sancti Brieux) a Bishops-See, and a well traded Port, seated upon the English Channel. 4. Pannet, a Bishops-See also, situate on a spacious Bay, at the mouth of the Vilain; the chief Town of the Veneti, whom Cesar placeth in this Tract, and makes them to be the mightiest people of all the Armoricans; strongest in shipping, and best seen in Affairs at Sea. 5. Craffie, a little Haven at the mouth of the Loir, and the only Haven of this part on the Gallick Ocean. Then in Low Bretagne, or the more Western parts thereof, there is, 6. Brest, seated upon a spacious Bay of the Western Ocean: the Key and Bulwark of this Country, and the goodliest Harbor of all France. 7. Morlaix, a convenient Port, and well frequented. 8. S. Pol de Leon, and 9. Triguin, both Bishops-Sees, both situate on the Sea-shore, and both the chief Towns of the Offism, whom Plutony and Strabo place upon this Coast: the first of them neighbored by the Promontory, which they call Le Four, the Gouven of Plutony. 10. Kemper Corentin, a Bishops-See also, the chief Town of that part hereof which is called Cornuwall, (and called so for the same reason as Cornwall in England is) (situate not far from the Foreland, which they call Pennmarc, opposite to Le Four, spoken of before. A Sea-Town this, but not much talked of for the Haven, for ought I can find. 11. Conquet, a well frequented Road, not far from Brest. Chief places in the Midlands, 1. Nanter, the principal City of the Nannetes, (by Plutony called Conduincium) a large, fair, strong, and populous City, seated upon the Loir, a Bishops-See, and the Metropolis of Bretagne. 2. Rene, anciently the chief Town of the Rhedones, (called Condate by Plutony) now a Bishops-See, and the Parliament City for this Country, established here, An. 1553, which maketh it very populous, and of great resort, though not fully two miles in compass. 3. Det, an Episcopical-City also, but unwisely seated amongst Marishes. 4. Dinan, a rich and pleasant Town on the River Nance. 5. L'Amblee, the chief Town of the Ambiliars, spoken of by Cesar. 6. Rohan, the title and inheritance of the Dukes of Rohan, descended from a branch of the Ducal Family of Bretagne, by Mary the second Daughter of Duke Francis the first, and Wife of John, then Viscount of Rohan. 7. Anstet, the chief Seat of the now Duke of Vendisme, and the French Kings Cellar by especial Edict. The City very pleasant, seated on the River Loyre, well built, situated in a sweet Air, and planted with a Civil and ingenious People; who are said to speak the best Language of any in France. For a time it was the chief Seat of a distinct Kingdom, (according to the provident humour of the Merovingians) the Lot of Clodomir Son of Clotaire the Great, and of Gunttram Son of Clotaire, both Kings of Orleans; as also was Theodorick, the second Son of Childbert King of Metz, on the death of Gunttram. But Sigibert his Son being vanquished by Clotaire II. this Kingdom extending to the shores of the Aquitain Ocean, was added unto that of France. Orleans being at that time, content with the lower Title, had of late oftentimes with greater prudence, been made the honourary Title of the second Sons of France, called Dukes heretofore, the first who had the Title, being Philip II. Son of Philip de Valois from a wife Son of whose, the Earls of Dunois, and Dukes of Langeulle do derive themselves, and Lewis the second Son of Charley I. Grand-father of Lewis XI. French King. It is See Epi-fopul, a Balivick, or Siege Presidial, and an University. The See Epi-fopul founded in the Church of St. Croix, miserably ruined by the Hugonots in the Civil Wars, out of meer hatred to the name. The Siege Presidial settled here by King Henry II. 1557. for the ease of his Subjects of these parts, in sutes not worth the troubling of the Courts of Paris. The University erected by King Philip le bel, Anno 1312, though, to speak properly, it be an Hall only for the reading of the Civil Laws, the only Learning there professed, and for that considerable. A Town now not of so great strength as in former times, when for some months it held out against the whole Power of the English, rescued from them at last by the valour of Joan the Virgin, whose Statue (like a man of Arms) is still preserved on the Bridge-gate of this City; near which great Montacute Earl of Salisbury had his fatal blow.

THE MIDDLE or intermediate BEAUSSE lieth betwixt the former; in which the places of chief note are, 1. Blais, seated also on the Loir, in a sound Air, and fruitful Country; the Nursery for the most part of the Kings Children, for that cause much resorted to by the Nobility, and honoured sometimes with the residence of the Kings themselves: it being in the Council Chamber of the Kings House here, that Henry of Lorreine, Duke of Guise, the chief contriver of the terrible Massacre at Paris, and Author of the Holy League, was slain by the command of King Henry III. Anno 1589. 2. Chateaudun, the chief Town of the Earldom of Dunois, (the honour and Estate of John Earl of Dunois, commonly called the Bastard of Orleans, one of the best Soldiers of his time, and so approved by his exploits against the English) mounted upon the top of an high Hill, at the confluence of the Loir, and Agre. 3. Lavardin, most remarkable for giving name and honour to a noble Family, which depending upon the House of Vendôme (to the Signeury whereof it doth belong) brought forth that valiant Commander, Montfieur de Tardis, a faithful and courageous Follower of King Henry IV. in his long War against the Leaguers. 4. Vendôme, Vindocinnum in Latine, the chief Town of the Dukedom of Vendôme; not otherwise of note than for the Earls and Dukes which have born this Title; of which as being the Progenitors of the Kings now regnant, I have thought fit to add the ensuing Catalogue; premising first, that this Earldom came to the House of France by the marriage of Katharine daughter and heir of John, the last Earl of the former Race, to John I. the first of the other Family.

Earls and Dukes of Vendôme.

- 1386 1. John of Bourbon, Grandchild of Lewis I. Duke of Bourbon, the first Earl of Vendôme of this Family.
- 1432 2. Lewis of Bourbon, a confederate with Joan the Virgin in her actions against the English.
- 1446 3. John of Bourbon II. from whom descended the Princes of Roce-Survon, and the Dukes of Montpensier.
- 1472 4. Francis of Bourbon.
- 1495 5. Charles of Bourbon, the first Duke of Vendôme, from whose youngest Son, called Lodovick or Lewis, descend the now Princes of Cande, and Earls of Saillon.
- 1532 6. Antony of Bourbon, Duke of Vendôme, and King of Navarre.
- 1562 7. Henry of Bourbon, Duke of Vendôme, and King of Navarre; afterwards King of France also, by the name of Henry IV.
8. Cesar de Vendôme, of the Sons of Henry IV. by the Dutchess of Beaufort, created by his Father Duke of Vendôme, and once designed his Successor in the Crown of France. Afterwards by the procurement of the King his Father, married to the Daughter and Heir of Philip Emmanuel, Duke of Mercoeur, (a younger branch of the House of Lorreine) possessed of a fair and goodly Estate in the Dukedom of Bretagne, in the right of his Wife, a Daughter and Heir of the House of Mariignis (a branch of the Family of those Dukes). By means whereof the Duke of Vendôme hath not only a large inheritance, but great authority in that Country.

The Arms of the Earls and Dukes of Vendôme, were and are, Azure, six Flower de Lys, Or, 3, 2, 1. Those of the former Family affirmed by Barro, to have been France, on a Bond Gules, three Lions, Or. But the great Lords of this Country, were the Earls of Blais, possessed not only of the Earldom of Chambray (a fair and goodly Signeury) in the highest Barfief, but also of the whole County of Tourain, a better Patrimony and Estate than that, which how they were alienated from those, we have seen before. And as for the Earldom of Blais it self, it contained a large and gallant Patrimony in the middle Barfief, thereto belonging; which being after sold to the Dukes of Orleans, gave the first greatness to that House. As for the Earls of Blais themselves, they fetch their Pedigree from one Gerlon a noble Dane (Companion in Arms unto Rollo the first Duke of Normandy) in his acquiring of that Dukedom, by Charles the Simple, created the first Earl heretofore, Anno 920, or thereabouts, branching it self into the Houses of Blais and Champagne; sometimes united in one person, but for the most part, and at last divided into two great Families; Stephen King of England, commonly called Stephen of Blais, derived both his name and Parentage from the Earls of this House, (as being Son of Theobald, the fifth Earl of Blais, by Maud one of the Daughters of William Duke of Normandy and King of England, furnished the Conquerour. From this Theobald the Earls of Blais continued in the Maleline Line, till the year 1219, under nine Princes in the first, of the House of Gerlon. And then it fell by the Heirs general, to the noble Family of Chastillon, continuing thence till the year 1391, when sold by Guy de Chastillon, the last Earl of that House, to Lewis Duke of Orleans, he being then Childless, and wholly governed by his Wife (a Daughter of the House of Navarre) who could not otherwise maintain her great prodigality, but by ready money. United finally to the Crown, by Lewis

The Arms of these great Earls were Gules, three Palis, Vaire, a Chief, Or.

8. NIVERNONIS.

NIVERNONIS is bounded on the North, with the Beaufort, on the South, with Barbaronia, on the East, with Champagne; and on the West, with Berry; so called from Nivernum, or Nevers, the chief Town thereof.

This is the smallest Province in all this Continent, but to be handled here apart, because not easily reducible unto any other, as all the rest of the lesser Provinces may be. The Soil not very fruitful of Corn or Wine, but plentifully stored with rich Pastures, and well bedded with Woods, in which are found some Mines of Iron, interperfed with Silver, and many Quarries of good Stone, of much use for building. The Territory being but small, we cannot look for many Towns of note and consequence. Of those that be, the principal are, 1. Pontigny, remarkable for an ancient Abbey, the burial-place of some of the old Earls of Nevers. 2. Nevers it self, upon the Loire, beautified with a Bridge of twenty Arches, but otherwise not great or fair, though the chief of this small Country, and the seat of the Dukes. The reputation which it hath, proceeding specially from the Antiquity thereof, and the Earls and Dukes from thence denominated.

Once part of the Burgundian Conquests, and from them won by the French; it came to have Princes of its own almost as early as any other Country in the Realm of France. Who was the first that had the Title of Earl of Nevers, and therewithal the Lordship of this Estate, I can no where find; but thus I am, that in the year 1001, both the Estate and Title were enjoyed by Ludovic a Nobleman of the Burgundian Race, who on the death of Henry IV. Duke of Burgundy, was like to have seized on that Estate, in despite of Robert King of France, who pretended to it, passing through many Families, it came at last to the House of Burgundy, in the person of Odo, the Son of Hugh the fourth of that name, Duke of Burgundy, by the Heir-General of Nevers; and from that to the House of Flanders, by the marriage of Toland, or Burgundy, to Robert of Bethune, Earl of Flanders, 1512, whole Son, named Lewis, married the Heir of Rebail; uniting, by that marriage, these Estates under his command. Together with the rest of the Rights of Flanders, it came again, by marriage, to Philip the Hardy, Duke of Burgundy; who with the liking and consent of his elder Sons, (otherwise well provided for) conferred both it and Rebail, on his third Son Philip, whose Necece Elizabeth, Daughter and Heir of John of Burgundy, brought it in marriage to Adolph of Cleve, her Husband, Anno 1484. In the Person of Francis, the fourth Earl of this House, it was made a Dukedom; and by his Daughter Henrietta, Sister and Heir of Francis the last Prince of this Family, was brought in Dowry to Lewis de Gonzaga, second Son of Fredrick Duke of Mantua, Anno 1563; whose Son Charles succeeded his Father and Mother in the Dukedom of Nevers, and Father of Gonzaga, his Cousin German, in the Dukedom of Mantua. And here it is to be observed, that though this Estate hath passed through so many Families; yet the Rights and Regalities thereof, have been still continued; not being hitherto reduced (for ought that I can find) under any of the Parliaments of France, as all the rest of that Kingdom is, but each parts thereof as are either under other Princes, or else enjoy the Privileges of a free Estate.

The Arms heretofore are, Azure, within a Border Compos, Gules, and Argent, three Flowers de Lys, Or.

9. THE DUKEDOM OF BOURBON.

THE DUKEDOM OF BOURBON, in the full power, and extent thereof, comprehended Bohemania, Artois, Beau-jolois, and Amoygne; all now reverted to the Crown.

1. BOURBONIS hath on the East, the Dukedom of Burgundy; on the West, Berry; on the North, Nivernois, and a Corner of Gallinais; on the South, Auvergne; so called from Bourbon, (for distinction sake, called Bourbon Archenbault) the chief Town thereof. The Country very well Wooded, and of excellent Pasturage; which makes the people more intent to grazing and feeding Cattel, than they are to Tillage; and is watered with the Rivers of Loire, Tonne, and Allier, which are counted navigable; besides Aron, Acolis, Lixentes, Lambos, and some lesser streams.

It is divided into the Higher and Lower: in the Higher which is more mountainous and hilly, there is no other Town of Note than that of Montaigne, situate in the Country of Combraille; the Signeury, as I take it, of Michael de Montaigne, the Author of the Book of Essays. But in the Lower Bourbonois, are, 1. Molins, esteemed the Center of all France; situate on the Allier, a Ballage, and the chief Town of this Country; the River yielding great plenty of Fish, but of Salmons specially; the Town adorned with a fair Castle, and that beautified with one of the finest Gardens in France, in which are many trees of Lemmons and Oranges. 2. Bourbon Archenbault, and 3. Bourbon Ancien; the former of the two, seated upon the Loir, and giving name to the whole Province; of great resort by reason of its Medicinal waters. 4. St. Porcin, and 5. Varennes Genat, upon the Frontiers of Auvergne, 6. Chancellie, 7. Charraux, 8. Palisse, 9. Sourguin, 10. Amand.

The ancient Inhabitants were part of the Hedui, who being wasted in their Wars against the Romans, a great part of their Country was by Julius Caesar, conferred on the Boii, a German Nation, who coming with the Helvetians into Gaul, and unwilling upon their defeat to go home again, were by him planted in this Tract, at the request of the Hedui, who desired it of him; and possibly the Hedui might be willing to have these Boii dwell amongst them, not only to fill up their numbers, and manure the waste Grounds of their Country; but in regard of some nearer tie that was between them: it being conceived by many Learned men, that these Boii, which together with these Commanni, Senones, and other Gallick Nations, crossed over the Alpes, had been originally of these parts: and being driven out of Italy by the conquering Romans, fell into Germany, and from thence lent those Auxiliaries to attend the Helvetians in their journey, spoken of before. Made subject to the Romans, with the rest of Gallia; and by them reckoned as a part of Aquitania: it continued under their command, till the coming of the Burgundians, by whom it was subdued, and made a part of their Kingdom; in the subverting of which Kingdom, it was (together with Beau-jolois) subdued by the more powerful Franks; and how disposed of afterwards, we shall see anon, having first taken a view of the other Provinces.

2. FORRETT, is bounded on the East, with Beaujolois; on the West, with Auvergne; on the North, with Bourbonnais; and on the South with a part of Langue-doc. The Country populous and large, but not very fruitful; hilly and mountainous, much of the nature of the Wood-lands. The Air a little of the coldest to afford good Wines; but is sufficiently recompensed by abundance of Pit coal; by which they have very good fires at a cheap rate. The people are conceived to be none of the wildest, but withal, very greedy and covetous of gain.

The chief Towns in it, are, 1. Mont-brison, seated on the Loire. 2. Fours, seated on the same River, called anciently, Forum Segesfanorum, the chief Town of the Segesfani, or Secusfani, whom Cæsar and others mention in this part of Gaul. 3. St. Stephen, (or Estienne) in Ferrand, near the head of that River. 4. St. German, 5. St. Rimbey, 6. St. Bennet le Chateau, 7. St. Guernier, &c. of which little memorable.

This Country of Forrest was anciently a part of the Earldom of Lyons; dismembered from it at or about the same time with Beaujolois; and was held by a long succession of Earls Proprietaries of it, as a State distinct, till Regnaud, Lord of Forrest, the Son of Earl Guy, by the marriage of Isabel, Daughter and Heir of Humbert Earl of Beau-jeu, joined them both together; which was about the year 1265; parted again after his decease, An. 1280. Guy being his eldest Son, succeeding in Forrest, and Lewis his second Son, in Beau-jeu. How they became united in the House of Bourbon, we shall see anon.

3. BEAUJOLOIS, so called from Beau-jeu, the chief Town hereof, taketh up the tract of ground betwixt the Loire and the Gasse; and betwixt Linnion and Forrest. A Country of no great extent, but very remarkable for the Lords and Princes of it, who have been men of great eminence in their several times. The chief Town of it, is Beau-jeu, beautified with a goodly Castle, pleasantly seated on the brow of a rising-mountain, from whence perhaps it took the name; as the great Keep in Farnham Castle, was in the same fence, and for the same pleasant situation, called Joyous Guard, in the time of Lancelot du Lake, whose that Castle was. Which appears further by a Tower built at Constantinople, by Guiscard the third of that name, Lord hereof, (being then Embassador to the Emperor, from King Philip Augustus) with this Inscription, Turris Belli-jocensis; which there continued to be seen a long time after. 2. Belle-ville, where is an Abbey founded by Humbert II. Anno 1158. 3. Ville Franche, environed with Walls by Humbert IV. whose Son Guiscard III. above mentioned, founded here a Convent of Benedictines, called to this day, Mignorette. 4. Noirande, 5. St. Maurice, 6. Uffe, 7. Obbeis, concerning which, there have been long and many Wars betwixt the Earls of Forrest, and the Lords of Beau-jeu.

This Country, as that other of Forrest, was once part of the Earldom of Lyons; in the partage of which Estate, it fell to Osprey, one of the Brothers of Earl Artand, Anno 989, whose Successors had no other Title than Lords of Beau-jeu. They were most of them men of great Piety, Founders of many Collegiate and Conventual Churches; some of them men of action also: Humbert the second, and the fifth, Adventurers in the Wars of the Holy Land; Richard II. in those against the English; Guiscard IV. made Constable of France, by King Lewis IX. But the House failing in this Guiscard, it was united unto that of the Earls of Forrest, as before is said, in the person of Regnaud, Earl thereof, whose Son and Successor, called

Lewis was also Constable of France; as Edward, the Grandchild in this Lewis, a Marshal of it. But at the last it fell into the hands of a Jew and wicked Prince, Edward II. who being imprisoned at Paris for his great Offences, and overlaid with Wars by the Dukes of Savoy, made a Donation, or Free-gift, of all his Signeuries, to Lewis Duke of Bourbon, turnamed the Good; the direct Heir of Guy Earl of Forrest, the eldest Son of Regnaud Earl of Forrest, the Lord of Beau-jeu above mentioned, and consequently of next kin to him An. 1400.

4. AUVERGNE hath on the East, Forrest, and Lyons; on the West, Limousin, Perigord, and Quercy; on the South, part of Langue-doc; and on the North, Berry, and Bourbonnais. It is divided into the Higher and Lower. The Lower being called Limaigne, is fruitful in a very eminent degree. The Higher, mountainous and barren. In this last, the Towns of chief note are, 1. St. Flour, a Bishops See of an impregnable situation. 2. Arles, on the River Jourdain, defended with a strong Castle on the top of a Rock. 3. Beaugard, on the River Gardon. 4. Carlat, 5. Murat, 6. Ellon, of which little observable in ancient stories. In the Lower, called Limaigne, from a River of that name which falls into the Allier: there is, 1. Clermont, a Bishops See, fair and pleasing for the situation, and Fountains descending from the Hills of the higher Auvergne, the chief City of the whole Province. Most memorable in these latter Ages, for the Council here called by Pope Urban II. Anno 1067, in which by the Article of the Pope, the Christian Princes of the West engaged themselves in the Wars of the Holy Land; giving thereby the better opportunity to the Popes to enlarge both their Territories and their Power. It was first raised out of the ruins of Gergovia, the head City of the Auvergne, in the time of Cæsar; and the Seat-royal of Vercingetorix, King of that Nation, who so long put him to his trumps with the Army of 138000 men: now a small Village called Gergon. 2. Rion, in which resides the Seneschal, or chief Governor of the Lower Auvergne. 3. Montpensier, of great note for the Princes of the House of Bourbon, once Dukes hereof; beginning in Lewis the first Earl, Son of John Duke of Bourbon, An. 1415; and ending in Henry the last Duke; whose Daughter and Heir was married to the Duke of Orleans Brother of Lewis XIII. 4. Montfaucon, 5. Uffois, 6. Brionde, 7. Aiguacresse, 8. Tyronne, the ancient Seat and Patrimony of the De La Tour, heretofore Earls of Boulogne, now Sovereigns of Sedan, and Dukes of Beaulieu; to whom it hath for some Ages given, the Title of Vicomit. A Family descended from the Heirs general of Eustace, Earl of Boulogne in Picardy, Father to Godfrey of Bouillon, Duke of Lorraine, and King of Jerusalem.

The Country first inhabited in the times of the Romans, by the potent Nation of the Auverni; whose King Bittius, was taken Prisoner, and led in triumph unto Rome, in the War against the Salii, the Allobroges, and other of their Confederates. Not fully conquered, till Cæsar had subdued their King Vercingetorix. They were afterwards part of the Province of Aquitania prima; retaining, in the olden changes of the Empire, its old name of Auvergne. Heretofore part of the great Duchy of Aquitain; remaining subject to those Dukes, till William the eighth Duke, and the fourth of that name, gave it in portion with one of his Daughters, whose name I find not, nor the name of her Husband neither; of whom there is nothing on record, but that he took up Arms against Lewis VI. who began his Reign, Anno 1110. By the Heir-general of this House, it was conveyed in marriage to John the second Son of Guigut

Guigut IV. and Beatrice, Dauphin of Viennois, in whose Line it continued under the title of the Dauphins of Auvergne till Berard, the last Earl or Dauphin of it. Who having married the Heir of Guy Earl of Forrest, the Son of Regnaud above-mentioned, had by her a daughter named Anne, Heir of both Estates, married to Lewis the Good, the third Duke of Bourbon; to whom Edward the last Lord of Beau-jeu, made a Donation or surrender of that Signeury also, uniting in his person the distinct Estates of Bourbon, Beau-jeu, Forrest, and Auvergne.

And as for Bourbonnais it self, in the distractions of the French Empire by the policy of Charles the Great, who most improvidently Cantoned it into many great Estates, and petit Signeuries, it fell unto the share of the potent Family of the Dampierre, descended from the ancient House of Burgogne; who held it till the year 1308. At what time Lewis IX. for the advancement of Robert Earl of Clermont (in Francoisus) his fifth Son, married him to Beatrice, Daughter and Heir of Archebald Dampierre, the last of that House. Lewis the Son of this Robert, was the first Duke of this Line; whose Successors and their Achievements, follow in this Catalogue of

The Lords and Dukes of Bourbon.

- 1308 1. Robert, Son of King Lewis IX. Earl of Clermont; the first Lord of Bourbon of the House of France.
- 1317 2. Lewis, the first Duke of Bourbon, Peer, and Chamberlain of France; from whose second Son Jaque, comes the House of Feudisme.
- 1341 3. Peter, Peer, and Chamberlain; slain in the Battle of Poitiers, An. 1356.
- 1356 4. Lewis II. called the Good; in whose person all these Estates were first united: Peer, and Chamberlain of France, and Governor of Charles VI.
- 1410 5. John, Peer, and Chamberlain; taken Prisoner at the Battle of Agincourt, and died in England: the Root of the Family of Montpensier.
- 1434 6. Charles, Peer, and Chamberlain; General of the Army against the English, in the Isle of France.
- 1456 7. John II. Peer, Chamberlain, and Constable of France.
- 1487 8. Peter II. Brother of John, Peer, Chamberlain, and Regent of France, in the absence of Charles VIII.
- 1503 9. Charles Earl of Montpensier, Duke of Bourbon in the right of Sofian his Wife, Daughter and Heir of Peter the second, Duke of Bourbon. After whose death, being slain at the sack of Rome, An. 1527, without Issue, his Estate fell unto the Crown; and so continued till by the Sentence of Arrest of the Court of Parliament in Paris, Auvergne, Forrest, and Beau-jeu, were adjudged to Madam Louise, Mother of Lewis the first Duke of Montpensier, and Daughter and Heir of Gilbert Duke of Bourbon, Earl of Montpensier, the Nephew of John Duke of Bourbon, (the first of that name) of which House she was the only surviving Heir; from whence descended Henry, the last Duke of that Family, spoken of before. And for the title of Auvergne, it was used customarily, by the eldest Sons of the Earls and Dukes of Montpensier; till given to Charles, natural Son of King Charles IX. called from hence, the Count or Earl of Auvergne; who being a Confederate of Charles Duke of Biron, was in the year 1604. made Prisoner by King

Henry IV. released by King Lewis XIII. Anno 1616. and within two years after made Duke of Angoulême: in whose Pottery it remaineth.

The Arms of these Dukes were, 1. France, a Bastion, Gules, for the Dukedom of Bourbon. 2. Or, a Dauphin Palmé, Azure, for the County of Auvergne. 3. Or, a Lion Sable, armed Gules, under a Label of five pieces of the same, for the Signeury of Beau-jeu. The Arms of the Earldom of Forrest, I am yet to seek. But anciently, the Arms of Bourbon, when under the Dampierres, were Or, a Lion Rampant Gules, environed with Cockle shells of Azure.

10. BERRIE.

HAVING thus taken a view of those several Provinces which (except Bretagne) were the first purchases of the French in the modern France; and so much of the Burgundian Conquests, as were either laid to the Kingdom of West-France, or else were necessarily to be paid over in the course of our Journey: let us next look on those which were possessed by the Gules. And first we will begin with BERRIE, (as next in situation with those before described) bounded on the East, with Bourbonnais and Nivernais; on the West, with Poitou; and on the South with Limousin; in Lainie called Bismurgen regio, from the Bismurges, the old Inhabitants of this Tract; by Pliny, Strabo, and some others, called the Bismurgeni Cabi, to difference them from the Bismurges Obisii, dwelling about Bardoneus.

The Country watered in the East with the River Loire; in the South, with the Fage; in the North, with the Chers; and in the Island parts, with Indre, Arnon, Thos, Eure, and others which we shall meet withal anon: of no great note, but such as much conduce to the fruitfulness of it: affording it the benefit of fair Pastures and flourishing Meadows; which breed great multitudes of Cattel, and such flocks of Sheep, that when they tax a man for lying in excess of numbers, they use to say, Eye, Sir, there are not so many sheep in Berrie.

It containeth in it 33 Walked Towns; the chief whereof are, 1. Bourges, a Town of great strength by Nature, and as well fortified by Art, situate in a low Flat, amongst deep impassable Bogs and Marshes, caused by the overflowing of the Auron, Tenre, Malon, and Auronne; small Rivers, but of great waters when they meet together: by means whereof, it may be easily drowned at the approach of an Enemy: for that cause made the Fairfairs and Retreat of Charles VII. in his long Wars against the English, possessed at that time of Paris, and the greatest part of the Kingdom. The poor Prince in the mean time fain to feed it here with a Rump of Mutton, and a Chick, and that but upon high days neither. From his constant abode here, and that withal he had been Duke of his Country, in the life of his three elder Brethren, by the English in derision called King of Berie. A large, fair, and rich Town it is, the Seat of an Arch-bishop: a Siege-proof, and one of the best Universities in France, especially for the study of the Civil-Laws; first founded by King Lewis IX. and afterwards restored and perfected by Charles Duke of Berie, the Brother of King Lewis XI. Some Fabulous Founders, and Ridiculous Originations, have been thought of for it; as that it was built by Ogyges, a Grandchild of Noah; by whom called Byoggers; which in the corruption of the following times, came (forsooth) unto Bituriges; which Etymology, were it as dear bought, as it is far fetch'd, might be good for Ladies; and then it would be good for some what. Others, no less absurdly, will have it called Bituris, quasi Biturris, from two fair Towers which formerly (as they pretend) were erected here: one of the two, in part, still standing: and unto this, they say, aludeth an old Grammarians, thus:

Turris à binis, inde vocor Bituris.

From two Towers which were builded here,
The name of Bituris I bear.

But the truth is, it was thus called from the Bituriges, (the Bituricum Civitas of Antoninus) and by that name, in the division of old Gaul by the Emperor Constantine, made the Metropolis of the Province of Aquitania prima: of which this Country was a part. 2. Warron, or Viarzon, pleasantly seated amongst Woods, Vines, and Rivers; the Rivers Arnon, Theu, Cher, and Yonne, meeting hereabouts, built in or near the place of the old Avanienum, a Town of great note and strength in the time of Cæsar: the revolt whereof gave such a check to his proceedings, that he was fain to stretch his wits and valour on the very tenter-hooks, before it was again recovered. 3. Conserfont, on the River Sauldre, beautified with a strong and magnificent Castle. 4. Château-Roux, on the River Indre: of which little memorable. 5. Issoudun, on the River Theu, the Balliage for that part of the Country. 6. Montfaucon, an ancient Barony. 7. Argentan, on the River Creuse, the Title and Estate of Philip de Comines, hence called Signeur de Argenton, who writ the History of France under Lewis XI. in which he dived so far into, and went too largely of, the greatest affairs of State, that Queen Katharine de Medicis used to say, That he had made as many Heresies in State Policy, as Luther had done in Religion. 8. Sancerre, seated on a high Hill near the River Loire; by some Latine Writers called Xantodorum; but more generally said to be so called, quasi facrum Cæcis, from the Goddess Ceres, herein worshipped in the times of Gentilism. A Town of great consequence and strength; and as such, assigned over to the Hugonots, An. 1569. as a Town of Caution for their security, and the better keeping of the Articles of Peace then agreed upon. Famous not long after, for enduring a most desperate and tedious siege under Charles IX. by whom those Articles were almost no sooner made than broken. Before which time, it was not under the command of the French Kings, but under the direct Dominion of its own Princes, called the Earls of Sancerre, who had the Sovereignty thereof: but being taken by the Kings Forces upon this occasion, An. 1572. and the Walls thrown down, a Garrison was put into the Castle, to keep it for the time to come at the Kings devotion, the Rents and Profits of it still remaining to the true Proprietaries.

Here is also in this Province, the Town and Seigneurie of Aubigny, adorned with many Privileges an ample Territory, and a beautiful Castle. Befowed by Charles VI. on Robert, the second Son of Alan Stewart, Earl of Lennox in Scotland, for his many signal Services against the English; and is still the honourary Title and Possession of the second branch of that Noble and illustrious Family, hence called by the name of Lords of Aubigny.

But as for Berry it self, and the Fortunes of it, we may please to know, that the old Inhabitants of it, were the Bituriges Cubi, (or the Fiterges Liberi, as some Writers call them) subdued, but not without great difficulty, by the matchless Cæsar: in the first division of Gallia, made part of Aquitain; and in the new-moulding of that Province, by the Emperor Constantine, a part of Aquitania prima, won from the Romans by the Goths, and from them by the French, it was for long time under the command of Provincial-Governours, one of which, called by the name of Godfrey, obtained that dignity from Hugh Capet; and his Posterity enjoyed that Office under the Kings of France, till the days of King Henry I. of whom the Inheritance and Estate was bought by Harpin, one of the defendants of that Godfrey. But long he had not held it as Proprietary, in his own right; when desirous to make one in the Holy Wars, he sold it back again to King Philip I. (the better to furnish himself for that Expedition) An. 1096. to be united to the Crown after his decease. Since which time, the Sovereignty of it hath been always in the Crown of France; but the Possession and Revenue sometimes given, with the Title of Duke, for a portion to some of the Kings younger Sons; to be holden of them in Apanage, under the Sovereignty and Command of the Donors, and his Successors. The first of those that held this title was John, a younger Son of John King of France, and Uncle unto Charles VI. during whose Reign, betwixt this Duke and those of Burgundy and Orleans, the Realm of France was miserably distracted into Broils and Factions. The second was another John, Son of Charles VI. who dying in his minority, was succeeded in this Title by his Brother Charles, Successor to his Father in the Crown it self. The fourth and last, (for it had no more than four Dukes in all) was Charles, the youngest Son of King Charles VII. who siding with the Earl of Charolais, did so much trouble the Affairs of France under Lewis XI. by whom he was made Duke of Normandy, and of Guicenne afterwards; but held neither long. After whose death, it was united to the Crown; never since separated from it: but though it never had Duke since, it hath had three Dukes; first giving the Title of Dukes to the Lady Joan, Daughter of Lewis XI. and Wife to Lewis XII. then Duke of Orleans, created herein by her first Husband; when coming to the Crown he divorced her from him, to make room for the Lady Anne, Duchess of Bretagne, the Widow of Charles VIII. his Predecessor. Conferred after her decease, but on more honourable grounds, by King Francis I. on the Lady Margaret his Sister, first married to Charles Duke of Alanson; and after his decease, to Henry of Albert, King of Navarre, the last that had this Title, being another Margaret, Daughter of the said King Francis, married to Philibert Emmanuel, Duke of Savoy.

II. POICTOU.

POICTOU is bounded on the East, with Tourain, Berry, and Limousin; on the North, with Bretagne, and Anjou; on the South with Xaintonge, a member of the Dukedom of Aquitain; and on the West, with the Aquitain Seas.

It is called in Latine, Pictavia, from the Pictones, as Protonius, Cæsar, and some others; or the Pictavi, as Antoninus calleth them, the old Inhabitants hereof; and is a Country so great and plentiful, that there are numbered in it 1200 Parishes, and three Bishopsricks. A strong argument of the populousness and largeness of it. Besides the goodness of the Soil, it hath many other great helps to enrich it; that is to say, a large large Sea coast, some capacious Harbours, not a few Navigable Rivers emptying themselves into the Sea: besides the benefit which redounds to it from the Clin or Clavien, the Creuse, and Vienne, their Rivers falling into the Loire; which also glides along on the North thereof.

The principal Towns and Cities of it are, 1. Poitiers, in Latin Pictavis, seated upon the Clin, or Clavien; by Protonius called Augustonorum: the largest City for compass of ground within the Walls, next to Paris it self, but containing in that circuit, Meadows, Corn-fields, and other waste grounds. It is an University, especially for the study of the Civil-Law; and a See Episcopal: one of the Bishops hereof being St. Hilary, surnamed Pictavensis, that renowned Father of the Church, and a stout Champion of the Catholic Faith against the Arians, though contumacious in their Heretic by the Emperor Constantine. 2. Sauri, upon the River Charente, near the edge of Xaintonge. 3. Talmont, upon the shores of the Ocean. 4. Beaumont, a Sea-Town also, and a reasonable good Port, near the confines of the Bretagne. 5. Roche-sur-yon, so called for its situation on the Ten, or Tou; which gave the title of Prince to one of the Branches of the Royal race of Bourbon. 6. Lusignan, on the River Tou, also denominated the noble Family of Lusignan, sometimes Kings of Hierusalem, and afterwards of Cyprus; which last they had in exchange for the first, by the donation of King Richard the first of England. 7. Lusson, or Lusson, seated upon a Navigable arm of the Sea: sufficiently famous in being the Episcopal See of the renowned Cardinal of Ribichien, who so long managed the affairs of France for King Lewis the thirteenth. 8. Maillets, a Bishops See also. 9. Thouars, which gives the title of Duke to the ancient Family of Tremouille, from which the Dukes of Bretagne did derive themselves: from the time that Constantine the daughter and heir of Conan, after the death of Geoffrey Plantagenet her first Husband, had Guy of Thouars for her second. 10. Chapel Heraldu, (or Coltrun Heraldu) on the River Vienne; of which James Hamilton, second of France, the better to assure him to the French Faction there, against the English, had the title of Duke.

In the Vine-fields of this Country, within two leagues of Poitiers, was fought that memorable Battle between John of France, and Edward the son of King Edward the third, surnamed the Black Prince. Who being distressed by number of the French, would willingly have accepted on honourable terms: which the French not accepting, instead of Conquels, found a fatal overthrow. The greatness and particulars whereof, we shall hereafter see in the like of King John. For they presuming on their own strength, to their disadvantage, beset the Enemy of all opportunity of retiring; whereas ordinary Policy would instruct the Leader of an Army, as Count Poitain used to say. Hereupon Thémistocles would not permit the Grecians to break the Bridge made over the Hellespont by Xerxes, lest the Persians should be compelled to fight, and so happen to recover their former losses: and Charles the sixth, lost his Army, by intercepting of our Henry the fifth, in his march to Calice. For, where all way of flight or retreat is lost, the basest Soldier will rather dye with glory in the front of his battle, than flye and be killed with ignominy. So true a truth this Proverb of ours, Make a Coward fight, and he will kill the Devil. On the contrary, it hath been the use of divers Politick Captains, to make their own Soldiers fight more resolutely, by taking from them all hope of safety, but byattel. So did William the Conqueror; who at his arrival into England, burnt the ships which transported his Army: thereby giving the Soldiers to Arms, and courage of their Hearts; not in the nimble benefits of their heels. Tariffe, the Leader of the Moors into Spain, burnt likewise all his Navy, one only Pinnace excepted; which he reserved to carry tidings of his success. So when Charles Martel encountered that infinite Host of the Saracens, (of which you have already heard) he commanded the people of Tours to open the Gates only to the Victors. Then held his Army over the Loire, placing on the Banks thereof, certain Troops of Horse-men, to kill all such as fled out of the Field. Hereby informing his men, that there was to them no more France, than what they fought on, unless they were Conquerors. In like manner, the same Thémistocles cunningly working the Persians to enclose the Greek Navy on every tide, counselled the Grecians with such courage, by a necessity of fight, that they gave their enemies the most memorable defeat that ever happened on those Seas.

But to proceed, the people of this Province have more in them of the old Gaul, than any in France; as lying so betwixt the borders of the Goths and French, that it was never thoroughly planted or possessed by either. An argument whereof may be, that they are naturally more rude, subtil, crafty, and contentious, than the rest of their Country-men; and have a Dialect by themselves, much differing from the common French, having many words mixt with it, questionless some remainders of the ancient Gallick, which the natural Frenchmen understand not. In the division of Gaul by the Emperor Constantine, they were reckoned for a part of Aquitania Secunda, and as a part thereof, won from the Romans, with Limousin, Perigord, and Quercu, by Enricus King of the Goths in Spain. Of whose Kingdom it continued part, till those Goths were dispossessed of their hold in France, by Clouis the fifth King of the French, surnamed the Great. After which, it belonged to the Kings of that people; by the posterity of Charles the Great, assigned to some Provincial Governours, with the title of Earls. One of which being named Elter, (of the old Gothib race, if I guess right) by the last Will and Testament of William the Debonaire, Duke of Aquitain, and Earl of Auvergne, succeeded in that fair Estate. Poitou, by this means, made a part of the Dukedom of Aquitain, came with it at the last to the Kings of England, as shall there be shewn; and being theirs, was given with the title of Earl, by King Henry the second, to Richard, surnamed Cœur de Lyon, who was after King. Seized upon by the French, in that unfortunate Reign of King John, with theretof of the English Provinces, Anno 1202. Alphonso, Brother to Lewis the ninth, is made Earl of Poitou; and being again recovered by King Henry the third, it was by him conferred on his Brother Richard Earl of Cornwall. But Henry being entangled in the Barons Wars, and Richard wholly taken up with the affairs of Germany, of which by some of the Electors he was chosen Emperor; it was fully conquered by the French; and never since dismembered from that Crown, for ought I can find. For, though in the more active times of King Edward the third, some of the best Towns and pieces of it, were possessed by the English; yet were they lost again soon after, according to the various successes and events of War.

22 LIMOSIN, 13 PERIGOT, 14 QUERCY.

THESE PROVINCES I have joyned together, because for the most part they have followed the same fortune; being sometimes French, and sometimes English, according to the successes of either Nation.

1 LIMOSIN, the largest of the three, hath on the East, Bourbonnois; on the West, Perigot; on the North, and North-west, Poitou, and Berry; on the South, Auvergne. It is divided into the Higher, properly called Limosin; and the Lower, commonly called La Marche: both parts, but specially La Marche, which lieth towards Auvergne, being mountainous, and not very fruitful; but of a free and open Air: inhabited by a people of a more mild and sober nature than the rest of the French, frugal in expence, and moderate in diet; only so great devourers of Bread, that they are grown into a By-word.

The chief Towns in La Marche, or the Lower Limosin, are 1 Lindlar, seated in a rough and hilly Country, a Bishops-See 2 Ozarcus, seated amongst the Mountains, on the River Vezere, a very fierce and violent current, with which fo fortified on all sides, that it is thought to be a very strong and secure dwelling. 3 Trenac, 4 Danfense, 5 Belmont, 6 Messac, 7 Brive Le Gaillard, &c. In the Higher Limosin, the chief Towns are, 1 Limoges, a Bishops-See, the principal of the Levanciers, from whom denominated; by Ptolemy called Katishum. A neat, but no large City, rich, populous, and inhabited by a people of so great an industry, that they compel every one to work; and is therefore by the French called the Prison of Beggers: seated on the Vienne. At the taking off when revolted, Edward the Black Prince could by no means be allured to pity the distressed Citizens, till pursuing his Enemies, he saw three French Gentlemen make head against his Army; the consideration of whose magnanimity, drew him to pity, where before he avowed revenge. 2 Chaluz, at the besieging of which, our Richard the First was slain by a shot from an Arbalist; the use of which War-like Engine, he first showed to the French. Whereupon a French Poet made these Verses on the person of Atrapos.

*Hoc volo, non alia Richardum posse perire,
Ut, qui Francigenis Baliste primis usum
Tradidit, ipse sui rem primis expiator:
Quamq; aliis decuit, in se vim feriat aris.*

It is decreed, thus must great Richard die.
As he that first did reach the French to dart
An Arbalist; 'tis just he first should trie
The strength, and taste the fruits of his own Art.

The man that shot him, was called Bertram de Gardou; who being brought before the King, (for the King neglecting his wounds, never gave over the Assault, till he gained the place) boldly justified his action, as done in the service of his Country; and for revenge of the death of his Father and Brother, whom the King had caused to be slain. Which heard, the King not only caused him to be set at liberty, but gave him an hundred shillings sterling, in reward of his Gallantry, 3 Soubterren, on the confines of Berry. 4 Confolat, Dorat, on the River Vienne. 5 Boiffon, 7 Biras, of which nothing memorable.

2 PERIGOT, hath on the East, Auvergne and Quercu, on the West, Xaintoigne; on the North, Limosin, and on the South, some part of Gascogne. The Country and people, are much of the same condition with that of Limosin; having that Perigot is the more woody; and those Woods plentiful of Chestnuts. The chief Towns of it are, 1 Perigeanx, the principal City of the Petragri, by Ptolemy called Vellena? now a Bishops See: some foot-steps of which name remain in a part of Perigeanx, (for the Town, it is divided into two parts) which to this day is called Vellene; in which standeth the Cathedral Church, and the Bishop's Palace. The whole City seated in a very pleasant Valley environed with Dunes, affording a most excellent Wine, and having in it, as a mark of the Roman greatness, the ruins of a large and spacious Amphitheater. 2 Bergerac: seated on the great River Du. Amphibiteater. 3 Sarlat, a Bishops-See. 4 Nantoux, defended with domes. 5 Sarlat, a Bishops-See. 6 La Roche, 7 Marfa, where is a Well which ebboeth and floweth according to the pulse of the River of Bourdeaux. And 8 Angoulême, in the North-west towards Xaintoigne, the seat of the Engilmesnes, in the time of the Romans; now a Bishops See: seated upon the River of Charente, with which it is almost encompassed: the other side being defended by a steep and rocky Mountain. A Town of great importance when possessed by the English; being one of their best out-works for defence of Bourdeaux: one of the Gates thereof being to this day called Chande, seems to have been the work of Sir John Chanda, Banneret, one of the first Founders of the most Noble Order of the Garter since covered from the English by Charles the Fifth, it was bestowed on John, the third Son of Lewis Duke of Orleans, Grand-Father of King Francis the First, with the title of an Earl only, An. 1408. Afterwards made a Duke, when in the Person of the said King Francis, before his coming to the Crown. And for the greater honor did as much of the adjoining Country was laid unto it, it maketh up a Territory of about 24 French Leagues in length; and 15 in breadth: within which circuit are the Towns of Chasteau-neuf, and Coignat, on the River of Charente. 3 Roche Foulcon, 4 Chabannes, 4 Meriville, 6 Villabur, &c. Since that united to the Crown, it hath of late times given the title of Duke to Charles Earl of Anjou, An. 1618. the late son of Charles the ninth, consequently extracted from the House of Angoulême.

3 QUERCY is encompassed about with Limosin, Perigot, Languedoc, and Auvergne. A populous Country, for the biggest, (being one of the least in all France) and very fruitful withal, though somewhat mountainous. The principal places in it, 1 Cabery, the chief City of the Cadurci, in the times of the Romans; still a great, strong, and well-traded Town, and the See of a Bishop, who is also the Temporal Lord of it: seated upon the River Loch. From hence defended and took name the noble Family of Charorais de Cadurci, in Latin: out of which, by a Daughter of Patrick de Cadurci, Lord of Osmore and Kidwilly, in the Marches of Wales, married Henry the third Earl of Lancaster, came the Kings of England, and most of the Royal houses in Europe. 2 Montalban, a Bishops-See also built on the top of an high Mountain, and so well fortified by all advantages of art, that it is thought to be the most defensible of any in France: of which it gave sufficient proof in that notable resistance which it made to King Lewis the thirteenth, in his Wars against those of the Religion, Anno 1621. 3 Soulac, upon the River Dordogne. 4 Nigrepelliss, another of the Towns possessed by the Protestant Party, reduced to the obedience of King Lewis the thirteenth, Anno 1621: but in November following, they murdered the King's Garrison, and the next year denied admission to the King.

King. Taken at last, An. 1622, by the King in Person: the Punishment did exceed the Crime. For, the men were not only killed and hanged, as they had deserved; but many of the women also; some of them having their secret part rammed with Gun-powder, and so torn in pieces, by the unparalled Barbarism of the merciless and revengeful Soldiers. 5 Chasteau-Sarasin, a strong Town on the Garond. 6 Nazare, 7 Berzac, &c.

The ancient Inhabitants of these three Provinces, were the Leuonices, the Petrovrii, and the Cadurci, before mentioned; of which the Leuonices, and Cadurci, were call into the Province of Aquitania Prima; the Petrovrii, and Engilmesnes, into Aquitania Secunda. In the declining of that Empire, seized on by the Gals; but from them speedily extorted by the conquering-French. Afterwards, when King Henry the third of England, released his right in the Provinces of Normandy, Fleissie, Anjou, Tourenn, and Main; Lewis the 9th, to whom his Release was made, gave him in satisfaction of all former Interstices, 300000 l. of Anjorian money, the Dukedom of Guienne, the County of Xaintoigne, as far as to the River of Charent, with the Province of Limosin. And on the Capitulation made between Edward the third of England, and John of France, then Prisoner to him; Perigot and Quercu, (among other conditions) were assigned over to the English, discharged of all Relief and Homage to the Crown of France. After which times respectively, they remained all three in the possession of the English, until their final expulsion by King Charles the 7th; never since that dismembered from the Crown of France.

15 AQUITAINE.

THE Dukedom of AQUITAINE, the greatest and goodliest of all France, contained the Provinces of 1 Xaintoigne, 2 Guienne, 3 Gascogne; with the Isles of Oleron and Ree, and other Islands in the Aquitainick or Western Ocean.

XANTOGNE is bounded on the East with Limosin and Perigot; on the West with the Aquitainick, Oceans on the North with Poitou; and on the South with Guienne. So called from Saintler, one of the principal Cities of it; as that from the Santonae, a Nation here inhabiting in the time of the Romans, whose Chief City it was. The River of Charente running through the middle, and so on the North border of it, emptieth it self into the Ocean, just opposite to the Isle of Oleron; having first taken in the Seigne, and the Bontonne, two lesser Rivers.

The chief Towns of it are, 1 Saintler, by Ptolemy called Mediolanum; by Antoninus, Civitas Santonum, seated upon the Charente; a Bishops See, and the Seneschallie for the County. 2 St John de Angellie, situate on the Bontonne, a Town once impregnablely fortified; whereof it hath given sufficient testimony in the Civil Wars of France about Religion, until the fatal time it was dissolved; as what time (viz. An. 1621) after a siege of forty days, it was taken by King Lewis the thirteenth, the Fortifications demolished, the Town left open, and commanded from that time forwards, to be called by the name of Lewis Bourg. Bourg for La Mer, upon the Dordogne, which for the wideness of it, is here called a Sea. 4 Rever, seated near the confluence of the two great Rivers, the Garond, and the Dordogne. 5 Blays, the most Southern Town of all this Country, defended with a strong Castle, and a goodly Garrison for securing the passage unto Bourdeaux; this Town being seated on the very mouth of the River which goeth up to it. 6 Rochele, Kapella in the present Latin; but anciently called Santonum Portus, as the chief Haven of the Samones; a well-noted Port in the most Northern part of Xaintoigne; from whence the Country hereabouts is called ROCHELOIS. The Town seated in the inner part of a fair and spacious Bay; the entrance of which is well assured by two very strong Forts, betwixt which there is no more space, than for the passage of a good Ship: every night closed up with a maffy chain, and the whole Town either environed with deep Marishes, or fortified with such Bulwarks, Trenches, and other Works of Modern Fortification, that it was held to be, as indeed it was, the safest retreat for those of the Reformed Religion, in the time of their troubles; as may be seen by the story of it, which in brief is thus. At the end of the second Civil War, An. 1568, many Towns considering how ill the former Peace had been observed, refused to take in any of the King's Garrison, or permit any of the Populists to bear Arms amongst them; of which Rochele was one; which also contrary to the King's command, maintained a Navy for their safety by Sea, and continued their Fortifications for their defence by Land. So that hither the Queen of Navarre, and her Son, retired, as to a place of safety, An. 1572. Rochele alone, of all the French Towns, held good for the Protestants, and is by Montfieur Juville on all sides blocked up: but the siege soon raised, and Rochele, Montalban, Sauterre, with others, made cautionary for the Peace ensuing, An. 1575, besieged by Biron the elder, with an Army of 50000 men, and 60 pieces of Artillery: Charles the ninth, Henry Duke of Anjou, the Duke of Anjou, &c. being also present at the service: it held out from the beginning of March, till the 7th of June, and was then forced, the City having in one month endured 13000 shot, and the King lost 20000 men amongst them, the Duke of Anjou for An. 1575 and 78, it was attempted by Landerac, the Ille of Ree taken, but soon recovered: the King of Navarre, and Prince of Conde, after the defeat, being received in triumph. Anno 1577, besieged to Sea-ward by Laurens; who being also beaten back, a Peace was made, and eight cautionary Towns, more added to their former strength. In the troubles of 85, and 88, the Princes above-named made it their retreat; and from thence issued to divert the purposes of the Duke of Morace. The next year, Henry the third being slain, and the King of Navarre seated in the Throne, the Protestants encircled exceedingly in power, and number; and taking advantage of the minority of Lewis the thirteenth, governed themselves apart as a Free Estate, Rochele being made the Head of their Commonwealths; fortified to that end with 12 Royal Bastions of Free-shot, with double Ditches, deep, and broad, in the bottom, abundantly furnished with Powder and Ammunition, 150 pieces of Cannon, besides Culverins and smaller Pieces, with Victuals, and all other necessaries, to endure a siege; and grown unto so great wealth, that there were thought to be an hundred or six-score Merchants, worth 100000 Crowns apiece. This drew upon them the great Wars in the year 1621, and 1622. Which ended in the loss of all their Garrisons except Rochele and Montalban; those to remain in pledge with the Protestant Party, but for three years on. Which time expired, the Rochele were again besieged both by Sea and Land, the Ille of Ree took from them, their Fleet broke at Sea, and the mouth of their Haven fo barred up with ships chained together, and sunk into it, and other Works of stupendous greatness, in the very Ocean, that no Foreign succours out of England, (whoever really

- 1241 7 Roger IV. surnamed Rosier, a companion of the King S. Lewis in the Holy Land.
- 1255 8 Roger-Bernard II. son of Rosier.
- 1262 9 Roger-Bernard III. who added Bearn and its Appendices unto his Estates.
- 1306 10 Gaston the son of Roger-Bernard the third, and of Margaret de Moncade the Heir of Bearn.
- 1315 11 Gaston II. son of Gaston the first, a great Enemy to the English in behalf of Philip de Valois; and as great a friend to the King of Aragon against the Moor, in which Wars he was slain.
- 1344 12 Gaston III. for his beauty surnamed Phœbus, inferior for Revenue and the Port he lived in, to few Kings in Christendom.
- 1390 13 Matthew Earl of Castillon, son of Roger-Bernard Earl of Castillon, the second Son of Gaston the first: designed successor to John King of Aragon, whose eldest Daughter he had married, but dispossessed thereof by the Duke of Montau.
- 1399 14 Archembald Captain of Buche, and Isabel Sister and Heir of Matthew Earls of Foix.
- 1413 15 John Son of Archembald, a great Enemy to the English in behalf of Charles the seventh of France: his younger Brother Gaston, as great a friend unto the English, succeeding in the Estate of Bischoe. From Peter the second Son of this John, descended Odet de Foix, Lord of Lauriech, so renowned in the Wars of Italy.
- 1436 16 Gaston IV. Son of J. b. a principal Agent in the Conquest of Guienne from the English; by his marriage with Eleanor Daughter and Heir of John King of Navarre, advanced his house unto that Kingdom; Grandfather by John Viscount of Narbonne his second Son to Gaston de Foix Duke of Nemours, slain at the taking of Rovenne, Anno 15125.
- 1472 17 Francis Phœbus Nephew of Gaston the fourth, and of Eleanor of Navarre by their Son Gaston Prince of Viane, succeeded his said Grandfather in the Earldom of Foix, and his Grandmother in the Realm of Navarre about seven years after.
- 1483 18 Katharine the Sister and Heir of Francis, by her marriage with John Earl of Albert, added that Earldom also to the house of Foix.
- 1517 19 Henry of Albert Son of John and Katharine, King of Navarre, Sovereign of Bearn and Earl of Foix, by his marriage with the Lady Margaret, Sister to King Francis the first, added the greatest part of the Lands of Armaignac unto his Estate.
- 1556 20 Antony of Bourbon Duke of Vendosme, and Joan his Wife, Daughter and Heir of Henry or Albert, Kings of Navarre, Sovereigns of Bearn, and Earls of Foix.
- 1572 21 Henry II. Son of Joan and Antony King of Navarre, Sovereign Lord of Bearn, and Earl of Foix; on the murder of Henry the third of France, succeeded also in that Kingdom by the name of Henry the fourth, Anno 1589, the Father of Lewis the thirteenth, and Grand-father of King Lewis the fourteenth, now reigning, An. 1648. And so having brought the Earls of Foix to the Crown of France, it is time to leave them. The Arms of these great Earls we have seen before.

2 The Earldom of BEGORRE is situate North of Bearn, at the foot of the Pyrenean Mountains: so called from the Bigerones, the old Inhabitants herof in the time of Cæsar. Scattered in which, and the adjoining Principality of Bearn, live a leprous and infectious people of noisom breaths, deformed bodies, and ghastly visages, in which regard, not suffered to have any commerce with other people, nor to inherit any Lands; but only to apply themselves to drudgery, and the basest of mechanic trades. From their great misshapen heads called Capes or Gabets.

Chief Towns herof are 1 Figneres, famous for Medicinal Baths. 2 Lourde, of which nothing memorable. 3 Tarbes, (Antonine called Turfanibia) seated upon the River Adour, honoured with a strong Castle, an Episcopal See, and the Senechallic for all the Country of Begorre. Which Country having for long time its own Proprietary Earls, under the Sovereignty and Homage of the Crown of Navarre, from the Kings whereof they were extracted, or those Kings from them; was at the last, by the marriage of Petronilla, Daughter and Heir of Esquibart the last Earl, to Bafon Viscount of Marfan and Gabardun, added to that house. Whose Daughter Mattheu, marrying to Gaston Prince of Bearn, increased that Principality with those goodly pieces of Marfan, Gabardun and Begorre; all brought into the house of Foix, by Margaret, Daughter of this Gaston, married to Roger-Bernard, as before is said.

The Arms herof were Azure, a Cross Argent; By Inigo Arjila the son of Simon, Earl of this Country called to the Crown of Navarre, made the Arms of that Kingdom; whereas before that time, the Arms thereof had been Argent, on a Tree Vers, a Cross in chief, Gules. Which Arms are said to be took by Gracia Ximenes the first King of Navarre, from such a Sign appearing to him in the Sky, before his first battle with the Moor.

4 The Earldom of COMMINGES lieth betwixt Bearn and Foix, running betwixt both as far Northward, as to border Eastward on Begorre. Divided into the Higher, and more mountainous part, situate at the foot of the Pyrenees, and the Lower, which hath somewhat more of the valley in it. The old Inhabitants of both, the Comense and Conferani. The principal places at present in the Lower Comminges are, 1 Lombes, a Bishops See but of late creation. 2 Moret, upon the River Garonne 3 Samatan. 4 Liesse on Dordon. And in the Higher there is, 1 Conseran, once the chief Town of the Conferani, now a Bishops See, situate at the foot of the Pyrenean hills. 2 S. Bernard, of old called Civitas Conseranorum, a Bishops See also, and the chief City of this Earldom. 3 S. Beaz, 4 S. Brogu, 5 Morgeau, or Mons Regius, 6 Sillieres, &c.

Of the Estate of this Earldom I have little to say, but that it was united to the House of Foix, by the Marriage of Eleanor, the Daughter of an Earl herof, to Gaston the second of that name, and the eleventh Earl of this House. Given afterwards notwithstanding to a Spaniard called Rodrigo de Villandrada, by Charles the seventh, but in the end restored again to the house of Foix, by the prowess and great services of Gaston the fourth, who called his Uncle Matthew, the youngest Son of Archembald and Isabel Earls of Foix to be settled in it, according to the will and purpose of his Father Archembald, who had given it to him. But falling to the Crown again, it was conferred on John of Leson, a Bastard of the Earl of Armaignac, who was Earl of Comminges; and one of the Marshals of France in the time of King Lewis the eleventh. The Arms of these Earls were Gules, four Orles in saltier, Argent.

5 The Earldom of ARMAIGNAC, the greatest of all these Estates considered severally and apart, lieth on the North of Comminges, and so extendeth it self to the banks of the River Garonde. Principal Towns are, 1 Aus, upon the River Gez, anciently called Augusta Ausconum the the Metropolis or head City of the Province of Novempopulania; by consequence an Archbishops See: The Revenues whereof are said to be the greatest of any Prelates in France, computed at no less than 40000 lper annum. 2 Ledouze, a Bishops See, called of old Leforacium, in our modern Latin Ledodurum. A Town so well fortified, when in the power of the Earls of Armaignac, that it held out a siege of three months against the Forces of France; but since it came into the hands of the French Kings, so strengthened and embattelled according to the modern Art of Fortifications, that it is held the strongest Bulwark of the Kingdom on this side, and their surest Fortres against Spain. 3 Liste de Jourdain, which hath the title of an Earldom, bought at the price of 38000 Crowns, of John Duke of Bourbon, by John the fourth Earl of Armaignac, An. 1421. 4 Avallier, 5 Auzan. 6 Chastellaneu. 7 Malbouquer. 8 Nestes, of which little memorable.

The Earls of Armaignac fetch their Original from the Kings of Navarre. Sanebo the great, having subdued some Lands in Gascogne, which he conferred on Grasius a younger son of his, with the title of Earl of Armaignac, Anno 1014. On which foundation it increased so fast, both in power and honour, that Bernard the fourth Earl herof, came to be Countable of France. And so did John the fourth of that name, by the favour of King Charles the seventh: who also writ himself, by the grace of God Earl of Armaignac; according to the title of Sovereign Princes. A man of so considerable power in these parts of France, that the marriage of a Daughter of his to our Henry the sixth, was thought the best means for establishing his Estate in Guienne. And I remember it was charged on the Duke of Suffolk, that by breaking of this alliance for that of Anjou, he had been the cause of the loss of the King's pieces in France. This greatness made him subject to the jealousy of King Lewis the eleventh, who worried him out of his Estate and his life together. Charles, Brother of this John, succeeded by the favour of King Charles the eighth. After whose death the said Estate was seized on to the use of the Crown; till given again by Francis the first to Charles Duke of Alanson, (whose Grand-father had married with a Sister of the said Earl John) and to the Lady Margaret his Wife, the said Kings Sister, who, after the decease of the Duke of Alanson, brought it to Henry of Albert, and King of Navarre, her second Husband; returning so to the Original from whence first it came.

The Arms of these great Princes, were quarterly 1 Argent, 3 Lyon Azure; 2 Gules, a Leopard Lyon Or, the 3, &c.

6 The Earldom of ALBERT is situate on the North-west of Armaignac, bordering upon Guienne. The chief Town whereof is 1 Nerac, seated on the River of Ratze; the only place of strength and moment in all this Estate: 2 Chastell-Jalone, well fortified to disturb the Trade betwixt Bordeaux and Gascogne, but not able to endure a siege; 3 Mont de Marfan and 4 Tartas, both seated on the River Adour: and all four formerly Towns of Caution for the cause of the Reformed Religion; of which this Country is so full, that the Papists Religion had hardly any footing in all this Territory. Which, though the smallest of the fix, and of least Antiquity, had yet the fortune to incorporate all the rest into it. For John, the son of Alan Earl of Albert, by his marriage with Katharine, Daughter and sole Heir of Gaston, son of Gaston of Foix, and of Lenora Princess of Navarre, added to his Estate the Signeures of Bearn, Foix, and Begorre. And Henry of Albert his son, by marrying the Lady Margaret, Sister of King Francis the first, united to it those of Armaignac and Comminges. By Jean the Daughter of this Henry, the whole Estate was brought Antony of Bourbon, Duke of Vendosme, and Father to King Henry the fourth becoming so united to the Crown of France, from which it was at first dismembered.

The Arms of these Earls, were Quarterly 1 Franke; 2 Gules, a Border engrailed Arg. The third &c.

7 As for the Country of AGENOIS, the last part of Gascogne, it never had other hearts (after it left off to be French) than the Dukes of Aquitain. The principal Cities of it, 1 Agen, a rich populous and well-traded Town, seated on the Garonne, in a fruitful Country; a Bishops See, a Senechallic, and held to be the fairest in Gascogne. 2 Condon, a Bishops See also, from which the parts adjoining are called Condounois. 3 Villeneuve, 4 Clairac, 5 Marman, 6 Foys, &c.

Thus having took a brief view of those several members which make up the great body of the Dukedom of Aquitain; let us next look on the Estate of the whole thus brought together: which in the declination of the Roman Empire, was given unto the Goths, before possessed of all Gallia Narbonensis, by Valentinian the third, as a reward for their service in driving the Alani out of Spain. Long the Goths had not held it, when they were outed of it by Clodius the fifth King of the French, continuing under his Successors, till Ludovius Pius made it a Kingdom, and gave it unto Pepin his youngest Son. But Charles and Pepin, the Son of this Pepin, being dispossessed by Charles the Bald, it was by him conferred on Ranulph, of the house of Burgundy, for his many good services against the Normans, Anno 844. Whose Successors take here in this order following.

The Dukes of Aquitain.

- 844 1 Ranulph of Burgundy, first Duke of Aquitain.
- 775 2 William, Earl of Auvergne, Nephew of Ranulph.
- 902 3 Ebler, Earl of Poitou, succeeded in Aquitain, and Auvergne, by the Will and Testament of Duke William.
- 911 4 Ebler II. Son of Ebler the first.
- 935 5 William II. the Son of Ebler the second.
- 970 6 William III. Son of William the second.
- 1019 7 Guy, the Son of William the third.
- 1021 8 William IV. Son of Guy.
- 1086 9 William V. Son of William the fourth.
- 1156 10 Lewis the seventh of France, in right of Eleanor his Wife, sole Heir of William the fifth.
- 1152 11 Henry Duke of Normandy and Earl of Anjou, &c. in right of Eleanor his Wife, divorced from Lewis on pretence of some conflagrancy after King of England.
- 1169 12 Richard, King of England, the Son of Henry.
- 1199 13 John King of England, the Brother of Richard, who forfeiting his Estates in France, on a judicial Sentence pronounced against him for the (supposed) murder of his Nephew Arthur Duke of Bretagne; Aquitain and the rest of the English Provinces were seized on by the French, Anno 1202. But notwithstanding this Arrest, the English still continued their pretensions to it, till at the last it was agreed betwixt King Lewis the ninth of France, and Henry the third of England, An. 1259. that the English should rest satisfied with Guienne, the bounds whereof were to be the Pyrenees on the South, and the River of Charente on the North, comprehending therein also the Country of Limousin; and that on his investiture into this Estate, he should relinquish all his rights in Normandy, Anjou, Touren, Main, &c. In consideration whereof, he should have 50000 Crowns in ready money. On this accord, the Kings of England became Homagers to the Crown of France, which sometimes they omitted, sometimes did it by Proxy, but never in person, till Philip de Valois required it of King Edward the third: and because such duties are not often personally done by Sovereign Princes, Du Serres shall describe the formality of it. The place designed for this exploit was the Church of Amiens, "to which Edward came (saith he) with such a Train, as was intended rather to the honour of himself than the French King. Royally attired he was, with a long Robe of Crimson Velvet, powdered with the Leopard of Gold; his Crown upon his head, his Sword by his side, and golden Spurs upon his heels. Philip attended by the chief Officers of the Realm, fat upon his Throne, apparelled in a long Robe of Purple Velvet, powdered with Flower de Luce of Gold; his Crown upon his head, and the Scepter in his hand. Viscount Melun, the great Chamberlain of France, commanded Edward to take off his Crown, Sword, and Spurs, and to kneel down: which he did accordingly. Then taking both his hands, and joining them together, he said unto him; Thou become a Liege-man to the King my Master, who is here present, as Duke of Guienne, and Peer of France, and promise to be faithful and loyal to him; I say, Yea; and Edward said yea, and rose. But the Historians notes withal, that Philip paid yearly for this Payment, the young King never forgetting the indignity which was put upon him, till he had made France a field of blood. And here it is to be observed, that though the Kings of England by this new investiture, were entitled Dukes of Guienne only, yet they had all the power and privileges of Dukes of Aquitaine, excepting the homage of the great Lords and Earls of Gascoigne, which formerly belonged unto them. Inasmuch as Richard the second, though Duke of Guienne only in style and title, invested his Uncle John of Gaunt in that brave estate, under the style and title of Duke of Aquitaine; summoned to Parliament by that name by the said King Richard. From this Accord betwixt the Kings, the English had possession of the Dukedom of Guienne, according to the order of their Succession, to the twenty-ninth of King Henry the third, An. 1259, (the intercalation of John of Gaunt excepted only), when ousted of all their old rights in France, rather by the good fortune, than by the valour of Charles the fifth; the English then, divided in Domestic Factions, and not at leisure to look after the affairs of France. Nor do I find, that Guienne being thus recovered, was ever dissembred from that Crown, but when King Lewis the eleventh aligned it over to his Brother the Duke of Berry, to take him off from joining with the Dukes of Bretagne and Burgundy in a new confederacy, who held it but two years, and died the last Duke of Guienne An. 1427.

The Arms of this Dukedom were Gules, a Leopard or Lyon Or, which joined to the two Lyons of Normandy, make the Arms of England.

16 LANGUEDOC.

LANGUEDOC is bounded with the Pyrenean hills, the Land of Auvergne, and the Mediterranean, on the South; on the North, with Forreſt Quercen, and Auvergne, on the East, with Provence and Dauphines on the West, with Gascoigne. Whereas the other Frenchmen in an affirmation say Ouy, these of this Country say Oci and therefore Orelatius conjectures it was call'd Langue d'Oci. But others think that it took denomination from the Goths, who reigning long in this Country, left behind them a smack of their Language; and therefore it was called, Langue gothica, and now Emphonia graia, termed Langedat, or Langedoc, that is to say, the Country which retaineth the Gothic Language. In reference to one or both of which Etymologies this Province is by Paulus Emilius promiscuously called Gothiciana and Ovitilana, and in relation to the rest, the people hereof in one of Calvin's Epistles, are given unto us by the name of Populi Lingue Ovitilane.

The Country on those parts which lie next to Auvergne, is like the higher parts thereof, mountainous and, not very fruitful; in all the rest, as rich and pleasant as the best Provinces in France; and having the advantages of Olives, Raisins, Figs, Oregans, and other fruits not ordinary but here, and in the neighbouring Province; In that participating the Commodities both of France and Spain The people have somewhat in them of the ancient Goths, and draw nearer to the temper of the Spaniards, than any other of the French as being accounted very devout, great vaunters of themselves, affecting bravery above their condition and estates; not caring how they pinch it on the working days, or at home in private; so they may flaunt it in the street, and be fine on holy-days; The humour all of the Women, and in them more pardonable.

Principal Rivers of this Province, are 8 Aurance, 2 Lirran, and 3 Orbe, emptying themselves into the Rhodes and Alby, which disburdeneth it self into the Ocean. Chief Towns hereof are, 1 Nîmes (in Latin Lemania) anciently a Colony of the Romans, now a Bishops See, where there remain some marks of the Roman greatness, especially the ruins of a spacious Palace built by the Emperor Adrian. 2 Mont-peller (in Latin Mons Pessulanus) situate on a high Mountain, as the name imports, some twelve miles distant from the Sea, a University for the study of Physick, and for that very happily feared, the Country round about affording great variety of medicinal Herbs. An Episcopium of it self in the former times, conveyed by Mary Daughter of William the last Lord hereof, to King Peter of Aragon her Husband; next, made a member of the Kingdom of Majorca, and finally by James, the last King of Majorca, sold to King Philip of Valois. Of late one of the strongest holds which those of the Reformed Religion had in this Country: and memorable for the notable resistance which it made against the whole forces of Leuis the 13. in the last Civil Wars about Religion, 3 Alets, and 4 Carreſſous, both Bishops Sees, both seated on the River Aude, the people of both speaking a corrupt French, with an intermixture of some Spanish. Which intermixture of Spanish with that broken French they either have originally from the Goths of Spain, of whose Kingdom this was once a part: or from their long subjection to the Earls of Barcelona, to whom they were conveyed, with other fair estates in this part of France, by the marriage of Raymond Berenger the eleventh Earl thereof, with Adelaide the Daughter of some of the great Lords who then ruled in Languedoc, about the year 1100. And to these Towns as also unto those of Nîmes and Alby, the Earls of Barcelona, and the Kings of Aragon (in their right) did pretend a Sovereignty (though they had lost the possession of them) as those of France did to the Earldom of Barcelona: till mutual releases made on both sides of each others claims, by James the first of Aragon, and the King S. Lewis An. 1260, or thereabouts. 5 Albi, commodiously seated on the River so called, the Civitas Albigensium of Antoninus, the chief of this part of Languedoc, called from hence La Paix Albigens; remarkable in Church-history for those great oppositions to the corruption ons and errors of the Church of Rome, called the Albigensis. 6 Béziers, upon the River Orbe, the Beirre of Polony, and Civitas Biterurgum of Antoninus; a Roman Colony of old, now a Bishops See. 7 Agde, called Agatha by ancient Writers, remarkable for a Council held there in the year 450, and for a well frequented Port, at the mouth of the River Eghand. 8 Narbon, seated on the mouth of the River Aude, the seat of the Phoenice, and the first Roman Colony (next after Carthage) out of Italy. In Italy it self (to observe so much by the way) were no less than 150 Colonies; 57 in Africa, 29 in Spain, 26 in France, 4 in England only, in Syria 20, and in other Countries some, but very few in respect of the largeness of the Territories. These Colonies were instituted partly to repress Rebellions in the Conquered Countries; partly to resist a Foreign Enemy, partly to reward the ancient Soldiers, partly to relieve the poorer sort, and partly to purge and empty the City of the superfluity and redundancy of her people. Now if the question be asked, whether a Colony or Fortress be more beneficial, I answer with Boterus in his Raggio de ſtato, that a Fortress is more fit for sudden use, and a Colony for continuance; the former are quickly erected, and perhaps as soon lost; the other require some time of settling, and are after of a good sufficiency to defend themselves. As we see in our times, the Spanish Colonies of Centa and Tangier in Africa; and our own of Calais which was the last Town we lost on the firm Land. This Narbon was in the Infancy of the Roman Empire, the most populous and greatest Town of all France; inasmuch, as from it all this part of France was called Gallia Narbonensis. A Province, of which Pliny delivered us this sentence; Narbonensis Gallia agorum cultus, morum virorum dignitate, opum amplitudine, nulli Provinciarum pſſionenda; dicitur; Italia potius quam Provincia; that is to say, that for fruitfulness of the soil, and the civility of the people, it was inferior to no Province in the Roman Empire. But to return unto the Town, being anciently the Metropolis of this Province, it had withal the honour of being an Arch-bishops See, which it still continueth: well fortified at the present as a Town of War, fronting Catalonia and the Land of Rouſſillon. 9 La Py, the See of a Bishop, who in Lattine is called Podienſis the chief of that part of the Telland, which is named Velay, the ancient Seat of the Telland. 10 Viviers, on the River Rhone, (by Pliny named Alia Helviorum) from whence the Country adjoining hath the name of Vivarets. 11 Rhodes, or Rutenus, the principal City of the Ruteni, now a Bishops See; from whence the Country round about hath the name of Rouerges; though some account this Rouerges, a distinct Province, and no part of Languedoc. 12 Tolouſe, seated on the Garonne, anciently the principal City of the Tolouſages and the Tolouſes, placed by old Writers in this tract; now the chief of Languedoc, and one of the greatest in all France. The Seat of an Arch-bishop, and an University; so ancient, that some report it to be built when Deborah judged Israel. Here was a Parliamentary Court erected, for the administration of Justice in these parts, 1302. As for the story of Tolouſe, it was observed, that certain Soldiers having stole sacrilegiously some Gold out of the Temples of Tolouſe, (when it was taken by Cepio a Roman Consul) came all to miserable and unfortunate ends: hence grew that Adage, Aurum habet Tolouſanum, applied unto unhappy men.

But that which deserves most note in the History of it, are large and spacious fields about it, called by the Writers of these times by the name of Campi Catalaunici, extending in length 100, in breadth 70 French Leagues.

In which fields, An. 1435, was fought that terrible Battle between Attila King of the Hunnes, and Ætius the Roman Lieutenant in France; Ætius was strengthened by the Goths, Franks, Burgundians, and Germans. Attila's Army consisted of Hunnes, Eruli, Soythes, Sarmatians, Suevians, to the number of 500000, of which 180000 that day lost their lives: Attila himself being driven to that desperate plunge, that making a Funeral pile of Hofe Saddle, he would have burned himself. But his Enemies weary of well-doing, or Ætius politically fearing, that if Attila were quite destroyed, the Goths, Franks, and others of the Barbarians then confederate with him, would become too insolent; gave him leave to retire home through Italy: which he harassed with Fire and Sword, murdering the People, and ruining the Towns, so that he was then, and long after, called Flagellum Dei. Ætius, notwithstanding this good service, was by Valentinian the Emperor of the West, rewarded with the loss of his head: by which act, the Emperor (as one truly told him) had cut off his right hand with his left. And indeed, so it happened. For not long after, he himself was by Maximian murdered; and the Empire of Rome irrecoverably destroyed. Now that these Fields lay herabouts, and not about Chalons in the Province of Champaigne (as some learned and industrious men have been of opinion) I am assured by these three reasons. First, the improbability that Ætius having got the Victory, should suffer such a vast and numerous Army to pass through the whole length of France from one end to the other, and having waited all the Country; to break into Italy. And secondly, the testimony of Torissander an ancient Writer, who telleth us, first, that before this fight, Attila had besieged and distressed the City of Orleans; and therefore was not vanquished in the fields of Chalons: and then, that immediately upon the Victory, Torissander the King of the Goths, (his Father Theodoric being slain) in Cantabrigia ubi & pugnauerat, Regia Majestate ſubvenit Tolouſam ingreditur, being proclaimed King in those very fields, entered with great state and triumph into Tolouſe, the regal City at that time of the Gothic Kingdom. Which plainly proves the places of Battle to be near this City: though possibly by the name Campi Catalaunici (the great length and broadth thereof considered) we are to understand the whole Country of Languedoc.

The old Inhabitants of this Country besides the Helii, the Vellani, the Tolouſages, and Albigens, formerly remembered, were the Agatenſes, heteroſes, Gabales, Volce, and the Arcomenſes all which, together with some others of lesser note, made the Province of Narbonensis Prima, whercof the Metropolis was Narbon. In the falling of the Roman Empire this gift was the rest of Narbonensis, and some part of Spain, was the King of the Goths, whom Honorius by his gift, and by following on him his Sister Placidia, brought out of Italy. The Goths having got to good footing in Gaul, enlarged their bounds by taking in the most part of Aquitain, Quercen, and Auvergne: but forced to quit them to the French, who conquered that from them which they got from the Romans; and thus them up within the limits of their first Donation. After this they declined as fast in France, as they thrived in Spain; losing Provence to Theodoric, King of the Ostro-Goths, or Goths of Italy's whole Successor Amalsarius, leaving a War from Greece, enriched her interest in Provence to Theodobert the French King of Metz. Nothing now left unto the Goths of their Gallick purchases, but this Languedoc only; and this rangia, 2 Estrang, 3 Bois de St. Pol, more properly, St. Paul de Yenceis, being the Civitas Vencensium of Antoninus, but not otherwise memorable.

As for the Princes hereof, they were anciently of the Noble Family of the Baufis, but Homagers and Tributaries to the Earls of Provence. By Mary Daughter and Heir of Reynold the last of this Family, it was conveyed in marriage to John de Chalons, one of the most Noble Houses of Burgundy, from the Earls whereof they were extracted. Lewis, the Son of this John, obtained of Rene Duke of Anjou, and Earl of Provence, the Sovereignty hereof, as before was said. By Claude, the Heir-general of this House, bestowed in marriage by King Francis the first, on Count Henry of Nassau, Ambassador from Maximilian the Emperor of Germany. Anno 1514. it was translated to that Family where it still remaineth.

The Princes of Orange.

- 1475 1 Lewis de Chalons, first absolute Prince of Orange.
 2 William de Chalons, who submitted his Estate to the Parliament of Dauphine, to fatisfiche King Lewis the 11. by whom retired again to his former Sovereignty.
 3 John de Chalons, a bitter Enemy to King Lewis, in defence of the Rights of Mary Dutchess of Burgundy.
 1500 4 Philibert de Chalons, slain at the siege of Florence, where he commanded the Forces of Charles the 5th: Claude his only Sister, and next Heir of that House, being married to Henry Earl of Nassau. Anno 1515.
 1536 5 Rene de Nassau, Son of Henry and Claude, adopted by Philibert his Uncle, whom he succeeded in this Estate: slain at the Siege of Lan-Arcie in the Netherlands.
 1544 6 William de Nassau, Cousin-german of Rene, by whose last Testament left Heir unto his Estates: the great Patron and Affector of the Belgick Liberties, against the Spaniards: slain by a Partisan of Spain, called Balthazar, at Delfe in Holland. Anno 1584.
 1584 7 Philip de Nassau, kept as an Hostage all his life by the King of Spain.
 8 Maurice de Nassau, Brother of Philip, Commander of the Forces of the United Provinces.
 1625 9 Henry de Nassau, II. Successor to his Brother Maurice, in his Offices, Estates, and Honours.
 1648 10 William de Nassau, II. the Son and Successor of Henry married to Princess Mary, eldest Daughter of Charles King of Great Britain, &c. on May-day 1641.

The Revenues of this Principality are about 30000 Crowns. The Arms are Quarterly Gules, a Bend Or, 2 On, a Hunters Horn Azure, fringed Gules; the third az, &c. Over all, an Escutcheon of Pretence Chequie, Or and Azure. More briefly thus: Quarterly Chalons and Aurange, under an Escutcheon of the Country of VENASCINE, as the French call it; Comitatus Vencensium, in the Latin: so called from Avenio (now Avignon) the chief City of it. Anciently it had Lords of its own, called Earls of Vence, (Venista Comitatus in the Latin) united to the House of Savoy, by the marriage of Laurenzia, a Daughter hereof, with Earl Humbert the Second, Anno 1080, or thereabouts. But this Family of the first Lords coming to an end, it fell (but by what Right, I find not) to the Earls of Tholons, but held by them as Homagers, (for this Estate) of the Earls of Provence: on the conviction of Earl Raymond, condemned for Heretic, brought under the protection and patronage of the Popes of Rome; the more absolute Sovereignty hereof, and of the City Avignon, being settled on them by Queen Joan, as before is said. The principal Cities of this tract, are, 1 Avignon, the Avenio of Strabo, Pliny, and Mela; a very fair and flourishing City, pleasantly seated on both sides of the River of Rhone: famous for being the residence of the Popes for seventy years; which times the Romans remember till this day, by the name of the Babylonian Captivity: admitting, ever since, an Oath unto the Pope at his Coronation, not to remove his Seat to Avignon. The first Pope that removed thither, was Clement the 5. An. 1300; when as yet the Popes had no more right in it, than that of Patronage and Protection; and returned again to Rome, by Gregory the 11. An. 1377. In this City are said to be 7 Palaces, 7 Parish Churches, 7 Monasteries, 7 Nunneries, 7 Inns, and 7 Gates. So that if there be any Mystery in the number of seven, or any credit to be given to such Pythagorean divinity, the Arch-bishop of this City may as well be entitled Antichrist, as the Pope of Rome, if there be nothing but the mystery of this number to affix it to him. It was made an University, at the time of the Popes first settling here, and so still continueth: Alciat the great Emblemast; being here Professor, 2 Carpentars, by Pisidomy called Carpentorastie, a Bishops-See: as is also, 3 Cavillon, (of old Caballio) once a Roman Colony on the River Durance; and 4 Tarascum, on the Rhone, opposite to Beaucaire in Languedock: for the Popes dwelling here so long, could not be otherwise attended than by mitted Prelates, 5 Vafon, Civitas Vafonensis, of Antoninus.

The Revenues of the Pope here, are not very great, and those expended all in keeping of Ports and Garrisons, by reason of the ill neighbourhood of the Protestants of Orange. So that it is supposed, that it is rather a charge, than a profit to him: which maketh the people like very well to live under his Government, as bringing more money to them, than he gathereth from them.

The Arms hereof, when under the old Earls of Vence, were Gules, two Keys in Saltire Or, fringed Azure. Which seems to have in it some preface, (the Popes pretending to the Keys, as we know they do) that it should one day become subject to the See of Rome.

The old Inhabitants of the whole Country were, as appeareth, the Salii, Maffilienfes, Vafonenses, and Vencenices, before mentioned; besides the Decetates about Antibe, the Sentius, and Sigifmundi, about Ciferon; all conquered by the Romans in their first war in Gaul, called in to aid those of Marfilius against the Salii. The Fortune of it since, hath been shewn before. Nothing remains now but the Catalogue of

The Earls of Provence.

- 1 Hugh de Arles, supposed to be the Son of Lotharius, King of Austrasia, and Waldrada his Concubine: made the first Earl of Provence, by Boson the first, King of Burgundy and Italy also.
 2 William de Arles, the Son of Hugh.
 3 William II. frained the younger, Son of William.
 4 Gilbert Earl of Provence, the Father of the Lady Daulce.

1082 5 Raymond Arnold, Earl of Barcelona, the Husband of the Lady Daulce, of Provence.

1131 6 Berengar Raymond the second Son of Raymond Arnold, and the Lady Daulce; his eldest Brother Raymond succeeding in Barcelona.

7 Raymond II. Son of Berengar Raymond.

1173 8 Alfonso King of Aragon, and Earl of Barcelona; the Son and Heir of Raymond Earl of Barcelona eldest Son unto Raymond Arnold, and the Lady Daulce.

1196 9 Alfonso II. second Son of Alfonso the first, succeeded in the Earldom of Provence, his eldest Brother Pedro inheriting the Realm of Aragon, and the Earldom of Barcelona.

10 Raymond III. Son of Alfonso, the last Earl of Provence of this Line.

1261 11 Charles of Valois, Earl of Anjou, and in right of Beatrix his Wife, one of the Daughters of Raymond the third, Earl of Provence. He was also King of Naples, Sicily, &c.

1282 12 Charles II. King of Naples, and Earl of Provence.

1310 13 Robert King of Naples, and Earl of Provence.

1342 14 Joan, Queen of Naples, and Countess of Provence.

1371 15 Lewis Duke of Anjou, the adopted Son of Queen Joan; Earl of Provence; and titular King of Naples, &c. (of whose descent from Charles of Valois, Earl of Anjou and Provence, we have spoke elsewhere.)

1485 16 Lewis II. Duke of Anjou, Earl of Provence, &c.

1416 17 Lewis III. Duke of Anjou, Earl of Provence, &c.

1430 18 René, Brother of Lewis Duke of Anjou, &c.

1480 19 Charles Earl of Main, Son of Charles Earl of Main, the Brother of René, succeeded in all the Estates and Titles of his Uncle; and at his death gave Provence to King Lewis the 11th, his Cousin-german, as being the Son of Charles the 7th, and Mary Lewis the third, and René, the preceding Dukes, and of Charles Father of this Charles, the last Earl of Provence. King sent a Commission to Palamede de Forban, Lord of Salier, Chamberlain of Earl Charles, to take possession of the Country in his name, and command therein as Lieutenant-General. Since which time, Provence never was dismembered from the Crown of France, so much as in the way of Apanage, or any Honorary Title amongst the Kings Children.

What the Revenues of it were to the former Earls, I am not able to say, having no good Authority to proceed upon. Only I find, that besides the Lands belonging to the Earls hereof, and other customary and casual Taxes, there was a Tax called, The Royal Impost, being fifteen Florens levied upon every fire: which reckoning 3500. fires (for such the estimate of them was) amounted yearly into 50000 Florens. Now it is subject to the rigor and uncertainty of the Kings Taxations, as well as all the rest of France. And so much of those Provinces which properly made up the Kingdoms of the French and Goths, let us next look on those which at the same time were subdued by the Burgundians; whose History, Kingdom, and Estate are to be considered, before we come to the description of their several Provinces.

The Kingdom of Burgundy.

THE Kingdom of the BURGUNDIANS at their first settlement in Gaul, contained all those Provinces of the Roman Empire, then called the Alper Graie, and Pennine, Maxima Sequanorum, Lugdunensis Prima, and Vienensis; now passing under the names of the Dukedom and County of Burgundy, Suisseerland, the Grisons, Wallisland, Savoy, La Bresse, Dauphine, Lionnois, Nivernois, and some part of the Dukedom of Bourbon. A fair and large quantity of ground, able at once to tempt and fatishe an ambitious Nation. But the Burgundians came not into Gaul of their own accord, though of their own accord they drew somewhat near it. In their Original, they were a people bordering near the Vandals, if not a Tribe or Sept of them: and dwelling in those parts in which are now the Dukedom of Mecklenburg, and Pomerania. At the time that Drufin and Thiborius warred in Germany, they were utterly barbarous, living in Tents only here and there clapped up. Which being in their own Language called Burgi, gave them the name of Burgundians amongst the Romanists in the same sense as the wild Arabs had the name of S. entia, amongst the Greeks, from the like kind of living. In the year 418 at the instigation of the Vandals, they left their own seats, and planted themselves in the Towns and Villages belonging now to the Marquisses of Baden, and Electors of Rhene. About which time they received the Christian Faith, being then miserably oppressed by the Huns, breaking upon them out of Pannonia. Not finding any other way to free themselves of that Enemy, they betook themselves to the God of the Christians, and were universally baptized. After which, falling on the Huns, they slew no less than 30000 of them in one battle, from that time forwards, never troubled with that barbarous Nation. Christians then they were, and Orthodox in their profession, before their coming into Gaul: and for that reason called in by Stilico to oppose the French, then threatening an invasion of the Roman Provinces. Upon this invitation they passed over the River with an Army of 80000 fighting men, possessing themselves of all which lay from the farthest shore of the Leyre, to the Alper of Italy; and from the Mountain Vangs, to the Mediterranean; Provence only excepted, about that same time planted by the Goths. Their Government was under Kings: Many according to their Tribes, when they lived in Germany: Monarchical, when settled in the Realm of France, where they had these five.

Kings of the Burgundians.

A. Ch.

- 408 1 Tabica, who first brought the Burgundians into Gaul.
 2 Gundahic.
 3 Gundebanht, who harassed Italy, then in possession of the Goths, with Fire and Sword; the Uncle of Claudia, Wife to Claudio the fifth King of the French, by her persuasion made inclinable to the Christian Faith.
 4 Sigifmund.
 5 Gundamar, the Son of Sigifmund, first set upon by Chlodomer, the Son of Clovis King of Orleans, whom he slew in Battle near Aufans; but afterwards outed of his Kingdom by Childebert and Clovis, Kings of Paris and Soissons, in revenge of the death of their Brother, Chlo.

Clodomire. And so the Kingdom of the Burgundians fell unto the French, after it had continued about 120 years: Cunram the Son of Clotaire, and Clouis, one of the Sons of Dagobert the first; being in their times, honoured with the Title of Kings of Burgundy.

But the first time that the Kingdom of Burgundy settled amongst the French, in the way of succession, was in the partage of that vast Empire of Charlemagne, amongst the children and posterity of Ludovicus Piu: in constituting of which Kingdom, Provence was added to the reckoning, to make this answerable to the other parts of that broken Monarchy. The first of these French Kings, was Charles, the youngest Son of Lotharius Emperor, and King of Italy, eldest Son of the said Lewis the Godly. The Succession in this order following.

The French Kings of Burgundy.

- A. Ch.
855 1 Charles, youngest Son of the Emperor Lotharius, died without issue.
858 2 Lotharius, the second King of Metz, and Lewis the second Emperor, Brethren of Charles, succeeded in Burgundy, the Mountain Jour dividing and bounding their Estates.
875 3 Charles the Bald, King of France, and Emperor, Uncle to the three former Kings, all dying without issue, succeeded in the whole Estates which he again divided into three Governments or Members: that is to say, Burgundy on this side of the Saône, containing the now Dukedom of Burgundy, with the Earldoms of Lion and Maison. 2. Burgundy, beyond the Jour, comprehending the Provinces of Savoy, Switzerland, Wallisland, and the Estates of the Grisons: and 3dly. Burgundy, on the other side of the Saône, lying betwixt the other two, containing the now Counties of Burgundy, Provence, La Breffe, and Dauphine. This last conferred with the Title of Earl, on Boson Earl of Ardenne, by Charles the Bald, who had married his Sister Judith; and not long after, in the person of the said Earl Boson, passed unto a Kingdom by Charles the Great, by the name of the Kingdom of Arles and Burgundy. The Kings of these that follow.
4 Boson, Earl of Ardenne, Husband of Hermingrade, the Daughter of Lewis the second, Emperor and King of Burgundy, was first by Charles the Bald, made Earl of Burgundy, beyond the Saône; and afterwards by Charles the Great, created the first King of Arles and Burgundy, to be held by him and his Successors of the German Emperors.
5 Lewis II. Son of Boson and Hermingrade, chosen King of Italy, but ousted by the Faction of Beregarin.
9. 7 6 Hugh de Arles, supposed to be the Son of Lotharius the second, by Waldrada his Concubine, succeeded by the gift of Lewis, and was chosen by his Faction there, King of Italy also. For the quiet enjoying of which Kingdom, he resigned this to Rodolph, Duke of Burgundy beyond the Jour, elected by another Faction, to that broken Title.
926 7 Rodolph, Duke of Burgundy beyond the Jour, succeeded on the resignation of Hugh de Arles; his Brother Boson being settled beyond the Jour.

927 8 Rodolph II. Son of Rodolph, a Prince of so short a reign, or of so little note, that he is by some left out of the Catalogue of these Kings.

9 Boson II. the Brother of Rodolph the first; by whom the Dukedom of Burgundy beyond the Jour, was united to the Kingdom of Arles and Burgundy.

955 10 Courade Son to Boson the second.

990 11 Rodolph III. Son to Courade; who having no issue of his body, gave his Estate to Courade the second, Emperor of Germany, and his Son Henry, surnamed the Black; whom he had by Gisela, the Sister of this Rodolph: by whom it was united to the German Empire, An. 1032. In the distractions whereof, following not long after his decease, the Provincial Earls or Governors for the German Emperors, made themselves Masters and Proprietaries of their several Provinces, (the Dukedom of Burgundy excepted, settled long before) out of which rose the great Estates of the Duke of Savoy, the Earls of Burgundy and Provence, the Dauphins of Viennais, and Lords of Brise, together with the Common-wealths of the Switzers and Grisons: every poor Bird snatching also some Feather or other of this dying Eagle. Yet notwithstanding the dismembering and cantoning of this fair Estate, the succeeding Emperors of Germany claimed not only a super-intendence over, but a disposal of all the Countries that ever were under the command of the King of Burgundy: inasmuch that the Emperor, Henry the sixth, receiving so small part of the money which our Richard the first paid to the Duke of Austria, for his ransom, gave unto the said Richard the Kingdom of Burgundy, the Sovereignty of Provence, Viennais, Marsellier, Narbon, Arles, and Lion, together with the Homages of the King of Aragon, and of the Earl of Digon and St. Giler. A Royal gift, if the Emperor had any dominion over those Countries, or if they would have received any Prince or Officer of his appointing.

The Arms of this Kingdom under the old Burgundian Kings, are said to have been Azure, a Cat Argent, and Gules. Which being said, we will proceed to the description of those Provinces of this broken Kingdom, which lie within the bounds of France; the rest, which lie beyond the Jour, having been spoken of already in the Alpine Countries, which made up the whole Continent of the Transjuran Burgundy.

18. DAUPHINE.

NORTH of the Country of Provence, where we left before, lieth that of DAUPHINE; having on the East, Savoy, and the Maritime Alps; on the West, Lionnois, and some part of Languedoc, from which divided by the Rhône; and on the North, La Breffe; and those parts of Savoy which lie towards Piemont, so called, as some report, from Dauphine, Wife of Guigne the second: in like manner as Flanders is affirmed most probably to have took that name from Flandrina, Wife of Lidick the second, then one of the last of those Princes who governed in that Country by the name of Forrester.

It is divided into the Higher and the Lower; the one mountainous, stony, and unfruitful, of the same nature with the Alpes with whose branches it is over-run: the other tolerably fruitful, but not to be compared with the rest of France. The people of the Higher, and more mountainous parts, are generally gross and rude; not capable of Learning; but well enough inclined to Arms and Traffic; and have a custom, that on the coming of

Winter,

Winter, they send abroad all those which are fit for travel, whom they call Bier, or Bisonards who seldom return back till Easter: none staying at home but old men, children, and impotent persons, which cannot go abroad to get their livings. Those in the Lower are more civil, but not more given to labour, than the Mountainers, nor very covetous of gain, so they may live at ease, without want or penury. In both parts generally good Soldiers, and well affected to their Prince.

The Lower Dauphine, together with that part of Provence, which lies next to the Rhône, and the adjoining parts of Savoy, made up the Province called Viennensis, from Vienna the Metropolis of it, situate on the Rhône, honoured with the Seat of the Prefectum Pretorio Galiarum, till the Chief City of this Country, an Archbishop See, and a Siege Prefidial. From hence the tract about it is called Viennais, and was the Title of the first Proprietaries of this Country, entitled, Dauphins of Viennais. To this Town, Archebald, the Son of Herod, was banished by Augustus Caesar. 2 Valence, the chief City heretofore of the Valentins, then a Roman Colony; now a Bishops See, and an University for the Civil Laws: a rich, strong, and well traded Town, seated on the Rhône. The Country hereabouts from hence called Valentinus, and hath given Honorary Title to two persons of more Fame, than Honour: the first of which was Cesar Borgia, the Son of Pope Alexander the sixth, who casting off his Cardinals Cap, was made Duke of Valentinus, by Charles the eighth: the other, Madam Diana, the great Minion and Paramour of Henry the second, under whom the much swayed the affairs of France, and honoured with the Title of Dutchess of it. 3 Grenoble, (in Latin, Gratiopolis) the chief Seat heretofore of the Austrians, the most populous and best built of all this Province; and much resorted to by the Lords and Nobles, by reason of the Court of Parliament here erected, Anno 1453. About this, lieth the Country called 3 Grignan, d. Ternay. 5 Rosillon. 6 La Roche. 7 Mantelmar, all along the Rhône. 8 Romont, upon the confluence of the Rhône, and the Jfere. 9 Cremieu, 10 St. Marceline. 11 S. Andre. 12 Beaufort, more within the Country.

The Higher Dauphine, together with those parts of Provence which lie next to Italy, made up the Province of the Alpes Maritimes, the Metropolis whereof was, 1 Ebrodunum, now called Embrun, an Arch-Bishops See, and Siege Prefidial, seated on a high Rock, in the midst of a pleasant Valley, surrounded with Mountains, under which runs the River Durance. The Hilly Country hereabouts is the highest of France. 2 Briançon, near the head of the River Durance, called Brigantio by Antoninus. 3 Gappe, now a Bishops See, formerly the chief City of the Apennines; the track of whom is still found in the name of the adjoining Territory, called Le Pais Gapenois: memorable for a Synod or Assembly of the French Prestigians here held, An. 1603. in which it was determined, and as for an Article of Faith, That the Pope was Antichrist, and where the Ministers then assembled, gave audience to the Ambassadors of Foreign States, as to a Common-wealth distinct from the Realm of France: audaciously importuning their King by their several Agents, for liberty of going (whenever they listed) or sending whenever they pleased, unto the Councils and Assemblies of all Foreign Nations, which professed the same Religion with them: the Preamble to those Encroachments on the Royal Authority, which after proved the ruin of their Power and Party. 4 Triessin, so called of the Triessini, the old Inhabitants of these parts. 5 Die, the Die Vocatumum of Antoninus, a Bishops See, situate on the River Drois:

from whence come those small, but good Stomack Wines, which we call Vin Die. Others affirm, (and perhaps more knowingly) that this Wine is of the growth of Champagne, most plentifully growing in the Fields of a Town called Hays, from whence it hath the name of Vin de Hays; and is contractedly, Vin Day. 6 Chorges. 7 Mombur, 8 Effiez; of which, little memorable.

The chief Inhabitants hereof, in the time of the Romans, besides the Triessini, Apennenses, Vacontii, and Aecusiani, before mentioned; and the Allobroges, spoken of in the Alpine Provinces, were the Saguntini, about Valence; the Decenses about Die, and the Cavari about Grenoble. First conquered by the Romans, then by the Burgundians, and at last by the French: under whom made a part of the new Kingdom of Burgundy, till the surrender of the same to the German Emperors. Under them it continued till the year 1100. when Guigne, surnamed the Fat, Earl of Grignan, seeing the Emperor Henry the Fourth, over-born by the Popes, and not able to assert his own rights, seized upon this Province under the title of Earl of Viennais, to which Guigne the second, his Son and Successor, gave the name of Dauphine, either from his Wife so called, as some; or from the Dolphin which he took for his Arms, as others say. In this Family it continued till the year 1342. under the Power and Government of these following Princes, entitled,

The Dauphins of Viennais.

- A. Ch.
1100 1 Guigne, surnamed the Fat, Earl of Albon and Grignan at the time of the dissolution of the Kingdom of Burgundy.
1135 2 Guigne II. the first and absolute Proprietary Prince hereof; by the name of the Dauphin of Viennais.
1146 3 Guigne III. Son of Guigne the second.
1152 4 Beatrice, Daughter of Guigne the Third, first married to Raymond the third, Earl of Tolouse, next to Hugh the third, Duke of Burgundy; and finally, to Guigne of Albon, of the house of the former Earls; as in her right entitled, Dauphin of Viennais.
1208 5 Andrew, the Son of Beatrice and of Guigne the Fourth.
1242 6 Guigne V. Son of Andrew.
1283 7 Humbert the first, in the right of Anne his Wife, Daughter and Heir of Guigne the fifth.
1335 8 John the Son of Humbert, exercised in continual Wars, as his Father was, was with the Earls of Savoy.
1322 9 Guigne VI. Son of John, taken Prisoner by Edward Earl of Savoy, An. 1329. and at last slain, An. 1342.
1342 10 Humbert II. the younger Son of John, and the Brother of Guigne the sixth, the last Dauphin of Viennais, who being purchased with Wars by Anne (or Amedee) Earl of Savoy, entered into the Order of Dominican Friars, at Lions; selling his Country at a small rate, to Philip de Valois French King, upon condition, that the eldest Son of France should be entitled always, Dauphin of Viennais, and quarter the Arms of Dauphine, with those of France. The conditions willingly accepted; and Charles the Son of King John, the Son of Philip de Valois, admitted by his Grandfather both to the Title and Estate, in the very year of the surrender. Since this time, the eldest Son of France is called generally, the Dauphin of France; sometimes, the Dauphin only, by way of eminency; and many times, the the Prince-Dauphin, to discontinue him from the Dauphin (or Count-Dauphin) of Auvergne, and perhaps some others. A Title so annexed unto them, that it is not usually laid by on the accession of a greater or superiour Dignity: inasmuch as Francis the eldest Son of Henry the second, (whom he succeeded in the Crown) being King of Scots in the right of Mary his Wife, was by the French commonly called Le Roy Dauphin, or the King of Dauphin. Nor have they the bare Title of this Country only, but the commands, profits, and possession of it, sending their own Governours thereunto; who by an ancient Indulgence, have the greatest Privileges (confering all Offices within the Province) of any Governours of France.

19. LA BRESSE.

LA BRESSE is bounded on the East with Savoy, on the West with Liois; on the North with Chablais in the Duchy of Burgundy, and some part of the Aranche County, and on the South, with Dauphine. The reason of the name I find not. The Country is very fruitful and pleasant, embraced betwixt the Rivers of Saône and Rhodan, with which very well watered. Chief Towns herein are, 1. Bellay, a Bishops See. 2. Bourg, (for distinction sake called Bourgen Bresse) a Town so well fenced, and fortified with so strong a Citadel for command of the Country, that it was thought little inferior to the two impregnable Fortresses of St. Katherine, and Montmelian, in Savoy. The Government of which Town and Citadel, was earnestly laboured for by the Duke of Biron, then Governour of Burgundy, after a repulse on the like suit, for that of St. Katherine: but being suspected to hold intelligence with the Duke of Savoy, at that time in ill terms with King Henry the 4th, it was also denied him: which drew him into discontent, and thereby to his fatal ruine. Afterwards, during the minority of Lewis the 13th, demolished by special Order of the Council of France, for fear of being surprised by the Duke of Savoy, during those confusions. It was of old time called the Forum Scutianorum, from the Scutians, the ancient Inhabitants of this Tract: 3. Castillon, 4. Mont-Réal, 5. Bugey, 6. Veromen, of which nothing observable.

This little Province being anciently a part of the Kingdom of Arles and Burgundy, had its own Earls, Proprietary Lords herof; who held it till the year 1285, at what time Sybille, the Daughter and Heir of Ulric Earl of Bresse and Bugey, (or Bugee, as some Writers call it) conveyed the Estate in marriage to Amedee, or Amedee, the 4th of that name Earl of Savoy. In which House it continued till the year 1600, and then surrendered by Duke Charles Emanuel, to King Henry the 4th, to silence the pretences which that King made to the Marquisate of Saluzzes, and put an end to the War then begun about it: the politick Duke chusing rather to part with an Estate on this side of the Mountains, than to give that active King occasion to look into Italy; to which Savoy must have been a thoroughfare, Piemont an ordinary Pass; and where no end could be expected, but the loss of all. Surrendered then it was on good reason of State, and upon that Surrendry united and incorporated with the Crown of France, and put under the Government of the Parliament of Digion, as it still continueth.

Arms herof, are Azure, a Lyon Ermine, armed and langued, Or.

20. LIONOIS.

THE Country of LIONOIS is bounded on the East with Bresse, on the West with Beau-jolois, Forreft, and Auvergne; on the North, with Burgundy Duchy; and on the South, with Dauphine, and a part of Languedoc. So called from Lions the chief City; and under that Title made an Earldom by Charles the Gros, in the cantoning and dismembring of the Kingdom of Burgundy. The Earldom containing at that time not only Lionois it self, but also Forreft and Beau-jolois, before described. The Earls herof were at first only Provincial Governours; but under the distractions of the German Empire, they shifted for themselves, and became hereditary: but long it held not in one hand. For first, the Earldom of Forreft, and the Lordship or Signeury of Beau-jen being taken out of it about the year 990, the rest of the Estate fell in some tract of time to the Bishops and Church of Lion; but under the Sovereignty of the French Kings, as Lords Paramount of it.

The places in it of most note are, 1. Macon, (Maifconum) a Bishops See, situate on the Saône, anciently a distinct Earldom from that of Lion, one of the five (as that of Lion was another) which made up the Dukedom of Burgundy on this side of the Saône: one of the Earls herof, called William, flourishing in the year 1000, or thereabouts; whose Son and Successor, named Otto, married Elizabeth daughter of Humbert, the first Earl of Mairienne, (a Title afterwards exchanged for that of Savoy.) Continuing from some Ages after in this Possession, it was purchased of William the last Earl herof, and of Elizabeth his Wife, by King Lewis the 9th; and afterwards subjected to the Jurisdiction and Court of Lion, as it still continueth. 2. Eyschall, on the Rhodan, on the South of Lion, opposite to Vienne, the chief City of the Lower Dauphin. 3. Dandilli, 4. Francheville, 5. Chamont, and 6. Lebrelle, all somewhat Weitward of that River, but not much observable. 7. Lions it self, pleasantly seated on the confluence of the Saône and the Rhodan, anciently a Roman Colony, (testified by many old Inscriptions) and honoured with a magnificent Temple, dedicated by the Cities of France, to Augustus Caesar: now the most famous Mart of France, and an University; by our Latin Writers called Lugdunum. These Marts in former times were holden at Geneva, from thence removed hither by King Lewis the 11th, for the enriching of his own Kingdom. When Julius the second had excommunicated Lewis the 12th, he commanded by his Apostolical Authority, that they should be returned to Geneva again: but therein his pleasure was never obeyed; the Marts continuing still at LIONS, as a place more convenient and capacious for that great resort of French, Dutch, and Italian Merchants, which frequent the same. As for the University, questionless it is very ancient, being a seat of Learning in the time of Caius Caligula. For in those times, before an Altar could be raised to Augustus Caesar in the Temple spoken of before; this Caligula did institute some exercises of the Greek and Roman Eloquence: the Victor to be honoured according to his merit: the Vanquished either to be servilized, or with their own tongues to blot and expunge their Writings, or to be drowned in the River adjoining. Hence that of Juvenal, Ut Lugdunensem Rhe-tor didicimus ad aram, applied to dangerous Undertakings. In the time of the Romans first coming into Gaul, it was the chief City of the Hedui, and Scutians, afterwards the Metropolis of Lugdunensis Prima. The Archbishop herof, is the Metropolitan of all France; and was so in the time of S. Irenaeus, one of the renowned Fathers in the Primitive Church, who was Bishop herof.

In this Town lived Peter Waldo, a wealthy Citizen, about the time of Frederick Barbarossa, Emperor of Germany; who being a devout and conscientious man, sensible of the many errors and corruptions in the Church of Rome, distributed the greatest part of his Riches amongst the poor, and betook himself to meditation, and studying of the holy Scriptures. In the carnal eating of C.H.R.I.S.T's Body, the fabrication of the Cup in the blessed Sacrament, in matter of Purgatory, the Supremacy, adoration of Images, invocation of the Saints departed, and many other points of moment, he held opinions contrary to those of Rome, and little different from those of the present Reformed Churches. And yet it may not be denied, but that amongst some good Whets, there were many Tares; which gave the pulchre colour to their Advocates to exclaim against them. Being much followed in regard of his Piety and Charity, he got unto himself and them the name of Paupers of Lugdunum, or the Poor men of Lion; given in derision and contempt. Afterwards they were called Waldenses, by the name of Waldo, the beginner of this Reformation; and by that name opposed and writ against by Fryer Thomas of Walden. The French, according to their manner of pronunciation, drawing the L, and changing the W into V, call them commonly Vandais; by which name they occur in the stories of that State and Language. But Lions proving no safe place for them, they retired into the more desert parts of Languedoc; and spreading on the banks of the River Avey, obtained the name of Albigenses, as before was said. Supported by the two last Earls of Toulouse, they became very martial and insolent; inasmuch that they murdered Trismund their Vifcount in Beziers, and dashed out the teeth of their Bishop, having taken Sanctuary in S. Magdalen Church, one of the Churches of that City. Forty years after which high out-rage, the Divine Providence gave them over to the hand of the Croisades, under the conduct of the French Kings, and many other noble Adventurers, who sacrificed them in the self same Church, wherein they had spilled the blood of others. About the year 1250, after a long and bloody War, they were almost rooted out of that Country allo. The remnants of them, being bettered by this affliction, betook themselves unto the Mountains lying betwixt Dauphine, Provence, Piemont, and Savoy, where they lived a godly and laborious life; painfully tilling the ground, rebuilding Villages, which formerly had been destroyed by War; teaching the very Rocks to yield good pasture to their Cattel: inasmuch as places which before their coming thither, scarce yielded four Crows yearly, were made under 350 Crows a year, by their care and industry. Lefcivinusus in speech they used not: Blasphemy they abhorred; nor was the name of Devil (in the way of execration) ever heard amongst them; as their very Enemies could not but confess, when they were afterward in troubles. The Crimes alleged against them, were, That when they came into any of the neighbouring Churches, they made no address unto the Saints, nor bowed before such Croffes as were erected in the High-ways, and Streets of Towns. Great crimes assuredly, when greater could not be produced! And so they lived, neither embracing the Pope's Doctrines, nor submitting unto his Supremacy, for the space of 300 years, untouched, unquestioned; even till the latter end of the reign of King Francis the first. But then the Persecution raging against the Lutherans, they were accused, condemned, and barbarously murdered, in the Massacres of Merindol, and Cabrier, before mentioned. After which time, joyning themselves with the rest of the Protestant party, they lost the name of Vandais, which called before; and pass in the account of the Reformed Churches of France; enjoying the same privileges and freedom of Conscience, as others of the Reformed do. And though I look not on these men, and their Congregations, as Founders of the Protestant Church, or of the same Church with them, as I see some do; yet I behold them as Assessors of some Doctrinal Truths, and professed Enemies of the Errors and Corruptions of the Church of Rome, and therein as the Predecessors of the present Protestants.

The old Inhabitants of this Tract, were a part of the Hedui, that Nation overpeering not this Country only, but Bourbonnois, with the whole Dukedom of Burgundy. And of these Hedui, the Isabrie are thought by some learned men to have been a Tribe, who piling over the Alpes, together with the Senones, and others of the Gallick Nations, possessed themselves of those parts of Italy which now make up the Dukedoms of Milans, Farnes, Mantua, with the parts adjoining. The residue of the story which concerns this Country we have had before.

21. The Dukedom of Burgundy.

THE Dukedom of BURGUNDY hath on the East the French County, and some part of Savoy, on the West, Bourbonnois; on the North, Champagne; on the South, La Bresse, Lionois, and some part of Beau-jolois. A Province so well watered with pleasant and profitable Rivers, that as Queen Katharine de Medicis used to say of France, That it had more fair Rivers than all Europe; so we may say of this Country, That it hath more fine Rivers than all France: here being the Rivers of 1. Armançon, 2. Serein, 3. Yonne, 4. Torney, 5. Valence, 6. Doue, 7. Brue, 8. Sein, 9. Louche, and 10. Saône, (the Araris of the ancient Writers) this last dividing the two Burgundies from one another. Yet notwithstanding this great plenty of Waters, the Country generally lies fruitful than the rest of France: hardly yielding sufficient for its own Inhabitants, except Wines only.

Chief Cities in it are, 1. Dijon, the birth-place of S. Bernard's seated upon the Saône and Loube, in a Champaign Country: The Town large, populous, and of much resort, as being the Seat of the Governour, and Parliamentary for the Province: a Parliament being here erected, Ans. 1476. Well fortified on all parts, but especially defended by a strong Castle, called Talente, situate on a hill adjoining. It is called Dreio in the Latine: the Bishop herof Divionensis, 2. Chalon, (in Latine, Caballinnum) called for distinctions sake, Chalon upon Saône, to difference it from Chalon upon Marne, in Champagne: a Bishops See also, as the other is; and gives name to that Noble Family of Chalons, (out of which the Princes of Orange are extracted) being one of the four ancient Families of Burgundy, the other three, Vienne, Neuchâtel, and Virgny. 3. Auxois, by Præmoly called Angustodunum, the chief City of the Hedui: now a Bishops See, heretofore the chief of all the Country; some marks of the old splendour being still to be seen; now very ordinary and mean, beautified only with some fair Churches, which the ruines of Time have not yet demolished. 4. Beaune, seated on the Burgeoise, in the best and richest soil of all Burgundy; and yielding the best Wines in all France:

remarkable for an Hospital of so fair a building, that it is thought equal to any Princes Palace in Europe; and an impregnable Castle built by King Lewis XII. 5. Alize, now a small Village, but of great name and power in the time of Cesar, then called Alexia, the chief Fortresses of Vercingetorix, besieged herein by the said Cesar, but so besieged, that he had 70000 men in the Town for defence of the place, and an Army of 300000 Gauls at the back of Cesar, to relieve their Fellows. So that he was fain to fortify his Camp with two Walls, the one against them within the City, and the other against them without: which done, he kept such diligent watch and ward on both sides, that the besieged heard sooner of the discomfiture of their friends, than they did of their coming. Which fatal news being brought unto them, the Town was yielded. And Vercingetorix bravely mounted, rode round about Cesar; then sitting in his Chair of State, disarmed himself, took off his Horles caparisons; and laying all upon the ground, fate down at Cesar's feet, and became his Prisoner. 6. Tournus, encompassed with the Sosne. 7. Semur, consisting of three parts, each of them severally walled, and strongly fortified. 8. Verdun. 9. Nancy. 10. St. Ligier, famous for Medicinal Baths. 11. Noyers, on the borders towards Champagne. 12. Auxerre, by Antonine called Antiodorum, of most note for the Council held here, Anno 627. the Country about which, is called Auxerrois; and was an Earldom of itself. The Title and Possession of that Peter Earl of Auxerre, who was the third Emperour of the Latines reigning in Constantinople; to whom it came in Marriage with his first Wife Agnes, the Daughter of the last Earl of the former Race. On the failure of which house, it fell unto that of Chalons, by the Marriage of Jabel, Niece of the said Peter, by his Brother Robert, to John of Chalons, Earl of Burgundy: to whom succeeded John of Chalons, his eldest Son by that Vener. (his second Wife) and finally, was sold by John of Chalons, great Grandchild of the said John Earl of Burgundy, to Charles the Fifth of France, An. 1370. by whom united to the Crown; subjected to the Parliament of Paris, and made part of Champagne. Here is also within this Country, the great and famous Monastery of Cîteaux; the Mother of so many Religious Houses dispersed up and down in Europe; from hence denominated, and subject to the Discipline and Rules hereof.

Within the limits of this Dukedom, (on the South parts of it) stands the Earldom of CHAROLLOIS, heretofore the Title of the eldest Son of the Dukes of Burgundy: so called from Charveller, the chief Town hereof, situate in the borders of it, towards La Bresse: seized upon with the rest of this Dukedom, by Lewis XI. immediately on the death of Duke Charles the Warlike: restored again to Philip the Second, King of Spain, by Henry the Second, of France, on the Peace made at Cambray, and subjected to the Parliament of Dole in the County of Burgundy, as a part or member of that Estate. So that neither the Gouverneur of the Dukedom for the French King, nor the Parliament of Dijon, have any thing to do in it. The Arms hereof are Gules, a Lion passant regardant Or, armed Azure.

The ancient Inhabitants of the whole Dukedom, according to the limits before laid down, were the Helvi, one of the most potent Nations of all Gaul: who calling in the Romans to aid them in their quarrels against the Sequani and Auverni, made them all subject unto Rome. In the prosperity whereof, they made up the Province of Lugdunensis Prima, of which Lions was the Metropolis or principal City. Afterwards, in the division of the French Kingdom of Burgundy, by Charles the Bald; this part thereof, being called the Dukedom of Burgundy, on this side of the Sosne, was cantoned into the five Earldoms of Dijon, Chalon, Autun, Lions, and Macon: whereof the three first laid together by Odo or Eudes King of France, during the Minority of Charles the Simple, were given unto his Brother Richard (both Sons of Robert Earl of Anjou) under the title and title of Duke of Burgundy. The Issue of this Robert failing, it fell unto another Robert, Son of Hugh Capet, King of France: and the Male-issue failing of that Line also, it was devolved (partly by escheat for want of Heirs male; and partly in the Right and Title of the Heir-general) to King John of France, the Son of Philip de Valois, and of Joan his Wife, one of the Daughters of Robert the Third; who with the consent of Charles his eldest Son, firnamed the Wise, gave it unto his second Son Philip, (more worthily firnamed the Hardy) together with the Marriage of the Heir of Flanders, Artois, and the County of Burgundy. An argument of no great Wildom; as was judiciously observed by King Lewis the Eleventh. For by this means, those great Estates being united in one person, and afterwards these Estates improved by as prosperous Marriages; this House of Burgundy grew formidable to the Kings themselves, who never left practising against it, till they had brought it to ruin; and once again united this Dukedom to their own Estates, from which at first it was dismembered.

The Dukes of Burgundy.

- 890 1 Richard of Saxony, the second Son of Robert Earl of Anjou, Brother of Eudes, and Father of Rodolph, Kings of France.
- 938 2 Gilbert, the second Son of Richard.
- 964 3 Obis, Son of Hugh Earl of Paris, firnamed the Great, and Brother of Hugh Capet, King of France; was Duke of Burgundy, in right of his Wife the Daughter of Gilbert.
- 975 4 Henry, the Brother of Obis.
- 1001 5 Robert, King of France, Son of Hugh Capet, succeeded in the Dukedom, on the death of his Uncle Henry.
- 1004 6 Robert II. Son of this Robert, and Brother of Henry King of France.
- 1075 7 Hugh, the Nephew of Robert, by his Son Henry, became afterwards a Monk of Clugny.
- 1097 8 Odo, or Obis II. Brother of Hugh.
- 1102 9 Hugh II. Son of Obis the Second.
- 1124 10 Oder, or Obis III. Son of Hugh the Second.
- 1165 11 Hugh III. the Companion, but great Enemy of our Richard the First, in the Wars of the Holy Land.
- 1192 12 Oder, or Obis IV. Son of Hugh the Third.
- 1218 13 Hugh IV. an Adventurer with King Lewis the Ninth in the Holy Land.
- 1273 14 Robert III. Son of Hugh IV. which Robert was the Father of Margaret, the Wife of Lewis Hutin, King of France and Navarre; and of Joan, the Wife of Philip de Valois, French King, and Grandmother of Philip the Hardy, after Duke of Burgundy.
- 1308 15 Hugh V. Son of Robert the Third.
- 1315 16 Eudes, the Brother of Hugh, was Earl of Burgundy also, in right of his Wife.
- 1349 17 Philip, the Grandchild of Eudes by his only Son Philip, Duke and Earl of Burgundy, by descent, (who if he had lived, had been also Earl of Flanders and Artois, in right of Margaret his Wife.) But dying young and without without Issue, he was succeeded in all his Titles and Estates, by

- 1363 18 Philip II. firnamed the Hardy, Son of John King of France, Son of Philip de Valois, and of Joan Daughter of Robert the third, by King John his Father, with the consent of Charles the 5th. his Brother, (in whom the right of this Dukedom was then pretended to remain) made Duke of Burgundy, and married Margaret Daughter of Lewis de Malsin (and consequently Heir of Flanders, and the County of Burgundy) the Widow of his Predecessor.
- 1404 19 John, firnamed the Proud, Son of Philip the second, Duke and Earl of Burgundy, and Earl of Flanders and Artois.
- 1419 20 Philip III. firnamed the Good, who added most of the Netherlands to his Estate.
- 1467 21 Charles the Warlike, Earl of Charolais, Son of Philip the Good. After whose death, slain by the Switzers at the battle of Nancy, Lewis the eleventh seized upon this Dukedom, An. 1476. pretending an Escheat thereof, for want of Heirs males; and so uniting it for ever to the Crown of France: as by like colour of Escheat, King John had formerly entred on it, and given it unto Philip his younger Son, to the prejudice of the Earls of Exeter, descended from the daughter and heir of Lewis Hutin, and of Margaret his Wife, the elder Sister of the Mother of the said King John.

Of the great Wealth and Potency of these last Dukes of Burgundy, we shall speak further when we come to the description of Belgium: the accession whereof to their Estates, made them equal to most Kings in Christendom. But for their Arms, which properly belonged to them as Dukes of Burgundy, they were Bendwise of Or and Azure a Border Gules. Which Coat is usually marshalled in the Scurcheons of the Kings of Spain; that of the Earldom being omitted, though in their possession. The reasons of which are probably (for I go but by guess) partly because this being the older and Paternal Coat, comprehends the other; and partly to keep on foot the memory of this Title to the Dukedom it self, in right of which he holdeth such a great Estate.

22. The County of Burgundy.

THE County of BURGUNDY hath on the East, the Mountain Jura, which parts it from Switzerland; on the West, the Dutchy of Burgundy, from which divided by the Sosne, on the North, a branch of the Mountain Vange, which runneth betwixt it and Lorraine; on the South, La Bresse. It is reckoned to be 90 miles in length, about 60 in breadth: and with the Provinces of Dauphine, La Bresse, and Provence, made up the Dukedom of Burgundy beyond the Sosne: on the Eastern side of which it is wholly situate. This part thereof, now generally called the French Comte, or the Free County, because not under the command of the French Kings; but living in a more free Estate than any Subjects of that Kingdom.

The County in some parts very Mountainous, but those Mountains yielding excellent Vineyards, and having, in recompence of a little barrenness, an intermixture of most pleasing and fruitful Valleys, swelling with plenty of all natural commodities useful unto the life of man; and for the variety of fresh Streams, and delightful Rivers, inferior only to the Dutchy.

The principal Towns and Cities of it are, 1. Bezancon, called by Cesar, Vesontio, then the chief City of the Sequani, as afterwards the Metropolis of the Province entitled, Maxima Sequanorum; by consequence an Archbishop See. Stated betwixt two Mountains on the banks of the River Doux, by which it is almost encompassed, such artificial Fortifications being added to it, as make it very strong both by Art and Nature. But this is an Imperial City, not subject to the Government and Command of the Earls of Burgundy, honoured with a small University, founded here An. 1540. by Pope Julius the second, and Charles the fifth. 2. Dole, seated on the same River Doux; for riches, strength, and beauty, to be preferred before any in all the County; of which it is the Parliament-City, and consequently of most resort for dispatch of business. Anciently it was an University for the study of the Civil Laws; but now the University is devoured by a College of Jesuits: who fearing lest the Doctrine of the Reformed Churches might creep in amongst the people, not only have debared them the use of the Protestants Books; but have expressly forbid them to talk of GOD, either in a good fort or in a bad. 3. Salines, so called from its salt Fountains; out of which came the greatest part of the Earls Revenue: in which respect, or that it was the title of Obis the Son of Frederick Barbarossa, before he did attain the Earldom; the Earls of Burgundy since that time, and the Emperors of Germany, in their right, retained the name of Lords of Salines, in their usual title. A City honoured for a while with the Seat of the Parliament, removed thither from Dole by King Lewis the eleventh, at such time as he held this Country, withholding to him (being a wife and politic Prince) for many wholesome Ordinances, still observed amongst them. 4. Poligny, the Balliage of the Lomere; as 5. Vescal is of the Higher Burgundy. 6. Arbois, noted for the best Wines, and 7. Laxoal, for medicinal Baths. 8. Nazareth, on the borders of Switzerland, fortified with a very strong Castle; the ordinary feat and retreat from business, of the first Prince of Orange, of the House of Chalons, who had great possessions in this Country. 9. Gray. 10. Cîtelet-Chalon. 11. Quingey. 12. Orgelet. Here is also the great and famous Abbey of Clugny, near the Town of Beaune; out of which so many Monasteries in the Western Church, had their first Original.

The old Inhabitants of this County, were the Sequani, a potent Nation, contending with the Helvi and Auverni, for the Sovereignty of Gaul, till the strife was ended by the Romans, under whom it made, together with Switzerland, the Province of Maxima Sequanorum. In the declining of which Empire, it fell to the Burgundians; and by Rodolph the last, King of the French, the Kingdom of Burgundy was given to Conrade the second Emperor of Germany. After that, reckoned as a part of the German Empire, and governed by such Earls or Provincial Officers, as those Emperors sent thither. Obis of Flanders, Son to a Sister of the Emperor Conrade, was the first that held it as Proprietary; the other three whom Paradise before him in his Catalogue of the Earls of Burgundy, being merely Official. It was first united to the Dutchy, by the marriage of D. Eudes, with Joan the Countess. But no Issue coming out of this bed, it fell into the House of Flanders; and with the Heir of Flanders, unto Philip the Hardy, the first Duke hereof, of the Royal Race of Valois, An. 1369. Philip the Grandchild of this Philip, united most of the Belgick Provinces unto his Estate: after whose death, and the death of Charles his Son, at the Battle of Nancy, the Dutchy was surprized by King Lewis the eleventh, as holden of the Crown of France, debated to him for want of Heirs-males. But the County, holden of the Empire, though subdued also by this Lewis, was restored again to Mary the Daughter and Heir of Charles, continuing hitherto in her Issue; as appears evidently by this Catalogue of

The Earls of Burgundy.

- 1101 1 Otho Guillaume, the first Earl of Burgundy, by the power and aid of Robert King of France.
- 1118 2 Reinald, Cousin and Heir of Otho.
- 1157 3 Frederick Barbarossa, Emperor, in right of Beatrice his Wife, Daughter of Earl Reinald, was Earl of Burgundy.
- 1183 4 Otho, the youngest Son of Frederick.
- 1200 5 Otho II. Duke of Meranie, part of the Province of Tirol in Germany, was Earl of Burgundy in right of Beatrice his Wife, the Daughter of Otho the first.
- 1208 6 Stephen, Earl of Chalons, next Heir of Gerard of Vienne, and Joan his Wife, the second Daughter of Otho the first, and Sister of Beatrice; acknowledged by his Faction there, for Earl of Burgundy, in the life of Otho the second, whom he dispossessed, and left the same unto his Son, to the prejudice of Alice the Daughter of Otho.
- 1234 7 John, Son of Stephen de Chalons.
- 1269 8 Hugh the Son of John, married to Alice Daughter of Otho of Meranie; so getting in that pretension also.
- 1279 9 Othelin, the Son of Hugh, Earl of Artois in right of Maud his Wife, Daughter of Robert Earl of Artois.
- 1315 10 Philip the Long, King of France; Earl of Burgundy and Artois, in right of Joan his Wife, Daughter and Heir of Othelin.
- 1331 11 Ender, Duke of Burgundy, Husband of Joan of France, the eldest Daughter of King Philip the Long, and of Joan the Countess.
- 1349 12 Philip, Duke and Earl of Burgundy, Grandchild of Ender, and of Joan his wife, by their Son Philip.
- 1361 13 Margaret, the Widow of Lewis Earl of Flanders, and second Daughter of Philip the Long, and of Joan the Countess, was Countess of Burgundy and Artois, after the death of her Cousin Philip.
- 14 Lewis de Malain, Earl of Flanders by his Father, and of Burgundy and Artois, by his Mother.
- 1383 15 Philip II. called the Hardy, Duke of Burgundy, by the gift of King John his Father, with the content and approbation of his Brother Charles the fifth, was Earl of Burgundy, Flanders, and Artois; as also, Duke of Nevers and Rethel, in right of Margaret his Wife, sole Daughter of Lewis de Malain.
- 1404 16 Antony the Proud, Duke and Earl of Burgundy, his younger Brother Philip, succeeding in the Earldoms of Nevers and Rethel.
- 1419 17 Philip III. called the Good, Duke and Earl of Burgundy.
- 1467 18 Charles the Warlike, Duke and Earl of Burgundy.

- 1476 19 Mary, the Daughter of Charles, married to Maximilian of Austria, Son of Frederick the third, Emperor of Germany; in which honour he succeeded his Father.
- 1482 20 Philip IV. Son of Mary and Maximilian, King of Castile, in right of his Wife Joan, daughter to Ferdinand and Isabel, King of Castile, &c.
- 1506 21 Charles, the Son of Philip, King of Spain, and Emperor of Germany, by the name of Charles the fifth.
- 1558 22 Philip V. of Burgundy, and the second of Spain.
- 23 Philip VI. of Burgundy, and the third of Spain.
- 24 Philip VII. of Burgundy, and the fourth of Spain; in whom resteth the possession of the Country of Burgundy, and the Earldom of Charolais; herein not troubled by the French, upon the death of Charles the Warlike; partly, because it was accounted as a Feit of the Empire, but principally, for fear of giving offence to the Cantons of Switzerland, upon whom it bordereth; jealous enough already of the greatness and power of France, and so not willing to admit such a potent Neighbour.

The Arms of this Earldom are Azure, a Lion rampant Or, Some of Billets Argent.

23. The Islands in the Aquitain and Gallick Ocean.

HAVING thus took a view of the several Provinces within the Continent of France, let us next look upon the ISLANDS which belong unto it, dispersed in the Mediterranean Sea, and the Western Ocean. Those in the Mediterranean Sea, are of little note; as 1. the Isles of Ereux, and 2. Pomagne, lying against Provence; 3. Magnelone, lying against Languedoc; and 4. L'Anguade, betwixt both, at the mouth of the Rhone; of which there is nothing to be said, but that those of Ereux are thought to be the Stoebades of Pliny; and his Blason, to be Anguade. And if the Isles of Ereux be the same with the Stoebades, then one of them must be the Lerina which we find in Pliny; of most note afterwards for a Monastery founded in it, which gave name to Vincentius Lerinensis, or rather Lirinensis, as most Writers call him: the Island now called Isula Sanbi Honorati, or Saint Honoratus, as Massonus telleth us. And of as little note in the Western Ocean, are Belle Isle, against Vannes in Bretagne; the Ile de Din, having in it two or three good Villages; and Marmorset, plentiful in Salt, and beautified with a Monastery called the White Abby. Of which three last, that of Edle Isle hath been of late fortified by Art, as of old by Nature, that it is thought to be impregnable: the Abbey of the last endowed with so plentiful a Revenue, that it was thought a competent preferment for Ambrosine of Bourbon, bafe Brother to King Henry the Fourth, to be made Lord Abbot of the same. Those of most note are, 1. Oleron, and 2. Re, on the Coast of Aquitain; and those of 3. Jarvis, 4. Gensley, 5. Sarke, and 6. Alderney, on the shores of Normandy: Of which, the four last are under the Kings of England; the rest possessed by the French.

1. OLERON is an Island situate over against the Province of Chalosse, and South unto the Isle of Re, from which little distant. It is the biggest of the two, and makes yearly a very great quantity of Salt, wherewith most of the Provinces of the Western Ocean use to be furnished: But it is safe of access, and not very defensible; which makes it of less note both in ancient and modern stories. The principal Town of it is called Oleron, by the name of the Island. One thing there is for which indeed this Island is of special fame, and that is, that the Maritime Laws, which for near 500 years have generally been received by all the States of the Christian World which frequent the Ocean, (the Rhodian Laws being antiquated and worn out of use) for regulating of Sea-affairs, and deciding of Maritime Controversies, were declared and established here, and from thence called the Laws of Oleron. And here they were declared and established by King Richard the First of England, as Lord Paramount of the Seas, immediately on his return from the Holy Land: this Dand being then in his possession, as a Member of his Dukedom of Aquitain: Que quidem Leges & Statuta per Dominum Richardum quandam Regem Anglia, in reditu a Terra Sancta, correcta fuerunt, interpretata, declarata, & in Insula de Oleron publicata & nominata in Gallica Lingua La Loy d'Oleron, &c. faith an old Record which I find cited in a MS. Discourse of my late learned Friend Sir John Burroughs, (once Keeper of the Records in the Tower of London, but afterwards Principal King of Arms, by the name of Garter) entitled, The Sovereignty of the British Seas. So powerful were the Kings of England in the former times, as to give Laws to all that traded on the Ocean.

2. The Isle of REE is situate over against Rochel: to which it served for an Out-work on that side thereof. It is in length ten English miles, and about half as much in breadth, well fortified with deep Marishes at the entries of it; to which the many Salt-pits every where intermingled, add a very great strength. Chief places in it are, 1. La Butte de Mors, 2. St. John de Monts, 3. St. Hilary, 4. St. Martin, the largest and strongest of them all; from whence the whole Island hath sometimes been called St. Martin. After the taking of this Town by Lewis XIII. An. 1622. (the Duke of Soubize then commanding in it for those of Rochel) it was very well fortified, and since made unfortunately famous for the defeat of the English Forces under the Command of George Duke of Buckingham, sent thither to recover the Town and Island, on the instigation of Soubize, who before had lost it, An. 1628.

3. JARSET, by Antonine called Cesarea, situate about ten miles from the Coast of Normandy, within the view and prospect of the Church of Constance, part of which Diosey it was: in length containing 11 miles, 6 in breadth, and in circuit about 33. It is generally very fruitful of Corn, wherewith they have not only enough for themselves, but some over-plus to barter at St. Malo, with the Spanish Merchants: and of an Air not very much disposed to Difeases, unless it be an Ague in the end of Harvest, which they call Les Serzembrer. The Country stands much upon Incolours, the hedges of the ground well stored with Apples, and those Apples making store of Sider, which is their ordinary drink: watered with many pleasant Rivulets, and good fure of Fish-ponds, yielding a Carp for sale and largeness inferior unto none in Europe, excepting those of Gensley, which generally are somewhat bigger, but not better relished. The people, for the most part, more inclinable to Husbandry, than to Trades or Merchandise; and therein differing very little from those of Gensley, who are more for Merchandise than Tillage. It containeth in it 12 Parishes or Villages, having Churches in them, besides the Members of the Seigniorie, and the chief men of the Country. The principal Church is St. Andrew, where is the Cath, or Parish for all the Island. It is about the biggest of an ordinary Market-Town in England: situate on the edge of a little Bay, fortified on the one side with a small Block-house called Mont St. Andrew; but on that side which is next the Town, with a very strong Castle, called Fort Elizabeth, situate upon craggy Rocks, and encompassed with two arms of the Sea: so named from Queen Elizabeth, who built it to assure the Island against the French, and furnished it with thirty pieces of Ordnance, and all other necessaries. There is also on the East-side, opposite to the City of Constance, high mounted on steep and craggy Rocks, the strong Castle of Musit Orgueille; of great antiquity, repaired by King Henry the Fifth; now furnished with forty pieces of Cannon, and made the ordinary residence of the Governours for the Kings of England.

4. On the North-West of Jarvis, lyeth the Island of GENSET, called Sarnia by Antonine; in form Triangular, each side of nine miles in length. The Country is of as rich a soil as the other of Jarvis, but not so well cultivated and manured; the poorer people here, being more given to Manufactures, (especially to the knitting of Stockings and Waiscoats) and the rich to Merchandise; many of which are Masters of good stout Barques, with which they traffick into England, and other places. The whole Island contains ten Villages with Churches; the principal of which, Saint Peter's Port; a very neat and well built Town; with a safe Peer for the benefit of Merchants, and the securing of the Haven, capable of handsome Barques: a Market-Town, beautified with a very fair Church, and honoured with the Plaiderie, or Court of Justice. Opposite whereto, in a little Ill, standeth the Castle of Cornet, taking up the whole circuit and dimensions of it; environed on all sides with the Sea, having one entrance only, and that very narrow: well fortified with Works of Art, and furnished with no less than 80 pieces of Ordnance for the defence of the Island; but chiefly, to command the adjoining Harbour, capable of 500 as good Ships as any fail on the Ocean. A piece of great importance to the Realm of England, and might prove utterly destructive of the Trade thereof, if in the hands of any Nation that were strong in shipping. For that cause made the Ordinary Seal of the English Governours, though of late times not so much honoured with the presence of those Governours, as a place of that consequence ought to be. Pertaining unto Gensley, are two little Isles, the one called Jet-bow, the Governours Park, wherein are some few fallow-Deer, and good plenty of Conies: the other named Arme, some three miles in compass; a dwelling heretofore of Franciscan Friars; now not inhabited, but by Phisians; of which, amongst the shrubs and bushes, there is very good store.

5. ALDERNET, by Antonine called Arice, by the French, Avrigny, and Avrigny, is situate over against the Cape of the Lexobii, in the Dukedom of Normandy, which the Mariners at this day call the Hagge: distant from which, but six miles only. Besides many dwelling-houses scattered up and down, there is one pretty Town or Village of the same name with the Island, consisting of about an hundred Families; and having, not far off, an Harbour made in the fashion of a Semi-circle, which they call La Crabbie. The whole about 8 miles in compass, of very difficult access, by reason of the high Rocks and Precipices which encompass it on every side, and with with a small force easily defensible, if thought worth attempting.

6. And so is also SARR, the adjoining Island, being in compass six miles, not known by any special name unto the Ancients; and to say truth, not peopled till the fifth year of Q. Elizabeth: who then granted it in fee-farm to Helian de Carteret, the Seigneur of St. Omer, in the Isle of Jersey, who from thence planted it, and made Estates out of it to several Occupants, so that it may contain now about 60. Households. Before, which time it served only for a Common, or Beasts Pasture, to those of Gersy: save that there was an Hermitage, and a little Chapel, for the use of such as the solitariness of the place invited to those retirements.

These two last Islands are subject to the Governour of Jersey; all four, to the Crown of England: holden in right of the Dukedom of Normandy, to whose realm they anciently belonged; and of which now the sole remainance is in the power of the English. Attempted often by the French, (the two first I mean) since they seized on Normandy, but always with repulse and loss: the people being very affectionate to the English Government, under which they could not hope for. Their Language the Norman French, (though the better sort of men speak the English also) their Law, the Grand Coutume of Normandy, attempted and applied to the use of this people in their suits and business, by the Bailiffs and Justiciars of the two chief Islands. Their Religion, for the main, is that of the Reformed Churches: the Government in Jersey, by the Dean thereof, Suffragan heretofore to the Bishop of Constance, now to the Bishop of Winchester; in Gersy, by a mixt Consistory of Clergie and Lay-Eldests, according to the New-Model of Geneva: a Government first introduced in both Islands, An. 1565, being the eighth year of Queen Elizabeth, and abolished again in Jersey, An. 1619, being the seventeenth of King James.

But to return again to the story of France, thow which we have now made our progress both by Sea and Land: It took this name from the Franks or French, a German people, who in the wane of the Roman Empire possessed themselves of it: not mentioned by that name by Cæsar, Strabo, Ptolemy, or any of the more ancient Writers. Nor was it taken up by them, for ought appears, till an hundred years after the death of Ptolemy: the first express mention of them, occurring in the Reign of Gallienus; then vanquishing the Coasts of Gaul, and joining with Posthumus the Rebel, against that Emperor. Afterwards often spoken of in the course of the Roman stories, under the Empire of Claudian, Probus, Dioclesian, and the Sons of Constantine: though only in the way of pillage and depredation. Their habitation in those times, was from the meeting of the Rhene with the River Moselle, not far from Frankford, where they confined upon the particular Nations of the Bructeri, Sicambri, Sali, Cherusci, Frisci, and Tentleri, besides some others of less note; and taking up the Countries of Westphalen, Bergen, Mark, and so much of Cleve as lieth on the Dutch side of the Rhene, the Langravedom of Hessa, the Duchy of Guelder, the Provinces of Zuaphen, Utrecht, Oversse, both Friesland, and so much of Holland as lieth on the same side of the Rhene. United in the name of Franks, to shew that liberty or freedom from the yoke of servitude which the Romans had endeavoured to impose upon them; and wherewith all the Nations on the other side of the River were supposed to suffer: Governed by Dukes, till the year 420, when Pharamond first took upon himself the name of King. Meroveus their third King, having dispossessed the Sons of Clodion, the Son and Successor of Pharamond, was the first that fixed his seat in Gaul: when seeing the Romans on the one side put to the word by Theoderick and the Goths; and on the other side by the Burgundians, they passed over the Rhene, and possessed themselves of the Province of Germania Secunda, containing all the Belgick Provinces on the French side of that River, together with the District of Capele, Gallic, and the rest of Cleve, then calling in the account of Gaul. His Victories and Fortunes were inherited by Chilperic, his Son and Successor, who added Picardy, Champaine, and the Isle of France, to the former Conquest; took Paris, and made it the seat of his Kingdom. Afterwards, when they had fully seated themselves here, and thereby opened a free passage to the rest of the Country, they quickly made themselves Masters of all that which formerly had been possessed by the Romans; whom they ousted of their last hold in Seissions, under Clonius their fifth King, who also took Aquitain, and the parts adjoining, from the Visi-Goths, or Goths of Spain: for these and many signal Victories against the Almans, deservedly framed the Great: but greater in submitting to the Faith of CHRIST, and receiving Baptism, than by all his Victories. Childebert and Cloataire, the Sons of this Clonius, vanquished the Burgundians, adding that Kingdom to their own: as Theoderic his Grandchild, King of Mis, or Austrasia, did the Country of Provence, resigned unto him by Amalsuin, Queen of the Ostro-Goths, or Goths of Italy, by whom it had been wrested from the Goths of Spain. In the person of Cloataire the second, the Realm of France impropriately dismembered into many Kingdoms, amongst the Children of Clonius the first; that is to say, the Kingdoms of France, Seissions, Orleans, and Austrasia, (of which, Orleans and Austrasia were of long continuance) were again united: whose Successor, Dagobert the first, was the last considerable Prince of the Merovingians. After this time, the reputation of the French Kings of this Line, began to diminish, scarce doing any thing that might ennoble and commend them to succeeding Ages; or leaving any Monument behind them, but their empty Names: which I shall represent in the following Catalogue, according to their several times: first taking notice, that though the Kings of this first Race did many times divide the Kingdom, as before was said; yet none of them were called Kings of France, but those that had their Royal Seat in the City of Paris, the rest being called only Kings of Seissions, Mis, or Orleans, according to the name of their principal Cities. And therefore, leaving those to their proper places, we will here only take a survey of those who passed in the common estimate for the Kings of France.

The Kings of France, of the French or Merovingian Line.

A. Ch.

- 449 1 Meroveus, Master of the Horse to Clodion the Son of Pharamond; from whom this Line of Kings were called Merovingians. 10.
- 459 2 Chilperic, the Son of Merove. 26.
- 485 3 Clonius, the first Christian King of the French. 30.
- 515 4 Childebert, eldest Son of Clonius, his other Brother reigning in their several places. 45.
- 560 5 Cloataire, Brother of Childebert, first King of the Seissions, afterwards sole King of the French.

- 565 6 Cherebert, Son of Cloataire.
- 574 7 Chilperic II. King of Seissions, and Brother of Cherebert, whom he succeeded in the Kingdom. 14.
- 582 8 Cloataire II. Son of Chilperic the second. 44.
- 619 9 Dagobert, Son of Cloataire the second. 14.
- 645 10 Clonius II. Son of Dagobert. 17.
- 663 11 Cloataire III. Son of Cloataire the second. 4.
- 667 12 Chilperic III. Brother of Cloataire the third, and Son of Clonius the second.
- 680 13 Theoderic, Brother of Chilperic. 14.
- 694 14 Clonius III. Son to Theoderic. 5.
- 698 15 Childebert II. Brother to Clonius the third. 15.
- 716 16 Dagobert II. Son of Childebert the second. 5.
- 722 17 Chilperic IV. Son of Childebert the second, and Brother of Dagobert the second, opposed by Charles Martel, in behalf of Cloataire the fourth Son of Theoderic, and Brother of Childebert the second. 5.
- 727 18 Theoderic II. Son of Dagobert the second. 15.
- 742 19 Chilperic V. Son of Theoderic the second, the last of the Merovingian Family; deposed by Pepin, Son to Charles Martel, the Pope giving approbation to his proceedings.

This Pepin and his Father Martel, were Mayors of the Palace to the former Kings; which Mayres were originally Controllers of the Kings House, and had nothing to do with the affairs of State. But Cloataire the third, to ease himself and his Successors of a burden so weighty, made the Mayres Vicars-general of his Empire. From henceforward the Kings followed their pleasures, shewing themselves only on May-day; and then seated in a Chariot, adorned with Flowers, and drawn by four Oxen. As for the Mayres, he openeth Paquets, hearth and dispatcheth Foreign Ambassadors, giveth remedy to the Complaints of the Subjects, maketh Laws, and repealeth them. An Authority somewhat like that of the Presbiteri, in the declining times of the Roman Empire; or that of the Sultans under the Mahometan Caliphs, and the Vice-Roys of the old Egyptian Pharaohs. An Office which had been long born by the Ancestors of this Martel, ever since the reign of Cloataire the second: in whose time the Palatine or Mayre was one Arnulphe, descended lineally from Utilo, the second Son of Theodon the first Duke, and Nephew of Adalgis the last King of the Boians, or Bavarians. Which Utilo being a Military Prince, and having done good service to Theoderic the first King of Austrasia, or Metz, against the Danes, then grievously infesting the Coasts of the Lower Germany; was by him made Warden of those Marches, honoured with the Marriage of his Daughter Pithilda, and liberally endowed with fair possessions in that Tract. The fourth from Utilo was this Arnulphe, the first Mayre of this House; which Office having long enjoyed, he resigned it to Ansagis his eldest Son, (the first who drew unto himself the managery of the whole Estate) and bidding farewell to the affairs of the world, became a Priest, and died Bishop of Metz, Anno 641. Afterwards Canonized a Saint. Ansagis dying in the year 679, left his Authority and Office to his Nephew Martin. Son of Ferdolphus his younger Brother. But he being slain by Ebroinus, one of the Competitors, who at the while enjoyed it: Pepin framed the Fat, Son of Ansagis, revenging his Cousins death upon Ebroinus, and crushing all the opposite Factions which were raised against him, obtained that honour for himself. And having much advanced the affairs of France, by the conquest of the Sueves and Frisons, died in the year 714. Succeeded to in this great Office, after his decease, (for Grimold his only lawful Son, and Thibaldus the Son of Grimold, whom he had successively substituted in the same, died not long before him) by Charles his natural Son, begotten on Albaida his Concubine: from his Martial Prowess called Martel. Who in his time did to the Kings of France great service, especially in routing that vast Army of the Moor and Saracens, in the Battle of Tours before mentioned: thereby not only freeing France from the present danger, but adding Languedoc to the Crown, formerly in possession of the Goths and Moor: for which he was created Duke or Prince of the French: yet would he not usurp the Kingdom, or the Title of King, though both at his disposal wholly; it being his ordinary saying, that he had rather rule a King, than be one.

To him succeeded Caroloman his eldest Son, An. 741, who held the Office but a year, and then left it to his Brother Pepin. Who being of less moderation than his Father was, made such use of his Power, that partly by that means, and partly under colour of an election, confirmed by Pope Zachary the first, he took the Kingdom to himself; and the unfortunate King Chilperic had his Poll (havent, and was thrust into a Monastery. For this invidious, both Pepin and Charles his Son, did many good services for the Pope; destroying, on their quarrel, the Kingdom of the Lombards, and giving them most of the Lands which formerly belonged unto the Exarchs of Ravenna. And on the other side, the Pope to requite these courtesies, confirmed the former in this Kingdom, by their Papal Power (which then began to bear some sway in the Christian World:) and gave the last (besides the opportunity of attaining the Western Empire) the Title of Most Christian King, continued ever since unto his Successors. And, to say truth, he well deserved those honours, had they been far greater, by many Victories obtained against the Enemies of the Gospel; the several Heathens by his means converted to the Faith of CHRIST; the great abilities he had of Estate and Judgment, enabling him to support the Majesty of the Roman Empire. For he not only was sole Monarch of the Kingdom of France, not parcelled out as formerly, and in times succeeding, into several petty Kingdoms and Principalities, but had added thereto, by his own proper virtue, the greatest part of Italy, the best part of Germany, all Belgium, the two Pannonias, and a great part of Spain.

But this vast Empire falling into weak hands, which were not able enough to manage it, decayed in a little time as it was in raising: partly by the unnatural ambition of the Sons of King Lewis the Godly, the next Successor of this Charles; who to make themselves all Kings, first deposed their Father, and then divided his Estate amongst them, into the Kingdoms of Italy, Burgundy, France, Lorraine, and Germany: four of which falling at last into the hands of strangers, ceased to be French, and passed into such Families as proved the greatest Enemies of the Crown of France: partly by alienating the best and goodliest Provinces of France it self, never again united till these latter days; which made the French Kings less considerable both at home and abroad; which we have touched upon before: and partly by the weakness and unworthiness of the Kings of his Race, there being no question to be made, but Lewis the Stammering, Charles the Bald, the Groff, and the Simple, would have found better Aspirations, if they had deserved them. For by this means, the issue of this brave Prince grew so depicable in the eyes of their subjects, that first Edward, the Son of Robert Duke of Angou, and after, Radolph Duke of Burgundy, the Uncle of Edward (both of the Race of Witigandus, the last Prince of the Saxons, (and consequently, both aliens to the House of Charles) possessed themselves fevally of the Kingdom. And though they did not hold it long, being depreſſed and over-born by their oppoſite Factions: yet did they lay a fair ground for Hugh Capet to build his hopes on: Who being Son of Hugh the Great Conſtable of France, and Earl of Paris, the Son of Robert Duke of Anjou, younger Brother of Endes, and near Kinſman of Rodolph, never left practiſing his party in the Realm of France, till he had got poſſeſſion of the Regal Diadem, wherewith two Princes of this Houſe had been inveſted formerly by the like Elections. But for the Kings of this ſecond Race, founded by two brave Princes, but on the unjuſt grounds of an Uſurpation, they are theſe that follow.

The ſecond Race of the Kings of France, of the Carlovinian or Boiarian Line.

A. Ch.

- 751 1 Pepin, the Son of Charles Martel, ſucceeded in the Office of Mayre, An. 742. and having got the Regal Crown, vanquiſhed the Lombards, made the Boiarians Tributary, and cruſhed the Saxons. 18.
- 769 2 Charles, ſurnamed the Great, the Son of Pepin, ſubdued the Kingdom of the Lombards and Saxons; conquered the Boiarians and Avars; and vanquiſhed the Saracens of Spain: Crowned Emperor of the Welt, upon Chriſtmas-day, by Pope Leo the 3. An. 800. 46.
- 815 3 Lewis the Godly, Son of Charles King of France, and Emperor, the laſt ſole Monarch of the French, depoled by his ambitious and unnatural Sons: the Empire of the French, after his deceaſe, being divided into the Kingdoms of Italy, Burgundy, Germany, France, and Lorraine; and France it ſelf diſtracted into many Sovereign Eſtates and Principalities. 26.
- 841 4 Charles II. ſurnamed Calvus, or the Bald, youngſt Son of Lewis, King of France, and Emperor; vanquiſhed by Charles the Groſs, in the War of Italy. 38.
- 879 5 Lewis II. ſurnamed Balbus, or the Stammering, Son of Charles the Bald, King of France, and Emperor.

- 886 7 Charles III. ſurnamed Craſſus, or the Groſs, King of Germany, and Emperor; called into France, and elected King, during the minority of Charles the Simple. 5.
- 891 8 Odo, or Endes, Son of Robert Earl of Anjou, of the Race of Witikindus, the laſt King of the Saxons; elected by an oppoſite Faction, outed Charles the Groſs. 9.
- 900 9 Charles IV. ſurnamed Simplex, or the Simple, the Poſthumus Son of Lewis the Stammerer, reſtored unto the Throne of his Fathers; which after many troubles raiſed againſt him by Robert the ſecond, Earl of Anjou, (whom he ſlew in Battle) he was forced to reſign. 27.
- 927 10 Rodolph of Burgundy, Son of Richard Duke of Burgundy, the Brother of Endes, ſucceeded on the reſignation of Charles the Simple. 2.

- 929 11 Lewis V. Son of Charles the Simple, ſurnamed Transmarine, in regard that during his Fathers troubles he had lived in England, reſtored unto the Regal Throne on the death of Rodolph: oppoſed therein by Hugh Earl of Paris and Anjou, the Nephew of King Endes by his Brother Robert before mentioned.
- 958 12 Lotharius, Son of Lewis the 4. diſturbed in his poſſeſſion by Hugh Capet, the eldeſt Son of the ſaid Hugh, on the pretention of that Houſe, by which at laſt he got the Kingdom.
- 977 13 Lewis V. Son of Lotharius, the laſt King of the Houſe of Charles the Great. After whole death, (being King only for a year) the Crown was ſeized on by Hugh Capet; Charles Duke of Lorraine, Brother of Lotharius, and Uncle unto Lewis the fifth, being pretermitted.

And now we are come to the preſent Race of the Kings of France, founded in Hugh Capet; ſo called from the greatneſs of his head: Son of Hugh the Great, Earl of Paris and Anjou, and Grandchild of Robert the ſecond, Earl of Anjou: which Robert was the Brother of Endes, and Couſin-german of Rodolph, Kings of France. Who partly by his own wits, but chiefly by the weakneſs of the Mungrel-Iſſue of Charles the Great, having got the Diadem, tranſmitted it unto his poſterity; the Crown deſcending in a direct Line from Father to Son, till the death of Lewis the tenth, ſurnamed Hutin. But here we are to underſtand, that the Realm of France was at that time ſhut up within narrower bounds than it is at preſent: the large and rich Countries of Champagne, Normandy, Bretagne, Anjou, Poitou, Langueſc, and the great Dukedom of Aquitain; beſides thoſe Provinces which conſtituted and made up the Kingdom of Burgundy, being aliened and diſmembered from it. How they became reduced to the Crown again, will be diſcerned in the enſuing Hiſtory, and Succeſſion of

The third Race of the Kings of France, of the Capetine or Saxon Line.

- 1286 11 Philip IV. ſurnamed the Fair, King alſo of Navarre, in the right of the Lady Joan his Wife. 28.
- 1314 12 Lewis X. ſurnamed Hutin, King of Navarre in right of his Mother, whom he ſucceeded in that Kingdom, An. 1305, after whole death the Kingdom of France was to have deſcended to Joan his Daughter. 2.
- 1315 13 Philip V. called the Long, Brother of Lewis Hutin, partly by threats, promiſes, and other Practices, cauſed a Law to paſs to which he gave the name of the Salique Law, for diſabling Women from the ſucceſſion to the Crown; and thereby quite excluded his Brother's Daughter: ſerved in the ſame kind himſelf, by his Brother Charles, who following his example, excluded, on the ſame pretence, his Nieces, Joan, and Margaret, the Daughters of Philip. 5.
- 1320 14 Charles IV. but in true account the fifth of that name, moſt commonly called Charles the Fair, Brother of Philip and Lewis, the two laſt Kings. After whole death began the Wars of the English for the Crown of France: challenged by King Edward the third, as Son and Heir of Iſabel, the Daughter of King Philip the Fair, and Siſter to the three laſt Kings. 7.
- 1328 15 Philip VI. ſurnamed de Valois, Son of Charles Earl of Valois, the ſecond Son of King Philip the third, and Uncle to the three laſt Kings, ſucceeded under colour of the Salique Law: of which Charles it is ſaid, that he was Son to a King, Brother to a King, Uncle to a King, and Father to a King; yet himſelf was no King. In this Kings days was fought the famous Battle of Creſſy, An. 1343. in which the French Army conſiſted of about 70000 Soldiers; the English of 11800 only: yet the victory fell unto the English: by whole valour fell that John K. of Bohemia, 11 Princes, 80 Barons, 120 Knights, and 30000 of the common Soldiers. He added unto his Eſtate, the County Palatine of Champagne, the County of Dauphine, and the City and Earldom of Montpelier. 22.
- 1350 16 John, the Son of Philip de Valois; in whole reign was fought the Battle of Poitiers, wherein Edward the Black Prince, (ſo called for his black acts upon the French) with an handful of wearied Soldiers, (but 8000 in all) overcame the French Army, conſiſting of 40000; of which they ſlew, beſides the Nobles, 10000 of the common Soldiers, and took Priſoners King John himſelf, and Philip his Son, 70 Earls, 50 Barons, and 12000 Gentlemen. 14.
- 1364 17 Charles V. the Son of John; recovered all thoſe pieces (except only Calice) which the English had before gotten from his Father and Grandfather. He is called commonly Charles the Wiſe; but Lewis the 11. would by no means allow him that attribute: affirming, that it was but a fooliſh part to give his younger Brother Philip the Dukedom of Burgundy, and withal, the Heir of Flanders to Wite. And ſo it proved in the event.
- 18 Charles VI. a weak and diſtracted Prince; in whole reign, Henry the fifth of England, called in by the Faction of Burgundy, againſt that of Orleans, married the Lady Katherine, daughter of this King; and was thereupon made Regent of France during the Kings life, and Heir apparent of the Kingdom. But he had ſtill won the great Battle of Agincourt, Anno 1415. in which the English having an Army but of 15000
- vanquiſhed an Army of the French conſiſting of 52000 men; of which were ſlain 5 Dukes, 8 Earls, 25 Lords, 8000 Knights, and Gentlemen of note, and 25000 of the Commons; the English loſing but one Duke, one Earl, and 600 Soldiers. This unfortunate Prince loſt what his Predeceſſor, Philip the ſecond, had taken from King John of England, and had not been reſtored by King Lewis the ninth.
- 1423 19 Charles VII. Son of Charles the ſixth, after a long and bloody War, recovered from the English (then divided by domeſtick diſſention) all their Lands and Seignories in France, except Calice only.
- 1461 20 Lewis XI. Son of Charles the ſeventh, added unto his Crown the Dukedom of Burgundy, the Earldom of Provence, (and therewithal a Title unto Naples and Sicily) and a great part of Picardy. A Prince of ſo great wants, or ſuch fordid paſſions, that there is found a reckoning in the Chamber of Accounts in Paris, of two ſhillings for new ſleeves to his old Doublet; and three half pence for liquor to greaſe his Boots.
- 1484 21 Charles VIII. Son of Lewis the eleventh, who quickly won, and as ſoon loſt the Kingdom of Naples; which he laid claim to in the right of the Houſe of Anjou. By the marriage of Anne the Heir of Bretagne, he added that Dukedom to his Crown.
- 1498 22 Lewis XII. Son of Charles, and Grand-ſon of Lewis Duke of Orleans, (which Lewis was a younger Son of the fifth) ſucceeded as the next Heir-male of the Houſe of Valois. He diſpoſſeſſed Ludowick Sforze, of the Dutchy of Milain, and divided the Realm of Naples with Ferdinand the Catholic; but held neither long. By his marriage with Anne of Bretagne, the Widow of his Predeceſſor, he confirmed that Dukedom to his Houſe; united after to the Realm by an Act of State. After his death, the English, to prevent the growing greatneſs of Spain, began to cloſe in with the French, and grew into great correſpondencies with them; inſomuch that all the following Kings, until Lewis the 15th. (except Francis the ſecond, a King of one year, and no more) were all Knights of the Garter.
- 1515 23 Francis, Duke of Angoulſim, Grand-ſon of John de Angoulſim, one of the younger Sons of the ſaid Lewis Duke of Orleans, ſucceeded on the death of Lewis the 12th. without iſſue male. Took Priſoner at the Battle of Pavie, by Charles the fifth, with whom he held perpetual Wars; he being as unwilling to endure a Superior, as the Emperor was to admit an Equal. 32.
- 1547 24 Henry II. Son of Francis, recovered Calice from the English, and drove Charles out of Germany, and took from him Metz, Toul, and Verdun, three Imperial Cities, ever ſince members of this Kingdom.
- 1559 25 Francis II. Son of Henry the ſecond, King of the Scots alſo, in the right of Mary his Wife.
- 1560 26 Charles IX. Brother of Francis the ſecond, the Author of the Maſſacre at Paris. 14.
- 1574 27 Henry III. elected King of Poland, in the life of his Brother, whom he ſucceeded at his death. The laſt King of the Houſe of Valois; ſtripped of his life and Kingdom by the Guiſſan Faction, called the Holy League. 15.
- 1589 28 Henry IV. King of Navarre, and Duke of Vendome, ſucceeded as the next Heir-male

to

to Henry the 3d. in the right of the House of Bourbon, descended from Robert Earl of Clermont, a younger Son of Lewis the ninth. He ruined the Holy League, cleared France of the Spaniards, into which they had been called by that potent and rebellious Faction; and laid La Bresse into the Crown, together with the Estates of Bearn, and Basque Navarre: and after a ten years time of Peace, was villainously murdered by Ravillac, in the Streets of Paris. 21.

1610 29 Lewis XIII. Son of Henry the Fourth; the most able King of France, since the death of Charles the Great. For to the reduction of the scattered and dismembered Provinces, (the work of his many Predecessors) he added the reduction of all the Forts and Garrisons held by the Huguenots in that Kingdom, (three hundred at the least in number) seized on the Dukedom of Bar, and surprised that of Lorain, both which he held until his death. 32.

1642 30 Lewis XIV. Son of Lewis the 13th. and of the Lady Anne, eldest Daughter of Philip the third of Spain; succeeded at the age of four years, under the Government of his Mother: the 30th King of the Line of Capet, the 43d from Charles the Great, and the 64th King of France (or rather of the French) now living.

As for the Government of these Kings, it is merely Regal; or, to give it the true name, Despotical; such as that of a Master over his Servants: the Kings Will going for a Law; and his Edicts as valid, as a Sentence of the Court of Parliament. Quod principi placuit Legis habet vigorem, was a Privilege belonging to the Roman Emperours, as Justinian tells us in his Institutes: and the French Kings descending from Charles the Great, claim it as their own. The King's Edicts always ending with these binding words, Car tel est nostre plaisir. For such is Our pleasure. And though he sometimes loads his Edicts to be verified, or approved, in the Parliament of Paris; and his Grants and Patents to be ratified in the Chamber of Accounts, there holdsen: yet this is nothing but a meer formality, and point of circumstance; those Courts not daring to refuse what the King propoeth. It is Car tel est nostre plaisir, which there goeth for Law. and by this intimation of his Royal Pleasure, doth he require such Taxes, as the necessity of his affairs, the greediness of his Officers, or the importunity of Suitors, do suggest unto him: the Patrimony of the Crown being so exhausted by the riot and improvidence of former Princes, that the King hath no other way to maintain his State, defray his Garrisons, reward such as deserve well of him, and support those that depend upon him, but only by laying what he pleaseth on the backs of his Subjects; against which there is no dispute by the Common People, though many times the Great Princes have demurred upon it. And therefore to make them also instrumental to the publick Slavery, the Kings are willing to admit them to some part of their spoils, to give them some exemption from those common burdens; and to connive at the oppressing of their Tenants, against all good conscience: that being so privileged themselves, they may not interrupt the King in his Regal Course.

As for the French Parliaments, or Assembly of the three Estates, which heretofore were of great credit and renown, and looked on as the principal Bulwark of the Publick Liberty, being first discontinued by reason of the sharp and continual Wars which the English made in this Kingdom for the space of 100 years and upwards, they afterward became much weakened by the Policy of K. Lewis the 11. and the Kings succeeding; and finally, by K. Lewis the 13. were laid by for ever. For, finding them to retain something still of their ancient stomach, and apt enough to clash with that absolute Sovereignty which his Predecessors had attained to, he resolved to make no more use of them for the times to come; instead whereof, he ordained another kind of meeting, which he called Le Assemblee des Notables; that is to say, the Assembly of some principal men, composed of some selected persons out of every Order or Estate, (of his own nomination) wherunto should be added some Counsellor out of every one of the eight Courts of Parliament; which, being fewer in number, would not breed such a confusion as the others did, and be withal more pliant and conformable to the Kings desires. Now the eight Courts of Parliament before mentioned, being but as so many Courts of Judicature, (like to ours in Westminster) are these that follow; that is to say, The Parliament 1. of Paris, comprehending the Countries of France special, Champagne, Picardy, the Provinces and Estates of Anjou, La Beaulle, Berry, Poitou, the Provinces which make up the Dukedom of Bourbon, with the County of Lionnois. 2. Of Rouen, for the Dukedom of Normandy. 3. Of Rennes, for the Dukedom of Bretagne. 4. Of Bourdeaux, for the whole Dukedom of Aquitaine, (except only Bearn) with the Countries of Limousin, and Perigou. 5. Of Toulouse, for the Earldom of Langueadoc, and Quercy. 6. Of Aix, for the Earldom of Provence. 7. Of Grenoble, for the Country of Dauphine. And 8. of Dijon, for the Dukedom of Burgundy, and the small County of La Bresse; to which is added of late times by King Lewis the 13th. the little Parliament of Pau, for the County of Bearn. Besides which Parliaments, there are certain other Courts in some principal Cities, called Courts Presidiales, resembling those with us at York, and the Marches of Wales, whilst they continued in that Power and Jurisdiction which at first they had. And for the better ordering of the whole Estate, (with reference specially to matters military) it is divided into 12 several and distinct Governments; that is to say, 1. Of the Isle of France, 2. Burgundy, 3. Normandy, 4. Guienne, 5. Bretagne, 6. Champagne, 7. Picardy, 8. Langueadoc, 9. Provence, 10. Dauphine, 11. Lionnois, and 12. Orleansois; for in this order they were ranked by the last King: over every one of which is placed a Governour, with such authority as the Lords Lieutenants had in England in their several Counties; all of them carrying matters with a very high hand on the common people, and sometimes standing on terms also with the Kings themselves; but instrumental notwithstanding to the common servitude, which hath been laid upon this Nation generally, as before is said.

The Power of the French King over his Subjects, being so transcendent, it cannot be, but that his Forces must be very great, and would be greater than they are, but that they dare not trust the common people with the use of Arms, for fear they should refuse to pay the accustomed Taxes, or forsake their Trades, or turn their Farms back upon their Landlords. But for an Essay of what a French King is able to do in this kind, it is said, that Charles the 9th. in Garrisons and several Armies in the field, had 15000 Horse, and 100000 Foot, of his own Nation; besides 50000 Horse and Foot of Swisser, German, and others. Nor was this more than what was done by Lewis the 13. within few years past, who had at once five Royal Armies in the field, in Italy, Spain, Germany, and the Belgick Provinces; and kept no fewer than 120000 fighting-men in pay and action, for some years together. Nor did this last King keep up the Military Power of France for Land-service only, at so high a pitch, but he also brought the Naval Power thereof into estimation. For whereas the French Kings before his time, were very weak and inconsiderable on the Seas, and had scarce any men of War, but what they either hired or borrowed from more Seafaring Nations: this King became so strong in shipping in a little space, (I doubt some neighbouring Princes in the mean time looked not well about them) that he was able to rigg and arm 10000 full of good Ships, and upwards, fit for any service. But to return again to the power at Land, in which the force of these Kings doth consist especially; it is conceived by some, and affirmed by others, that he is able to bring into the field for a sudden service, no less than 60 Companies of Men of Arms, 20 Cornets of Light Horse, and 5 Companies of Harquebussiers on Horseback, which amount to 10000 in the total; together with 20 Esquiers of French foot, and 40 of Swisser, and yet leave his Garrisons well manned, and his Forts and Frontiers well and sufficiently defended.

What the Revenues are in a State so subject to the will and pleasure of the King, is hard to say; being also more or less, as the times and their occasions vary: according unto which, the Revenues of this Crown have much altered. Lewis the 11. gathered one million and a half of Crowns; Francis the first brought them to 3 millions; his successor, Henry the second, to six; Charles the ninth, to seven; Henry the third, to ten; afterwards they were enhanced to fifteen. And in the time of Henry the fourth, the Treasurer of the Duke of Mayenne did not shame to say, that his Minister had more improved the Revenue of France, than any King had done before him, advancing it from two to five millions sterling. A fair Estrado, but far short of those infinite fums which are extorted from the people; whereof a tenth part comes not clearly to the Kings Exchequer. But what need more be said, than that of Lewis the 11. who used to say, that France was a Meadow which he mowed every year, and as often as he liked: and indeed their Impolitions cannot but be great, since there are no less than 30000 Under Officers employed to gather them. Hence I believe spring that wish of Maximilian the Emperor, which was, that he (if it were possible) might be a God; and that having two Sons, the eldest might be a God after him; and the second, King of France. And this was also the cause, that in the Wars between Charles the fifth, and Francis the first, when the Emperours Herald had bid defiance to the King, from Charles Emperour of Germany King of Castile, Leon, Aragon, and Naples, Arch-Duke of Austria, &c. with the rest of his Titles; the King commanded the Herald to return the Challenge from Francis King of France's commanding him to repeat France as many times as the other had petty Earldoms in his file. And on the other side of no less bravery and sense was the saying of the Duke of Alva, who being disswayed by one of his Commanders, from the War with the Netherlands, in regard of the great support they were like to have from the Queen of England, the King of Denmark, the Dukes of Saxony and Brunswick, the Earls of Nassau, &c. Tush man! (said he) there will be more Kings and Princes on our side, than theirs; that is to say, the Emperour of Mexico and Peru; the Kings of Naples, Sicily, and Sardinia, the Dukes of Burgundy and Milan, the Earls of Hapsburg, Charolais, &c. But letting pass these fables and conceits of wit; certain it is, (to say the truth) considering the compactedness thereof within it self, the admirable fertility of the Soil, the incredible multitudes of people, and the convenience of situation betwixt Spain, Italy, and Germany; the name of France might ballance all the others Titles.

The chief Orders of Knighthood in this Kingdom, were first of the Gennet, founded by Charles Martel, Mayor of the French Palace: and so called either from Jane his Wife, as Haiken would have it, or from the Gennets of Spain, over whom he triumphed at the Battel of Tours, as Relay writeth. It ended in the days of S. Lewis. The Knights of the Order wore a Ring, wherein was engraven the form of a Gennet.

2. Of the Pairrie, or twelve Peers, so called, quasi pares inters; said to be instituted by Charles the Great, in his Wars against the Saracens. Six of these were of the Clergie. 1. The Arch-Bishop and Duke of Rheims, 2. the Bishop and Duke of Loon, 3. the Bishop and Duke of Langres, 4. the Bishop and Earl of Beauvais, 5. the Bishop and Earl of Noyon, and 6. the Bishop and Earl of Chalons. And six others of the Temporality: 1. the Duke of Burgundy, 2. Duke of Normandy, 3. Duke of Guienne, 4. Earl of Toulouse, 5. Earl of Champagne, 6. Earl of Flanders. These are they so much memorized in the Legends of the old French Writers, but fallily, and on no ground: it being impossible that those should be the foundation of Charles the Great, in whose time there were none of those Dukes and Earls, except the Earl of Toulouse only. Therefore with better reason it may be thus concluded on, that the Twelve Peers were instituted by Charles the Great, though that honour not by him appropriated unto any particular Estates and Titles; but left at large to be disposed of according to the personal merit of the best delvers: it being most sure, that neither Rowland, nor Oliver, nor Duke Naimet, nor Ogier the Dane, had any of the Titles above-mentioned. But for the fixing of this Dignity in the Dukedoms and Earldoms before named, it is said, by some, to have been done by Hugh Capet; others refer it to Lewis the 7th. in whose times all those Dukes and Earls were in Reum Navarre. But by whomsoever first ordained, the Temporal Peers are extinct, and others of no definite number, well deliverer. Only at Coronations, and such publick Triumphs, the custom is, to chuse some principal persons out of the Nobility, to represent those Temporal Peers; as at the Coronation of Lewis the 13th, the places of the Temporal Peers were supplied by the Princes of Conde and Conoy, the Earl of Soisson, the Duke of Nevers, Elbeuf, and Eljournet; the Ecclesiastical Peers remaining as at first they were. So that though Charles the Great might devise this Order, and institute the first Twelve Peers, as is commonly said; yet was not that high honour fixed in any of those Temporal Princes, till the times succeeding; but given to men of several Honours, according to the Kings pleasure, and their well-deliverings.

3. Of the Stars, begun by John King of France, Anno 1352. There were about their necks a Collar of Gold, at the which hanged a Star: the word Monsieur le Regibus astra vivam. This Order was disgraced by his Son Charles, in communicating it to his Guard: and so it ended.

3 Of St. Michael, instituted by King Lewis the eleventh. Anno 1409. It consisted first of 30 Knights; which afterwards were augmented to 300. The Habit of the Order was a long Cloak of white Damask, down to the ground, with a border interwoven with Cockle-shells of Gold, interlaced and furred with Ermines; with an Hood of crimson Velvet, and a long tippet. About their necks they wore a Collar woven with Cockle-shells: the word, Immensi tremor Oceani. It took the name from the Picture of St. Michael conquering the Devil, which was annexed to the Collar. Some think, that the invocation of St. Michael, was in allusion to the tenth of Daniel. Others say, he took St. Michael, in regard of an apparition of that Saint, to his Father Charles the seventh on Orleans Bridge, in his Wars against the English. The Seat thereof was first at St. Michael's Mount, in Normandy, a place which had held long for the French Kings; against the English: but it was afterwards removed to Bois de Vincennes, not far from Paris. St. Michael's day, the time of the Solemnity; and Mount St. Michael, the name of the Herald which did attend upon the Order, which in most things are preceded that of of the Garter.

5. Of the Holy Ghost; ordained by Henry the third, An. 1159. to rectify the abuses which had crept into that of St. Michael, having been of late times given to unworthy persons: to reduce which to its first esteem, he ordered that the Collar of St. Michael should be given to none who had not first been dignified with this of the Holy Ghost; into which none to be admitted, but such as can prove their Nobility by three descents. Their Oath is; to maintain the Romish Catholic Religion, and persecute all Opponents to it. Their Robe, a Black Velvet Mantle, powdered with Lillies and Flames of Gold; with a Cross and a Dove appendant to it. And hereunto he gave the name of the Holy Ghost, because he was on Whitsunday, chosen King of Poland.

I omit the other petit Orders, as those of the Cock and Dog, by them of Montmorency; of the Porcupine, by them of Orleans, and of the Thistle, by them of Bourbon.

The Arms of the French Kings in the days of Pharamond; and his three first Successors, were Gules, three Crowns, Or. Clouis the Great, altered them to Azure, Some of Flower de Lucis, Or; and Charles the sixth to Azure, three Flower de Lucis, Or. In which last changes, they were followed by the Kings of England, varying the Coat of France, which they enquartered with their own, as the French Kings did; and by the Princes of the blood, who bare the Arms of France, with some difference only, for the distinction of their Houses.

The Pyrenean Hills.

BETWIXT France and Spain, are the Mountains called Pyrenae, the reason of which name is very differently reported. Some fetch the original thereof from Pyrene, a Nymph, the Daughter of one Bebriz: said by old Fables to have been here ravished by Heracles: others conceive they were so called, because much stricken with Lightnings, those Cat-stial Flame. But being the name doth most undoubtedly proceed from a Greek word which signifies Fire. The more probable opinion is, that they took this name from being fired once by Shepherds, (these Hills being then extremely overgrown with Woods:) the Flame whereof raged so extremely, the heat thereof, and Silver being melted by many days together, the fame of which invited many Foreign Nations to invade the Country. Which accident they place 880 years before the birth of our Saviour. Hereunto Diodorus Siculus, an old Greek Writer, adds no small authority; who speaking of this Conflagration, (as Aristotle and Strabo also do) addeth withal, το μὲν δὲν δὲ τὸ ἀπὸ τῆς πυρρᾶς τοῦ πυρρᾶς τῆς πυρρᾶς: that is to say, these Mountains had the name of Pyrene, from the fire, which many days together so extremely raged. And this Tradition backed by so good authority, I should rather credit, than fetch the derivation (as Bochart doth) from Pyrenai, a Phœnician word, signifying dark or shady: though true it is, that these Mountains anciently were very much overgrown with woods, as before was noted.

But whatsoever was the reason why they had this name, certain it is, that they have been of long time the natural bound betwixt the great and puissant Monarchs of France and Spain; terminating (as it were) their desires and purposes against each other, as well as their Dominions: if any thing could put a bound to the designs of ambitious Princes. Yet not more separated by these Mountains, than by those jealousies and fears which they have long since harboured of one another; each of them manifestly affecting the Supreme Command. So that we may affirm of them, as the Historian doth of others on the like occasion, Aut montibus, aut munio, metis separantur. The Mountains also make the isthmus, or neck of Land, which conjoins Spain to the rest of Europe: the Cantabrian Ocean fiercely beating on the North-west, the Mediterranean Sea more gently washing the South-east thereof. Their beginning at the Promontory now called Oiarcho, (the Oasis of Psalm) not far from the City of Baïonne in France, bordering on the Sea Cantabrick: from thence continued South eastwards, betwixt both Kingdoms, to Cabo de Creux, (by the Ancients called Templum Veneris) on the Mediterranean, not far from the City of Rhoda, now Rosas, one of the Port-Towns of Catalonia.

The whole length, not reckoning in the windings and turnings, affirmed to be 80 Spanish Leagues, at 3 miles to a League. The highest part thereof, by the Spaniards called Canigo, and by the Latins named Canus: from which, (as it is said by some) there is a prospect in a clear day, into both the Seas. But whether this be true or not, (for I dare not build any belief upon it) it is no doubt the highest part of all these Mountains; and took this name from the whiteness and hoariness thereof, as having on its top or summit, a Cap of Snow for most part of the year. In which respect, as the Alps took their name, ab Albo; that, in the Sabine Dialect, being termed Alpina, which by the Latins was called Album, which before we noted: so did Mount Lebanon, in Syria, take its name from Laban, which in the Phœnician Language signifieth White; and Lebanah, Whiteness. Such people as inhabit in this Mountainous tract, have been, and shall be mentioned in their proper places. I only add, and so go forwards towards Spain, that the barbarous people of these Mountains compelled Sertorius, in his hasty passage into Spain, when he fled from the power of Sylla's Faction, to pay them Tribute for his pals: to which when some of his Soldiers murmured, as thinking it dishonourable to a Proconsul of Rome, to pay tribute to the barbarous Nations: the prudent General replied, that he bought only Time; a Commodity which they that deal in haughty Enterprizes, must needs take up at any rate.

in temper, humour, and affections, between the Spaniards and the French, we have spoke more at large already when we were in France.

The Women are sober, loving their Husbands or Friends; wonderful delicate, curious in painting or perfuming; and though they have Wine in abundance, yet are they not permitted to drink it; verifying there in the old English Proverb, that none are worse than the Shoe-makers Wife. Herein in worse condition than the Women of France; who though they are restrained from Wine before their marriage; yet, after that, they take what liberty they list, and are no more restrained from it, than the other Sex. But this is the least liberty which the French Women have above the Spaniards: these being so watched and over-looked, that it is hardly possible for them to hold speech with any man, in business of most importance, and much less in matters of civilities only: those having liberty to be courted at all times and places, even in the presence of their Husbands, without any distrust or interruption. Heretofore they were wondrous strong; and, beyond belief, patient of the throws of Child-bed: Strabo relating how one of these women being hired for Harvest-work, and finding her travail come upon her; because she would not lose her days wages, withdrew her self into a Bush; where, being cald of her burden, she returned from one Labour to another. And many of them at this day use not to keep their Chambers above three days after their delivery, and then apply themselves to their Household-business, without either danger or delay.

The language is not the same in all places, though all called the Spanish. In Portugal, Catalogue, and some parts of Valencia, it hath a great mixture of the French; who in these parts have had much trade and negotiation. In Granada, and some parts of Andalusia, it partakes much of the Moor; and in the Mountains of Alpuccarras, the Arabick or Moorish language still remains in use. The Countries bordering on the Pyrenees, and Cantabrian Ocean, (but Biscay specially) have much in them of the language of the ancient Spaniards, before made subject to the Romans. That which is common to them all, is the vulgar Spanish or Castilian, and hath much affinity with the Latin. Beetwood in his Enquiries reporting, that he hath seen a Letter, every word whereof was both good Latin and good Spanish. Merrill shows a Copy of the like, pag. 306. By reason of which consonancy with the Latin, the Spaniards call their language, Romance. The other ingredients of this Tongue, are generally the Gallic, Arabick, and old Spanish, and in some places the French also, as before is said; those people having made great conquests, and having had great negotiations in this Country. It is said to be a very lofty swelling speech, as if it were fashioned to command.

And as their Language, so their Laws do owe a great part of themselves to the Laws of Rome: the Civil or Imperial Laws being generally used amongst them, but intermixt with many customs of the Goths, and the Edicts or Constitutions of their several Kings. Those of the Goths being first committed unto writing, and reduced to order by Enricus the first King of the Goths in Spain: those of Castile digested by the command of Ferdinand the third, Anno 1296. into seven Books, called the Partidas; not finished till the time of his son Alfonso. Leges Hispaniarum quas partitus vocant, in volumen redigit, as Tarapha hath told us of him in his Spanish History. The like done by King James the first, for the Realm of Aragon, An. 1248. respectively confirmed and ratified by the Kings succeeding. Authorized to be read and dispensed on in the publick Schools, as well as the Decretals, the Code, the Pandect, on any other part of the Civil or Canon Laws.

The Soil herof, where it is fertile and productive of the Fruits of Nature, yields not to any part of Europe, for delight, pleasures, and Commodities; which here appear in greater ripeness and perfection, than in other places. But, for the most part, it is either overgrown with Woods, cumbered with wild and rocky Mountains, or so hot a nature, and so sandy withall, that it is not very fit for Tillage; and so deficient in Water, as not good for Pasturage. So that we may affirm thereof, as of the Figs in the Prophet Jeremy, where it is said, no Country better; where bad and barren, few so inconvenient, and not any worse. But this defect of outward Beauty and Commodities, is recompensed by those within; affording great plenty of Mines, both of Steel and Iron, and some Mines of Silver; of which last so abundant in preceding times, that it was never free from the Rovers of all Nations; and it is said of Anibal, that out of one Mine only in the Country of the Turdetani, (now part of Andalusia) he received 3000 pound weight daily, for a long time together. The principal Commodities which they vend into other Countries, are Wines, Oyl, Sugars, Metals, Rice, Silk, Licorice, a fine sort of Wool, Cork, Iron, Limmons, Raisins, Oranges, and Fruits of the like nature. In Corn, which is the staff of life, they are defective, that they receive the greatest part of what they spend, from Italy, Sicily, and France. Their Cattel neither fair, nor many; the Country being not able to breed them; so that their Diet is on Salads, and Fruits of the Earth; every Gentleman being limited what flesh he shall buy for himself and his Family, which he send for to the Butcher, or Poulterer, by the final, left Child, able to do the Errand for him, he is sure not to be defrauded in price, or quality. And yet they talk as highly of their gallant fare, as if they furnished with the plenty of all provisos: handsomely checked in that good humour, by that worthy Soldier, Sir Roger Williams; of whom it is said, that hearing once a Spaniard thus foolishly bragging of his Country Salads, he gave him this answer, You have indeed good fawce in Spain; but we have dainty Beefs, Veals, and Muttons, to eat with that fawce; and as God made bealls to live upon the grafs of the earth, so he made men to live upon them. And it is observed, that if a Spaniard have a Capon, or the like good Dith to his Supper, you shall find all the Feathers scattered before his door, by the next morning.

And as it is in private Houses, so for travelling also, the Inns and Vents of this Country are very ill provided; infomuch, that most men that would not go superfluous to sleep, carry their provision at their Saddle-bows, and men of worth their bedding also. So poor and mean is the entertainment in these places.

Here lived in ancient times, the Giants Geryon, and Cacus, which were quelled by Hercules: and in the flourishing of the Roman Empire, 1. Seneca the Tragedian, and 2. the Philosopher of the same name; a man of that happy memory, that he could repeat 2000 names in the same order that they were rehearsed: as also 3. Quintilian the Orator, 4. Lucan, and 5. Martial, excellent in their kinds: 6. Pomponius Mela the Geographer, 7. Trogus Pompeius, with his Epitomator: 8. Justin, and 9. Paulus Orosius the Historian, this last a Christian. In the middle times, 10. Isidore Bishop of Sevil, 11. Julian, and 12. Hildebrandus, Bishop of Toledo; and after them, Eulogius the Saint and Martyr; men learned for the times they lived in. Then for the later Ages, 1. The renowned Cardinal Francis Ximenes, and 2. Alonso Montanus, famous for the E ditions of the holy Bible. 3. Mafius, a learned Commentator. 4. Ofirius, well fence in the Latin Elegancies; and beforeall, as well in industry as time, 5. Tolmas Bishop of Avila; a man so copious and industrious in his writings, that it is thought he writ more sheets than he lived days. But of late times we find but few of their Works which have passed the Mountains; the Latin which they write, being very coarse, and favouring too much of the School-man, (wherein their excellency consists) and therefore they set out their Works most commonly in their own Tongue only. The chief for Soldiery amongst them, were formerly Viriatius, who held out so long against the Romans. Trojan and Theodisius, both Roman Emperors. Theodoric the second, King of the Goths, the victorious Conqueror of the Spreuans. Bernardo del Carpio, and Cid Ruis Diaz, famous for their achievements against the Moor; and in late times, Gonsalvo the Great Captain, who subdued Naples; Ferdinand Duke of Alva, who conquered Portugal, &c.

The Christian Faith, if we may believe the old Spanish Tradition, was first here planted by St. James the Apostle, within four years after the death of our Redeemer. To which Tradition, though they held very constant a long time together; yet of late days, Baronius, and other learned men of the Church of Rome, do most deservedly reject it. That St. Paul had a purpose of coming hither, is evident in his 15. Chapter to the Romans; and that he did come hither accordingly, is positively affirmed by St. Crysostom, Theodore, and divers others of the Fathers; which was in Anno 61. as Baronius thinketh. Nor did St. Peter want his part in this great service, but joyed with St. Paul; his part in the journey, yet in the sending of Bishops, and other Presbyters, to second the beginnings made by that Apostle. For it is said expressly in the Martyrologies, that Cleopibus, Torquatus, Secundus, Cecilius, Judulianus, Helysius, and Exuperius, being at Rome, ordained Bishops of the two Apostles, ad predicandum verbum Dei in Hispanias directi, were dispatched into Spain to preach the Gospel. Bishops, most likely, of those Cities where they suffered death; the names of which occur in the Martyrology. Under the Empire of the Goths, the Faith of C H R I S T, which at their coming hither they found right and Orthodox, was defiled with Arianism: not ejected till the year 588. when that whole Nation did submit to the Catholic tendries. But Spain being conquered by the Moor under the conduct of Musa, Lieutenant-General to Ulder, the Arabian Caliph; and Mahommedanism over-spreading the whole face of the Country; few Christians as remained under their obedience, but few and inconsiderable both for power and quality, had the name of Musaraber. Encroaching in citate and numbers, by the fortunate success of the King of León and Navarre, and other Christian Principalties growing up apace; they still retained their old name, and their ancient service, distinct from that observed in the Church of Rome; this being called the Musarabique, the other the Gregorian Missal: the one pretending S. Isidore Archbishop of Sevil, the other S. Gregory Pope of Rome, for the Author of it. And it continued in this state, till Junio King of Castile and León, Anno 1083. by Alfonso a French-man, being made Arch-bishop of that City, and Primate of Spain, endeavoured the introduction of the Roman or Gregorian Service; but therein was opposed by the other Prelates, and generally by all the people, sufficiently tenacious of their ancient Forms. At last it was concluded (as the story telleth us) to commit the decision of the Controvercie to a fiery trial; both Books being cast into the fire, the Gregorian leaping presently out, and the Musarabique remaining unhurt in the midst of the flames. Convinced by this experiment, that both Forms were pleasing to Almighty God; they yielded so far to the desires of the King, (who was zealous in it) that the Musarabique being retained in six of the Churches of Toledo, (where it is sung to this day in a Chappel of the Great Church, called Corpus Domini) the Gregorian or Roman Service, should be entertained in the rest of Spain. According unto which Decree, the Musarabique (but not until some tract of time) came to be disused; and the Gregorian Service first admitted in the Cathedral of Toledo, May 29. An. 1091. And after, by degrees, in the rest of the Country.

Since that, they have been constant to the Rites of the Roman Church, and of the Faith and Doctrine therein professed, notwithstanding the great intermixture of Jews and *Moor*s, especially since the setting up of the Inquisition: devised at first about the year 1478. by Pedro Gonsales de Mendoza, Arch-bishop of Toledo, against such converted Jews and *Moor*s, as did return again to their superstition. But he; and those that had the first execution of it, being found so cruel, that, in the compass of nine years, no fewer than 3000 Families had been destroyed in that Diocess only. In the year 1481. it was thought fit to moderate the rigour of it, and to commit the managing thereof to some Jacobins or Dominical Friars; who in the first place were to have an eye unto such Apostates, and to Heretics, Magicians, Sedumies, Blasphemers of the name of God, &c. confirmed in this Authority, by Pope Sixtus the 4th. This Institution in it self was not only necessary, (as the condition of Affairs then was) but exceeding laudable, had it been kept within the bounds at first intended. But of late, instead of being used on the Jews and *Moor*s, it hath been turned upon the Protestants, and that with such violence, and extremity of torture, that it is counted the greatest tyranny, and severest kind of persecution, under Heaven: infomuch that many Papists, who would willingly dye for their Religion, abhor the very name and mention of it, and to the death withstand the bringing in of this slavery among them. This is it that made the people of Aragon and Naples rebel, Countries where the people are all of the Papal side: and this was it which caused the irremediable revolt of the Low Countries, the greatest part of that Nation, at the time of their taking Arms, being Romish Catholics: yet it is planted and established in Spain and Italy. (Naples and Venice excepted) the managing thereof committed to the most zealous and rigorous Friars in the whole Pack: the least suspicion of Heretic, affinity, or commerce with Heretics, reproving the lives of the Clergy, keeping any Books, or Editions of Books, prohibited, or discoursing in matters of Religion, are offences sufficient. Nay, they will charge mens Consciences under the pain of damnation, to detect their nearest and dearest Friends, if they do but suspect them to be herein culpable. Their proceedings are with great ferocity and severity: for first, the parties accused shall never know their accuser, but shall be constrained to reveal their own thoughts and affections. 2. If they be but convicted of any error in any of their opinions or be gain-fayed by two Witnesses, they are immediately condemned. 3. If nothing can be proved against them, yet shall they with infinite tortures and milities, be kept in the house divers years, for a terror unto others. And, 4. If they escape the first brunt with many torments, and much anguish; yet the second question or suspicion, brings death remediless. And as for torments, and kinds of death, Phalaris and his fellow-Tyrants, come far short of these Blood-and Annibald the Son of Amilcar, had made almost all Spain subject to the Carthaginians, even from the Western Ocean to the Pyrenees; destroyed Saguntum, built new Carthage, and struck to great a terror into the Country, that had not Annibald's design carried him to Italy, the State of Carthage had been absolute Masters of it, without further opposition or resistance. But Annibald having taken all his Soldiers with him; and those that came from Carthage to command in chief, not being men of parts sufficient to go through with it; they lost it piece-meal to the Romans, but in less time than they had been getting it from the Spaniards; the valour and good-fortune of Corn. Scipio, over-ruling the declining power of that mighty State. The last that here commanded for the State of Carthage was Asdrubal the Son of Gisco; who being beaten by Scipio into the Island of Gades, left that also to the keeping of Mago, one of his Commanders; by whom being pillaged and deserted, it forth with yielded to the Roman, the Carthaginians, after this never possessing foot of ground in all this Continent.

The Romans thus becoming Masters of a great part of it, divided it into Ultramarine, lying from the River Iberus, Westward, because furthest off from them; and Citeriorum, between the said River, and the Pyrenees. But having totally subdued it, they divided it into three main parts; 1. Tarracensis, so called of Tarragon, the chief City of it, containing Aragon, Navarre, Biscay, Galicia, &c. 2. Betanicum, so named of the River, Betis, which runneth through it; comprehending the now Countries of Granada, Andalusia, and part of Extremadura. 3. Lusitanicum, denominated from the Lusitani, the most potent people of that part, differing in extent from the present Portugal, (though this called Lusitania, by our modern Latinists.) For the old Lusitania comprehended part of Extremadura, and some part of the two Castiles; and no more of the present Portugal, than what lieth betwixt the two Rivers, Ana and Duero; that on the South of Ana, being laid to Betania; and that on the North of Duero, unto Tarracensis. Of these three parts, Betania was in most esteem under the Romans; inasmuch that it contained 8 Roman Colonies, 8 Municipal Cities, and 29 other Towns, endowed with the rights and privileges of the Latins. The reason thereof was, that the people of this Country having been formerly broken by the Carthaginians, with more quiet endured the yoke of the Romans; whereas the rest, for a long time resisted the entry and Empire of that prevailing City. But to proceed to the affairs of Rome in Spain, Scipio Africanus laid the first foundation of the Roman Government in this Country: which building, though undertaken by many excellent workmen, was not thoroughly finished till the days of Augustus, being almost 200 years since the first attempt. He rooted it, strengthened it, and made it a principal building in his Monarchical City. For the old Incole were exceeding valiant and resolute, sometimes disgracing, sometimes endangering the Roman reputation; inasmuch that there were more Commanders lost in those Wars, than any other. At first the Romans fought not with the Spaniards, but with the Carthaginians in Spain: then perished both the Scipio's, viz. the Father and the Uncle of Africanus. Virius held War for 20 years, Nimantia held out almost 15, the Alures remained unconquered till the time of Augustus; and also resolutely maintained their particular liberties, Ut dijudicari non poterit (Sixth Paterculus) Hispanis on Romanis plus esset in armis robore, et viri populus alteri pariterum foret. Such manner of men were the ancient Spaniards under Rome and Carthage; the first people of the Continent of Europe, (excepting Italy) on which the Romans did begin to enlarge their Empire, and the last that wholly were subdued and conquered by them. But being conquered at the last, and brought under the form of a Province by Augustus Caesar; and Constantine, according to the division before-mentioned. But Constantine the Great in his new modelling of the Empire, laying some part of Africa to it, made it a Dioecesis of the Empire; and subject to the Præfatus Prætorio for Gaul; by whose Vicarius it was governed: the whole being then divided into these seven Provinces, viz. 1. Bætica, 2. Lusitania, bounded as before; 3. Galicia containing the modern Galicia, Leon, and Oviedo, the greatest part of the Old Castile, and so much of Portugal as lieth betwixt the two Rivers of Minio and Duero, 4. Carthaginiensis, so called from the City of New Carthage, comprehending New Castile, Aragon, and Valencia with the part of the Old Castile, Navarre, and Andalusia. 5. Tarracensis, embracing all Biscay, Navarre, and Catalogne, with the greatest part of the Kingdom of Aragon, 6. Tingitana, so called from Tingis (now Tangier) a Town in Africa, on the opposite Coast, in which are now the great Kingdoms of Morocco and Morocco. And 7. the Province of the Islands, containing Mallorca, Minorca, Elas, and Frumentaria. Of which seven Provinces, the three first were Consulares, governed by Præfatus; the other four, from their being under Præfatus, were called Præfatus. Being thus settled, it continued a Roman Dioecesis till about the year 400, when it was subdued by Gundericus, King of the Vandals; of which people, their beginning, achievements, and final period, we will speak more when we come to Africa, where they fixed themselves: invited thenceunto, partly to efface the ill neighbourhood of the Goths, who began to grow too potent for them, and partly to satisfy the desire of Basileus, Governor of that Province for the Emperor Valentinian the third, against whom he had then rebelled, and wanted such support to make good his action. Those being gone, the Suevi and Alani, who entered with them, could not long subsist; but were finally broken by the Goths, and afterwards dispossessed of their Kingdoms also, (though suffered to remain in the Country still) as shall be shown hereafter in its proper place. As for the Guths, (of whom we shall speak more in Sweden, and have already made some mention when we were in Gaul) having sacked Rome, and wasted Italy, under the conduct of Alaric; they were brought out of that Country by the gift of Narbonensis in Gaul, and so much of Tarracensis in Spain, as now makes up the Province of Catalogne: the composition being ratified by the marriage of Athanulfus, the Successor of Alaric with Placidia, Sister to Honorius the Western Emperor, Valia, or Wallia, the next of name and note, (for Signe who interposed, reigned but one year only, and did nothing in it.) Successor of Athanulfus, having beaten the Alani out of Lusitania and Carthagenensis, added those Provinces also unto his Estates, and confining the Vandals within Betania, was the first of the Guths which entered into the Kingdom of the Guths in Spain. By their agreement with the Romans, they were to keep that Provinces for the use of the Empire, which they did conquer and recover from the barbarous Nations; but contrary to all Faith, and the Articles of their agreement having once beaten the Alani out of Lusitania, by thy Prowess of Valia, and the Suevi out of Betania, under the conduct of Theodorick, the Brother of Therismund, they fell upon the Romans themselves, whom Enricus, and his Successors, by little and little, dispossessed of all Spain on this side of the Streights. Tingitana held out longest, as furthest off, unfortunately as-

tempted by Theodes the ninth King of Goths, whose Soldiers being set upon by the Romans on the Lord's day, or Sunday, refused to fight in their own defence, and were so miserably defeated, that there was never a man of them left to carry news of the overthrow. So early did the Superstition of a Lord's day Sabbath prevail upon this melancholic and devout people. But what this Theodes could not do, was performed by Suintilla; who in the third time of this reign, An. 642, made the Conquest absolute.

Let us next look upon the Guths as Lords of Spain, and we shall find them to have been Christians in Religion, and somewhat civilized by their long neighbourhood and conversations with the Græcians, before they turned their Forces into the West. Their company more desired in this respect, than that of the Vandals; who were not only Pagans, but far more barbarous. But the Guths, being for long time of the Arian Faction, did grievously afflict and persecute the Orthodox Prelates: continuing in this error till the death of Leonigild (or Leonigildis as some call him) the last Patron and Assessor of it. Their Government Monarchical, but the Kings Elective, (though for the most part they kept themselves to the Regal Family): an Excommunication being laid on such, by the fifth Council of Toledo, as went about to alter that established course. Their Rule or Government was Catholic, and that not left in writing, but committed to Memory and Tradition: written, Laws being first made by Enricus; which the ensuing Princes confirmed and perfected. What else concerneth them, we shall find in the close of this Catalogue of 716	31	Roderick, the last King of the Guths in Spain, elected to the prejudice of the Sons of Vitiza , which after proved the ruin and overthrow of the Kingdom. For though the Kingdom went, for the most part, by Election, and that they had respect to the next of blood, (as at this time in Poland and Bohemia) very few interlopers being here admitted: yet some there were, who either by their merit, or some opportunity, got the possession of the Kingdom, though not at all relating to the Royal Family. Of which kind were Theodes, an Ohio-Guth, sometimes the Governor hereof for Theodorick King of the Guths in Italy, Protector of this Kingdom in the minority of Amalaric; and Theodesclaus, or Theodegildus, Nephew to Tatila, one of the Successors to Theodorick. The rest of principal note were, 1. Theodorick the first, slain in the battle near Tholuz, against Attila the Hun, in defence of his own Country, and the Roman Empire. 2. Theodorick the second, who beat the Nation of the Suevi out of Betania; and 3. Leonigild, or Leutigild, who deprived them of Galicia also. 4. Reccaridus the first, who first embraced the Catholic Doctrine of the Church, and rejected Arianism; and for that cause first honoured with the title of the Catholic King; afterwards returned by Alfonso the first King of Leon, and made hereditary by Ferdinand the King of Castile, Aragon, &c. Grandfather unto Charles the fifth. 5. Enricus, or Henricus as some call him, as remarkable for Civil Policy, as Reccaridus for Piety; as being the Lycurgus or Legislator of this peoples not governed till his time by a written Law, but either by uncertain customs, or at the pleasure of such Officers as the King let over him. 6. Suintilla Son of Reccaridus the second, who having in the short time of his reign expelled the Roman Forces out of Tingitana, An. 642, was the first Monarch of all Spain, whereof Tingitana, (though on the other side of the Sea) had been made a Province by the Emperor Constantine, as before was said, and of this Province was Julianus Governor in the time of Roderick, who being of the Faction of the sons of Vitiza, fomented his advancement to the Kingdom; and thereby got the greater portion of the King's displeasure; who sending him upon an Embassy to the Moors of Africa, in the mean time deloured his daughter, named Cava; which the Father took in such indignation, that he procured the Moors (amongst whom he had gotten much credit) to come over into Spain. This request they performed under the conduct of Musa and Tariff, and having made a full Conquest, subjected it to the great Caliph, or Mohometan Emperors. It is recorded in a MS. History of the Saracens, that at the first coming of Tariff into Spain, a poor woman of the Country being willingly taken Prisoner, fell down at his feet, kissed them, and told him, that she had heard her Father (who was Letter'd) say, that Spain should be conquered by a people whose General should have a Mole on his right shoulder, and in whom one of his hands should be longer than the other. He, to animate his Soldiers against the next encounter, unclothed himself, and shewed the mark, which so encouraged them, that they now doubted not the Victory. Roderick had in his Army 130000 Foot, and 35000 Horse. Tariff had 30000 Horse and 150000 Foot. The battle continued seven days together, from morning to night; at last the Moors were victorious. What became of King Roderick, was never known, His Soldiers took one arrayed in their King's Apparel, whom upon examination they found to be a Shepherd, with whom the King, after the discomfiture, had changed clothes. It is written also in Rodericus Tolimanus, that before the coming of those Saracens, King Roderick, upon hope of some treasure, did open a part of the Palace, of long time forbidden to be touched; but found nothing but Pictures which resembled the Moors, with a Prophecy, that

whensoever the Palace was there opened, the people there resembled, should overcome Spain; and so it happened. An. 724.

The Moors, now Lord of Spain by the treason of Juana, (who having seen the miserable death of his wife and children, was starved in Prison by the Africans) permitted the free use of Religion to the old Inhabitants; left them seeking new dwellings for the Liberty of Conscience, should leave their native Soil desolate. The Moors finished their Conquest in five years say some, others, in two; and some again in eight Months. To keep the new-conquered Country in subjection, no way was so convenient, as to plant Colonies: but the Morisco women would not abandon their old seats. Hereupon Mussa and Tariff, by gifts, pardons, and persuasions, drew many Christian women to forsake their Religions, whom they married to the Soldiers. Not long after Uludir Uli, the great Caliph, sent over about 5000 Families of Moors and Jews, assigning them a convenient portion of Lands to be held with great Immunities, and upon small Rents. These politick courses notwithstanding, the Moors long enjoyed not the sole Sovereignty herein: for the Christians having now recovered breadth, chose themselves King; and the Authority of the Caliph declining, gave the Moors liberty to erect divers petty Royalities, many of which, by little and little, were brought under the command of greater and more powerful Princes. So that at last, Spain fell into a fifteenfold division, viz. into the Kingdoms and proprietary Estates of 1. Navarre, 2. Biscay, and 3. Guipuzcoa, 4. Leon and Oviedo, 5. Gallicia, 6. Corduba, 7. Granada, 8. Murcia, 9. Toledo, 10. Castile, 11. Portugal, and the members of it, 12. Valencia; 13. Catalonia, 14. the Kingdoms of Majorca, and 15. that of Aragon: not to say any thing of the petty Kingdoms of Juen, Algezire, and Sevil, besides others of like nature to them, erected by the factious and divided Moors, but of short continuance all of them, and of little note. All now reduced at this day, under the three Governments of Castile, Portugal, and Aragon; the Kingdoms and Estates of Leon, Navarre, Corduba, Granada, Gallicia, Biscay, Murcia, and Toledo, being under Castile; Portugal with Algarve, and the Isles of Azores, an entire Government of it self; Valencia, Catalonia, and Majorca, under that of Aragon.

1. NAVARRE.

NAVARRE, the second Kingdom for antiquity in Spain, is bounded on the East with the Principality of Bearn, in the Kingdom of France on the West, with the River Ebro, or Iberus; and after, with a little River falling into it, near Calahorra, by which divided from Castile; on the North, with the Cantabrian Mountains, by which parted from Guipuzcoa, and on the South, with the River Araven, by which divided from that Kingdom. Of larger extent anciently, than it is at present, the little Province of Alava, lying toward Guipuzcoa, and the whole Country of Rioja, (on the West-side of the River Ebro) being taken from it, and reckoned members of Castile, by Alphonso the 4th. Howsoever, we shall look upon it in its ancient bounds, and shall accordingly take notice of the chief Cities and Towns hereof.

It was called at first, the Kingdom of Sobrarbe, from a Town of that name, situate in the most inaccessible part of the Pyrenees; and therefore chose by Gracia Xi- mines, the first King hereof, for the seat of his Kingdom, as most defensible against the fury of the Moor. Afterwards it took the name of Navarre, either from Naxos, signifying a plain and Champaign Country, (first used by Inigo Arista, the sixth King, who having taken Pampelune, abandoned the Hill-Countries, and betook himself unto the Plains) or from Naxariere, the chief of the three parts into which that City was divided, not only at the taking thereof, but a long time after.

The Country, though environed on all sides with mighty Mountains, yet of it self is said to be reasonably fruitful, well watered, and for the most part plain and level, as before is said. It taketh up also some parts of both sides of the Pyrenees: the Spanish side being fertile, and adorned with Trees; the French side generally very bare and naked. That on the Spanish side, and on the summits of the Mountains, now possessed by the Spaniards, is called High Navarre: that on the French side, now called Base or Low Navarre, estimated at a sixth part of the whole Kingdom, is enjoyed by the French; incorporated by King Lewis the 13, to the Realm of France, An. 1620.

Places of most importance in Base Navarre, 1. S. Pelay, formerly the Place of Judicature for this part of the Kingdom; but in the year 1620, removed to Pau in the Principality of Bearn: both Bearn and Base Navarre, which hath before been governed as distinct Estates from the Realm of France, being then incorporate to that Crown. 2. Navarrenx, a Town of great importance, seven Leagues from Pau, well fortified, and as well munitioned, King Lewis the 13, finding it at his coming thither, An. 1620, no fewer than 45 Cannons all mounted; besides 40 Culverins and smaller Pieces; with Powder, Bullet, and Victuals, answerable thereto. 3. Pied de Port, or St. John de Pied de Port, bordering on the edge of France, against which formerly a piece of special strength. 4. Roncevaux, or Roncevaux situate in the most pleasant Country of all Navarre, in the entrance of a small but delightful Valley: famous for the great Battle fought near unto it; in the Straights or entrances of the Mountains leading to this valley; betwixt the French under Charlemagne, and a great Army of Moors and natural Spaniards, confederate together in defence of their common Liberty. In which Battle, by the treachery of Ganelon, 40000 of the French were slain; and amongst them, Rowland Earl of Mans, the Nephew of Charles; and others of the Peers of France of whom so many Fables are reported in the old Romances; the first Author of which Fables, passeth under the name of Arch-Bishop Turpin, said to be one of those twelve Peers, who taking on him to record the Acts of Charles the Great, hath interlarded his Story with a number of ridiculous vanities: by means whereof, the noble acts of that puissant Emperor, and his gallant Followers, are much obscured and blemished by those very Fables, which in the times succeeding did employ themselves to advance the fame.

Of special note in High Navarre, 1. Vitoria, first built, or rather re-edified by Sancho the 4. King of Navarre, An. 1111, by whom thus named in memory of some victory obtained thereabouts against the Castilians; whereas before his time it was called Gasteiz: as in like case there had been many Towns built by Greeks and Romans, by the name of Nicopolis, or the City of Victory, in the which we shall meet withal hereafter. Situate in the place of the ancient Vellca, but graced with the privileges and name of a City, by John the second of Castile, after it came under the Command of that Crown, An. 1432. A Town belonging properly to the little

Pro

Province of Olava, and the chief thereof. Which Province being wholly in, and amongst the Cantabrian Mountains, was of old a member of Navarre: but being extorted from it, An. 1200, by Alphonso the 4th. of Castile, it was in the year 1332, incorporated into that Crown, as a part thereof; as were some other Towns and Members of this Kingdom also, won by the Castilians. 2. Viane, on the East of the River Ebro, well fortified, after the taking of Logrono on the other side of the water, (from which distant not above a League) as the Frontier Town against Castile. Of greatest note for being the title of the eldest Son of Navarre, who was called Prince of Viane; advanced upon this honour by King Charles the third, An. 1421, in imitation of the like custom in Castile, where the eldest Son was called Prince of the Asturias: but not less memorable for the death of Casir Borgia, slain near unto it in an ambush, after all his wanderings, and interchangableness of fortunes. For being Son of Pope Alexander the sixth, by birth a Spaniard, he was by his Father made a Cardinal; but relinquishing that Title, by Charles the eighth of France, treated Duke of Valentinis, in the Province of Dauphine: during his Father's life, he had reduced under his obedience, divers of the Estates which anciently had belonged to the Church of Rome; but after his death, imprisoned by Pope Julius the second, who was jealous (not without good cause) of his plots and practices, from Rome he stole unto Gonfalo, then Vice-Roy of Naples for Ferdinandus the Catholic; who notwithstanding his safe conduct, sent him prisoner to Spain; but breaking Prison (desperately sliding down a Window) he came at last into this Kingdom, and was here slain in an Ambuscade, as before was said. So many times was Macchiasoli's great Politician over-reached by Bookmen and Soldiers! 3. Sobrarbe, in the most inaccessible parts of the Pyrenees; for that cause made the first Seat of the Kings of Navarre, entitled from thence the Kings of Sobrarbe. Made afterwards a distinct Kingdom from Navarre, by Sancho the Great, who gave it to Gonfalo his youngest Son: after whose death (not having issue) it was seized on by Don Raynir, the first King of Aragon, and made a member of that Crown. 4. Sanguessa, a Town of a large Territory and Jurisdiction, privileged with a Suffrage in the Convention of Estates, and a strong Fortrefs on the borders towards Aragon: for which cause formerly aimed at by the Kings thereof, who have had it sometimes in their hands. 5. Pampeluna, in the Champaign Country, on the banks of the River Arge, the Metropolis of the Kingdom, and the Seat-Royal of its Kings, since the Conquest of it from the Moors by Inigo Arista, the sixth King of Navarre. Of old divided into three parts; that is to say, Baug, Pemplement, and Naxariere; each having several Officers and Jurisdictions, (the cause of many quarrels and much blood amongst them) till all united into one body, and reduced under the command of one chief Magistrate, by King Charles the third. An. An ancient Town, first built by Pompey at the end of his Wars against Scythians; in memory of whom called Pompeipolis by our modern Latinitis; but Pampeluna, more near unto the present name, by Polomy and Antoninus: now an Episcopal See, the seat of the Vice-Roy, and one of the best fortified Towns of all Spain. 6. Mia, not far from the borders of France, where it joyneth on Guipuzcoa; a place of principal importance: the Castle whereof was one of the last pieces on this side of the Mountains, which held out for King John of Albarran, against Ferdinand the Catholic, in his surprisal of this Kingdom. 7. Montreal, 8. Olite, and 9. Tafalla, all yielded with the rest of this Kingdom, to Fredrick of Toledo, Duke of Alva: who had the happiness to subdue this Realm to the Crown of Castile, as his Son Ferdinand had to conquer the Realm of Portugal. 10. Tudela, on the Eastern bank of the River Ebro, took from him, by a surprize by Rosow Earl of Perch, (a Frenchman) coming with many other noble persons to the aid of Alphonso, King of Navarre and Aragon, at the siege of Sarragossa, An. 1110. Given by that King unto him, for the reward of his service; and afterwards united to the Crown of Navarre, by the marriage of Magdalen daughter of Earl Rosow, with Garcia the seventh King of Navarre, Successor in that Kingdom to the said Alphonso. Of late times honoured with a little University there founded by Ferdinand the Catholic, on his surprisal of that Kingdom. 11. Calahorra, situate on the Western banks of the Bernu, or Ibro, by Polomy called Calagorina; by Strabo, Calaguris; now a Bishops See: taken from Sancho the eighth of Navarre, by Alphonso the fourth of Castile, and made a Member of that Kingdom, as also was 12. Logrono, in the Country of Rioja, on the same banks of the River also. 13. Ejella, bordering on Castile, to which adjudged (though on the Eastern side of the River) by Lewis the 11th. of France, made Empire for the atonement of some differences betwixt Henry King of Castile, and John King of Navarre and Aragon; to satisfy that King for his charges in the former Quarrel.

The old Inhabitants thereof, were the Vascones, possessed not only of this tract, but of Biscay and Guipuzcoa also, from them denominated: who passing over the Pyrenees, made themselves Masters of that Province which is now called Gascogne by the French, and Vasconia in Latin. Won from the Romans by the Goths, and from them by the Moors; it began to be a Kingdom under Garcia Ximenes, a noble man of the Gothic blood; who with 600 men only began to make head against the Saracens, An. 716. first under the title of the Kingdom of Sobrarbe; and after that, of Navarre, for the reasons formerly delivered. The sixth from Garcia Ximenes, was Inigo, surnamed Arista, (so named from his vehemency and heat in War) the Son of Simon Earl of Bigorre in Gascogne; elected to this Kingdom on the death of Ximenes the fifth King, An. 840. or thereabouts, as the next Heir (but in the collateral Line) of Don Garcia Ximenes, the first King of Sobrarbe. To him the taking of Pampeluna is ascribed most generally, though Turpin in his History refer the fame to Garcia the second King. But certainly the Town was in the hands of the Moors, till forced from them by the prowess of Charlemagne; by them again recovered after the defeat of Roncevaux, and held till the time of this King, who possessed himself of it. To this King also is ascribed the first beginning of the ceremony of Crowning and Anointing, after the manner used by the Kings of France. But the old Roman Provincial, cited in the Titles of Honour, acknowledgeth no such honour to these petty Kings, communicated only, in that time, to the Emperors of the East and West, the Kings of Hierusalem, England, France, and Scit. And therefore probable it is, that the custom came into Navarre with the House of Champagne. Other Kings of most note in the course of Story, were 3. Fortan, the second Nephew of Inigo Arista, by his Son Garcia the third; who added unto his Estate, the Earldom of Aragon, defended to him by his Mother, the Daughter and Heir of Almariz, or Anzarin, the last Earl thereof. 4. Sancho the fourth, surnamed the Great, who first assumed unto himself the title of King of Spain: his Predecessors using no other title than Kings of Sobrarbe and Navarre; his Co-temporaries calling themselves Kings of Leon, Toledo, Sevil, Cordoba, according to the names of their several Kingdoms: the Goths, Kings of the Onbs in Spain; and to the Vandals, and the Suevi. Only the Earls of Barcelona, at their first erection by the French, entitled themselves the Dukes and Marquesses of Spain, as if all were theirs, with brag and vanity enough. But this Prince had some good ground for it, as being by inheritance possessed of Navarre and Aragon; Castile, in the right of his Wife Dona Nuala, or Elvira, Sister and Heir of Sancho the last Earl thereof; and by conquest of a great part of the Realm of Leon: so that almost all Spain, not possessed by the Moor, was become his own. Had these Estates remained intire to his Successors, the Moor, no doubt, had sooner lost their hold in Spain; and the whole Continent been brought under the obedience of one sole Monarch. But this King either loving all his Sons alike, or else offended with the eldest, who most unnaturally had accused his own innocent Mother of the crime of Adultery, divided his Estates amongst them; giving to Garcia his eldest Son, the Realm of Navarre, with that part of Leon which he held by Conquest; to Ferdinand his second Son, Castile and Aragon; to his third Son Raymir, both which he erected into Kingdoms: and finally, to Gonsalez his third Son, the Realm of Sarabre, then first dismembered from Navarre. By means of which impolitic course, his Sons being all of equal Title and Estates, instead of opposing the common Feud, quarrelled with each other, and left the Quarrel as a Legacy to their several Successors: which mischief might have been avoided, if he had not dignified them all with the title of Kings, or left the rest as Homagers unto one Supreme. 5. Sancho the fifth, Nephew of Sancho the Great, by his Son Garcia de Nagera; unnaturally and traitorously slain by his Brother Ramir. After whose death, and the short interposition of his Murtherer, this Kingdom was seized on by the Kings of Aragon; three of which, viz. Sancho Ramirez, Pedro, and Alfonso, did severally and successively enjoy the same. 6. Alfonso, the last of the three Kings of Aragon reigning in Navarre, surnamed the Warrior; who for a time was King of Castile also, in right of Urraca his Wife: in which respect he took unto himself the title of Emperour of Spain, though not acknowledged by his others. But finally, dying without Issue, and his Brother Raymir, or Raymond, called the Monk, succeeding in Aragon, the Kingdom of Navarre reverted to Garcia Raymir, Lord of Monzon, the direct Heir of Garcia de Nagera, by Raymir Lord of Calahorra, his younger Son. 7. Sancho the eighth, the Nephew of this Garcia Raymir, by his Son Sancho the seventh, first named the Wife, the last King of the Malculine and direct Line of the Kings of Navarre; the Kingdom, after his decease, passing by the Females, or Heirs-general, to the Earls of Champagne, and so unto the Kings of France, the Houses of Eureux, Foix, Albret, and Vendosme; but never holding above three decedents in any one Family. By means whereof, these Kings being barred from gaining any thing on the Moor, by the interposition of the Kings of Castile and Aragon; and having no way to enlarge their Revenue or Dominions, by any undertakings or adventures at Sea, as the Portugals did: incorporated to their Crown as fair and large possessions in the Realm of France, as any of the others did in the Spanish Continent. The Principality of Bearn, the Earldoms of Foix and Begorre, united in the person of Gaston of Foix; as those of Armagnac and Albret, in the person of John Earl of Albret: all lying together on the other side of the Pyrenees; all added to this Crown by marriage with the Heirs hereof: made up a fairer and wealthier Estate than Navarre itself, inferior to few Provinces in the Realms of Spain. Not to say any thing of the accession of the County-Palatine of Champagne, exchanged afterwards for some Lands in the Country of La March in Limousin; or of the Earldoms of Eureux, and the Duchy of Vendosme, as lying further off; and of less importance: Nor of the great Kingdom of France, now herewith incorporate, as to the Person of the King, though not in the possession of this Kingdom also. With so much judgement and success did the ensuing Kings (not otherwise able to enlarge their Territories) bestow their Daughters, that the Dissip proved as happy to this little Kingdom, as the Sword to others. 8. Charles, the second of that name, and the 30 King of Navarre; whom I mention not for any glorious Actions achieved in his life, (for that was full enough of ignominy) but for the strangeness and heinousness of his death. He was a Prince much given to voluptuousness, and sensual pleasures, which he wasted his spirits, that in his old age he fell into a kind of Lethargy. To comfort his benumbed joys, he was bound and sewed up naked in a sheet, steeped in boiling Aqua-vite. The Chyrurgion having made an end of sewing the sheet, and wanting a knife to cut off the thread, took a Wax-Candle that stood lighted by him; but the flame running down by the thread, caught hold on the sheet; which (according to the nature of Aqua-vite) burned with that vehemency, that the miserable King ended his days in the fire. 9. John of Aragon, the second Son of Ferdinand the first, in the life of his Brother Alfonso, was made King of Navarre, in right of Blanche his Wife, Daughter of Charles the third; and on the death of his Brother, King of Aragon also. And though his Queen died long before him, in whole right he reigned; yet he kept possession of the Kingdom till his death, (reigning fifty four years in all) notwithstanding the opposition made against him by Charles Prince of Viana, his only Son by that marriage, and Heir apparent of that Crown; whom he vanquished, imprisoned, and at last poisoned. 10. John Earl of Albret in Gascogne, King of Navarre in right of Katharine his Wife: in whose reign the Kingdom of Navarre was seized on by Ferdinand the Catholic, Son of the said John King of Aragon and Navarre, by a second Wife. The manner of it we shall relate with more particulars, when we have summed the whole Succession of

The Kings of Navarre.

|      |     | Joan III. Daughter of Henry of Albret   |
| 1556 | 38. | Anthony of Bourbon , Duke of Vendosme in France .   |
| 1572 | 39. | Henry III. the Son of Anthony and Joan , after the death of Henry the third of France , succeeded also in that Realm, by the name of Henry the fourth.   |
| 1610 | 40. | Lewis III. of Navarre , and XIII. of France , now living; with whom remain the rights, but not the possession of this Kingdom. For in the reign of Katharine and John of Albret , Ferdinand gathered an Army under the pretence of rooting out the Moor , and surprised this Kingdom, altogether unprovided, and destitute of means to make the smallest resistance, Anno 1512. The pretended reason of this surprisal, was an Excommunication laid on the Princes by the Pope , of which this King took upon him to be Executioner; but the true cause was an ancient desire which this King had to possess this frontier Kingdom, it being a strong Bulwark against France . It happened then, that Lewis the 12th, having incurred the displeasure of Pope Julius the second, was (together with all his adherents) excommunicated, and his and their Estates given to such as could or would subdue them. The King and Queen of |

Navarre were, at this time, both French Subjects: he, in respect of Albret, his Paternal Inheritance; and she, of her Estates of Foix and Bearn: and therefore sided with the French King, Ferdinand having (as we said) levied an Army under colour of extirpating the Moor, turneth upon the French King, and demanded of these Princes not only a free passage through their Country, but also to have certain places of strength put into his hand, for his better advantage. These unjust demands the Navarrese denied. Whereupon Ferdinand with all expedition invadeth the Kingdom, the greatest part of which he took without a blow given; the French King being as backward in affording due assistance, as the other was unprovided of means for defence. The French notled with this loss, divers times attempted the recovery of it, but in vain: for the Spaniards still kept those parts of it which lye on that side of the Pyrenees, leaving the rest, which lye on the French side of those Mountains (being about a sixth part of the whole) to the Descendants of those Princes whom he had deified.

The chief Order of Knighthood was of the Lilly, begun by Charles the sixth; their Blazon, a Pot of Lillies, with the Portraiture of our Lady engraven upon it, their duty, to defend the Faith, and daily to repeat certain Ave-Maries.

The Arms of Navarre, are Gules, a Caruncle nowed Or. Which Caruncle having a resemblance unto chains of Gold, is said to have been first taken by Sancho the 8th, in memory that he and his Forces had first broken the Fortification made with Chains, about the Pavilion of Mahomet Ensign, the Miramonolin of Morocco, at the great fight in Sierra Morena; before which time the Arms of this Kingdom had been Azure, a Cross Argent.

3. BISCAT and GUIPUSCOA.

OF these two we shall speak together, because of the similitude and resemblances which are between them, both in the Country and the People: the names being also forged from the same Original: Bounded on the West, with the Kingdom of Leon, on the East with the Pyrenees, and Guyenne in the Realm of France; on the North, with the Cantabrian Ocean; and on the South, with Navarre and old Castile. Thus named from the Vascones, inhabiting the neighbouring Kingdom of Navarre, in the time of the Romans: part of which people, in the year 640, or thereabouts, passed over unto the further side of the Pyrenees, where they took up those parts of France, since from them called Gascogne. The rest continuing in their old Seat, or spreading more into the West, towards the Cantabrians, gave to those parts the name of Guipuscoa, and Vizcaya, (for so the Spaniards write and speak it) now by us called Biscay: their language also (which is much different from the rest of Spain) being called the Bajquis, more nearin found to that of the Vascons, the original name.

The whole Country is very Mountainous and Woody, yielding but little store of Corn, and less of Wine: the defect of the first being supplied from other Countries; of the last, by Siders; for which end they plant Apples here in great abundance. But from these Woods they draw continually great store of Timber for the building of Ships; and from those Hills there do not only issue pleasant Rivers, (some say 150 in number) of which Ibros and Dura are said to be two: but such infinite flocks of Iron and Steel, that no Country yieldeth better, or in greater plenty. Called and accounted for this cause, the Armory of Spain; and giving occasion unto Pliny to report, that there was in this Country a whole Mountain of Iron, Maritima Cantabria parte, Mons prærupte altus (incredibile dictum) totus ex ea materia ft. lib. 33. cap. 45. Nor do they only furnish all Spain with Iron, which they make into Instruments of War, and others for domestic uses: but with Timber also for their shipping, with which is stored, that whole Fleets may be built and armed from this Country only.

It is divided commonly into two parts; the Eastern bordering on the Pyrenees, and the Realm of France, which is called GUIPUSCOA; and the Western, bordering on the Kingdom of Leon, which properly is called BISCAY: the Town of Montrio standing in the Confines of both. Both of them heretofore of the same Original, though by several means united to the Crown of Castile: both speak the same Cantabrian language, now called the Biscayish; the people of both, being more rude and simple, than the rest of Spain; but standing much upon their Gentry, according to the custom of most mountainous and unconquered Nations. The difference is, that those of Guipuscoa, by reason of their traffic and commerce with other Countries, favour a little more of Christianity than the others do: in which the common Biscain are so far to seek, that though they have some general notions of God and CHRIST, yet very few of them are able to render an account of their Faith, in any tolerable measure. And thus a view being taken of those general notions in which both Countries are concerned; let us next look upon them in their several and distinct capacities, with reference to their chief Towns and Stories.

And first for GUIPUSCOA. The places of chiefest note in it are, 1. S. Sebastian, (Don Baltha, as the vulgar call it) a noted and well traded Port, at the mouth of the River Gurumo; beautified with a fair and capacious Haven, defended at the entrances with two strong Castles founded upon the opposite Rocks, and honoured with an Episcopal See. 2. Tolosa, (commonly called Nazare) at the confluence of the Rivers Oria and Duero. 3. Placencia, on the River Duero, inhabited by none but Blacksmiths, who do attend their Hammers with such endless diligence, that Vulcan's Forge may seem to be translated hither out of the Island of Lemnos. 4. Guetaria, beautified with a safe and convenient Haven, defended from all Winds by a little Island lying before it: the birth-place of Sebastian del Cabo, that famous Pilot, the first that sailed about the World: Magellann who went chief in that expedition, perishing in the Action. 5. Pontarabiat, at the mouth of the River Vidua, which divides this Country from Gyenne in France; for that cause very well fortified, and as strongly garrisoned. 6. Retoria, situate near a Brook abounding with most excellent Salmons. 7. Montrio, at the mouth of the River Duero; the farthest Town hereof on the edge of Biscay. Most of which stand upon or near the Sea, there being but few Towns of note within the Land, (though there enough of scattered Villages, as in Biscay also) because of the roughness of the Mountains.

As for the Fortunes and affairs of this part of the Country, after the subversion of the Kingdom of the Goths in Spain (for till that time they followed the same Fortunes with the rest of this Continent) it was at first a member of the Crown of Navarre; afterwards wrested from K. Sancho the sixth, by Alfonso the first of Castile, An. 1079; by whom committed to the Government of Lopez Diaz de Haro, Lord of Biscay. Restored again to the Kings of Navarre, upon some following Captulations: It continued till the year 1200; when having experience of the Government of both Kingdoms, and liking better that of Castile, they offered themselves to the subjection of Alfonso the 4th; who without so much as one blow struck, became Master of all the Country, and left it settled and confirmed unto his Successors, as it hath ever since remained.

2. For BISCAY next; the principal Towns thereof are, 1. Larrabeechia, the chief Town of this Province in elder times; in the chief Church whereof, the Kings of Spain, as Lords of Biscay; use to be solemnly inaugurated, here making Oath to maintain the Liberties of the Country, and receiving the Homage and Allegiance of the people of it. 2. Berno, an old Town also, and amply privileged; the Franchises whereof, the Kings are solemnly sworn to keep, in the Church, dedicated to the honour of S. Euphemia. 3. Guzmania, the third Town for antiquity in this part of these Countries. Then of a later date, we have 4. Bilbo, or Bilboa, situate some two Leagues from the Sea, but on a fair and deep Creek thereof; on the other side surrounded with Mountains: built out of the ruins of the old Flaviobriga, by Diego de Haro, Lord of Biscay, An. 1300; and situate the best of any Town in this Country, for plenty of Victuals, especially for fish, and most excellent bread. Exceedingly enriched by making of Armour, and all sorts of Weapons, (their chiefest Manufacture) the Bilbo-blades in such request being brought from hence. Besides which trade of Arms and Iron, they deal also in Wool; by the vent of which Commodities they are grown so wealthy, that here are many private Merchants which build yearly three or four good Ships for their own trade only. 5. Laredo, a Sea Town also, with a capable Port. The landing place of Charles the fifth, when he had relinquished the Empire, and all his other Estates, with resolution to spend the rest of his life in Spain, in a private manner: it being observable, that he was no sooner landed, but the Admiral ship in which he came, and the greatest part of the Navy which came with him, perished in the Haven; so flew him (as it were) that there was no receding from this resolution. 6. Portigadeira, commodiously seated on an Arm of the Sea, which floweth up to their very houses, and serveth them exceedingly for the lading and unlading of their Commodities.

The old Inhabitants of this Tract, before the coming in of the Vascones, were the Cantabri; these subdivided into the several Nations of the Marbogi, the Caristi, the Autriguer, the Vardali, and the Cantabri properly so called. From these descend the modern Biscain. An argument whereof may be their Language, different from the rest of Spain; and said by some to have continued in this Country ever since the conquest at Babel. And though they over-shoot themselves; that go as far as Babel for the Pedigree and Antiquity of it; yet that it was the ancient Language of Spain, is more than probable; because this people have ever continued without any mixture of Foreign Nations, as being never thoroughly subdued either by Romans, Carthaginians, Goths, or *Moor*s; and so they remained, as in their Liberties not altered, so in their Language not altered. In like manner the Arabick continued uncorrupt, in the hills in parts of Granada, the Tongue of the old Britains, in our Wales; and the ancient Epiriatic, in the high, woody, and more mountainous parts of that Country. And though those of Guipuscoa speak the same Language also, yet is it with a greater mixture of French words, (by reason of their neighbourhood with France, and commerce with Strangers) than it is in Biscay; where the old natural Language, whatsoever it was, is in far more purity.

Nor do the Biscain differ from the rest of Spain in Language only, but in Customs also; four of which I will here here set down as a light to the rest. First, they account themselves free from Taxes and Contributions to the Kings of Spain; yielding them obedience with their Bodies, but not with their Purse. And when any of the Spanish Kings, in their Progresses, come to the Frontiers of their Country, he bareth one of his Legs, and in that manner entereth into it. There he is met by the Lords and Gentlemen there dwelling, who proffer him some few small Brass pieces ( Maravedies they call them, whereof 600 go to a Crown ) in a Leather Bag, hanged at the end of a Lance: but withall they tell him, that he must not take them. Which Ceremony performed, they all attend the King in his journey. Secondly, They admit no Bishops to come amongst them; and when Ferdinand the Catholic came in Progress hither, accompanied, amongst others, by the Bishop of Pampluna, the people arose in Arms, drove back the Bishops gathering all the dust on which they thought he had trodden, cast it into the Sea. Which averifies unto Bishops, as they first took up, in all probability, on some hard usage which they found at the hands of their Prelates; and still retain it out of a stubbornness of nature, most peculiar to them: so possible enough it is, that the want of Bishops, and of Episcopal Visitations amongst the Biscain is not the least cause of that ignorance and rudeness (spoken of before) which is found amongst them. Thirdly, they allow not any Priests to live in their Villages, except he bring his Concubine with him: conceiving it impossible for them to keep their Wives unto themselves, if the Curate hath not a Woman of his own. Fourthly, The Women, at all meetings, do first taste of the Cup, and do dispose of it to the men; which custom they have had amongst them ever since Ogno, the Countess of Castile, attempted to have poisoned her Son Sancho, in a Cup of Wine.

But to return again to the old Inhabitants, they were a people of that courage, that they defended the liberty of their Country against the Romans, when theretofore of Spain was subdued; and were at last, notwithstanding great effusion of blood, and manifest tokens of manly resolution, and heroic spirits on their parts, vanquished by the Darling of Fortune, Augustus. Such hilly and mountainous people, are always the last that are conquered, and the first that stand on their own guard: as besides those Biscain, the Navarrois and Asturians, here in Spain, in respect of the *Moor*s; and our Britains, in relation to the Saxons. Whether it be, that living in a sharp air, and being inclined to labour, they prove on occasion good and able men; or that the Forts of Nature's own building are not so easily won, as defended; or that the unpleasants of the Country, and unfruitfulness of the Soil, yield no occasion to strangers to desire an Adventure for it: I take not on me to determine. But being overcome at last, they were first cast into the Province of Tarraconensis; and so continued after the new modelling of Spain, by the Emperor Constantine. Under the Romans they continued, till that Empire fell; and then not conquered by the Goths, but resigned over to them by the Romans, with the rest of that Province. Nor lost they any thing of their ancient and natural courage, by the intermixture of the *Vascon*s; continuing till good Souldiers both for Sea and Land; a stubborn, fierce, and courageous people; impatient of servitude, and not easy to be forced to any thing which they like not of. The last of all the Spaniards that submitted to the fury of the *Moor*s, (excepting those of the Asturias, never conquered by them) and one of the first Provinces which broke off that yoke: animated and conducted in that undertaking, by Soria, defended of the Blood-Royal of Spain.

Land, Anno 870. made upon that good service, the first Lord of Biscay. After this, they continued a free and distinct Estate, under their own Proprietary Lords and Princes of the Noble Family of Haro, till that Nero of Spain, Don Pedro the Cruel, violently took it from Dona Jeanne, the eldest Daughter, married to Ferdinand the younger Son of Ferdinand de la Cerde, the right heir of Castile, issued the Lady Jeanne Manuel, the Wife of Henry the second, and Mother of John the first, both King of Castile: by which last, this Country was united to that Crown for ever, Anno 1379. The names of the Proprietary Lords of this Estate, we have in this following Catalogue of

The Lords of Biscay.

A.Chr.

- 870 1. Soria, the Son of Lopes of Biscay, but Nephew by the Mother's side to a King of Scotland, the first Lord of Biscay.
2. Manfo Laper, the Son of Soria.
3. Inigo the Deaf, Son of Manfo Laper.
4. Lopez Diaz, the Son of Inigo.
5. Sancho Lopez, the Son of Lopes Diaz.
6. Inigo II. the safe Son of Lopes Diaz; the two Sons of Sancho Lopez, by reason of their tender years, being yet aforesaid.
7. Lopez Diaz II. Son of Inigo the second.
8. Diego Laper, surnamed the White, Son of Lopez Diaz the second.
9. Lopez Diaz III. Son of Diego Laper; the first who took unto himself the surname of Haro, from a Town of that name, of his foundation.
10. Diego Laper Diaz de Haro, Son of Lopez Diaz the third.
11. Lopez Diaz IV. Son of Diego Lopez Diaz de Haro.
- 1257 12. Diego Lopez Diaz II. assisted Sancho the second Son of King Alfonso the fifth of Castile, in excluding the Children of Don Ferdinand de la Cerde, his elder Brother; by which Sancho he was after slain. A reward not unsuitable to his bold attempt.
- 1289 13. Diego Laper de Haro, the Son of Diego.
- 1290 14. Diego Laper III. the Brother of Diego Lopez Diaz the second, the Founder of the Town of Bilbo.
- 1309 15. John of Castile, Brother to King Sancho, and Husband of Mary Diaz de Haro, Daughter of Diego Laper the second.
- 1319 16. John the Blind, so called, because he had lost an Eye; Son of John of Castile, and Mary Diaz of Haro; slain by King Alfonso.
- 1329 17. John Nunez of Lara, in right of his Wife, Daughter and Heir of John the Blind, (whose name I find not) succeeded after the decease of Dona Maria Diaz.
- 1350 18. Nugno de Lara, an Infant of two years old, succeeded John Nunez of Lara, his Father.
- 1351 15. Jean and Jabel, the Sisters and Heirs of Nugno de Lara, seized upon by Don Pedro; and the whole Signeury of Biscay subjected by strong hand to the Crown of Castile, with many other fair Estates which depended on it.

The Arms of these Lords of Biscay, were Argent, two Wolves Sable, each of them in his mouth a Lamb of the second.

4. LEON and OVIEDO.

THE Kingdom of LEON and OVIEDO, hath on the East, the Country of Biscay; on the North, the main Cantabrian Ocean; on the South, Castile; on the West, Galicia. So called from Leon and Oviedo, the chief Cities of it, and first Seat of their Kings; the ancient Kingdom in all Spain. By a more ancient name it was called Asturia, from the Astures; who possessed it in the time of the Romans: divided into the two general names of Augustani, and Transmontani; but comprehending the particular Tribes or Nations of the Pisici, Gigari, Zoele, and Lanceisfer.

The Country mountainous and woody, but formerly of some esteem for those small, though swift Horses, which the Romans (from hence) called Asturnes; we may read it, Hobbies; which afterwards became a common name for all Nags or Geldings: Astures Macedonians, being used for a Macedonian Nag, by Persius Astiviter.

It is divided commonly into two parts; that is to say, 1. Asturia de Oviedo, bordering on Galicia, towards the West; and 2. Asturia Santillana, confining on Biscay, towards the East. From which division of the Country, the eldest Son of Castile is called Prince of the Asturias in the plural number; which title some suppose to be given unto them, because it was the first Country which held up against the Moors. But indeed, the true Original heretofore, is referred by the best Spanish Writers, to the time of the marriage of Catharine, Daughter of John of Gaunt, and in right of her Mother Constance, the right Heir of Castile, unto Henry Son of John the first, then in possession of that Kingdom. For to this new married Couple it was granted, faith Mariana, that after the manner of England, where the Heir apparent is called Prince of Wales, they should be called Princes of the Asturias. In times succeeding, the Towns of Jean, Ubeda, Batista, or Baeta, and Andujar, all situate near together in Andalusia, and each of them invested with a goodly Territory, were added to the Patrimony and Estate heretofore; and so continue to this day.

Places of most importance it is, 1. Sublano, now a small Village, but once a Town of so great strength, that it was destroyed by the command of the Emperor Nerva, lest it might animate these Mountaineers unto a revolt, 2. LEON, situate at the foot of the Mountain, not far from the place of the old Sablano, (as it was then called.) The Town but mean, were it not beautified by a fair and large Cathedral; the Bishop wherof acknowledged no Metropolitan but the Pope alone. Recovered from the Moors, An. 722. Afterwards made the Regal Seat of the Kings of Leon: by some called Legio, because the seventh Legion was here lodged; by Prology called Legio Germanica; and by others, Gomina, 3. St. Andrea, so named from a Church there built to the honour of St. Andrew; by Prology called Flavienensis; now a well traded Port on the Cantabrian Ocean. 4. Santillana, which gives name to the Eastern part of Asturia, 3. Llanes, where the two Asturias meet together, 6. Ciudad Real, in the Western part of Asturia, called Asturia de Oviedo, 7. Villa Vieja, the only noted Port in this part of the Country. 8. Avies, on the borders of Galicia, near the Sea, and not far from the Promontory called of old Promontorium Sybeticum, but now Cabo de Pinar, 9. OVIEDO, called for a time, the City of Bis- shops, because many of the Bishops of Spain, dispossessed of their Churches by the Moors, had retired thither; and there preserved the line of Episcopal Succession, till their Sees were filled again with Bishops in more happy times. Anciently it was called Lucus Asturum, and was of old a Bishops See; re-edified by King Froila the first, in the year 757. Famous enough in giving the Title of a Kingdom to the first Christian Princes, after the Conquest by the Moors called from hence, Kings of Oviedo. Afterwards, An. 896, in the time of K. Ordoño the first, they began to be titled Kings of Oviedo and León; and at last, Kings of Leon only; Oviedo being quite left out of the Regal title, by Raymir the second, An. 940. More towards the Islands of this Kingdom, (now reckoned part of old Castile) are 10. Palencia, the Palatia of Prology and Antoninus, seated on the River Carion, once a small University, till the translation of it unto Salamanca, by King Ferdinand the third. This Town first felt the fury of the Suevians, when they mastered these parts of Spain. 11. Astorga, anciently called Augusta Asturica, when the Astures of this Tract were called Augustani; a Bishops See, fronting on Galicia: happy in this, that it felt not the fury of the lustful King Visigoth, who to secure himself in his unlawful pleasures, and to weaken his subjects if they should attempt any thing against him, dismantled all the Towns in his Dominions, except Leon, Tolosa, and this Astorga. 12. Bonvent, on the South-east of Astorga, which gave the title of Duke to Frederick the base Son of King Henry the 2d, of Castile, the stem of the potent Family of Spain, for the times they lived in. 13. Torquemada, the most Southern Town of all this Kingdom: and for that cause well fortified against the encroachments of the Castilians, till the uniting of the Kingdoms made afterwards, (as lying nearest to Castile and the Court of the Kingdom) ordinary place of conference with the States of Leon.

Who were the old Inhabitants of this Country, hath been shewn already. When conquered by Augustus Caesar, they were made part of the Province of Tarraconensis; part, afterwards, of the Province of Galicia, by the Emperor Constantine. Won from the Romans, by the Goths; and from them, by the Moors; though long they did not lie under their command. For as the last of Roderick, the King of the Goths in Spain, occasioned the coming in of the Moors; so the last of Munizaga Moorish Vice-Roy, occasioned (though in long course of time) their expulsion thence. For Magazines having employed Pelagius, a young Prince of the Asturias, on an Embassy to Musa the Lieutenant General of the Moors, then residing at Corduba, in his absence ravished his Sister, and at his return died by the edge of his Sword. Despairing of pardon for his act, he was fain to stand upon his guard, and fortify himself in the Mountainous places of this Country; to which many of the old Inhabitants resorted, put themselves under his command, and elected him to be their King: first by the name of King of the Asturias; and after by the title of King of Leon, when he had got that City into his hands; as being the City of most note, and the strongest Hold that he was possessed of. The Kingdom at the first beginning, contained only the more mountainous parts of the two Asturias; enlarged a little further South, on the taking of Leon by this first Pelagius. Afterwards, by the valour of Ordoño the second, it extended over both Asturias, Galicia, and the Old Castile: divided from the Moors by the Mountains of Azila, and Segovia; but more defended by the valour of the people, and Gallantry of their Princes, than it was by those Mountains. King of most note; besides the two before remembered, were 1. Maurgata, the base Son of Alfonso the first; who having by the help of Abderamen, King of the Moors, obtained the Kingdom, came to a base agreement with them; in which he bound himself to pay them, as a yearly Tribute, 50 Virgins of Noble Families, and as many of inferior birth; for which he died hated and detested of all men. 2. Raymir the first, who so discomfited the Moors at the Battle of Clavijo, near Calaborra, in Navarre, An. 836, that from that time the Power and reputation of the Kings of Corduba began to languish. 3. Alfonso the third, who refused to pay unto the Moors the said tribute of Virgins; and for his many Victories against the Moors, was furnished, The Great; who being outed of the Kingdom by his Son Garcia, not only patiently digested to great a wrong, but willingly became his Son's Lieutenant against the Moors. 4. Veramund the second, chosen King in the minority of Raymir the third; in whose time the Moors took Leon, and spoiled the Church of S. James in Galicia; but were after beaten to their homes with the loss of many of their own places. 5. Veramund the third, who making War against Ferdinand the first, King of Castile, was by him slain in Battle; the Conqueror seizing on his Kingdom in right of Sancha his Wife, the Sister of Veramund; the three Kings next succeeding, being Kings of both. 6. Ferdinand the third, Son of Alfonso the 9th, and of Berengaria, the younger Sister of Henry King of Castile; by the Power and Policy of his Mother, seized on the Castilian, of right belonging to Blanch the elder Sister, Wife of Lewis, Son to Philip the second, King of France; and after the death of his Father, succeeded in Leon. Of whom we shall hear more when we come to Castile. After this time, these Kingdoms never were divided, but incorporate into one Estate, called for a long time the Kingdom of Castile and Leon; though afterwards Leon was left out of the Regal title, and only that of Castile mentioned; except in Legal Instruments, Letters Patent, and Instruments of Negotiation with Foreign Princes. The whole succession of these Kings, the Histories of Spain thus present unto us.

- 1037 24. Sancha, Sister of Veramund. 30.
- 1037 24. Ferdinand, King of Castile. 30.
- 1607 25. Alfonso VI. the youngest Son of Ferdinand and Sancha: first King of Leon only; but after the death of Sancha's elder Brother, he succeeded also in Castile. 41.
- 1126 26. Urraca, the Daughter of Alfonso.
- 1126 26. Alfonso VII. King of Aragon and Navarre. 13.
- 1122 27. Alfonso VIII. the Son of Urraca, by Raymond of Burgundy, succeeded in Leon and Castile. 35.
- 1157 28. Ferdinand II. younger Son of Alfonso, King of Leon only. 31.
- 1188 29. Alfonso IX. Son of Ferdinand. 42.
- 1230 30. Ferdinand III. Son of Alfonso, by Berengaria, or Berenguela, Sister of Henry of Castile, by the power and practices of his Mother, succeeded in the Realm of Castile, whilst his Father lived, An. 1217: to the prejudice of Blanch her elder Sister, married to Lewis the eighth of France; by whom he had Lewis the ninth, and other children. Which Lewis the ninth, on the marriage of Blanch his eldest Daughter, with Ferdinand eldest Son of Alfonso the fifth, surrendered all rights in the Crown of Castile, and so confirmed the same more absolutely to the house of Leon, Anno 1267; though neither this Ferdinand, nor Blanch, nor any of their Heirs, do attain that Kingdom; disfeized thereof by Sancha a younger Son. The Kingdoms never since that time disjoined, as they had been twice before since the first uniting.

The Arms of this Kingdom are Argent, a Lyon Pasant, crowned Or. Which Arms when it was joined to the Kingdom of Castile, were quartered with the Coat thereof: that being the first time (as Cambden notes) that ever Arms were born Quartered. Followed herein by Edward the third of England, who not only took unto himself the title of King of France, but (to shew his right unto that Crown) quartered the Flower de Lys with his English Lions.

5. GALLICIA.

GALLICIA, or GALÆCIA, is bounded on the East with the Asturias, from which parted by the River Mero; on the South with Portugal, from which divided by the River Minio; on the North with the Cantabrians; and on the West with the Atlantic Oceans. The ancient Inhabitants of it, were the Gallaeci, (whence it had the name) distinguished into the several Tribes of the Bedyi, Sueri, Citini, Caperi, and Lemavi, spoken of by Prology.

The Country, like that of the Asturias, is mountainous, and almost inaccessible, overparched with the Cantabrian Hills; and so the fitter to hold out against Foreign Invasions, in defence of Liberty and Religion; in that regard chosen for a retiring place by the distressed and vanquished Christians, in their first Wars against the Moors: Not well inhabited to this day; nor so much for the hilliness of the Country, as for want of Water; which defect makes the people generally draw more towards the Sea, where they improve their Fortunes by trade and fishing. The barrenness of the Country recompened heretofore by the rich Mines of Gold and Silver, which in this Country, and the Astures, and some part of Lusitania, afforded yearly 20000 pound weight of Gold unto the Romans, amounting in our money to two millions of Crowns: but now no such Mines found in it of any value. Instead of which, it yieldeth the best Mines for Iron, of any Province of Spain; for which their Waters are so proper, that they are said to fortify and improve the metal.

Places of principal importance are 1. Compostella an University and Arch-Bishops See, vulgarly called St. Jago, in honour of St. James, the Son of Zebedee, whom they pretend to be buried here, and of whom there is denominated an Order of Knights: his Reliques said to be kept in the chief Church of it, worshipped by the Romanists with great devotion: and drawing to this place a wonderful concourse of people, coming thither on pilgrimage. 2. Baiona, not far from the mouth of the River Minia, 3. Coruna, by Polomy called Flavius Brigantium; by us English the Groy: often mentioned in the story of our Wars with the Spaniards, in Queen Elizabeth's time; then taken by the English: but since, very well fortified to avoid the like surprisal. Divided then, as now, into the High Town, and the Low's situate on the Cantabrian Sea, between the Promontory Tritemum, now Cabo Ortegal, lying towards the East; and that of old called Nirium, now Cabo Finis Terræ, as being the most Western end of the then known World. 4. Orense, upon the Minia, a Bishops-See, by Polomy called Aqua Calidae, from the Bathes here being, now much commended for the best Wines. 5. Tui, on the River, fronting upon Portugal: a Bishops See, in ancient Writers called Aude, 6. Ponte-vadre, 7. Ribadão: both upon the Sea, both fitted with convenient Harbours.

The ancient Inhabitants heretofore, as before is said, were the Gallaici, one of the last Nations which submitted to the Power of the Romans: by whom first made a part of Tarconensis; after, a Province of it self, by the name of Gallicia; the Astures, and some part of the old Castile and Portugal, being added to it. In the declining of that Empire, the Suevi, a potent Nation of Germany, accompanying the Vandals and Alani in their transigrations, invaded Spain, and first possessed themselves of this Country. But not content with their Estate, they warred on the Silinger, (a Vandal-Tribe) then possessed Betia, whom they vanquished, and took that Province from them, under the conduct of Reccila their second King. They added, shortly after, by Theodoric, their former Conquerors: topped in their career, by Theodoric the second, King of the Goths: by whom vanquished, and confined again within Gallicia, which they enjoyed till the final ruin of their Kingdom by Leutigild the Goth, Anno 583: reduced then to a Province of the Gothish Kingdom. Their habitation before their coming into Spain, was in the Eastern part of Germany, beyond the Elb. Their Religion at the first, under Reccarius their third King, was very Orthodox, and sound. But vanquished by the Goths, and obliged unto them for the restoring of their Kingdom, they fell off to Arianism: persisting in that Heresy for the space of an hundred years, and then again returning to the Catholic Faith, under Theodoric their King; therein continuing constant till their final overthrow. The Kings heretofore (as many as are upon Record) are these that follow.

The Kings of the Suevi in Gallicia.

1. Hermenricus; who first brought the Suevi into Spain, and possessed Gallicia, Ara-dius and Homorius, then Emperors of the East and West.
2. Reccila, who conquered the Silinger, and subdued Betia.
3. Reccarius, the first Christian King who won Lusitania; afterwards vanquished and slain by Theodoric, King of the Goths; the Suevi for a time becoming subject to that King.
4. Masdrus, restored unto the Kingdom by Theodoric.
5. Frumarius, the Son of Masdrus.
6. Remismundus, Brother of Frumarius, recovered some part of Lusitania, and fell off to Arianism.
7. Theodominus, the Restorer of the Catholic Faith amongst the Suevi.
8. Ariamirus, Son to Theodominus.
9. Eboricus, the Son of Ariamirus, deposed and slain by Andeca.
10. Andeca, the last King of the Suevi in Gallicia, or rather the usurper of the Regal Title, served in the same kind by Leutigild, King of the Goths, as he had served Eboricus his Lord and Master.

After which time, Gallicia was made a Province of the Gothish Monarchy, and the name of Suevi no more heard of in Spain. In times ensuing, it became a part of the Kingdom of Leon, by the Kings whereof it was won piece-meal from the Moors, as their fortunes favoured them. Erected to a Kingdom by Alfonso the third, furnished the Great, Anno 886; and given unto Ordoño his second Son: by whose succession to the Crown on the death of his elder Brother Garcia, it was again united to the Kingdom of Leon; but so as to continue a Realm distinct. In the year 955, the Galicians not brooking the ill qualities of Raynir their third, elected Veramund for their King, the Son of Ordoño the third, and right Heir of the Kingdom: who, coming to the Crown of Leon on the death of Raynir, did once again unite it unto that Estate. Disinherited from it once more by Ferdinand the first King of Castile and Leon, who gave it unto Garcia his youngest Son, Anno 1067; but conquered shortly after by Sanebo the eldest Son of Ferdinand; by whom Garcia was disinherited and imprisoned, Anno 1081. Never since separated from the Crown of Castile and Leon: but when Leon was severed from Castile going along with Leon in those separations, till the union of those Kingdoms in the person of Ferdinand the second, Anno 1230; the Castilian being then grown better Statefmen, than to cation Kingdoms.

The Arms heretofore were Azure, (since of Croissants Purpure, a Chalice crowned Or.

6. The Kingdom of CORDUBA.

HAVING thus surveyed those Provinces under the Government of Castile, which lie at the foot of the Pyrenees, and on the shores of the Northern or Cantabrian Ocean; we will next look on those which lie more towards the Straights of Gibraltar, and the Mediterranean, and so come round at last to Castile it self. And first, we will begin with the Kingdom of CORDUBA.

DUBA, which at first erection of it, contained all those parts of Spain conquered by the Moors, and not again recovered by the King of Leon and Navarre: contracted within narrower bounds, when subdued by the King of Castile at that time comprehending only the Provinces of Andalusia, Extremadura, Granada, and the Isle of Gader. We will consider it, notwithstanding, in both capacities: in the first and largest notion, as unto the story and affairs thereof, till distracted by the Moors, into many Kingdoms: in the last and strictest, as to the Geography, and description of it.

The Kingdom of CORDUBA, as it stood when subdued by the Spaniards, was bounded on the East with Murcia, and the Mediterranean; on the West with Portugal, and the Ocean; on the North with the Mountains of Sierra Morena, and Castile; and on the South with the Ocean, the Straights of Gibraltar, and the Midland Seas: fo called from Corduba, the chief City of it, and the Seat-Royal of their Kings.

It contained, as before was said, the Provinces of 1. Andalusia, 2. Gader, 3. Extremadura, and 4. Granada. But because Granada had the fortune to continue a Kingdom, when the rest were conquered, we will consider it by it self, and here proceed to the description of the other three.

1. ANDALUSIA is bounded on the East with Granada; on the West with the Atlantic Ocean, and Algarve in Portugal: on the North, with Sierra Morena, and Extremadura; on the South, with the Ocean, the Straights, and the Mediterranean. By Pliny it is called Conventus Cordubensis, from Corduba, at that time the chief City of it: and after, Andalusia, quasi Vandalusia, from the Vandals; who having won it from the Romans, had for some time (and till their expulsion into Africa) possessed themselves of it.

This is the most rich and fertile Country of all Spain; extremely fruitful of Wine, Oyl, Oranges, (which last being shipped at Sevil, and so brought for England, are by us called by the name of Sevil Oranges) and better furnished with Corn than most part of this Continent: watered with the Rivers, 1. And, 2. Odiar, 3. Betis, and 4. Tonor: which makes it flourish with a continual greenness of Olives, Vines, and other Fruits; of which the Hills, though watered only with the dew of Heaven, do partake also in reasonable measure. The Air heretofore, by reason of its Southerly situation, is exceeding hot, inasmuch that their Corn there is ripe in April: but those excessive heats, much moderated by those constant refreshings which the cool winds, breathing from the North, do bestow upon it. In which respect King Ferdinand the Catholic did use to say, that it was best living in the Summer at Sevil, (one of the chief Cities of this Province) by reason of these cool refreshings in the winter-time at Burgos in old Castile, which though situate more Northerly, in a very harsh Air, had yet many notable defences against the cold.

The principal Cities and Towns heretofore, are 1. Corduba, seated at the foot of Sierra Morena, on the left shore of Guadalquivir, overlooking towards the South, a spacious and fruitful plain. First founded by Marcellus a Roman Consul, An. D. C. 601; employed at that time in the Wars of Spain: the first Colony planted in this Province by the Romans, and the Chief City of Betia. For a long time the Seat of the Moorish Vice-Roy, Lieutenants to the great Caliph of the Saracens; after, of its own Kings of that Nation, who built here for their Palace, a magnificent Castle. Reduced by Ferdinand of Castile, it was restored unto the honour of an Episcopal See; which anciently it had, and doth now enjoy. A City of great circuit, but of very few Houses, by reason of the multitude of Gardens in it. Famous in former times for the birth of Lucan; and both the Seneca's.

Dioscori Senecas, unicuique Lucanum;
Fecunda loquitur Corduba: faith Martial;

Corduba glorying in her fruitful field,
One Lucan, and two Seneca's did yield.

Nor was it less fruitful of good with in the times succeeding. For not to say any thing of Hysus that renowned Confessor, who was Bishop here in the times of Constantine, and before: it was a flourishing University in the time of the Moors: Avicen, Averroes, Rhazes, Almanfor, Messalab, those famous Philosophers and Physicians, being Students or Professors in it. It is now vulgarly called Cordova; and hence cometh our true Cordovan Leather, made of the Skin of a Sardinian Beast. Near unto this City, is a Wood of 30 miles in length, having nothing but Olive-trees. 2. Jaen, a Bishops See; remarkable for nothing more, than that the Kings of Spain, ever since the first recovery of it, have filled themselves Kings of Jaen, and use it to this day amongst the rest of their Titles: it having been, before that time, the seat and title of some petty Kings amongst the Moors. Nor far hence stood the famous Town of Illiturgis (by Polomy, Illurgis) mentioned to often in the War betwixt Rome and Carthage. 3. Offensa, of more note for the Dukes heretofore, and a small University founded here, Anno 1549. 4. Eccia, on the River Cenil; of more esteem formerly, than at the present: by Polomy and Antoninus called Atigi, by Pliny, Augusta Firma; a Roman Colony, and one of the four Juridical Resorts of Betia. 5. Marchena, situate on a Hill, where is said to be the best breed of Gomets, (a swift race of Horses) not of this Province alone, but of all Spain: the River Betis (as it was thought) conveying some secret virtue unto them. Of this Race was the Horse which Cesar so loved, that he erected his Statue (when dead) in the Temple of Venus: and the ancient Lusitani thought they were begotten by the Wind. 6. Xerez, situate more within the Mid-lands, towards the borders of Granada, and therefore called Xerez de la Frontera, (the Axis of Polomy and Antonius) famous for plenty of that Wine which we call Xerez-Sack: but more for that great and fatal Battel fought near unto it, betwixt K. Rudericus and the Moors; the loss of which, drew along with it the loss of Spain. 7. Medina Sidonia, (so called to distinguish it from a Town of Castile, called Medina Gali) the Duke whereof was General of all the Forces both by Sea and Land, intended for the Conquest of England, Anno 1588. The Town called anciently Astida, and Astid Casariana; the Duke whereof is of the Family of the Guzmans, and the greatest Prince, for Revenue, in all Spain: his Intrado being estimated at 1300000 Crowns per annum. 8. Algezire, on the Sea-side; a Town of such strength and consequence, that it held out a Siege 19 months, for the Moors of Africa, against Alfonso the fifth of Castile; to whom surrendered at the last upon Composition, Anno 1343. Since which, the Kings of Castile have filled themselves Kings of Algezire; not yet discomfited. 9. Conil, a Town on the Sea-coasts, beyond the Isle of Gader, part of the Patrimony of the Duke of Medina Sidonia. 10. Gibraltar, a strong Town, seated at the mouth of the Straights from hence denominated, lying at the foot of the Mountain of Calpe, supposed to be one of Hercules Pillars; the furthest point Southwards of all Europe. 11. S. Lucar de Barameda, (the Lucifer form of the Ancients) the Port-

Port-Town of Seville, situate at the mouth of the River Betis, or Guadalupe: where the Ships of that rich City ride, either for a fair wind to put to Sea, or for a tide to carry them up the River, as they come from America, 12. Tariffa, seated at the end of the Promontory which looks towards Africa; and so called, because Tariff, Leader of the Moors into Spain, here landed: recovered from the Moors by Saado the third of Castile, Anno 1292, or thereabouts: the first Governour thereof being Alfonsi Perez de Guzman, the first Founder of the now potent Family of Medina Sidonia. Supported by some to be the Carteia of the Ancients. And if so, then a Colony of the Libertines (begotten on some unmarred Spanish Women, by the Roman Souldiers) placed here, and indulged the Privileges of the Latins, by Decree of the Senate, An. U. C. 600. Not far from these last Towns, in a little Island made by two branches of the Betis, where it falleth into the Sea, stood the famous 13. Tariffa, celebrated in most ancient Writers, for the abundance of Silver, which the Mines of it did produce. Which was so great, that (as we read in Aristotle's Book de Mirabilibus juxta the Tyrians or Phoenicians first came thither, ἀπὸ τῶν Τυρίων ἐκείνην, ὅπου τοὺς ἄλλους τὸν ἀργύρον, that their Ships were neither able to contain or transport it thence: inasmuch that they were fain to make their Anchors, and other Unstuffs, of Silver. The like commodity the Gracians found in their Voyages hither, of which Herodotus maketh mention, Lib. IV. Hereupon some have been persuaded, that the Ships which Solomon built to go for Tariffa, (whereof we read 1 Kings 10, 22.) were bound no further than this place. As for the situation of it, that it was neither Tariffa, as some, or Carteia, as others do conjecture, (though where Carteia was, be alike uncertain, if it were not the same with Tariffa, as before is said, doth appear by Strabo; who telleth us, that Betis falls into the Sea with two mouths or channels, ἓν ἐν τῷ πελάγῳ καὶ ἑνὶ ἐν ἁλὶ, ὅπου καλεῖται Τάριφος, &c. and that in the midst thereof there is a City called Tariffus, of the same name with the River, (for Betis anciently was so named) from whence the whole Country thereabouts is called Tariffus. Which situation of this Town in an Island, at the mouth of Betis, occasioned Pliny, and some others of the ancient Writers, to give the name of Tariffus to the Isle of Gades: whereof more anon.

In the mean time go we on to 14. Sevil, (in Latin, Hispalis) the fairest City, not only of Andalusia, but of all Spain. It is in compass six miles, divided into two parts by the Betis; but joined together by a strong and beautiful Bridge; the whole environed with beautiful Walls, and adorned with many magnificent and stately Buildings, as Palaces, Churches, and Monasteries; amongst which, that of the Gordiana, or Carthusians, is endowed with 250000 Crowns of yearly Revenue. It is also the See of an Arch-bishop, under whose Jurisdiction are said to be 20000 Villages; and a most flourishing University, wherein studied Avicen the Moors, that excellent and learned Scholar. Pope Sylvestre the second, and Leander, who was Arch-bishop hereof, about the year 580, a stout defender of the Catholic tenets of the Church against the Arians. The University adorned with one of the greatest and goodliest Libraries in the Christian World; furnished by Diogo, the Son of Christopher Columbus, the first Founder of it, with no fewer than 12000 Volumes, in several Languages, gathered together with extraordinary charge and care; and endowed with a very fair Revenue for the maintenance and enlargement of it. Famous in former times, for two Provincial Councils holden here: the first Anno 584; the last Anno 636; and at the present, for that there are continually maintained 30000 Gonets for the service of the King; but most of all, for the great traffic of the place. For from this Town the Castilians set forwards towards America; and here they do discharge the Fleets of Gold and Silver, which they bring from thence. To this Town come the Pearls of Cubagua, and the Emeralds of S. Martha, the Cochinele of Mexico, the Corals of Hipaniola, and, in a word, the whole treasure of the New-found-World. Here is the publick Emporie of all Spain, for her Wines, Oranges, and Oyls; sent from hence in so great abundance into all parts of Europe, that the people use to say, in the way of a By-word, That if there enter not into Sevil 4000 Pipes of Wine every day in the year, the Farmer of the Customs is sure to break: inasmuch as the Revenues coming out of this City only, are worth a very good Realm to the Catholic King; Magnus reckoning it at no less than a Million of Crowns yearly. Lastly here resteth the body of Christopher Columbus, the fortunate discoverer of the New-World, with a Latin Epitaph upon his Tomb; but flout (God knoweth) of the great merit of the Man: of which more hereafter.

As for the Fortunes of this City, as they relate to Ecclesiastical or Spiritual matters, it hath been long the See of an Arch-bishop, (as before is said) next in revenue and degree unto him, of Toledo; his revenue estimated at 100000 Crowns per annum; his Jurisdiction reaching over all Andalusia, and the Fortunate Islands; in which are said to be contained 20000 Villages; the very Dioceses of which, being said to comprehend 2000 Benefices, besides Friers, Numeries, and Hospitals, which may make the former computation of the Villages, subject to his Power, as a Metropolitan, of more value. Yet not so much considerable for its Wealth and Revenue, as for being once the See of Isidore, so much renowned (considering the time he lived in) for the universality of his learning; who was Bishop here, called usually Isidore Hispanensis, to distinguish him from another of that name in Egypt, called Pelusiota. As for the civil Fortunes of it, in the declining of the Moors, when their Estate was broken into many Realms and Principalities, it became a Kingdom of it self unto a noble Moor named Almoraxi, An. 966. One of the Kings whereof called Almoraxi, was of so great power, that he had the Regal City of Corduba, and the greatest part of Andalusia, under his command, made subject with the rest of the Moors in Spain, to the Miramolines of Morocco, An. 1091, till the retreat of Mahomet Enser unto Africa, An. 1214. After which, more made a Kingdom in the person of Aben Lalle, a great Prince of the Moors; but no longer continuing in that Royal Dignity and Estate, than till the year 1248, when taken and subdued by Ferdinand the second of Castile, and made a part of his Estate: but so, that it remained a Realm distinct in the Regal stile; in which the King of Spain anciently called Kings of Sevil.

2. South of Andalusia, at the mouth of Guadalupe, stands the Isle of GADES, distant from the main Land 700 paces, and joined unto it with a Bridge called Puerto de Saecca. It is in length 13 miles, of a very fruitful soil; besides the riches which it gets by Fishing, and making of Salt. First peopled by the Tyrians 562 years before the Birth of CHRIST; subdued by the Carthaginians, An. U. C. 236, being invited by the Tyrians to aid them in a defensive War against the Spaniards; and was the last hold which the Carthaginians had in Spain; out of which beaten by the valour and good fortune of Scipio Africanus. Here stood in ancient times a Temple consecrated crated to the honour of Hercules; in which all Seafaring-men (at their being here) used to pay their vows, and offer sacrifice, as being arrived at the furthest parts of all the World.

Places of most importance in it, are, 1. Porto Real, a fair and capacious Haven, between the Town of Cadiz, and the main Land of Andalusia. 2. Santa Maria, another Port more towards the North. 3. Cadiz, or Gades, the chief Town of the Island, and giving name unto the whole. Situate on the Western part of the whole Isle, on a large Bay, serving as a Road for the Indian Fleet; by the resort and trade whereof, it is much enriched. First founded by the Tyrians, afterwards made a Municipal City, by the Romans; and one of the Juridical Resorts for the Province of Betulia: in whose times it was held to be the noblest and richest in all Spain, not yielding to any in the Empire, for greatness, magnificence, or number of Inhabitants of account and quality. In so much, that here lived, at one time 500 Roman Knights; which number was not equalled in any one place, except Padua only: besides the great concourse of Merchants from all parts of the World. Which great resort, occasioned Corneilius Balbus, a Native of it, to add a new Town to the old: the whole circumference of both being 20 Furlongs. By the Moors, at their conquest of Spain, it was utterly ruined; but since repaired, well fortified, and made the Magazin for the Ammunition of the Spanish Navies. Taken, notwithstanding, in one day by the English, under the command of Charles Lord Effingham, Robert Earl of Essex, and Sir Walter Raleigh; in which they burned the Indian Fleet, consisting in 40 Ships, whose Lading was worth 8 Millions of Crowns; overcame the Spanish Navy, consisting of 57 Men of War; took the St. Michael, and the St. Andrew, two great Gallies, and their luggage, spoiled and carried away more Martial Furniture, than could be supplied in many years; and forced the Town, in which they slew, and took Prisoners, 4000 Foot, and 600 Horse, and brought thence a very great booty in the sackage of it, Anno 1596. The fortuity of which enterprize, gave occasion to one of the Wits then living, to frame this excellent Anagram on the name of the Earl of Essex, (who was looked on as the greatest Adventurer in it) viz. Devreux; Vere dux. Which he afterwards cast into this Distich.

Vere dux Devreux; & verior Hercules; GADES
Nam tenet hic vidit, vici at ille simul.

Alcides yields to Devreux; he did see Thy beauties (Cadiz) but Devreux conquer'd thee.

Near to this Isle, is that so celebrated Straight, called by name, Fretum Gaditanum, for the nearness of it to this Island; by others, Fretum Herculeum, not because Hercules did there break out a passage to let the Ocean into the Mediterranean, as the Poets fable; but because of the two Pillars which he caused to be erected on each side of it, with the inscription of Nil Ultra, this being supposed to be the furthest Country Westward. But when that supposition was proved untrue by the discovery of America, Charles the fifth being in those parts, caused two new Pillars to be placed where the old ones stood, or rather, where he thought they stood, and Plus Ultra to be written on them. As for those Pillars so much memorized in the ancient Writers, some place them in the Temple of Hercules, within this Island; others, on the Promontory of Calpe in Spain, and that of Albia, in Africa; and some again in two little Islands near those Promontories. This therefore being a matter doubtful, and not worth the looking after, let us return unto the Straight, called now the Straight of Gibraltar, from the Town and Castle of Gibraltar, situate on the brink hereof; the Straight being in length fifteen miles; and in breadth, where it is narrowest, seven.

EXTREMADURA hath on the East and North, Castile; on the West, Portugal; and on the South Andalusia. It was first called Beturia from the River Betis, which runneth through it; and for distinction's sake, Beturia Celtica, from the Celtici, then the Inhabitants of this Tract; to difference it from Beturia Turdulorum, containing those parts of Granada, and Andalusia, which lie nearest unto Tarragonensis. And when first it had the name of Extremadura, it was of larger extent than now it is, reaching unto the Banks of the River Duro, the bounds, at that time, of the Kingdom of the Morifs, so called by the Christians, as lying on the extremities or furthest side of that River.

Principal places in it, are, 1. Alcantara, on the banks of the River Tagus, situate near the ruins of Norba Caesarica, destroyed by Petrinus and Africanus, two of Pompey's Captains, for adhering faithfully to Cesar: now of most note for an Order of Knights here seated, and from hence denominated; whereof more hereafter. 2. Guadalcanal, famous for its Mines of Silver and Gold. 3. Merida, situate also on the Tagus; first called Augusta Emerita, founded and made a Colony by Augustus Caesar, who placed herein his old Soldiers, whom the Romans called Emeriti; hence it had the name. The chief City, after that, of Lusitania; and, by Aufonius, preferred before any in Spain: now ruinous, meanly built, and but ill inhabited: Famous for nothing, but the Bridge upon the River Tagus, a Monument of the Roman greatness. Nigh to this Town was fought that memorable battle betwixt Wallia, the first King of the Goths in Spain, and Attila, King of Alani, and Silinges, (this last a people of the Vandals) the victory whereof falling to the Goths, caused the whole Nation of the Vandals to draw forth out of Spain, 4. Medina, near which the River Guadiana hideth it self under the ground, for the space of ten leagues; but more famous for the birth of Ferdinand Cortez, the fortunate Discoverer and Conqueror of the Realm of Mexico. 5. Badajoz, a Bishops See on the borders of Portugal. 6. Guadalupe, on a River of the same name; renowned amongst those of the Church of Rome, for the Miracles and Image of our Lady of Guadalupe; as much resorted to in Spain, as our Lady of Loretto in Italy. 7. Placenza, a Bishops See, near the Hills of Castile; amongst which Hills, (by reason of their strength and safety) Scorinius made his last retreat, when persecuted by the Romans of the contrary Faction; and where he was most wickedly slain by Po-penna, and some other of his own Associates. Not far from hence, if it be not in the self-same place; in a retired and solitary Valley, standeth the Monastery of Saint Juys, remarkable for a greater Miracle than any the Lady of Guadalupe is able to boast of: which is, that Charles the fifth, that most puissant Monarch, having resigned his Empire to his Brother Ferdinand, and all the rest of his Dominions to his Son Philip, the second, did here bid farewell unto the World; spending the residue of his time in prayers and devout Meditations. The greatest Monument and Example of Self-denial, which these latter Ages have afforded. Far beyond any abnegation of the World by our Cloyistered Monks, or any quitting of their Crowns by some Kings and Emperors in the darker Ages of the Church; who living in the time of Ignorance and superstition, saw not so clearly what they did, (or did it out of weakness, and want of spirit) as this Masculine and Heroick Emperor.

The old inhabitants of these Countries, were the Turduli, the Baithi, and the Turdiani, of Andalusia, and Granada; the Gethici, and some part of the Lusitani, in Extremadura, all vanquished by the Romans, during the second Punic War, under the fortunate command of Scipio Africanus. From them extorted by the Pandati, who pailing over into Africa, left it to the Sertunians; left by them to Theodorick the fourth Kings of the Goths, who hereby added all Betice to his other Dominions. Under the Goths it remained subject till their fatal overthrow by the Moor, who having made almost an entire Conquest of all the Continent of Spain, were at first subject to the Great Caliphs, Lords of the Saracenic Empire; governing here by their Lieutenants, from Uladir Vilit, under whom they first made this Conquest, Anno 711, to Abdalla, of the House of Alaoui, Anno 757. At what time Abdramen, of the Line of Mahomet the Impiator, and first Emperor of the Saracens, flying the fury of Abdalla, by whom the old Line of the Caliphs, of the Race of Humaira, (of which Race this Abdramen was) had been dispossessed of that Empire; came into Spain, and was with great joy entertained by the Spanish Moors, who cordially affected to his House: whose Government he took upon him, discharged of all subjection and subordination to the Caliphs, or Mahometan Emperors, and making it an absolute Kingdom of it felt. In his Race it continued without any fraction or subdivision, till the time of Hizen the second, the tenth King of these Spanish Moors; after whose death, distracted amongst many petit Tyrants, till they were all brought under by the Moor of Africa; of which more anon. In the mean time, take hence the Catalogue of the Kings of these Moor of Spain, called commonly, from Corduba, their Royal Seat,

The Kings of Corduba.

A.C.

- 757 1. Abdramen, the first Sovereign-Prince of the Moor in Spain. 31.
- 787 2. Hizen, the second son of Abdramen, by whom Zuleima, his elder Brother, was put by his Throne. 7.
- 794 3. Hali Hatan, the Son of Hizen. 24.
- 819 4. Abdramen II. Son of Hali Hatan, discomfited by the Christians in the memorable battel of Clavigno, Anno 836.
- 839 5. Mahomet, Son of Abdramen the second, who reduced Toledo, then revolted, under his Command. 35.
- 874 6. Almaded, the Son of Mahomet. 2.
- 876 7. Abdalla, Brother to Almaded, and as little memorable. 13.
- 889 8. Abdramen III. furnished Almanfir, too fortunate in his Wars against the Christians, 50.
- 939 9. Hali Hatan II. Son of Abdramen the second.
- 959 10. Hizen II. Son of Hali Hatan, in the 33 year of his reign, deposed for his sloth and negligence, by
- 989 11. Zuleima, an Afric n Moor, of the Family of Alaoui; and he expelled by
- 993 12. Mahomet II. furnished Almaded, of the old House of Humaira; ousted again by Zuleima, and made King of Toledo. Betwixt these three, and their several Factions, the Kingdom wretchedly torn in pieces, never returned again to its ancient lustre; and finally, made a prey to 1001 13. Hali, another African Moor. 2.

- 1003 14. Cacin, the Brother of Hali. 4.
- 1007 15. Hazia, the Son of Mahomet. M.nf. 4.
- 1007 16. Abdramen IV. a King of 4 weeks only.
- 1008 17. Mahomet III. poisoned by his own Servants. 1.
- 1010 18. Hizen III. deposed by the Moor, grown weary of the House of Humaira, of which House he was.
- 1011 12. Isar of Algezire. 3.
- 1014 20. Mahomet IV. the Son of Isar, the last King of the Moor in Corduba, before the second Conquest of these parts of Spain by the Moor of Africa. Concerning which, we are to know, that after the great Victory obtained at Clavigno, against Abdramen the second, by Laymir King of Leon, Anno 836, in which the Moor lost 60000 of his men; the power and reputation of the Spanish Moor began to decline: brought entirely to nothing, by the sloth and negligence of Hizen the second; after a long and unprofitable reign, deposed by Zuleima, who succeeded. But the Moor not easily brooking the command of a new Ujupier, fell into many Fractions and Divisions amongst themselves: every great man seizing on some part of the Kingdom, which he retained unto himself with the name of King; from whence we have a King of Sevil, another of Toledo, a third of Valencia, a fourth of Corduba, &c. the names of which last only, do occur in the former Catalogue; as they which did pretend a Sovereignty over all the rest. And 'twas a sign the Kingdom was in the expiring, when so many Kings succeeded in so few years, after one another: three passing from the deposing of Hizen the second, to the beginning of Mahomet the fourth, not above 34 years in all; during which time, we had no fewer than ten Kings. The citizen change of Princes, and short lives of Kings, are the apparent signs of a ruinous State, approaching very near to its expiration; as may be seen by the short lives and reigns of the last Ujupier Emperors, nine of them hardly reigning 20 years; as also, of the Kings of the Goths in Italy, of which the last held the Throne no longer than the nine Ujupier Emperors had done before them. But to proceed: Mahomet the last King of this first Rank, having left the stage in the 13th year of his reign, Anno 1027, we find no good constancy of his Successors in the Kingdom of Corduba; made inconsiderable by the withdrawing so many Provinces from the body of it: the pride and infidelity of which Royalties and petit Tyrants, forced them at last to call unto their aid the Kings or Miranmolins of Morocco, by whom themselves, and all the rest of their Corrivalls, were in time subdued. Under seven Princes of Morocco, the Spanish Moor continued subject about 120 years; that is to say, from the first coming in of Jafif Islephim, the Miranmolins, Anno 1091, unto the going out of Mahomet, furnished the Great An, 1214. During which time, the affairs of the Moor in Spain were so well conducted, that they lost nothing to the Christians; but Extremadura, taken from them by Alonso the second, in the account of Castile; the seventh, in account of Leon, An, 1147; and the City of Lisbon taken from them in the same year also, by Alonso the first King of Portugal. But Mahomet the Great being vanquished in the great Fight at Sierra Morena, by the joint Forces of the confederated Christians, Anno 1214, left off all further care of the Moor in Spain; after his going thence, disfracted once again into many Kingdoms, almost as many as great Towns, all of them swallowed up, in a little time, by the Kings of Castile, Aragon, and Portugal. And amongst them, the Kingdom of Corduba, not able to stand long on this new Foundation, was ruined and brought, under the command of the Castilians, by their their King, Ferdinand the second, Anno 1236. Since that time there no more mention of the Kingdom of Corduba.

The Arms wherof were Or, a Lion Gules, armed and crowned of the first, a Border Azure charged with 8 Towers Argent.

7. GRANADA.

GRANADA is bounded on the West, with Andalusia; on the East, with Murcia, and the Mediterranean; on the North, with New Castile; on the South, with the Mediterranean Sea. So called from Granada, the chief City, and Seat-Royal of it.

It is in length 200 miles, 100 miles in breadth, and about 700 miles in compass: a Kingdom of no great extent; but such as contained in it more fair Towns, strong Fortresses, and defensive places, than the like quantity of Ground in the World besides. The North part of the Country plain; the South parts overpread with the Alpujarras, and other spurs and branches of the Orispeda. In the time of the Moor, wonderfully well inhabited, and full of all sorts of Commodities, the Hills planted with Vines and Fruits, the Plains and Valleys swelling with Corn and Gardens: since their expulsion, neither much peopled, nor very fruitful, for want of men to dress and manure the Land.

The principal Cities of it, are 1. Granada, situate on two Hills, divided by a Valley, through which runneth the River Darid, consisting of four several parts, called Albomora, Sierre de Sol, Granada, and Antequera: the two first standing on the Hills, the two last in the valley; the whole circuit being about 7 miles, and containing in the time of the Moorish Kingdom, about 200000 of souls. Fenced with strong Walls, fortified with 130 Towers, and replenished with abundance of wholesome and pleasant Springs. The Merchants and Gentry of the best sort, do dwell in that part which is called Granada: the houses of which, are for the most part built of Free-stone, with delicate and artificial Masonry, shewing great magnificence. Herein standeth the Cathedral Church, a work of admirable structure: of Figure round, as having sometimes been a Mahometan Mosque. Here is also the place which they call Alcazar, representing a little Town, to which are ten Gates, in the Albomora is the Palace of the Moorish Kings, covered with Gold, indented with Mosical works; and which, by reason of the structure, and multitude of Fountains which are about it, may be put amongst the Wonders of the world; having withal a goodly prospect over all the Town, lying under it upon the East; a spacious Champion towards the North, and the snowy tops of Sierra Nevada, towards the South. This City is the ordinary Parliament, and Court of Justice, for all the Southern parts of Spain, as Valladolid is for the Northern; Madrid, which is the highest Court, having Jurisdiction over, and receiving Appeals from both. A Town first raised out of the ruins of Ilberis, situate not far off the Hill Elvir, much mentioned in the stories of Rome and Carthage. In the two other parts of the Town, there is nothing remarkable, inhabited only by Mechanicks of the poorer sort. 2. Albama, seated amongst steep and craggy Rocks, out of which issue Medicinal Waters, occasioning a great report of the Spanish Kingdom: the first Town taken by the Spaniards in their last long War against the Moor, for the recovery of this Kingdom, Anno 1482; and looked on, by the Moor, as a sad presage of a ruina-ted and expiring Empire. 3. Guadix, an Episcopal See, about nine leagues from Granada. 4. Vila Malaga, by Ptolemy called Cox; by Antonine, Seremun; situate at the foot of the Mountains called Alpujarras; a large branch of the Orispeda over-spreading a great part of this Country: heretofore planted with incredible numbers of Moor, who chose to dwell there for the strength and safety of the situation: since their expulsion, desolate and unfrequented; nothing remaining of them now, but the Arabic Language; which is still spoke by those few people which inhabit in it. The Mountains in this Tract so high, that from the tops hereof a man may easily discern the whole course of the Streights of Gibraltar, together with the Towns of Sevta, and Tangier, in Africa. 5. Ronda, at the foot of another branch of the Orispeda, called from this Town, Sierra de Ronda: not far from which, by Munda, now a very small Village, was fought that memorable battel betwixt Casfar and the Sons of Pompey, the honour of which, fell to Casfar, who then made an end of the Civil War, which that very day, four years before, were begun by Pompey the Father. In this fight was Cn. Pompeius slain, and his Forces broken: Casfar himself being so put to it, that seeing his Soldiers give back, he was fain to maintain the fight by his own great courage, bidding them Remember, that at Munda they fought their General. The flame of which reproach, and his noble example, encouraged them to a new onset, which was honoured with a signal and remarkable Victory: this being the last fight that Casfar was in; murdered not long after in the Senate-house. And of this fight he used to say, That in all other places he fought for his Honour, in this for his life. 6. Antequera, heretofore a well-fortified Town, bordering close upon Castile. 7. Malaga, on the shore of the Mediterranean, supposed to be the Margis of Ptolemy. 8. Vera on the same shore; the furthest Town of Betice, and of this Country, towards Murcia: supposed to be the Virgao of Pliny from whence the neighbouring Creek or Bay was called Virgantium. 9. Loxa, on the River Darid, enjoying a situation both strong and pleasant. 10. Malaga, or Malaca, situate at the mouth of Guadalquivir, once laced by Cassius the rich Roman, who flying out of Spain, to avoid the Fury of Marius and Cinna, who had slain his Father and Unkleship himself, and his Companions, in a Cave hereabouts, for eight Months together: but after hearing of their deaths, issued out, and ranfacked, amongst many other Cities, this Malaga. A Town of great Traffic, and much Resort, especially for Railins, Almonds, Malaga Sack; well fortified, and of great importance, as a Town of Wars and, to the great prejudice of the Moor, taken by Ferdinand the Catholic, Anno 1487: the Conquest of the whole Kingdom of Granada, following not long after. It was since made a Bishops-See, or reformed rather to that dignity which it had of old. 11. Almeria, a noted Haven on the Mediterranean, the Abdora of Mela; a Colony of the Carthaginians, and anciently a Bishops-See. 12. Carthema, 13. Com, and 14. Bisfa, more within the Land: this last, the strongest Bulwark of the City of Granada, on the North-east wherof it standeth. A place of great strength both by Art and Nature; and by the Moor defended with so great a gallantry, that it held out a siege of 7 Months against an Army of 13000 horse, and 24000 Foot, King Ferdinand the Catholic, being there in person: and yielded at the last, Decemb. 4, 1489, upon better conditions than any Town had done before it.

As for the Fortunes of this Country, after the Conquest of it by the Moor and Saracens, it was a part or member of the Kingdom of Corduba, and so continued till that Kingdom was subdued by the Spaniards.

But the Moors were too stout to yield at once. Having yet ground enough both to secure themselves in, and endow their King: they are resolved, though they had lost one Kingdom, to erect another. And therefore Corduba being taken, and that Kingdom ruined, the Moors, with Mahomet Aben Alhamar, their unfortunate, but valiant King, removed themselves unto Granada, and there renewed their strength and Kingdom, which lasted 256 years, under 20 Kings; whose names here follow in this Catalogue of

The Kings of Granada.

- A. C.
1236 1. Mahomet Aben Alhamar, the last King of Corduba, and the first King of Granada. 36.
1272 2. Mahomet Mir Almir. 30.
1302 3. Mahomet Aben Ezar. 7.

1445 17. Mahomet Ofmen. 8.
1452 18. Ismael II. 9.
1462 19. Muley Alhamar. 20.
1482 20. Mahomet Boabdilin, the last King of the Moors in Spain. Of all which, there is little left upon Record: their whole time being spent in defending their borders against the encroachments of Castile; or else in Civil-Wars and discords amongst themselves: in which they were so frequent, and sometimes so violent, as if they had no Enemy near them. Mahomet Aben Ezar, the fourth King, deposed by Mahomet Aben Levin; and he again thrust out by Hijmal the Son of Ferracben, before he could enjoy the fruits of his treason. Mahomet, Son of Ismael, murdered by his Subjects. Joseph the Son of Mahomet, slain by Mahomet Lagus; and he again deposed by Mahomet Vermil; who in the end was miserably slain by Padre the Crael, of Castile, to whom he had fled for help and succour. After this time, they reigned and deposed one another, to the end of their Kingdoms; the Successors never paying till the death of his Predecessor, but violently making way for himself to enter on the Government: even Mahomet Boabdilin, the last King hereof, not having patience to expect the death of his Father; but setting him besides the Throne, as he himself was for a time, by Muley Moabdelin his Uncle; and thereby opening a fair Gate for Ferdinand, King of Castile and Aragon, to bring in his Forces to the subduing of them all. Such was the fortune of this Kingdom, that as it began under a Mahomet, a Ferdinand being King of Castile; so it ended under a Mahomet; a Ferdinand being King of Castile also. In the first year, then, of this man's Reign, did the War begin, or rather in the last year of his Father, who by taking Zahara from the Christians, gave the first occasion; and in the tenth year of the War, (for so long it lasted) 1492, the Empire of the Moors ended in Spain, by the valour of Ferdinand the Catholic, and Isabel his Wife, after their first entrance into it, more than 760 years.

Such of them as, after the decay of their Kingdom, had a desire to stay in Spain, which had for so long time been their native Country, were suffered to do by the prudent Vicars, (fearing a desolation of the Country, if they should abandon it) conditioned, that they would be Christians. And that they might be known to be as they professed, the Inquisition was established in the City of Granada, consisting of a certain number of Secular Priests, and Dominican Friars who finding any counterfeit or Apostate Christian, were first gently to reprove and exhort them; and after, if no amendment followed, to inflict such punishment on them, as was accustomed in like cases. By the terror of which Inquisition, many professed, in shew, the Christian Faith. But being Christians only in the outward shew, and practising on all occasions against the State, the Kings of Spain resolved long ago on their Extermination; but never had opportunity to effect it, till the year 1609. At what time Philip the third having made a Peace with England, and a Truce with Holland; and finding the Moors of Africa so embroiled in Wars, that they were not able to disturb him; put that extreme rigour in execution, which had before been thought of in their consultations; 1100000 of them being forced to quit this Country, and provide new dwellings; under colour that they went about to free themselves from the Inquisition, and to recover their old Liberty lost so long before.

The Forces which the Kings of Granada, in the times of their greatest power, were able to raise, were far beyond the measurement and extent of their Kingdom: not above 700 miles in compass, as before is said; but so exceeding populous, and well accommodated with all manner of necessities, that within two days space, the King hereof was said to have been able to draw together 50000 Horse, and 200000 Foot, for defence of this Kingdom. Turquet reports it so in his Spanish History. But this proved more than they were able to do in their greatest need; when this Kingdom was finally invaded, and at last subdued by Ferdinand and Isabel, Kings of Spain: though possibly by reason of their divisions at that time, (some following the Party of Mahomet Boabdilin; and others, that of his Uncle Muley, chosen King against him) they might not join together in a common interest, for the defence of their Estate.

The Arms whereof were Or, a Pomegranate (or Apple of Granade) slipped, Vari.

8. MURCIA.

MURCIA is bounded on the West, with Granada; on the East and North, with Valencia, and a part of Granada; and on the South, with the Mediterranean Sea. So called from Murcia the chief City. In former times esteemed a rich and wealthy Country, stored with all sorts of fruits; and so abounding in Silver Mines, that when the Romans were Lords of it, they kept continually four hundred men at work, and received 2500 Drachms of daily profit: now for the most part barren, and but ill-inhabited.

Cities of note there are not many in so small a Country. The principal, 1. Murcia, by Polony called Muradin, seated upon the River Sigova, a Bishops See, situate in a pleasant and delightful Plain, planted with Pomegranates, and other excellent fruits: from this the Country had the name of the Kingdom of Morcia. 2. Carthagen, or Nova Carthage, first built by Asdrubal of Carthage, the brother of Anibal, for the better receiving of such aids, both of men and money, as should come from Africa. Situate in a Demi-Island, in the very jaws of the Mediterranean: by which, and by a deep Marish on the West-side of it, so inexpressibly fortified; that if Scipio, afterwards called Africanus, who then lay at the siege thereof, had not been shewed a way over that Marish, at a dead low water, by poor Filher-men of Tarragon, who knew the Secret, he had there lost both his time and his honour. Nothing more memorable, in the sackage and spoil thereof, (though there was found abundance of Arms and Treasure) than the virtue of Scipio, who finding there many Spanish Ladies of great birth and beauties, left there as Hostages for the Spaniards, with the Carthaginians, would not permit any of them to be brought before him, for fear it should betray him to some inconvenience. Being re-edified, it was made a Roman Colony, and one of the seven Judicial Reforts of Tarracensis: by Constantine made the chief City of the new Province of Carthagenensis, which was hence denominated. Afterwards, twice sacked by the Goths and Vandals, it lay for a long time buried in its own ruins. And though again new built and peopled, it is still but small, containing at the most but 600 households: and would be utterly abandoned, but for the safety of the place, and the strength thereof, garrisoned, and fortified very strongly by King Philip the second, for fear of surprisal by the Turks: and the security of the Haven (which is withal very large and capacious) coming from a little Island, lying at the mouth thereof; by which assured from tempestuous winds, and the violent ragings of the Sea. Hence the occasion of that saying of Andrea Doria, Admiral unto Charles the fifth, That there were but three safe Ports in the Mediterranean; that is to say, Angul, July, and this Carthagen: meaning, as I conceive, that those two Months being commonly free from tempestuous weather, were of as great safety to the Mariners, as this famous Port. 3. Lorca, another Port-Town, situate on a Creek more within the Land. 4. Almanca, 5. Sarazel, two strong Towns bordering on Valencia; well fortified, when Murcia and Valencia were in several hands. 6. Cervilla, 7. Alhama, 8. Rus, &c.

This Country, being part of the Province of Carthagenensis, was by the Alani taken from the Romans; at their first entrance into Spain: from them recovered by Walthia, the first King of the Goths, in this part of Europe. Together with the rest of Spain, it was subdued by the Moors of Africa, in the distractions of whose Empire, after the going hence of the Moors of Africa, it was made a distinct Kingdom by Aben Hut, of the Race of the Kings of Saragossa, who had seized upon it, Anno 1228; and for a time was the most puissant King of the Moors in Spain, commanding over this Country, Granada, and a part of Andalusia. Invited to a Feast, made Drunk, and then basely Murdered by Aben Arabin, a false servant of his. Anno 1236. One Aben Hudiel seized on the Realm of Murcia, disturbed in his possession by Albaquique, the last King hereof. But he not able to defend himself against his Competitor, surrendered it to Ferdinand the second of Castile, whom he put into possession of the Fort of Murcia, and many other places of great importance; conditioned, that Albaquique should enjoy the title of King of Murcia, as long as he lived, under the Sovereignty of Castile: and that Ferdinand should enjoy one half of the profits of it. This was in the year 1241, after it had continued in the state of a Kingdom but 12 years only, united to Castile without blood or trouble, and so remains ever since.

9. TOLEDO.

THE Kingdom of TOLEDO, so called from Toledo the chief City of it; contained once the greatest part of that Country which is now called New-Castile; of which it is now reckoned only for a part or member. The Country lying next unto it, was anciently the Seat of Carpetani, the nature of the Soil we shall find elsewhere.

Principal Cities of this Kingdom, 1. Toledo, of great antiquity, as being taken by Fulvius a Roman Pretor, in the time of Scipio Africanus; and then a City of good note. Pleasantly seated on the Tagus, beautified with many pieces of rare and excellent Architecture; and fortified with thirty Towers standing on the Walls. By reason of the situation of it in the very midst, almost, of Spain; it is passing well inhabited as well by the Nobility, who reside there for pleasure; as by Scholars, who abide in it for their Studies; as by Merchants, who resort thither for their Profit: besides such Soldiers and their Officers, who are continually garrisoned in it for defence thereof. The private buildings generally are but mean and ordinary; though, by far, more handsome in the inside, than the outside promisseth; most of them being furnished with water from the River Tagus, conveyed into them by the admirable invention of one James, a native of Cremena in the Dukedom of Millain. The Streets narrow, close, hilly, and uneven, exceeding troublesome to walk or go upon, especially in slippery or dirty weather, by reason of its steep and uneven situation on the side of a Rocky Hill; by which, and by the River which almost surrounds it, it is naturally very strong, and well helped by Art. For that cause made the Seat of the Gothish Kings; by one of which, called Bamba, so repaired and beautified, (besides the addition of a strong Wall for defence of the place) that he is by some accounted for the Founder of it. For so we find it in these old Verses:

Erexit (suaviter Deo) Rex inclutus Urbem
Bamba, sive celeberrimam protendens Gentis honorem.

That is to say,

King Bamba (God assisting) rais'd this Town,
Extending to the ancient Goths renown.

When the Goths fell, it was in chief estimation amongst the Moors, and by them advanced unto the honour of a Kingdom; whereof more anon: but under both, (as it continueth to this day) the See of an Arch-bishop, who is the Metropolitan of Spain, and President, for the most part, of the Inquisition. His Revenue answerable to his Place, the greatest of any Clergy man in the Christian World, next to the Popes of Rome; as being estimated at 350000 Crowns per annum. Finally, this City hath been honoured with no fewer than 18 National Councils, here held in, the time of the Goths; and is now a famous University for the study of the Civil and Canon Laws, and hath to this day the Temporal Jurisdiction over 17 Walled Towns, besides Villages. 2. Calatrava, the next Town of note, is situate on the River As of most fame in their later times, for an Order of Knights, called the Knights of Calatrava's of which more when we come to Castile. Neighbour'd by the ruins of the strong and famous City Castile, which being under the command of the Romans, was by the Gyrgens, a people that that dwelt on the other side of the River, suddenly entered and taken. But Servatius following after them by the same Gate, put them all to the Sword: and causing his men to apparel themselves in the clothes of the Enemy, led them to the chief City of the Gyrfsons, who supposing them to be their own Party, opened their Gates, and were all either slain, or sold for Slaves. More of this Town anon, when we come to Castile, to which now belonging, 3. Talbor, commonly called Talvera de la Reyna, or the Queen's Talvera; and called for on occasion of an execrable Murder committed there by the command of Queen Mary, the Widow of Alfonso the sixth, on the Lady Leonor de Guzman, her Husband's Paramour. A proper and neat Town it is, pleasantly seated on the Tagu; supposed to be the Libora of Plutony, and now belonging to the Arch-bishop of Toledo, as chief Lord thereof. Medina Zelina, commonly called Medina Celi, of great importance when possessed or neighbored by the Moor. Now of more note for giving the title of Dukes to the illustrious Family De la Cerde, descended from Ferdinand, the eldest Son of Alfonso the fifth; claiming, by that descent, a title to the Crown of Castile. What other Towns belonged unto it, we shall see anon.

As for Toledo it self, in the time of the Romans it was the Metropolis of the Province of Tarracensis; after that, the Seat-Royal of the Gothish Kings; removed hither from Tharula in Langueudo: forced by the Moor, at their first entrance into Spain, An. 716; more prudently aiming at the Head, than the Goths possibly expected from such Barbarians. In the Confusions of that Kingdom, betwixt the beginning of the reign of Mahomet the fourth, and the second coming in of the Moor of Africk, made a distinct Kingdom of it self; continuing in that estate, till taken from Haia Alchadabir, the last King hereof, by Alfonso the first King of Castile, An. 1083. This Alfonso being the younger Son of Ferdinand, the first King of Castile and Leon, had the Kingdom of Leon for his part. Ejected out of that, by his Brother Sancho King of Castile, he lived in exile with Almon, kindly received and entertained by Almon the Father of this Haia, King of Toledo, till the death of his Brother. After which, coming to the Crowns of Castile and Leon, Anno 1073, he picked a quarrel with his Host, and being Alfonso, his long abode there, making him acquainted with all advantages that might facilitate his designs; which notwithstanding held him a siege of five years, before he could make himself matter of it, by him years, before he could make himself matter of it, by him incorporated presently on the taking of it, with the rest of that Kingdom, and made the head of New-Castile. But for the Kings hereof, as well those who held it but for life, as those who left the same unto their Posterity, they are these that follow:

The Moorish King reigning in Toledo.

A. C.

1. Galfroy, King of Toledo, in the time of Charlemagne, under the Vassalage of the great Caliph of Damiscus: subdued by Alderamen the first King or Monarch of the Moor in Corduba, of the House of Hamiz.
2. Zulima, the eldest Son of Alderamen King of Corduba, being dispossessed of the Realm of Corduba, and the rest of his Estates in Spain, by Hizari his younger Brother, resigned a while in Toledo of which outdied not long after: Toledo from that time continuing a Member of the Kingdom of Corduba, till the latter end of the reign of Alderamen the second. At what time.

- 833 3. Aben Lope, (the Son of Musa Aben Cacia, a Goth by Nation and descent; but a Moor by profession: who had caused the Tolador, and others of the Moor of Spain, to rebel against Alderamen) assumed unto himself the title of King of Toledo, a little confederate of Ordugno the 11th, King of Leon; by whom supported in his Wars against those of Corduba; but at last vanquished and dethroned by Mahomet, the Son of Alderamen, Anno 848.
- 990 4. Abdalla a great man among the Moor, during the contentions betwixt Zulima and Hizari the second, for the realm of Corduba, seized on the City of Toledo; which he held as King; and kindly entertained Mahomet Almohadi, made King of Corduba during those contentions; by whom succeeded in this Kingdom.
- 995 5. Mahomet, surnamed Almohadi, of the Regal Family of Humeya, King of Corduba; and dispossessed thereof by the Faction of Zulima, retired to Toledo; and was kindly entertained by King Abdalla, whom he succeeded in this Kingdom.
- 999 6. Obedyalla, the Son of Mahomet, slain in his Wars with Hizari, the King of Corduba, in the first or second year of his reign.
- 1000 7. Hairam, of the same house of Aben Humeya, and, probably, the next Kinsman of Obedyalla; succeeded him in this Estate, and left the same unto his Posterity, till subdued by the Spaniards.
- 1110 8. Hizari, the Son of Hairam, of whom nothing memorable.
- 1045 9. Ali Maynon, or Almenon, as the Spaniards call him, the Son of Hizari, who entertained Alfonso the sixth of Leon, when dispossessed of his Estate by his brother Sancho.
- 1076 10. Hizari II. Son of Ali Maynon.
- 1078 11. Haya, surnamed Alchadabir, the Son of Ali Maynon, and Brother of Hizari; a cruel Prince, and ill beloved of his Subjects; which gave occasion unto Alfonso King of Castile and Leon, spoken of before, to invade this Kingdom; by whom at last it was subdued, and Toledo, with its Territories, added unto Castile, as before is said, Anno 1083. By which means there accrued to the Realm of Castile, besides Toledo it self, and the Towns spoken of already, those of Besaya, Ejallona, Maqueda, Canales, Coria, Consuegra, Berlanga, Gualdalajara, Ariencia, and divers others, now passing in the estimate of New-Castile.

But to conclude, Toledo thus reduced under the command of the Christians, was forthwith made the Metropolis of Spain, (in regard of Ecclesiastical or Spiritual matters) as it had been before in the time of the Goths; and shortly after honoured by Alfonso upon the title of the Imperial City; that King, upon the conquest hereof, having assumed unto himself the title of Emperor of Spain, but somewhat too affectedly, as the case then stood, there being other Kings in Spain as well as he. In which respects he gave unto this City the Arms hereof, in a Field Azure, a Crown Mural Imperial Or, garnished with sundry precious Gems Proper, changed afterwards by Alfonso the third of Castile, and eighth of Leon, affecting the same title of Emperor, to an Emperor sitting on his Throne in a Robe of Gold, with a Globe in his left hand, and a Sword in his right.

But the Blazon of these Arms I find not, nor much worth the searching: the old Coat being worn again after his decease.

10. CASTILE.

CASTILE is bounded on the East, with Navarre, Aragon, and part of Valencia; on the West, with Portugal; on the North, with Biscay, Guipuzcoa, and the Asturias; on the South, with Extremadura, Andalusia, and Granada. The reason of the name we shall have anon.

This was the most prevailing Kingdom of all this Continent; to which the rest are all united either by Marriages or Conquest. Divided commonly into the New and old; parted from one another by the Hills of Segovia: the one being called the Old Castile, because it was the Ancient Patrimony of the Earls hereof; and the other named the New, from that addition which was made to the first Inheritance, by the Conquest of the Realm of Toledo, and other pieces, from the Moor. The Old Castile is the less fruitful of the two; more lit for Pasturage, than Corn; but better stored with that, and all sorts of fruits, than the neighbouring Countries, which lie betwixt it and the Northern or Cantabrian Ocean: the New more plain and Champaign, better stored with Fruits, and furnished with sufficient plenty of Corn, and other provisions necessary for the life of man. The Old Castile watered with the Rivers of 1. Relanar, rising not far from Burgos. 2. Tormes, passing by Salamanca. 3. Douro, the receptacle of the others. The New with 4. Guadarama, honoured with the neighbourhood of Madrid. 5. Tevina, and 6. Tagu, the most famous River of all Spain.

The OLD CASTILE is situate on the North of the New; and hath for the chief Cities of it, 1. Soria, of great note in the ancient Story, by the name of Nannania; which for the space of 14 years, withstood the whole Forces of Rome during which time, they valiantly repulsed their Enemies, and forced them to dishonourable Compositions. But finding, at last, no hope of holding longer out, they gathered together all their Armour, Money, and Goods, laid them in a heap, then set fire on them, and finally burnt themselves in the midst of the flame; leaving Scipio (who had brought them to that extremity) nothing but the bare name of Nannania, to adorn his triumph. 2. Avila, situate under the great Mountains, which are called from hence, the Mountains of Avila. Known anciently by the name of Abule; and by that name giving the title of Abulensis to the renowned Tolator, who was Bishop of it. A Man, who in his time was President of the Council to John I. King of Aragon; yet could not endure enough not to attend his Episcopal Charge, but to compose those learned and painful Commentaries on a great part of the Bible. Of which, and his other Abilities, (besides that Elogie which Caesardine hath given him) we may take that Barnard, saying Lauda acumen viri, si in meliora indefessum one of the ancientest Universities of Spain: discontinued for a time, by Students, and then restored again by King Philip the second, whose birth-place it was; and who erected here a College (among others) for the education only of young English Fugitives. Seated upon the River Pisuerga, and one of the Chanceries of the Kingdoms of Castile and Leon, By means whereof, and of the King's Court here residing in the Summer-time, it became, in little space, a fair, large, populous City, and of great resort, not yielding unto any in Spain, except Lizbon, and Sevil. It is called in Latin, Vallis Olisum, and Vallis Olisana, from the abundance of Olives growing near it; but by Plutony, Pintia. 4. Segovia, a Bishops-See; of great trade in Clothing; situate under a branch of the Mountain Idubeda, called from hence, the Hills of Segovia. 5. Burgos, near the head of the River Relanar, or Relanar, at the foot of the great Mountain Ocoa, part of the Idubeda: built out of certain Village lying hereabouts, by Nugro Bellder, a German Son-in-law unto one of the first Earls of Castile. For a long time the seat of those Kings, since of the Archbishops hereof; the Cathedral being one of the fairest in Spain; built with such art, that Mafis may be sung aloud in five several Chapells, without disturbing one another. This City doth contend for Primacy and Precedency, in Caivil matters with that of Toledo, of which it hath the first place or vote in all Parliaments or Assemblies of the States of Castile. But yet to fatishe Toledo, the Controversie is still undecided, saying, that he would first speak for Toledo, and then Burgos should speak for it self. Without the Walls of this City, is a famous Nursery, called De las Helejas, consisting of 150 Religious Women, all of Noble Houses. 6. Guadalupe, a Bishops-See, on the River Gadu. 7. Zamora, a strong, and well-built City, and a Bishops-See, the Seneca of Plutony: situate on the River Douro, and now famous for the best Burg-pipes. 8. Tordesillas, the Sejanna of the Ancients. 9. Lerma, not far from Burgos; the chief Seat of the Dukes for called; a Prince of great Possessions, and the chief of the Family of Roku, and Sandrol. 10. Salamanca, the most famous University of Spain, especially for the study of the Civil and Canon Laws; first instituted by Ferdinand the second of Castile, Anno 1240; and by an Order of the Pope's, together with Paris, Oxford, and Bonnus in Italy, created a Generale Studium; wherein there were to be Professors of the Greek, Hebrew, Chalde, and Arabick Tongues, besides those of the Arts. It was of old called Salmanica; is now a Bishops-See, situate on the River Tormes, as before was said.

Nor far from this City, about the times of our Grand-Fathers, was discovered in a Valley situate amongst high and impassable Mountains, a kind of Patetor, or Savage people, never heard of in Spain before. The occasion, this: An Hawk of the Duke of Alva's, which he very much valued, flew over those Mountains; and his men not being able to find her at first, they went back by the Duke to seek her. Clambering from one Hill to another, they hapned at last upon a large and pleasant Valley, where they spied a company of naked Savage people, hemmed in amongst many craggy Rocks. The Salvages, gazing a while upon them, ran into their Caves, made in the hollows of the Rocks, the best Houses they had: which being observed by the Falconers, they returned again unto their Lord, telling him, that instead of a Falcon, they had brought him news of a New-world in the midst of Spain, and of a race of People which came in with Tubal. Strongly affirming what they said, they obtained belief. And the Duke shortly after went with a Company of Musketeers, and subdued them easily; they having no offensive Weapons, but only Slings. They worshipped the Sun and Moon, fed upon nothing that had life; but had good store of excellent Fruits, Roots, and Springs of Water, wherewith Nature was well contented. And though their Language was not altogether understood by any; yet many of their words were found to be purely Basque. Reduced, on this discovery, to Christianity; but easily discernible from all other Spaniards, by their tawny complexions, occasioned by the reverberation of the Sun-beams, from those Rocky Mountains wherewith on all sides they are compassed, compassed. The truth hereof, besides the credit of James Howel, in his Intructions for Foreign Travel; I have upon enquiry found to be attested by men of gravity and great place in this Realm of England: employed there in affairs of publick interest. Satisfied therefore in the truth of the Relation, I am partly satisfied in the men: whom I conceive to be some remnant of the Ancient Spaniards, who hid themselves amongst these Mountains for fear of the Romans. Their Language and Idollary speak them to be such. For had they either fled from the Goths or Moors, there had been found some Cross, or other Monument of Christianity, as in other places; or some such mixture in their speech, as would have favoured somewhat of the Goths or Romans. But it is time I should proceed.

NEW CASTILE is situate on the South of the Old. The chief Cities there, 1. Segura, a City heretofore of the Calitibori, now a Bishops See, beautified with a fair Cathedral, supposed to be the Condorosa of Ptolomy, 2. Madrid, upon the Guadama, the Mintina of the ancient Writers, now the Seat of the Kings: whose residence there, though the Country be neither rich nor pleasant, hath made it, of a Village, the most populous City in all Spain. It is a custom in this Town, that all the upper Rooms in their Houses do belong to the King, except some composition be made with him for them. And of this Town the Spaniards do use to brag to strangers, that they have a City walled with fire; and then make good the boast, by saying, That is situate in the midst of Quarries of Flint. 3. Alcala de Henares, (of old called Complutum) renowned for an University of Divines, founded here in the time of Ferdinand the Catholicke, by Francisco de Ximenes, Cardinal and Arch-bishop of Toledo; and by him furnished with the ablest men both for Divinity and the Tongues, that all Spain afforded. By whose joint diligence and study in turning over so many Copies of the Bibles, gathered together at his charge from all parts of the World, he published the Complutensian Edition of the holy Scriptures in the Original Greek, Hebrew, and Vulgar Latin, with the Translation of the Septuagint into Latin also. A work of very great charge and pains (taking up 15 years in doing) but of greater probitethere being at the end thereof, an Hebrew Dictionary, for the understanding of that Language. 4. Alevar, amongst the Mountainous tracts of Oroselphi, called Sierra de Alevar; memorable for a great discomfure given unto the Moors, Anno 1094. 5. Molina in the same Mountainous Tract, hence called Monte de Molina, remarkable for giving the title of Lord, to the Kings of Castile, who in the Realm are called Lords of Molina: the Signeity heretofore accruing to that Crown, by the marriage of Sancho the third, with Mary the Daughter of Alfonso, the last Lord Proprietary. The Territory large, and the Town of strength, well fortified in the times foregoing, both by Art and Nature. 6. Cuenca, seated at the Spring-head of the River Jucar, and not far from that of Tagus also, amongst the Mountains of Oroselphi; built by the Moors on the top of those craggy Hills, whom it served for an impregnable Fortrefs against the Christians, till taken by Sancho the second of Castile, Anno 1177.

Here also is the Escurial, or Monastery of S. Lawrence, built by King Philip the second, A place (saith Quade, who spendeth 13 pages in its description) of that magnificence, that no building in times past, or this present is comparable to it: The front, toward the West, is adorned with three stately Gates, the middlemost whereof leadeth into a most magnificent Temple, a Monastery in which are 150 Monks of the Order of S. Jerome, and a College: that on the right hand, openeth into divers Offices, belonging to the Monastery: that on the left, unto Schools and out-houses belonging unto the College. At the four corners, there are four Towers of excellent Workmanship; and for height, majestic. To the west the North, is the King's Palace: on the South parts, divers beautiful and sumptuous Galleries; and on the East side, sundry Gardens and Walks, very pleasing and delectable. It contained, in all, 11 several Quadrangles, every one encloistered; and is indeed to brave a structure, that a Voyage into Spain were well employed, were it only to see it, and return. Here is also in this Tract, the old Town of Castulo, (the Castum of Strabo) then the chief City of the Carpetani, and the birth-place of Himiler, the Wife of Anibal: from whence this whole Tract had the name of Saltus Castulonensis, and so called by Cesar: now a poor Village, known by the name of Castona la Vera; in which is somewhat to be found of the ancient ruins. But of this more already, when we were in the Kingdom of Toledo; to which it more properly belonged.

The old inhabitants of these Castles, were the Vaceci, Ventones, Arvacae, Oretani, Carpetani, Dittani, &c. From none of which, the name of Castile can be deduced: that we must fetch it either from the Castellani, one a people of Catalogne or from some strong fortified Castles erected in the Frontiers, against the Moors. This last conjecture may seem probable, because the Arms of this Kingdom are Gules, a Castle triple-towered, &c. Neither is it any way strange, for Provinces, especially smaller ones, such as at first this was, (though now much extended both in bounds and power) to take their names from a Castle. For (to go no further) even with us, Richmondshire was so called from the Castle of Richmond, there built by Alain, Earl of Bretnage; and Flintshire took denomination from the Castle built of Flint-stones, by Henry the second. We may see hereby, how much Caesius Secundus Curius was deceived, who writeth, that Alfonso the third, having overthrown Mahomet Ensifer, King of Morocco, and put 60000 of his men to the sword; assumed these Arms, that thus named this Kingdom, which was before called the Kingdom of the Basitanes; because that Victory, like a strong Castle, had confirmed his Estates unto him. Whereas, in case there were no other error in his supposition, the Basitanes were no Inhabitants of Castile, but of Valentia and Murcia, Provinces far enough off from the Old Castile, at the first taking of that name. And for the former Etymology, it appeareth most evidently, in that the people are by the Latins called Castellani: the Country, Castella: the same name with those elder Castellani which inhabited Catalogne. But not to stand upon the name, certain it is, that the Inhabitants heretofore, having been conquered by the Romans, and made a part of their Empire, fell by degrees to the Alani, and from them to the Goths, as hath been shewed already on several other occasion. From them extorted by the Moors, with the rest of Spain: recovered, foot after foot, by the Kings of Leon; governed under them, at first, by the vincial Earls, Commanders of so many Castles; the Country of the Vaceci, fortified and defended against the Moors. Ordengo the second, harbouring some suspicion against these Earls, caused them all to be cruelly murdered. The people upon this, revolted from the Crown of Leon; governed first by Judges, then by Earls, again, as an absolute and free Estate. Ferdinand Gastili, the first that re-assumed the title of Earl of Castile, coming to the Court of Leon with a brave Retinue, led to King Sancho an Hawk, and an Horse, of excellent kinds, for a sum of money; conditioned; that if the money were not paid at the time agreed on; it should be doubled, and redoubled, till the Debt were paid.

satisfied. This money, by the negligence of the King's Officers, who looked upon the Contract as a matter of jest, became so great a sum, that the King, to satisfy Gonsales, made him the first Proprietary-Earl of Castile, Anno 939; relating that Estate from all acknowledgment to the Kings of Leon. Nugna, or Elvira, as some call her, Sister and Heir of Garcias the fourth Earl heretofore, brought this Estate by marriage to Sancho, surnamed the Great, King of Navarre, Anno 1028; by whom it was erected into a Kingdom, and given by him to Ferdinand his second Son, Anno 1034. Kings of most note and observation in the course of their story, are 1. Ferdinand their first King, who added Leon to his Kingdom, in right of Sancho his Wife, Sister and Heir of Veremund the last King thereof, of the race of Pelagius. 2. Alfonso the first, who subdued the Kingdom of Toledo, adding it, by the name of New Castile, unto his Estate. 3. Alfonso the Fourth, who not only conquered from the Crown of Navarre, whatsoever lay on the Castilian side on the River Iberus, but also the whole Countries of Alava and Guipuscoa, all which he united to Castile: but grew so great, that he caused himself to be solemnly crowned Emperor of Spain, in the Cathedral Church of Leon, by the Arch-bishop of Toledo; and gave his Son Sancho the title of King of Castile, in his own life-time. The chief of the Confederates against Mahomet Ensifer, the Miramoneline of Morocco, whom he vanquished in the famous battel of Muradal, or Sierra Moracca, Anno 1214. 4. Ferdinand the third, who incorporated Leon and Castile into one Estate, and added the Kingdoms of Murcia, Corduba, and Sevil, taken from the Moors, unto his Dominions. 5. Alfonso the fifth of Castile, and the ninth of Leon, elected Emperor of the German, but more famous for his eminence in Astronomy; the Author of the Alfonso Tables: compiled by many Learned Men assembled together, by his means, in the City of Toledo, where, in the compiling of it, it is affirmed by a Spanish Writer, that he spent more than the Revenues of the Pope in ten years did amount unto. 6. Sancho the 3d. Son of this Alfonso, the Author of the great breach in the Line of Castile: for having the hap to survive Ferdinand, surnamed de la Cerde, his elder Brother; he made himself so strong a Party in his Father's Life-time, that he succeeded in the Kingdom, depriving his Brother's Children of their Right therein, though many attempts were made, in their favour, afterwards. Don Alfonso, eldest Son of which Ferdinand married into France, was Father of Lewis Earl of Clermont; who by Leonora de Gusman, a Daughter of the now house of Medina Sidonia, was Father of Lewis, John and Isabella de la Cerde, in which last, (the Male issue being quite extinct) the whole Rights of that Line remained: brought by her to her Husband Bernard, a base Son of the House of Foix; created by King Henry the second, the first Earl of Medina Celi; whose Son, called Gaston, left the name of Foix, and took unto himself that of de la Cerde, continued ever since in his Posterity advanced unto the honour of Dukes of Medina Celi, in the person of Lewis the first Earl, the better to preserve in memory their descent from, and lawful title to that Crown. And for the better keeping and preserving of their claim unto it, it is affirmed to be the custom of this House, once, at the least, in the life time of every Duke, to put up a Petition to the King then reigning, for restitution to the Throne; which the King receiving as of course, doth of course subscribe this answer to it, viz. No est ingrat: that is to say, there is no room for him. S. Pedro the Cruel, driven out of this Kingdom by Henry of Traslamare, his Brother, restored again, for a time, by the valour of Edward the Black-Prince, Son of Edward the third. 9. John, Son of Henry of Traslamare, who married his Son Henry, to Katharine Daughter of John of Gauin, by Constance, one of the Daughters of Don Pedro the Cruel; to uniting both Titles into one. The times in which these Princes, and the rest, did reign, appeareth in these Catalogues of the Earls and Kings of Castile, which are as follow.

The Earls of Castile.

- A. Chr.
910 1. Ferdinand and Gonsales the first Proprietary Earl.
932 2. Garcias, Son of Ferdinand.
980 3. Sancho, or Santius, Son of Garcias.
1018 4. Garcias II. Son of Sancho, slain by Treason: without issue.
1028 5. Nugna, or Elvira, the Sister of Garcias the second, married to Sancho King of Navarre, Father of Ferdinand, made by him the first King of Castile.

The Kings of Castile.

- A. Chr.
1036 1. Ferdinand, King of Castile by the gift of his Father, and of Leon in right of his Wife. 33.
1067 2. Sancho, Son of Ferdinand, King of Castile only; his younger Brother Alfonso succeeding in Leon. 6.
1073 3. Alfonso, the Brother of Sancho, King of Leon, and afterwards of Castile also.
1108 4. { Urraca, Queen of Castile and Leon.
          { Alfonso II. King of Navarre and 15.
          { Aragon.
1122 5. Alfonso III. King of Castile & Leon, the Son of Urraca, by Raymond of Burgundy, her former Husband.
1157 6. Sancho II. the elder Son of Alfonso the third, his younger Brother Ferdinand succeeding in Leon. 2.
1159 7. Alfonso IV. surnamed the Noble, Son of Sancho the 2d. 55.
1214 8. Henry, Son of Alfonso the fourth. 3.
1217 9. Ferdinand II, Son of Alfonso the ninth of Leon, and of Breogunda the Sister of Henry, succeeded his Father in Leon also, An. 1230; the Kingdoms never since disjoined, though the title of Leon in short time became discontinued.
1252 10. Alfonso V. surnamed the Wise, Son of Ferdinand the second, King of Castile and Leon, and Emperor Elect. 32.
1283 11. Sancho III. the second Son of Alfonso the fifth; the children of Ferdinand de la Cerde, his elder Brother, being first beside. 12.
1295 12. Ferdinand III. of Castile, and IV. of Leon, Son of Sancho the third. 18.
1312 13. Alfonso VI. Son of Ferdinand. 38.
1350 14. Pedro, the Son of Alfonso, for his infinite Tyrannies, surnamed the Cruel. 18.
1368 15. Henry II. the Baitard-Son of Alfonso the 6th, Earl of Traslamare. 11.
1379 16. John, the Son of Henry the second. 11.
1390 17. Henry III. Son of John, and Husband of Katharine, the Daughter of John of Gauin, and the Lady Constance, one of the Daughters of King Pedro. 17.
1406 18. John II. Son of Henry and Katharine. 48.
1454 19. Henry IV. Son of John the second. 21.

2. The Kingdom of ALGARVE lyeth on the South of Perigal, from which divided by a line drawn from Afcon, on the Western Sea, to Odebre, a Castle on the Guadiana on the East, bounded by Andalusia on the West and South, by the main Atlantic. This is the most low and desert part of all this Kingdom, barren and dry: peopled with few Towns, not thole very populous: hilly and mountainous withall; but yielding, by the benefit of the Sea, a great Trade of Fishings, of Tunny especially, whereof more caught upon this Coast, than in all the Kingdom.

The name is took from the Western situation of it, for to the word Algarve signifieth in the Arabic Tongue, The utmost end of it, called anciently, Promontorium Sacrum; now, the Cape of S. Vincent; because the bones of S. Vincent, religiously preserved by the Christians, were here burnt and scattered about by the Moor, Places of most importance in it, 1. Niebla, the Seat of Aben Mefad, once a King of this Country, 2. Silvis, an Episcopal See, seated in the Inland parts, 3. Villa nova, a town beyond the Cape, 4. Lamela, the Balsa; and 5. Faro, the Offshore of Phology, both noted Ports on the Atlantic, 6. Lagos, another Haven-Town also.

This Country, conquered by the Moor, with the rest of Spain, in the distractions of their Power, was for a time under the Sovereignty and Command of the Kings of Sevil. Recovered from the Moor of Sevil, by the Kings of Morocco, it became subject unto them, till they left this Country; and, after their retreat, was parcelled amongst many Princes. One of which, called Aben Mefad, reigning in Niebla, and the parts adjoining, being dispossessed of his Estate by Alfonso the Wife, most of the other Towns and Princes: submitted to him, and became his Vassals, Anno 1257. More absolutely subdued and made subject to the Crown of Portugal, by Alfonso the third, Anno 1265; to whom the said Alfonso, the tenth of that name in Leon, and the fifth in Asturias, had given the same in Dowry with Beatrice his Daughter. From which Marriage issued Dionysius, or Dons, King of Portugal, the first that ever used the title of Rex Algarbium, Anno 1279.

3. The AZORES are certain Islands lying in the Atlantic Ocean, opposite to the City of Lisbon, from which distant but 250 Leagues. Situate betwixt the 38 and 40 degrees of Northern Latitude; and one of them in the first Longitude; which is commonly reckoned from these Islands, as being the most Western part of the World, before the discovery of America.

They were thus called from the multitude of Gophawks which were found there in the beginnings; (the word Azor, in the Spanish Tongue, signifying a Gophawk) thought at this time there be none of them to be found. Called also the Flemish Islands, because first discovered by the Flemings; and the great numbers of them in the life of Faial, (one of the chief of all the pack) where there are yet some Families which resemble the Flemings both in their complexion and habit: and not far from the place of their abode, a Torrent, which the Spaniards call Ribera dos Flamengos, or the River of Flemings. They are also called the Tercera's, from Tercera the chief Isle among them.

The Air of these Islands is generally good, and subject unto few Distempers, except that which the Portugals call the Blood; being an impoisonment of the blood, breaking out at the eyes, or other parts of the body. Some other inconveniences they are subject to, proceeding from the humidity of the place; the great winds and storms, of such a violent and strange kind of working, that Bars of Iron as big as a man's arm, have in fix years been worn as little as a Straw. All of them well stored with Fleish, Fish and other things necessary, except Salt and Oyl, with which they are furnished out of Portugal. Wines they have also for their own use but not to be transported far, because of their weakness for which cause also, the richer men provide themselves of Canary Wines, or those of the Island of Madaga. Of like nature is their Wheat and other Fruits, which hold not good above a year. All of them subject unto Earthquakes, and some to breathings out of fire, which continually sendeth forth fuming vapours. The chief Commodities which they transport unto other Countries, are Canary Birds for Ladies, Oad for the Diers, Joyner-work, which they sell to the Spaniards; and Beeswax for the victualling of such ships as come there to be victualled.

The Inhabitants are generally laborious, excellent Husbands on their grounds; inasmuch as they make Vines to grow out of Rocks: much given to Jongny, by which they make many pretty fancies, much esteemed by the Spaniards, but not to expert at it, as those of Nuremberg. They take great pains to reach the Castle understanding; the Oxen being taught to know when their Master calleth them. In other things they conform to the Portugals, both in their Customs and Apparel; but with some matting of the Fleming, which Nation they affect above any other.

The Islands nine in number; and distinguished by the several names of, 1. Tercera, 2. S. Michael, 3. Faial, 4. Gratiosa, 5. S. George, 6. Pico, 7. Corvo, 8. Flores, and 9. S. Maries, of which, S. Michael, and S. Maries, lie next to Spain; Tercera, on the North-west of thole, (by consequence), the third in Order, whence it had the name 1. S. Georges, Gratiosa, Pico, Faial, on the West of that, and finally, those of Corvo, and Flores, nearest to America.

1. TERCERA, the chief of all the rest, 18 miles in compass; well stored with Peaches, Apples, Limons, Oranges; and for the Kitchen, with Turneps, Cabages, plenty of Pot-herbs, and as good Baitato-roots, (which are the best food the people have) as any be in the world; but more esteemed in Portugal, than they be in this Island, by reason of their great abundance. Here is also great quantity of the best kind of Wood (which from hence is called Island Wood) and a Plant about the height of a man, which bears no fruit; but hath a Root as profitable as those that do, out of which the people draw a thin and tender film, wherewith they fill their Matresses, instead of Feathers. Food enough for the use of man, and yet none of prey. No Port of any safety in it, but that of Angra; and that made safe by Art, and warded by Nature: the whole begirt with Rocks, which stick out like a pointed Diamond, able to pierce the feet of any who should venture over them. Places of most importance in it, 1. Prays, on the Sea-side, well walled but not very well peopled. 2. S. Barbara, 3. S. Sebastian, 4. Gasine, and 5. Villa Nova, Burroughs of good note. 6. Angra, the chief, not of this Island only, but of all the nine: the Residence of the Governour, and an Archbishop See, who hath in it his Cathedral Church: seated on a convenient Bay, made in the form of a Crescent, with two Promontories on each side, (like the two Horns of a half-Moon) bearing into the Sea; each fortified with a strong Castle for defence of the Heaven: the Town it self also well walled about, and environed with sharp Rocks on all sides. Both Town and Castle well garrisoned, and no less diligently guarded. This, in regard of its great strength, and commodious Haven, is esteemed the principal of these Islands, and communicates its name unto all the rest; though neither nearest unto Spain, nor the greatest in compass.

2. S.

2. S. MARIES, so called from the Saint (as S. Georges and S. Michael are) unto which it is dedicated; is the most Southern of these Isles, and the next to Spain: twelve miles in circuit, inhabited by Spaniards only, and thole much given unto the making of Earthen Vessels. Somewhat fenced with Rocks, that it is, and may be easily kept by the Inhabitants, without the charge of a Garrison. The chief Town of it hath the name of S. Maries also, which it either giveth unto the Island, or borroweth from it.

3. S. MICHAELS, directly North of S. Maries, from which, little distant; the biggest in the whole pack, as being 20 miles in length, though the breadth not answerable; much subject unto Earth-quakes and fiery vapours. Of most note amongst our modern Geographers, who have removed hither the first Meridian (by which they divide the World into East and West) from the Canaries, or Fortunate Islands; where it was fixed in the time of Phology, and others of the Ancient Writers.

And this remove seems countenanced even by Nature it self; it being observed, that the Compass when it cometh under the Meridian, drawn through this Isle, hath little or no variation at all, but pointeth almost directly towards the North: whereas in all other places, or less Meridians; East and West, it pointeth not so directly North, but more or less to the North-east, or the North-west; which the Mariners call the Variation, or the North-wasting, and the North-wasting of the Compass. And yet it's observed of late, that there is some more sensible variation of it in this Isle of S. Michael, than in that of Corvo; which therefore is conceived more fit for the first Meridian.

The chief Town hereof, besides many Burroughs and lesser Hamlets, Punta del Gado, seated upon a dangerous Sea, and without any Port; yet more frequented by Strangers, than the Port of Angra, because here they may go in and out as they please; but not so in the other.

4. FATAL, 17 or 18 miles in length; plentifully provided with all things necessary for the life of man, and well furnished with Wood, for which Commodity, much frequented by the Merchants of England. The chief Town of it, Dorta; defended with a Castle, and that guarded by Spaniards; both Town and Island taken by Sir Walter Raleigh, Anno 1597. This Action was called the Island-Voyage; undertaken as well to divert the War which the Spaniards threatened to bring to our own doors; as, by seizing some of those Islands, to intercept the Spanish Fleet in their return, and to hinder them in their setting out: by which means, wanting their Indian Gold, they might be brought to better terms with their Neighbour-Nations. And though the English were not able to hold it long, yet it was said, that the Booty got in this Expedition, amounted to 40000 Crowns besides the honour of beating the Spaniards upon his own ground. It took his name from its abundance of Beeswax.

5. GRATIOSA, not above five or six Leagues in compass; but so well furnished with Fruits, that they send much yearly to Tercera; inhabited by Portugals only, but so poor, that they are not able to bear the charge of a Garrison. The chief Town of it called La Praia.

6. S. GEORGES, twelve miles long, about three in breadth; mountainous, and full of Forests: but thole Forests so well stored with Cedars, that they use them many times for Shipping, and sometimes for Fuel. The chief Town of it, called S. Georges, as the Island is.

7. PICO, lyeth on the South of the Isle of S. Georges, and took this name from an high Hill, in the form of a Pyramid, which the Portugals generally call a Pike, or Pico. Replenished with Fruits, some Cedars, and a tree called Trice, of great Bulk, and as much beauty; the wood thereof, exceeding hard, red within, and waved; so admirably beautiful, that it is allowed only to the King's Officers, the other Subjects being denied the use of it, (but on special licence) by a publick Edict. In bigness, it is second only unto that of S. Michael, if not equal to it; hardly so much in length, but of greater breadth. The chief Towns of it, 1. S. Sebastian, 2. Calhota ne Nisquin, Both upon the Sea, and in the East parts of the Island.

8. FLORES, directly East from Faial, so called from its abundance of Flowers, (as Gratiosa from the like flourishing Verduce of it) is in compass not above 8 miles; but plentifully furnished with Carrel, and good grounds to feed them. The chief Town of it, Santa Cruz. The Isle (though small, yet) twice as big as the Isle of

9. CORVO, so called from its abundance of Crows, situate on the North hereof, and but little distant; both very unsafe, and both most miserable poor, by reason of the many Pirates which lie betwixt them, to intercept such ships as trade towards America. But this, though much smaller than the others, may in time be of more esteem than any of them, in regard it is conceived to be the most natural place for the first Meridian, as before was noted: the Needle here pointing directly to the North, without Variation. Which whether it proceed from some secret inclination of the Loadstone to that part of the World, more in this place than any other; or that being situate between the two great Continents of Europe and America; it is drawn equally towards both, by the magnetic virtue of the Earth it self, I leave to be disputed by more able Judgments.

These Islands were first discovered and subdued by the Portugals, under the conduct, or by the direction of Prince Henry, Son of John the first; who first made the Portugals in love with the Seas. And they were also the first Mentions of the Crown of Portugal, which held out for Don Antonio the Ballard, against Philip, the second of Castile; against whom the Island of Tercera was for a while gallantly defended by Emanuel de Silva, with the help of the French; but taken at the last by the Marquess of Santa Cruz, and the French, after promise of life, cruelly murdered in cold blood. After which, garrisoned at the first by none but Portugals. But upon some commotion happening in that Kingdom, it was thought fit, on some reason of State, to make sure of the best Islands, by Spanish Garrisons; which accordingly were put into the Castle of Angra, in Tercera; the Towns of Punta del Gado, in S. Michael; and Dorta in Faial. And to say truth, the Spaniards had good reason to be careful of them: these Islands being of such importance, as without them the Navigation of the Indies, Asturias, Brasil, and New Spain, could not be continued: because the Fleet which come from those Countries to Lisbon, or Sevil, must, in a manner, of necessity touch upon some of them; as well in following their course, if they come from the West, as in recovering fresh Winds as are useful to them; if they came from the East.

But to return again to the main Land of Portugal, know, that the ancient Inhabitants of it, were the Lusitani, dwelling betwixt Tagus and Durius, the old Lusitania being bounded within those Rivers; the Celtici, and Turditani, who took up also some part of Betice, dwelling on the South of Tagus; and the Gallaici, Bracari, (so called to distinguish them from the Gallaici, Lusitani, who possessed Gallaicia) on the North of Durius. Subjected first unto the Romans; by whom accounted one of the three parts of Spain. In the declining of their Empire conquered by the Alans and from them taken by the Suevians, who, for a time, made the City of Braga the Royal Seat of their Kings. The Suevians lost it to the Goths and the Goths, to the Moors, as hath been shewn already in their several stories. Recovered, in part, by the King of Leon to whom that part continued subject, till given by Alfonso the sixth of Leon, in Dowry with his bafe Daughter Teresa, to Henry of Lorraine, (whose virtue and good service, merited no less reward) Anno 1099. Who having fortunately governed it by the title of an Earl, for the space of 12 years, left his Son, Alfonso, Heir both to his Fortunes and Vertues; honoured with the title of King of Portugal, by the Sovereigns of Leon, for his most gallant, demerit shewn in the Battel of Ovique, Anno 1139. He had, before the Assumption of the Regal Stile, ruled 27 years, with a great deal of honour; and reigned here with no less, 45 years after that Assumption; he was revered by his friends, and feared by his enemies. So that the whole time of his fitting in the Chair of State, was 72 years: a longer enjoying of Sovereignty, than any Prince since the first beginning of the Roman Monarchy. His Successors we shall have in order in the following Catalogue. But we must first tell you, as in other places of this Work, that the Princes of moit note in the whole Succession, are, 1. Henry of Lorraine, (whom some make a Burgundian, of the City of Bescon) who coming into Spain to the Holy Wars, and delivering nobly in the same, was honoured by Alfonso the sixth, with his Daughter Teresa, and the Town of Porto for her Dowry; given to him with the title of the Earl of Portugal. He extended his Estate as far as Comibre, on the South of the River Duro; so that River being before that time, the utmost bound of it that way. 2. Alfonso the first King, who took Lisbon from the Moors, Anno 1247. and made it the Seat of his Kingdoms which he extended Southward, as far as Algarve. 3. Alfonso the 3d, who partly by Conquest, and partly by Marriage, added Algarve to his Estate, getting it by the Sword, and confirming it to him by the Bed. He also did prevail so far with Alfonso the Wife, (never the wiser for so doing) as to get his Realm discharged of the Homage which formerly had been done to the Kings of Leon, Anno 1270. 4. Alfonso the 4th, confederate with the fifth of the same name in Castile, against Albarran the Muramolin of Africk, at the fight near the River Salado not far from Tariff, where they discomfited the vast Army of Moors, consisting of 470000 Horse and Foot. 5. John the first, the bafe Son of Pedro the first, setting aside the Lady Beatrice, Queen of Castile, the Daughter of Ferdinand the first, and the Lawful Children of his Father, being many in number by force and colour of Election, obtained the Kingdom. Fortified it by his marriage with the Lady Philipp, Daughter of John of Guant, Duke of Lancester a strong Competitor, at that time, for the Crown of Castile: on which relation, this King, the four Kings next succeeding, and two of this Kings younger Sons, were made Knights of the Garter. 6. Edward the son and successor of John the first; of whom there goes a story, that on the day of his Coronation, he was advised by a Jew, (one of his Physicians) learned in Astrology, to defer the Ceremony until noon, in regard he found by his Art, that if they did proceed unto it in that conjuncture, his reign would be very short, and full of trouble. But the King, either out of magnanimity, or contempt of that Art, going on with the Ceremony, the Jew's Prediction was found true; for he reigned not fully five years, and with ill success in his attempts against the Moors. 7. Henry Duke of Viseo, (Vicomitus the Latins call it) the second Son of John the first, created Knight of the Garter, by King Henry the sixth, An-1444. By whose encouragement and example, the Portuguese began to be affected to Foreign Voyages: discovering in his time, (and, for the most part, under his conduct also) the Islands of Azores, Madeira, Holy-Peter, Isle of Cape Verde, and a great part of the coast of Africa, as far as Guinea; He dyed Anno 1465. 8. Alfonso the fifth, who waring on the Moors in Africk, took from them the strong Towns of Tangier, Alcazar, and Asiella. 2. John the second, under whose reign the Portuguese fully settled themselves in Guinea, and the Realm of Congo; discovering all the Coasts and Isles of Africk (not before discovered) as far as to the Cape of good hope, Anno 1487: planting and fortifying as they passed; the whole Discovery of Africk, the East-Indies, and Brazil, being perfected in the Reign of King 10 Emanuel; under whom also they discomfited great Armies of the Turk and Sultans, of Egypt; bringing by Sea the riches of the East, into the West. 11. Sebastian, the Grandchild of King John, son of Emanuel, embarking himself unadvisedly in the Wars of Africk, lost his life (as it is generally supposed) at the battel of Alcazar, in which three Kings fell in one day. But many of the Portuguese are of opinion, that he was not killed, but that for shame and sorrow he returned not home; wandering from one place to another, and at last was found and avowed at Venice; thence carried to Naples, where he was kept three days in a dark Dungeon, without any sustenance but a Knife and a Halter: brought into Spain by the King's Command, where at last he dyed. A man in whom so many circumstances met, to make up a truth, that the very Spaniards used to say, that either he was the true Sebastian, or else the Devil in his likeness. But whether true or not, it is not now material; Death having put an end to that dispute; though the controversy, which ensued upon his death, for the Crown of Portugal, being not yet decided. For, though King Philip the second of Spain, succeeded in it next after Henry the Cardinal King (who only came upon the Stage, that the Competitors might have time to declare their titles); and claimed the Crown as eldest Heir-male, and nearest Kinsman to King Henry; yet all the World was not well satisfied in the Justice and Equity of his Demands. In the carrying on of which Affairs, he seemed to deal very candidly to the eyes of men, not biased by their proper Interest: offering to submit his Title to a Disputation; professing that the Laws of Portugal were more favourable to him, than the Law of Castile; and openly acknowledged, that if he should chance to dye before the King Henry, his eldest Son, as being a degree further off, would come behind some others of the Precedents to it, of whom himself had the precedence. But finding nothing done by Henry, and meaning to make sure work after his decease, (Antonio the Bastard having got possession of Lisbon, and taking on himself as King, by a popular and tumultuous Election) he raised an Army under the command of Ferdinand de Toledo, Duke of Alva, and subdued all that stood against him; Ferdinand the Churches of Brugance, Daughter of Prince Edward, surrendering also all her interest and pretensions to him; so entering by a mixed title of Descent and Arms, Anno 1580. Threecore years it was peaceably enjoyed by the Kings of Spain, when suddenly dispossessed by a potent Faction, appearing for John Duke of Brugance, descended from the youngest Son of King Emanuel: in his behalf, wrought so cunningly and under-hand practices of Cardinal Richelieu, and others, Ministers of the French, that the King of Spain was sooner diffided of Portugal, than he heard of any plot or practice set on foot against him, Anno 1636. In which it is to be observed, that as King Philip the second, for the better obtaining of this Crown had embroiled the French, engaging, that King in a bloody War against the Protestants of that Kingdom; to make him sure enough from troubling him in his present Enterprise: so the French Ministers had caused a revolt in Catalogne; to the end, that when the King of Spain was busied in reducing that Province, the Portuguese might have opportunity to redeem themselves from the power of the Spaniards; whom the Antipathy betwixt the Nations made less pleasant to them. Nor was it a partial defection only, or the loss of Portugal, and no more: but a general falling off of the whole Estate in Africk, Asia, America, in the Isles and Continents: the Accessories (excepting only the Town of Couta in Barbary, and some of the Tercera's) going the same way as the Principal did. And here methinks that grave and deliberate Nation of the Spaniards may be justly taxed for committing a greater Solazim in point of State, than ever people did before them; in that, having got the full and peaceable possession of the Crown of Portugal, and all the out-parts and Members of it; they continued all the Garrisons and strong Holds of the whole Estate, in the hands of the Natives. By means whereof, when Portugal it self fell off from the King of Spain, the Provinces and Plantations did the like, without any hesitancy, which had some of the chief Pieces in every Province, Factory, and Plantation, been brought by little and little (if not all at once) into the power of the Castilians; might have been easily prevented. Nor hath the Spaniards hitherto attempted any thing material, for the recovery of that Kingdom: having been ever busy to over-laid by the French in Catalogne, Navarre, Flanders, Arroy, and Italy; that he hath not had much leisure to attend that business. But leaving him and them to their own affairs, it is time to present you with a Catalogue of

The Kings of Portugal.

A. Ch.

- 1139 1. Alfonso, the second Earl, and first King of Portugal. 45.
1184 2. Sancho, the Son of Alfonso. 28.
1212 3. Alfonso II. Son of Sancho. 11.
1223 4. Sancho II. Son of Alfonso the 2d. 34.
1257 5. Alfonso III. Brother of Sancho the 2d. 22.
1276 6. Denny, the Son of Alfonso the 3d. 48.
1295 7. Alfonso IV. the Son of Denny. 32.
1357 8. Pedro, the Son of Alfonso the 4th. 10.
1369 9. Ferdinand, the Son of Pedro, the last King of the lawful Issue of Henry of Lorraine. 18.
1385 10. John the bafe Son of Pedro, of whom sufficiently before. 48.
1433 11. Edward, the Son of John, and of the Lady Philipp of Lancaster. 5.
1438 12. Alfonso V. the Son of Edward. 43.
1481 13. John II. the Son of Alfonso the 5th. 14.
1495 14. Emanuel, the Nephew of Edward, by his Son Ferdinand, Duke of Viseo. 26.
1521 15. John III. Son of Emanuel. 38.
1557 16. Sebastian, the Nephew of John the 3d, by his Son Don John unfortunately slain in the Fields of Africk. 21.
1578 17. Henry the Cardinal, Son of King Emanuel, the last of the Male-Issue of Henry of Lorraine. 2.
1580 18. Philip the second of Spain, Son of Charles King of Castile, and Emperor, and of the Lady Mary his Wife, daughter of Emanuel. 18.

- 1598 19. Philip II. of Portugal, and III. of Spain. 22.
1621 20. Philip III. of Portugal, and IV. of Spain. 22.
During his Reign, the Portuguese made of the Spanish Government, choice for their King.
1636 21. John D. of Brugance, the IV. of that Name: a Prince of great possessions, and of Royal Race, who hitherto hath peaceably enjoyed it.

Now that we may the better see by what title both the Kings of Spain, and the Dukes of Brugance, claim the Crown of Portugal; and what other pretenders they were to it, on the death of Sebastian; and what right as well Antonio the Bastard, (but alledging a sentence of Legitimation) as the Princes of the house of Savoy, did pretend unto it: we will lay down their Genealogies from King Emanuel, in this following Scheme.

1. John, King of Portugal. } John, Prince of } Sebastian King
} of Portugal. } of Portugal.
2. Lewis } Don Antonio } Christopher, and o-} Baltard } thers.
3. Henry the Cardinal, King of Portugal.
4. Edward } Mary, wedded to Alfonso. } Rainuccio
} xander Duke of Parma. } Fernand.
2. Kath, married to John D. of Brugance.
5. Mary, married to Charles } Philip the II. King the fifth, King of Castile. } of Spain.
6. Beatrice, married to Charles Duke of Savoy.

By this it may appear how the Claims are grounded: but whether Title will prevail, cannot now be told. Suffice it, that as the Royal Line of Portugal did begin in an Henry, so it ended in an Henry also; the Male-Line failing in the person of the Cardinal King, and the Crown falling (on whomsoever it shall fall) on the Heirs of the Females.

The principal Orders of Knighthood in this Kingdom, are 1. Of Aviz, so called from a Town of that name in Portugal, the Seat thereof: Founded by Sandim or Sancho the first, in imitation of the Order of Alcantara, whose Green Crofs they wear; but equal to it neither in Power nor Riches.

2. Of CHRIST; instituted by Denny King of Portugal, who conferred on them all the Lands and Possessions of the excommunicated Templers, confirmed by Pope John the twenty second, Anno 1231. Their Robe is a Black Cassock, under a White Surcoat; over which, a Red Crofs, streaked in the midst with a white Line: their Duty, to expel the Moors out of Betice, the next Neighbour to Portugal. To which Crown, they have added many gallant Countries in Asia, Africk, and Brazil; and so improved their own Estates, that all the Isles in the Atlantic do belong to them: besides, the Rents of the Mine of St. George, in Guinea, amounting to 100000 Ducats of yearly income.

The Arms are Argent, on five Escalloons Azure, as many Bezants in Salier of the first, pointed Sable, within a Border of Gules, charged with seven Towers, Or. Which five Escalloons were born in memory of five Kings, whom Alfonso, the first King, slew at the battel of Ovique, Anno 1139; the Border, with the Towers or Castles, being added by Alfonso the third, on his Investiture into the Kingdom of Algarve, by Alfonso the fifth of Castile, Anno 1257, whose Daughter Beatrice he then married.

and to conceive himself to have some relation to the Arms of that Kingdom. And to proceed we on to those Provinces which are under the Government of Aragon: the third great Body of this State.

12. VALENTIA.

VALENTIA hath on the East, the Mediterranean; on the West, part of Castile, and Aragon; on the North Catalogne; and Murcia, upon the South. It is watered with the Rivers, 1. Xucar, called of old Sucon, and Sutiv. 2. Guadalender, signifying a River of pure water: and 3. Millar.

This Country standeth in the most temperate and pleasing Air of all Spain, full of Gardens and places of wonderful delight, where growth abundance of Rice, Sugar, Corn, and Fruit: garnished all the year long with sweet smelling Flowers, and miraculously fruitful of Pomgranates, Limons, and other delicacies. It hath also Mines of Silver, at Bariol; of Gold, at Lador; of Iron, at Fuñfraz; of Alabaster, at Piacent; and of Allom, Lime, and Plaster, in many places. From thence also come the best Silks in the World, Cotton of Murcia, Crimson, Scarlet, and other precious Colours, and rich Perfumes. Finally, all the Senses of man may be delighted and refreshed with that which comes from this happy Region; in quality, and sweetness, much like that of Naples. The delicacy and great pleasures whereof, have made the Inhabitants of it to be thought less Warlike than the other Spaniards. The Sheep of this Country also, bear the finest Fleeces of any in Spain: first stocked with Cotswold Sheep from England, at the request of John King of Aragon, Anno 1455, by the imprudent courtier of King Edward the fourth.

Places of note next in it are, 1. Alicante, a noted Port on the Mediterranean, whence come our true Alicant-Wines, made of their Juice of Mulberries; by Ptolomy called Ulcian; By Mela, Ulice: from whence the Bay adjoining is called Sinus Ulicitanus, now the Bay of Alicante. 2. Olivia, a Bishops-See, on the River Segura, which divides the Province from Murcia. 3. Segrove, a Bishops-See; by Ptolomy named Segobriga, the chief City, in old times, of the Celtiberi. 4. Xitva, supposed to be the Incubitis of Livy, where Scipio defeated Hanno and his Carthaginians. 5. Valencia, a fair, pleasant, and well-traded City, the See of an Arch-bishop, and given name to the whole Province: in its first glory, one of the chief Roman Colonies in these parts of Spain: in its last, the Royal Seat of the Moorish Kings of this Country. Situate three miles from the Mediterranean, not far from the mouth of the River Duroc, now called Guadalender: and is by some said to have been heretofore named Roma, which signifieth strength. But when the Romans mastered it, to distinguish it from their Rome, it was called Valencia; which in the Latin Tongue, is of the same signification with the Greek Πόλις. Here is an University in which Saint Dominick, the Father of the Dominicans, studied. 6. Laurigi, now a small Village: once a Town of great strength, called Lauron: which Sertorius besieged, took, and burned, even then when Pompey, whose Confederates the Lauronites were, stood with his whole Army high enough upon the Flame, to warm his hands; and yet durst not succour it. It was formerly named Sucon, after the name of the River; and is famous in Plutarch, for the victory which Quintus here got of Pompey; Pompey's Army being not only overthrown, but himself, with life, hardly escaping. 8. Morvedre, situate in or near the place of the old Saguntum: the People whereof, when besieged by Anibal, continued to obstinate in the expectation of aid from Rome, that they chose rather to burn themselves, than yield up the Town: the occasion of the second War between Rome and Carthage. First founded by the Zacynthians, and after this destruction of it, repaired, or re-edited, by the Romans, (they could not possibly do less) by whom made a Colony. 9. Gandia, which gives the title of a Duke to the House of Borgia, and was the style of Francisco Borgia, the eldest Son of Pope Alexander the sixth, (of this noble Family) called commonly in Guicciardine, by the name of the Duke of Gandy. 10. Denia, seated on the brink of the Mediterranean over which it hath a goodly prospect; the Marquisate of the Duke of Lerma: first founded by the Maffians, by whom called Dianium. Not far from which is the Promontory of Ferraria, of old called Promontorium Dianium; the Refuge of Sertorius in his Wars against Pompey, and Metellus, both of great renown: the aged, and of much experience; and the other young, and of high resolutions. And yet Sertorius found himself much troubled with the old man's Gravity, than the young man's Gallantry: inasmuch as he was used to say, Tha had it not been for the old Woman Metellus, he would have whipped the Boy Pompey home with Rods. For he had twice overcome this Great Pompey, before Metellus was joined in the Action with him: the first time dangerously wounding, and the second time driving him out of the Field. But fighting against both, he was over-matched; and yet seemed rather to retire, than fly: for them; the Spaniards behaving themselves very valiantly, in the time of these Wars, under him: to which Florus alludeth, saying, Nec unquam magis apparuit Hispani militis Vigor, quam Romano Ducis. At the last when he had a long time upheld the Marian Faction, he was traitorously murdered by Perpenna, one of his Officers: for which, Metellus and Pompey had a Triumph at Rome. So high an estimate did they set upon the civil death of this Proscript.

The ancient Inhabitants heretofore, were the Ebastani, the Edetani, the Conestani, and some part of the Culturis: originally of the Province of Tarracensis; afterwards (in the sub-division of that Province by Constantine) of Carthaginensis. In the declining of the Empire, first subdued by the Alani, who were scarce war in their new dwelling, when displaced by the Goths. From the Goths taken by the Moors, of whose Kingdom reckoned as a Province: till the fatal overthrow given to Mahomet Eneser, at the battle of Sierra Morvora, and the departure of the Moors of Morocco, to their own Country; which followed presently upon it. By Za Aben-Zeit, the Brother of this Mahomet, made a distinct Kingdom of it self, Anno 1214: but taken from him by one Zaen, a Prince of the Moors of Spain, under colour that he had a purpose of turning Christian, and making his Kingdom subject to the Crown of Aragon, (as indeed he did) Anno 1228. Conquered from Zaen the next King, before he could enjoy the sweets of a new ruled Kingdom, by James King of Aragon, Anno 1238. Since reckoned a Member of that Kingdom, never since bred from the body of it, since the first uniting. But still to be overgrown with Moors, (not to be blamed for leaving such an excellent feat) that at the final expulsion of that people by King Philip the third, there were reckoned no fewer than 22000 Families of them in this little Country.

The Arms heretofore were Golden, a Tower embattled Argent purled (or pennoned) Sable.

13. CATALONIA.

CATALONIA is bounded on the North-east, with the Land of Rouffillon, and the Pyrenees; on the East, with the Mediterranean, on the South, with Valencia; on the North, and North-west, with Aragon. The Country somewhat mountainous, and full of Woods, and not very well cultivated: beholden more, in that respect, for Corn, Fruits, and other necessary Provisions, unto the courtesy of the Sea, which serves them out of other Countries, than to the Goodness of the Land. And it is as well watered, as most parts of Spain; having in it, besides the Ebro, or Iberus, common to many other Provinces; and Ginia, which runneth between it and Valencia; the Rivers of, 1. Tardera, 2. Lobregat, 3. Segre, 4. Francelino, 5. Besora, and 6. Onbar.

The name of Catalonia, some derive from the Castolani, who formerly inhabited some part hereof: others will have it called Catalonia, corruptly, for Gothalania, from the mixture of the Goths and Alani, successively the Masters of it: and some, more improbably, from one Caribolot, a Noble-man of this Country, who lived here they know not when. More like it is, that it took this name from the Catalani, an old French People of Languedoc, the adjoining Province, from whom the fields called Campi Catalanici, near unto Tolouse, took denomination. But from what root soever they came, certain it is, that they are generally a stout courageous people, as may be seen by their exploits in most parts of Greece, which they miserably spoiled and pillaged many years together, in the time of Andronicus the second; to whose aid called in. But then withal, they are a very perverse and obdurate people, little observant of the pleasure or profit of their natural Prince: but on the other side, so zealous in defence of their own Privileges, that they have created more trouble to their Kings, under that pretence, than all the rest of the Subjects of Spain. Of which we need no other instance, than their late revolt unto the French, Anno 1638, which drew after it the loss of the Realm of Portugal, and many Towns of great importance in Flanders, and the rest of the Netherlands.

Principal places in it, are, 1. Barcelona, situate on the Mediterranean, near the River Lobregat; accommodated with a large and commodious Port, where commonly the Spanish Soldiers do embark, which are bound for Italy. The Town adorned with large streets, handsome buildings, strong walls, and a very pleasant situation. Called Barfyn by the ancient Writers, in whose time it was a Roman Colony, now honoured with a Bishops-See, and the Seat of the Vice-Roy. 2. Tarragon, seated also on the Mediterranean, East of the River Francelino: built, fortified, and peopled by the two Scipios, the Father and Uncle of Africanus, for a Counter-Fort to Carthage (or New Carthage) not long before founded by the Carthaginians. Afterwards made the Metropolis of Tarracensis, hence denominated: but stript of that honour by Toledo, and is now but two miles in compass, and containing not above seven hundred Families. Yet still it holdeth the reputation of an Arch-bishops-See, contending with Toledo, for the Primacy of all Spain (as Briga also doth in the Kingdom of Portugal): the controversy being undecided to this very day. 3. Amputar, on the same Sea also; once of great esteem, founded by the Maffians, a Roman Colony, and a well-traded Town, as the Name doth signify:

this being the Emporia, spoken of by Strabo and Ptolemy; now not observable for any thing, but a safe Road for Ships. 4. Blamus, 5. Palamus, and 6. Rajsa, all Ports on the same Sea, but subject unto divers Winds, and not very spacious, this last by Ptolemy called Rhoda, first founded by the Rhodiars, or people of the Isle of Rhodes, and by them so named. More in the Land, are 7. Girona, a small, but handsomely built, and a well-traded Town; is a Bishops-See, and the title of the eldest Son of Aragon, called Prince of Girona. Which Title was first given to John, the eldest Son to King Pedro the fourth, immediately upon his Birth, Anno 1351; and hath since continued. 8. Torresja, on the River Ebro, in the most rich and pleasant part of all the Country; recovered from the Moors, by Raymond the fifth, Earl of Barcelona, and Prince of Aragon, about the year 1146. The principal Agent in that work, William Raymond of Moncada, Seneschal of Catalogne; rewarded for his good service in it, with a third part of the City. A goodly Town, and of good importance; garrisoned by the French, since the late revolt of Catalonia from the King of Spain; and like to draw a great part of this Province after it, whilst it continueth in their power, or in the possession of their party. 9. Urgel, an Earl's Honour, and a Bishops-See, situate at the foot of the Pyrenees. 10. Monblanc, which heretofore gave the Title of Duke to the second Sons of the Kings of Aragon. 11. Moncada, once a Town of strength; but of more note for giving denomination to the Noble Family of Moncada, Hereditary Seneschals of Catalogne, and Lords of Bearn. Here is also on the East part, where it joineth with the Land of Rouffillon, the Promontory called of old, Templum Veneris, now Cabo de Ceux. And not far from Barcelona, the Mountain called Monferrato, on the sides full of Hermitages and Anchors Cells; and having towards the summit of it, a Chappel dedicated to the Virgin Mary: much famed and resorted to by Pilgrims from all parts of the World, for her miraculous Image, which is there enshrined.

The old Inhabitants of this Province, were the Castellani, Auscanti, Indigites, Costani, with part of the Ilerones, and Lucentini; all of them part of Tarracensis. In the declining of the Empire, seized on by the Alani; and they soon after vanquished, if not dispossessed, by the power of the Goths. Lost to the Moors, in the general ruine of the whole: from them recovered by the puissance of Charles the Great; who having taken the City of Barcelona, Anno 801. gave it to one Bernard a French-man, with the Title of Earl, who governed the Country for that Emperor; as Wilfredus, or Godfredus, his Successor, did for Lewis the Godly. Godfredus, Son to this Godfredus, by the gift of Charles the Great, was the first Proprietary; united unto Aragon by the Marriage of Earl Raymond, with the Heir of that Kingdom. First held in Vassalage of the French, but that acknowledgment related to King James the first, Anno 1260. by the King St. Lewis; is the King of Aragon relating, at the same time, his pretensions and rights of Sovereignty to Caracasson, Beziers, Albi Nismes, and some other pieces in France, of old belonging to that Crown. But before that, the Catalans had neglected the acknowledgment of their subjection to that Crown; it being ordered by Alfonso the second King of Aragon, about the year 1180, That the year of the reigns of the Kings of France, should no more be used in any Instrument or Writings which concerned that People; but the year only of the Incarnation of our Lord and Saviour: which, in effect, was to disclaim the Sovereignty of the Crown of France.

The Earls of Barcelona.

- A. Chr.
884 1 Godfredus, furnished the Hairy, Son of Wifredus, the Provincial Governour for the Empirous Ludovicus Pius.
914 2 Miron, Son of Godfredus.
933 3 Godfredus II. Son of Miron, by some called Sonifrid.
971 4 Borelus, Brother of Miron, and Uncle of Godfredus the second.
993 5 Raymond, Son of Borelus.
1017 6 Berengarius, furnished Borelus, Son of Raymond.
1035 7 Raymond II. Son of Berengarius Borelus.
1076 8 Raymond III. Son of Raymond the second.
1082 9 Raymond IV. Son of Raymond the third, Earl of Provence, also in right of Douce his Wife.
1131 10 Raymond V. Son of Raymond the fourth, and Douce Countess of Provence, married Petrullilla, Daughter of Raym, or Raymond, the second, King of Aragon; whom he succeeded in that Kingdom, Anno 1134. Uniting these Estates together, never since divided: the chief Procurer of this Match, being William Raymond of Moneida, spoken of before.

The Arms hereof, were four Pallets Gules, in a field Or, now the Arms of Aragon. Which Arms were given to Geoffrey, furnished the Hairy, the first Earl hereof, by Lewis the Stammering, Emperor and King of France, to whose aid he came against the Normans with a Troop of Horse; and being bloody in the fight, desired of the Emperor to give him some Coat of Arms, which he and his Posterity might from thenceforth use. Who dipping his four fingers in the blood of the Earl, drew them thwart his Shield, (which was only of Plain Gold, without any Device) saying, This shall be your Arms hereafter.

14. The Kingdom of Majorca.

THE Kingdom of MAJORCA, contained the Islands of Majorca, Minorca, Ebusia, and Frumentaria, in the Mediterranean; the Land of Roussillon, Sardaigne, or Cerdeigne, in the Continent of Spain; and the Earldom of Montpelier in France.

The Land of ROUSSILLON, which is the first Member of this Kingdom, is situate betwixt two Branches of the Pyrénées s bounded on the South, with the Mediterranean; on the West, with Catalogne; on the North, with the said Pyrénées on the East, with Languedoc in France. Places of most importance in it, are 1. Helna, a Bishop's-See on the River Teebo. 2. Colibere, now a poor and ignoble Village, of note only for a safe and commodious Harbour; but formerly the great and famous City of Ilberiber, so often mentioned in the Wars betwixt Rome and Carthage. 3. Perpignan, (in Latin, Perpinianum) built in the year 1068, by Guinard, Earl of Roussillon, in a pleasant Plain on the River Thelis, now a rich Town, well traded, and as strongly fortified against the French: to whose fury in the time of War, it is still exposed. Besieged by Henry, Son to King Francis the first, with a pu-issant Army, An. 1542. partly, to be revenged, upon Charles the fifth, who had before attempted Montpelier Province; and partly to get into his hands the chief doat of Spain, by which he might at all times enter into that Kingdom. But he found here such strong resistance, that he was fain to raise his Siege; with as little honour as Charles had gotten by his Expedition which he made into Provence. 4. Salsis, (the Salsile of Strabo) a strong place on the Frontier of Languedoc; fortified according to the Rules of modern Fortification, and one of the chief Bulwarks against the French. 5. Roussillon; a Castle of more honour and antiquity, than strength or beauty; by Pliny, and other Ancients, called Ruscino, the Country, Comitatus Ruscianensis, now Roussillon and the Land of Roussillon; accounted heretofore a part of Gallia Narbonensis; and added unto Spain in the time of the Goths. On the death of Gernard, the last Proprietary Earl, it was added to the Crown of Aragon, by Affonso the second; by James the first, laid to the Kingdom of Majorca; united to the Crown again by King Pedro the fourth. After that, fold (or rather pawned) by King John the second, to Lewis the 11. of France, for the Sum of 30000 Crowns, Anno 1462, and freely returned back again to Ferdinand the second, (after called the Catholic) by King Charles the 8. Anno 1493; conditioned that he should not hinder him in the Conquest of Naples. Joining hereto, as a part of the Kingdom of Majorca, was the Country of Sardaigne, or Cerdeigne; the habitation of the Creteani in former times, and afterwards accounted of as a part of Aragon. The chief Town of those Creteani, called Julia Lybica; the principal now being, hath the name of Cardano (or Sardana, as the Spaniards commonly pronounce) retaining some resemblance to the name of the Nation. The Country lying in the Vallies of the Pyrénées, and consequently in a corner somewhat out of the way, was thought fit to be added to the Land of Roussillon, (for the better endowment of this Kingdom:) the Features of which, it hath since followed; as appendant on it: pawned when that was unto the French, and with that restored.

2. The Earldom of MONTEPELIER, is situate in the Province of Languedoc, adjoining to the Land of Roussillon: so called from Montpelier, the chief City: for the description whereof we must fend the Reader back to France, having spoken of it there already. All I shall here repeat, is this, That Mary, the Daughter of William the last Earl thereof, brought it by Marriage, to her Husband, Peter the second King of Aragon: and that it was fold to Philip de Valois, the French King, by James King of Majorca, of that name the third. Nothing else memorable in the story and affairs of this little Earldom, but the fortunes of the two last Countesses of it. Of which the first being Daughter of Emanuel Comens, Emperor of Constantinople, and affianced to Affonso the 2. King of Aragon, was brought as far as Montpelier, in her way towards Spain, and there lodged with her while retinue, in the house of William, then Earl thereof, Anno 1174. But hearing that Affonso, contrary to his word and promise, was in treaty of another Marriage with the Princess Sancha of Castile (which he celebrated very shortly after) and ashamed to return to the Court of her Father, after such an injury; she hearkened to the counsel of her Lords and followers, who persuaded her to marry with Earl William, then a lusty Bachelor: which was done accordingly. To him he brought a Daughter, named Mary, (their only child) afterwards married to Dun Pedro the 2. Son of Affonso, and successor to him in that Kingdom: so that although the Mother could not have the happiness to be Queen of Aragon; yet the Daughter had. But being of no great beauty, the King her Husband grew weary of her, and would have been divorced, had the Pope consented: whose consent not being to be had, he forsok her Bed, and betook himself to other Women. Which the Queen not being otherwise able to remedy, prevailed with one of the Grooms of his Chamber, called Pedro Flavian, to bring her one night unto his Bed, (when some other Mistress was expected) and by him did conceive that night, as it after proved: the King perceiving the deceit on the morrow morning, was neither well pleased, nor much offended, at the honest fraud she had put upon him. Of this conjunction was born a Son at Montpelier, whom they named James, Successor to his Father in the Kingdom of Aragon; and to his Mother (the last Countess of it) in the Earldom of Montpelier; united, in his person, into one Estate; and by him finally parted from it, in the cession of the new Kingdom of Majorca, as before was said.

3. The Island of MAJORCA is situate in the Mediterranean, just over against Valencia; from which distant about 60 miles; about 300 miles in circuit, the length above an hundred, the breadth somewhat under; the number of Inhabitants reckoned at 30000. The Land, on all sides, towards the Sea, is somewhat mountainous and barren withal: the Islands more Champian and fruitfully yielding sufficient quantity of Oyl, Corn, Wines, and Fruits, for the use of its people. The whole Island is divided into 30 parts (as so many Wapentakes) in every one of which are reckoned from 300 to 600 Families. No hurtful Creatures are here bred, except Conies only; and those not hurtful, but by accident: of which more anon.

Places of chief note, in the former times, were 1. Palma, and 2. Pollença, which had the rights of Roman Citizens. 3. Chiriqui, and 4. Cami, which enjoyed the rights of the Latins: and 5. Cabri, (or Bocorum) which was in the condition of a Town considered; besides divers others not so privileged. Of these none left, at this day, but Palma only, vulgarly called Majorca, by the name of the Island: a Bishop's See, the Seat of the Viceroy for these Isles, and an University: the birth-place of Raymond Lullius, a man of great Wit, and profound Judgment: the Author of some Books in the Art of Chymistry whose Works are read and studied in that University, as Aristotle's are in others. This is the greater of the two Islands called Bahari, whence it hath the name. Adjoining herunto, two others of inferior note, called Dragonera and Cabrera; of which nothing memorable.

4. MINORCA, so called, because it is the lesser of the Bahari; is situate Eastward of Majorca, from which distant near 100 miles, of about 60 miles in length, and 150 in circuit. More fruitful than the other, though less in quantity, of rich soil, which breedeth them great Herds of Cattel, and Mule the name of any in Spain; accommodated also with two convenient Havens, the one called Maon, the other Fenoffu. Other considerable places, are, 1. Minorca, now so called by the name of the Island; and anciently known by the name of Mago: situate in the East part thereof, first founded by the Carthaginians, as the name imports. And so was also 2. Janno, seated in the West, (Dun parva Oppida, quibus, a Peris indita nomina, faith Savertus Bishop of these Isles, Anno 1210, or thereabouts.) It is now called Citadella, or the little City. Here was also in the midland, a third Town, called Sansiera by Pliny; of which I find no trace remaining.

5. EBUSIA, now called IVICA, lyeth between the main Land, and the Bahari, opposite to the Promontory of Ferraria, in the Realm of Valencia; from which distant about 50 miles, and near an hundred miles in compass. The Country plentiful of Corn, and all manner of Fruits, breeding no hurtful Creature, except Conies only which many times destroy their Harvest. The chief Town here, Tuica of (old called Ebusia) the Inhabitants of which make yearly great store of Salt; wherewith they do not only furnish Spain, but some parts of Italy.

6. FRUMENTARIA, so called from the plenty of Corn, is distant ten miles from Tuica, and about 60 miles from the main Land of Spain: in circuit about 70 miles. Not well inhabited, by reason of the multitude of Serpents; from which called by the Grecians Ophiass, and Colubraria, by the Latins. Both Islands anciently known by the name of Pityss, and Pityader, from the abundance of Pines there growing.

About these Islands are six others of little worth, called 1. Veda, 2. Conirella, and 3. Dragonage, 4. another called Monolibre, betwixt Majorca, and the influx of the River Iberus, 5. Alfiquera, lying in the very mouth of that River; and 6. Sombria, (anciently called the Island of Hercules) over against Carthagena; so named from a kind of Tunny, in Latia named Sombria, of which great shoals use to lie about it. All these, together with the Bahari, make up the Province of the Islands, the seventh Province of Spain.

But the chief glory of these Islands, were the FALEARES, so called (as the general conceit is, from the Greek word faion, which signifieth to throw); because the people were so expert in throwing their Slings or Darts: but, as Bachanne will needs have it, (to the same effect) from Baal-ize, a Punic or Phœnician word, signifying a Master in the Art of slinging. An Art so natural and innative to them, that Parents used to give no meat unto their Children, after some fit age, but what they could hit down with their Slings from the top of a Beam. Of their dexterity at this weapon, there is much mention made in the ancient Writers, as well Historians as Poets. And from this Exercise they had the name also of Infule Gymnasia; or else, because the people of it used to go naked to the Wars, (and possibly enough, in those first Ages of the world, as at other times also) from the Greek word gymnê, the same with Nudus in the Latin. Nor were they good at slinging only, but at firming too; an exercise not ordinarily performed, but by naked people: at which the very women are at this day experts: Biddulph reporting, in the relation of his travels, That being inquired about these Islands, there came a woman furnishing from one of them with a Basket of Fruit to sell. But that which made them most talked of in former times, was their harm done them by their Conies; which here, and in the neighbouring Continent, increased so wonderfully, that Varro telleth us of a Town in Spain, undermined by them; and Strabo, that they did not only destroy their Plants, but rooted up many of their Trees. Insumuch that the Inhabitants did requit the Romans to give them some new feats to inhabit in; οὐδ' αὖτε γὰρ τῶν τῶν τῶν τῶν, being ejected by those Creatures out of their Possessions, whose multitudes they were not able to resist. And when that could not be obtained, they moved Augustus Cæsar (as Pliny telleth us) for some aid against them; who, instead of Soldiers, sent them Ferrets, by which their numbers were diminished in a little time.

These Islands were first planted by the Tyrrians, or Phœnicians, the founders of many of their Cities: one of which, in the Isle of Ebusia, had the name of Phœnissa: From them also they derived the Art of slinging. Made subject to the Carthaginians, under the conduct of Hanno and Himilco, Anno M. 3500, or thereabouts, at what time the Decemviri governed Rome. Under

  - 1458 19 John II. Son of Ferdinand, and Brother of Alfonso: King of Navarre also, in right of Blanche his Wife. 20.
  - 1478 20 Ferdinand II. of that name, of Aragon, Son of John the second, King of Aragon and Navarre, by a second Wife: and the fifth of that name, of Castile and Leon; which Kingdoms he obtained by the marriage of Isabel, or Elizabeth, Sister and Heir of Henry the Fourth; uniting thereby the great Estates of Castile and Aragon, and all Appendices of either. In which regard, he may well challenge the first place in the Catalogue of the Monarchs of Spain, to be presented in due season.

In the mean time, to draw to a conclusion of the Affairs and Estate of Aragon, we are to understand, that of all the Kingdoms which belong to the Spaniards, it is the most privileged, and free from the absolute Command of the Kings of Spain: having in it such a temper or mixture of Government, as makes the Kings hereto to be well high Titular, or of little more authority than a Duke of Venice. For at the first erecting of this Estate, the better to encourage the people to defend themselves against the Moor, they had many Privileges indulged them; and, amongst others, threatening of a Jugiter, or Popular Magistracy; which, like the Episcopi of Sparta, had, in some cases, superiority over their Kings, reverting their Judgments, cancelling their Grants, and sometimes censuring their Proceedings. And though King Philip the second, in the bulwicks of Antonio de Perez, had made a Conquest of that Kingdom, and annulled all their Privileges, yet after, of his own meer goodness, he restored them (in part) again, as they continue at this day.

Chief Orders of Knighthood (besides that of Mercede, spoken of before) in this Kingdom, are 1. Of S. Savien, instituted by Alfonso the first, Anno 1118. to animate the members of it against the Moor. Of the habit and customs of this Order, I have met with nothing.

2. Of Montesa, instituted by James the first, King of Aragon, Anno 1270, or thereabouts, endowed with all the Lands of the Templers (before dissolved) lying in Valencia together with the Town and Castle of Montesa, made the Seat of their Order, whence it took the name. Subject at first unto the Master of the Order of Calatrava, out of which extracted; and under the same Rule of Cisterians. But after, by the leave of Pope Benedict the 13th. they quitted themselves of this subjection; and, in sign thereof, changed the Habit of Calatrava, which before they used, to a Red Cross upon their Breasts; now the Badge of their Order.

The Arms of Aragon, since possessed by the Earls of Barcelona, are Or four Pallets Gules: before which, they were, Azure, a Cross Argent.

The Monarchy of SPAIN.

Thus having spoke of Spain, and the Estate thereof when broken and divided into many Kingdoms; let us next look upon it as united into one main body; effected, for the most part, by Ferdinand the last King of Aragon before-mentioned. Before which time, Spain, being parcelled into many Kingdoms, was little Famous, and less Feared; the Kings thereof, as the Author of the Politick Discourse, &c. hath well observed, being only Kings of Figs and Oranges. Their whole Puissance was then turned one against another, and small achievements had they out of that Continent, except those of the House of Aragon; upon Sticily, Naples, Sardinia, and the Balears. Thuanus, a diligent Writer of the History of his own Times, (if in some things he favour not more of the Party, than the Historian) telleth us, that before this King's Reign, the name and glory of the Spaniards, was, like their Country, hemmed in by the Seas on some sides, and the Hills on the other: Paisque parvis exteriis inuadentibus, quam quicquam memorabile extra suos fines gessisset. This true, that Sancho the Great, King of Navarre, assumed unto himself the title of King of Spain, and that Alfonso the fourth of Castile, and the ninth of Leon, caused himself to be crowned Emperor of Spain, in the Cathedral Church of Leon: Titles ambitiously affected upon no good ground, and such as ended with their persons. But this Prince, worthily named, The Great, seized on the Kingdom of Navarre, conquered Granada from the Moor, subdued the Kingdom of Naples, united Aragon to Castile, banished 124000 Families of the Jews, began, by the conduct of Columbus, the discovery of the Western Indies; and finally by marrying his Daughter Joan, to Philip, Son of the Emperour Maximilian, Duke of Burgundy, and Lord of the greatest part of the Netherlands, laid the Foundation of the present Austrian Greatness. Continued since by so many inter-marriages betwixt the Spanish and Imperial Branches of that potent Family, That Philip the second might have called the Arch-Duke Albertus, Brother, Cousin, Nephew, and Son. A strange Medley of Relations. Thus by the puissance of this Prince, the Spaniards became first considerable in the eye of the World, and grew to be a terror to the Neighbouring Nations. Nomen Hispanicum obstrum antea & Picinis pene incognitum, (saith the same Thuanus) tum primum emisse, traxitque temporis in tantam magnitudinem exercuit, ut formidolosum ex eo & terribile tot terrarum Orbis esset cupere. And he saith true, with reference to the French and Italian Nations to whom the Spaniards have admitted no small matter of fear and terror; though unto others, they appear no such dreadful Bug-bear. But sure it is, and we may warrantably speak it without any such impressions of fear and terror, that this Kingdom, since that time, is wonderfully both enlarged and strengthened, a strongly compacted in it self, with all the Ligaments both of Power and State, and infinitely extended over all parts of the World's; his Dominions beholding (as it were) both the rising, and the setting of the Sun: which, before the Spaniards, no Monarch could ever say. A greater change than any man can possibly imagine to have been effected in so short a time, as was between the first year of Ferdinand, the Catholic, and the last year of Charles the fifth.

Concerning the title of the most Catholic King, re-attributed to this Ferdinand, I find, that Alfonso the first of Oriedo, was so named for his sanctity: with whom it dyed; and was revived in Alfonso the Great the twelfth King of Leon and Oueda, by the Grant of Pope John the 8th. After, it lay dead till the days of this Prince, who re-obtained this title from Pope Alexander the sixth: either because he compelled the Moor to be baptized, banished the Jews, and in part converted the American unto Christianity; or because, having united Castile to his Dominions, he supplanted the Kingdom of Navarre, and subdued that of Granada; he was, in a manner, the Catholic or general King of all Spain. The last reason seemeth to Iway most in the re-attainment of this attribute, in that when it was granted and confirmed on Ferdinand, by Pope Alexander the sixth, the King of Portugal exceedingly stomached at it: Quando Ferdinandus imperio universum Hispaniam, (saith Marina) non obtinere, quia tum non exigua parte pene Reges alios. It seems Emmanuel could not think himself a King of Portugal, if the title of the Catholic King did belong to Ferdinand. Wherein he was of the same mind, as was Gregory the Great; who when John of Constantinople had assumed to himself the title of the Oecumenical or Catholic Bishop, stived all Bishops of the World to oppose that arrogancy; and that upon the self-same reason, Nam si ille est Catholicus, nos non sumus Episcopi: for, if John were the Catholic Bishop, they were none at all. But upon what consideration forever it was first re-granted, it hath been ever since followed by his Posterity: to whose Crown as hereditary, and in common use, as the most Christian King to France, the Defender of the Faith to England.

And yet there was some further reason, why the Spaniards might affect the title of Catholic King, his Empire being Catholic in regard of extent, (though not of Orthodoxy of Doctrine) as reaching not over all Spain only, but over a very great part of the world besides. For in right of the Crown of Castile, he possessed the Towns of Millan and Oran, the Haven of Masalquivir, the Rock of Plez, and the Canary Islands in Africa; the Continent and Islands of all America, except Brazil, and some Plantations in the North, and in the Cannibal Islands, of the English, Hollanders, and a few poor French. In the right of the Kingdom of Aragon, he enjoyed the Realms of Naples, Sticily, and Sardinia, with many Islands interperfed in the Mediterranean; and in the right of the House of Burgundy, the Counties of Burgundy, and Charolais, the greatest part of Belgium, with a title unto all the rest: besides the great Dukedom of Millain, the Havens of Telamon and Plumbino, and many other pieces of importance in Italy, held by Inheritance from the Empire. To which if those Estates be added, which accrewed to Philip the second by the Crown of Portugal, we have the Towns of Centu, Tangier, and Maragon in Barbary, the Fortresses of Aguin, and S. George, in Guinea; the Isles of Azores, Madera, Cape Verde, S. Thomas, Del Principe, on this side of the Cape, and of Mojambique on the other; in Asia, all the Sea-coast almost from the Gulf of Persia unto China, and many strong Holds in the Moluccoes, Banten, Zeilan, and other Islands; and finally in America, the large Country of Brazil, extending in length 1500 miles. An Empire of extent enough, to appropriate to these Monarchs the title of Catholic.

The Monarchs of Spain.

- A. Chr.
- Ferdinand, King of Aragon, Sicily, Sardinia, Majorca, Valencia, Earl of Catalogue, surprized Navarre, and conquered the Realm of Naples.
  - 1478 1 Isabel, Queen of Castile, Leon, Galicia, Toledo, Murcia, Lady of Biscay, conquered Granada, and discovered America.
  - 1504 2 Joan, Princess of Castile, Granada, Leon, &c. and of Aragon, Navarre, Sicily, &c.
  - Philip, Arch-Duke of Austria, L. of Belgium.
  - 1516 3 Charles King of Castile, Aragon, Naples, &c. Arch-duke of Austria, Duke of Millain, Burgundy, Brabant, &c. Earl of Catalogue, Flanders, Holland, &c. Lord of Biscay, Frieland, Utrecht, &c. and Emperour of the Germans. He added the Realms of Mexico and Peru, the Dukedoms of Gelderland and Millain, the Earldom of Zutphen, and the Seigniories of Utrecht, Over-Issel and Groynning, unto his Estates. A Prince of that magnanimity and puissance, that had not Francis the first in time opposed him, he had even swallowed all Europe. He was also, for a time, of great strength and reputation, in Tunis, and other parts of Africa, disposing Kingdoms at his pleasure: but the Turk broke his power there; and being hunted all out of Germany, he reigned all his Kingdoms, and died private. 42.
  - 1538 4 Philip II. of more ambition, but less prosperity than his Father; fortunate only in his attempt on the Kingdom of Portugal; but that sufficiently balanced by his ill success in the Netherlands, and against the English. For the Hollanders, and their Confederates, drove him out of eight of his Belgick Provinces: the English overthrew his Invincible Armada, intercepted his Plate-Fleet; and by availing the Ocean, had almost impoverished him: and though he held for a time a hard hand upon France, in hope to have gotten that Crown by the help of the League, yet upon calling up his Accompts, he found that himself was the greater loser by that undertaking. So zealous in the cause of the Romish Church, that it was thought that his eldest Son Charles was put to death, with his consent, in the Inquisition-house, for seeming favourably inclined to the Low-Country Heretics, as the Spaniards called them. These four great Kings were all of the Order of the Garter; but neither of the two that followed.
  - 1558 5 Philip III. finding his Estate almost destroyed by his Father's long and chargeable Wars, first made Peace with England, and then concluded a Truce for 12 years with the States of the Netherlands; which done, he totally banished all the Moor out of Spain, and was a great stickler in the Wars of Germany.
  - 1621 6 Philip IV. Son of Philip the third, got into his power all the Lower Palatinate; but lost the whole Realm of Portugal, and the Province of Catalonia, with many of his best Towns in Flanders, Arrais, and Brabant, and some Ports in Italy: not yet recovered to that Crown from the power of the French. This Empire consisting of so many several Kingdoms united into one Body, may seem to be invincible. Yet had Queen Elizabeth followed the counsel of her men of War, he might have broken it in pieces. With 4000 men he might have taken away his Indies from him; without whose Gold, the Low-Country-Army, (which is the very best) could not be paid, and by consequence must needs have been dissolved. Nay, Sir Walter Raleigh in the Epilogue of his most excellent History of the World, plainly affirmeth, that with the charge of 200000 l. continued for but two years, or three at the most, the Spaniards might not only have been persuaded to live at peace; but all their swelling and overflowing-fleams, might be brought back to their natural Channels, and old Banks. Their own Proverb faith, The Lion is not so fierce as he is painted; yet the Americans tremble at his name: it's true; and it is well observed by that great Politician Machiavel, that things which seem to be and are not, are more feared for, than near at hand. Nor is this judgement built upon weak conjectures, but such as shew the Power of Spain not to be so formidable, as it's commonly supposed: which I find marshalled in this manner following: 1. The disjointedness of his Realms and other Estates, severed by infinite distances both of Sea and Land, which makes one part unable to relieve or defend the other. 2. The looseness of his Preparations in offensive or defensive Wars; his Forces, of necessity, being long a gathering in places so remote from the Royal Seat, and being gathered, no less subject to the dangers both of Sea and Land, before united into a body, and made fit for action. 3. The danger and uncertainty which the most part of his Forinque Revenues are subject to; many times intercepted by Pirates and open Enemies; sometimes so long delayed by cross Winds and Seas, that they come too late to serve the turn. 4. The different tempers and affections of a great part of his Subjects, not easily concurring in the same ends, or travelling the same way unto them. 5. The discontentedness of the Aragonians, Portuguese, and Italian Provinces, not well affected, for their private and particular reasons, unto the Castilians; apt to be wrought on by the Ministers of neighbouring Princes, whom jealousy of State keep watchful upon all advantages, for the depressing of his Power. 6. And last of all, the want of People of his own natural Subjects, whom he may best rely on for the increase and grandure of his Estates, exhausted and diminished by those ways and means which have been touched upon; without any politic or provident cause, to remedy that defect for the time to come. And this I look on as the greatest and most sensible Error in the Spanish Government: therein directly contrary to the ancient Romans; who finding, that nothing was more necessary for great and important enterprises, than multitudes of Men, employed all their studies to increase their numbers, by Marriages, Colonies, and such helps; making their conquered Enemies free Denizens of their Common-wealth: by which means the number of the Roman Citizens became so great (all being equally interested in the preservation of it) that Rome could not be ruined (in Aeneas's judgment) by any Forces but her own. But, on the other side, the Spaniards, employ none in their Plantations, but their own native Subjects; and so many of them also in all their enterprises both by Sea and Land, that so many thousands going forth every year, in the flower of their age, not one of them returning home; and those few which return, either lame or old: the Country is not only deprived of the Men themselves, but also of the Children which might be born. An evidence whereof may be, that John the first of Portugal, who reigned before the several Voyages and Plantations of that people, was able to raise 40000 Men for the War of Africa: whereas Emanuel, who lived after those Undertakings, had much ado to raise 20000 Foot, and 3000 Horse, on the same occasion: and Sebastian, after that, found as great a difficulty to raise an Army of 12000.

As for the Forces which the King of Spain is able to make out of all his Estates, they may be best seen by his preparations for the Conquest of England, France, and Flanders. In his design for England, A.D. 1588, he had a Fleet consisting of 150 Sail of Ships, whereof 66 were great Gallies, 4 Gallies of Naples, 4 Gallies, the rest smaller Vessels: freighted with 20000 Souldiers for land service, 9000 Sayers, 800 Gunners, 4000 Pioneers, 25000 pieces of Ordnance: not reckoning into this account the Commanders, and Volunteers; of which last, there were very great numbers who went upon that service for Spoil, Merit, or Honour. In the design of Charles the Fifth, for the Conquest of Provence, he had no less than 50000 in the Field, and in that of Philip the second, for the reducing of Flanders, the Duke of Alva had an Army, at his first setting forward out of Italy, consisting of 8800 Spanish Foot, and 1200 Horse; all of them old experienced Souldiers, drawn out of Naples, Sicily, and the Dutchy of Milan; 3600 German Foot, 300 Lances, and 100 Harquebusers on Horse back, of the County of Burgundy; all old Souldiers also: besides many Volunteers of great rank and quality, very well attended, and his old standing Army in the Belgick Provinces: a Strength sufficient to have conquered a far greater Country.

Of standing Forces in this Country, he maintaineth in these Realms of Spain, but three thousand Horse; and in his Forts and Garrisons, no more than 8000 Foot: his Garrisons being very few, and those upon the Frontiers only, and in Maritime Towns: his Gallies served with Slaves out of Turkey and Barbary. And yet he is able, on occasion, to raise very great Forces; partly, because the ordinary Subjects are so well affected to their Prince, whom they never mention without reverence: and partly in regard there is so great a number of Fendatories and Noble-men, who are by Tenure, to serve personally at their own charges, for defence of the Realm. And certainly, it must be a considerable Force which the Noblemen of Spain are able to raise, considering the greatness of their Revenue, and the number of Vassals which live under them: it being supposed, that the Dukes of Spain (of which there were 23 when my Author lived) were able, one with another, to dispend yearly from 5000 Ducats, to 100000; some going very much above that proportion; and that of 36 Marquesses, and 50 Earls, the poorest had 10000 Ducats of yearly Rent; and so ascending unto 50 and 60000. The Arch-bishops, Bishops, and others of the greater Clergy, being all endowed with fairer Temporal Estates, than in most places in Europe, are also bound to serve (though not personally) on the like occasions. And to these services the Noblemen are for two reasons more forwards than the other Fendatories: 1. Because their Honours descend not de jure from the Father to the Son, unless confirmed to the Son by the Kings acknowledgment and compellation, which makes them more observant of him, than in France or England, where it is challenged as a Birth-right. 2. Because out of the gross body of these Noblemen, the King doth use to honour some with the title of Grandes, privileged to stand covered before the King, and to treat with him as their Brother: which being the highest Honour which that State can yield, keeps those great persons inreadiness to obey his pleasure, in hope to come to an Honour of so high esteem.

For the Revenues of this King, which ordinarily arise out of his Estates (taking Portugal into the Account) they are computed at Eleven Millions of Crowns yearly; that is to say, four from his Dominions in Italy, two from Portugal and the Appertinents thereof, three from the West-Indies, and the other two remaining, from his Kingdoms

Kingdoms in Spain. Besides this, he receiveth yearly the Revenues of the Masterships of all the great Orders in his Kingdom, incorporated to the Crown by Ferdinand the Catholic, not without good Policy and reason of State: the Masters (or Commandadors, as they call them) of those federal Orders drawing after them such Troops of the Nobility, Gentry and other dependants; that their power began to be suspected by the Kings themselves. By which addition there accrueh to the Crown (besides the opportunity of preferring Servants of the greatest merit) above 150000 l. of yearly Reins. As for his Casualties and extraordinary ways of raising money, they are very great: reckoned by the Author of the General History of Spain to amount (according to divers Opinions) to 14, 18, and 23 millions of Crowns. For making up of which sum, he puts in the First Fruits, and some part of the Tithes of Rectories; and other Church Prebends, amounting to three millions yearly. And the Author of the Politique Dispute, &c. affirmeth the Pardons sent to the Indies, given him by the Pope, to be worth half a million of pounds yearly. Add herewith the fall and disposal of all Offices, which make up a good round sum; and the free Gifts & Contributions of his Subjects, which amount unto a good Revenue. For the Kingdom of Naples presents him every third year with a million and 20000 Crowns; and Castile only at one time granted a Contribution of four millions, to be paid in four years; his Subjects generally being so well affected unto the Crown, that he can demand nothing in reason of them which they are not ready to grant; the King of Spain being called in that regard by the Emperor Maximilian, the King of Treasures, his expences being very great. First, in keeping Forts and Garrisons in many parts of his Estates against the Revolt of the Natives. Secondly, maintaining so many Frontier places against Foreign Invasions: Thirdly, in the continual pay of an Armada for conducting his Privateers from America. And last of all, the many and unprofitable Wars of King Philip the Second, so plunged the Crown in the Gulfs of Bankers and Money-Changers, that much of the Revenue of it stand engaged for payment to this very day.

There are in Spain
Arch-Bishops 11. Bishops 52.
Universities 18.

Of the OCEAN and ISLES

B, R I T A I N.

BEFORE we can arrive in Britain, the last Western Diocese, we must cross the OCEAN, that ingenit, and infinitum Pelagus, as Mela calls it: in comparison of which, the Seas before mentioned are but as Ponds or Gullets: a Sea in former times known more by fame than trial, and rather wondered at on the shore side, than any more remote place of it. The Romans ventured not on it with their Vessels, unless in the passage from France to Britain: and much famed is Alexander for his hazardous Voyage on this unruly Sea, he having failed in all 400 Furlongs from the shore. The Name and Pedegree take here both from the Poets and Etymologists. The Poets make Oceanus to be the Son of Calum and Vesta, or of Heaven and Earth. They termed him the Father of all things, as Oceanumque Patrem rerum, in Virgil, because moisture was necessarily required to the constitution of all bodies: and usually painted him with a Bulls head on his shoulders, (whence Euclid called him ὠκεανὸς Ταυροκεφαλῆς; Oceanus Taurocephalus) from the howling and fury of the Winds; which from it come to the shore, and to which it is subject. As for the Children attributed unto him, they are doublets nothing but the clouds and vapours hence arising. The name of ὠκεανὸς, Oceanus, some derive from ὠκεῖν, celare, because of its swiftmess; some from ὠκεῖν, findo, divido, because it cleaveth and interlaceth the Earth, And others make it ὠκεανὸς, quasi ὠκεανὸς μαγνὸν ὠκεανόν, a celosier fluendo, which agreeth in meaning with the first. Particular names it hath divers, according to the name of the shore, by which it passeth, as Cantabricus, Galicus, Britannicus, &c. The chief Isles of it appertaining to Europe, besides those called the Azores or Isles of Terceira, which we have spoken of when we were in Portugal; those of the Aquitain Ocean, described in our History of France; those of the Netherlands, and the Northern Seas, which are to be described hereafter in their proper places, are the British Islands: by many of the most ancient and approved Writers called simply BRITAIN, because united all in that common notion, though afterwards distinguished into the particular appellations of Great Britain, Ireland, and the rest. Of which, as lying in my way betwixt Spain and Germany; or rather as the next Diocese of the Empire to France and Spain, under the Prefidian Præsidium of Gaul, I am next to speak.

OF BRITAIN.

BRITAIN, according to the largest latitude of that name and notion, comprehendeth all those Islands both great and less, which lie in compass about Albion, or Britain properly so called: by Ptolemy called Britannia, in the plural number. For speaking of France he thus subjoineth, Ex adverso hujus Britannia Insula, Albion ipsi nomen fuit, cum Britannia omnes vocarentur, i. e. Opposite hereto lieth the Island of Britain, which formerly by a more proper name was called Albion, the name of Britain comprehending all the Isles adjoining. And in this latitude and extent we now take the word; the whole dominion of these Islands, distinguished into several names, being united in the person and under the command of the King of Great Britain: that name including all the rest, as appendants of it; with reference to this called the Isles of Brittain, or the British Islands. Thus Aristotle in his Book De Mundo (if the Book be his) Quo in mari due Insule Britannicae sitae sunt, quarum maxima Albion & Ierna; i. e. In which Sea there are situate two British Islands of great note and compass, Albion (or Britain properly so called) and Ireland. Ptolemy going to work more punctually, and he states it thus; Completur prima hae Europa: tabula dicit Britannicas insulas, quas Dionysius Britannides vocat, Hiberniam nempe & Albionem, cum minoribus aliquot adjacentibus insulis, ut sunt Orcaades, Ebudae, Thyne, Mona, & reliquae suis nominibus expressae: that is to say, This first Table of Europe, comprehendeth the two Islands of Brit- tain, which Dionysius calls the Britanides, namely Ireland and Albion, with some lesser Islands joining to it, as the Orcaades, the Hebrides, Thule, Anglesy, (or Man) and others called by distinct names. By which we see, first, that the general name of Britain or British Islands comprehendeth all those which are situate in the British Ocean: and secondly, that the greatest and most famous of them, more specially called Britain by the following Writers, was anciently called Albion by its proper name. And it was called Albion, as many Authors tell me, either from Albion the Brother of Borgion, the Son of Neptunus, mentioned by Aeschylus, Dionysius, Strabo, Mela, Salmasius, Pliny, and others; it being not improper, that the greatest Island of the Ocean, should be denominated from a Son of the greatest Sea-god: or from the old word Albus, signifying White amongst the Greeks (from whence the Latines had their Albion), by reason of the white chalky Cliffs, seen by the Mariners afar off as they failed those Seas.

But to return again to Britain in the general notion, and to the several Islands which that name includeth, we may distinguish them into the Greater and the Lesser: the Greater subdivided into 1. Great Britain, or Britain properly so called, and 2. Ireland; the Lesser, 1. the Orcaades, 2. the Hebrides, 3. Man, 4. Anglesy, 5. the Islands of the Scotia Sea, 6. the Scoringer, or Isles of Sailly, 7. Wight, 8. Thanet, 9. Sunderland, and 10. Holy Island.

GREAT BRITAIN.

TO speak much of GREAT BRITAIN or BRITAIN specially and properly so called, I hold somewhat superfluous, it being our home, and we therefore no strangers to it. Yet as Mela once said of Italy, De Italia, magni quia ordo exigit, quam quia monstrari egeat, parca dicentur; nota sunt omnia; so say I of Britain. It is so obvious to the eye of every Reader, that he needs not the spectacles of Letters. Yet something must be said, though for methods sake, rather than necessity. First then, we will begin with laying out the bounds thereof (as in other places); which are, on the East, the German Ocean, dividing it from Belgium, Germany, and Danemark; on the West, S. Georges Channel, which divides it from Ireland; and to the North of that, with the main Perigian or Western Ocean, of which the Ancients knew no shore; on the North, with the Hyperborean or Donsaledonian Ocean, as Ptolemy calls it, extending out to Island, Freezeland, and the ends of the then known World; and on the South, the English Channel, which divides it from France.

The length herof from North to South, is reckoned at 620 Italian miles; the greatest breadth from East to West, measured in a right line, no more than 250 of the same miles, but by the crooks and bendings of the Sea-Coast, come to 320 miles: the whole circumference accounted 1836 miles. The greatest Island in the World, except Java, Borneo, Sumatra, and Madagascar; and therefore by Solinus and some other Ancients (to whom those Islands were not known) called the Other World: by others of late times, the Lady and Mistress of the Seas. Situate under the 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th, and 12th, Climes: so that the longest day at the Lizard point in Cornwall, (being the most Southern part herof) containeth 26 hours and a quarter; at Barnick which is the Border of England and Scotland, 17 hours 3 quarters, and one hour more at Straitly head, in the North of Scotland; where some observe that there is scarce any night at all in the Summer Solstice, but a darker Twilight. To which alludes the Poet, saying, Et minima continet nocte Britannos: and the Panegyrist in the time of Constantine, amongst other commendations which he gives to Britain, faith, that therein is neither extreme cold in Winter, nor any scorching heats in Summer, and that which is most comfortable, Long days, and very lightsome nights. Nor doth the Panegyrist tell us only of the temperateness of the air, or the length of the days; but of the fruitfulness of the soil: "affirming Britain, to be blessed with all the commodities of Heaven and Earth; such an abundant plenty of Corn, as might suffice both for Bread and Wine; the Wood thereof without wild Beasts, the Fields without noisome Serpents, infinite number of milch Beasts, and Sheep weighed down with their own Fleeces. Whence add that of Alfred of Beverly, a Poet of the middle times, saying thus of Britain.

Insula praedives, quae toto vix eget orbe;

Et cibus totus indiget orbis ope.

Insula praedives, cibus miratur & optet

A wealthy Island, which no help desires,
Yet all the world supply from her requires;

Able

Able to glut King SOLOMON with pleasures.
And furnish great Augustus with her treasures.

Proceed we next to the name of Britain; of which I find many Etymologies, some forced, some fabulous and foolish, and but few of weight. That which hath passed for current in former times, (when almost all Nations did pretend to be of Trojan race) was that it took this name from Brutus, affirmed to be the Son of Silvius, who was the Grandchild of Aeneas, and the third King of the Latines of the Trojan blood. Which Brutus having unfortunately killed his Father, and thereupon abandoning Italy with his Friends and Followers: after a long voyage and many wanderings, is said to have fallen upon this Island, to have conquered here a race of Giants; and having given unto it the name of Britain, to leave the Sovereignty thereof unto his posterity, who quietly enjoyed the same, till subdued by the Romans. This is the sum of the Tradition concerning Brute: which though received in the darker times of ignorance, and too much credulity; in these more learned days hath been laid aside, as false and fabulous. And it is proved that there was no such man as Brutus, 1. From the newness of his Birth, Gustafus of Moemouth, who lived in the reign of King Henry the second, being the first Author which makes mention of him: for which immediately questioned by Newbrigensius, another Writer of that Age. 2. By the silence of all the Roman Historians, in whom it had been an unpardonable negligence to have omitted an Accident so remarkable, as the Killing of a Father by his own Son (especially when they wanted matter to fill up the times) and the erecting of a new Trojan Empire in so great an Island. 3. By the Arguments which Cesar useth to prove the Britains to be derived from the Galls; as Speech, Laws, Customs, Dispositions, Manners; and the like. 4. And lest it might be said, that though the Britains in Cesars time were of Gallick race, yet there had been a more ancient people, who had their Original from the Trojans, Tacitus putteth off that dispute with an Ignoramus: Qui mortales initio coheruit, parum conpertum est, faith that knowing Writer. And 5. By the Testimony of all Roman Historians, who tell us that Cesar found the Britains under many Kings, & never under the command of one sole Prince, but in times of danger. Strenua Belli administrandi communis consensu commissa est Caesarellanus, as it is in Cesar: Dum singuli pagantur, universi vincuntur, as we read in Tacitus. To omit therefore that of Brutus, and other Etyms as unlikely, but of less authority: the name of Britain is most probably derived from Brit, which in the Ancient British signifieth Faint; and the word Tain, signifieth a Nation: agreeable unto the custom of the ancient Britains, who used to discolour and paint their bodies, that they might seem more terrible in the eyes of their enemies. Britain is then a Nation of painted men; such as the Romans called Picti in the times ensuing. Which I prefer before the Etymologie of Bochartus, a right Learned man, but one that wresteth all originations to the Hebrew, or Phoenician language: by whom this Island is called Britain or Britannica, from Britan-nae, signifying in that Language a Land of Tyone, wherewith the Western parts of it do indeed abound. Other particulars concerning the life of Britain, shall be observed in the description of those parts into which it now doth stand divided, that is to say, 1. England, 2. Wales, and 3. Scotland.

ENGLAND.

ENGLAND is bounded on the East with the German, on the West with the Irish; on the South with the British Oceans; and on the North, with the Rivers of Tweed and Salway; by which parted from Scotland; environed with turbulent Seas, guarded by inaccessible Rocks; and where those want, preserved against all foreign Invasions by strong Ports and a puissant Navy.

In former time the Northern limits did extend as far as Edinburgh Wryth on the East, and the Fryth of Dunbarton on the West, (for so far not only the Roman Empire, but the Kingdom of Northumberland did once extend:) the intervening space being shut up with a Wall of Turis by Lollius Urbicus, in the time of Antonius Pius. But afterwards, the Romans being beaten back by the Barbarous people, the Province was contracted within narrow bounds; and fortified with a Wall by the Emperor Severus, extending from Carlisle to the River Tyne, the track wall so made, that at every mile end there is said to have been a Castle, between every Castle many Watch-Towers; and betwixt every Watch-Tower a Pipe of Brass, conveying the least noise unto one another without interruption; so that news of any approaching enemy was quickly over all the Borders, and resistance accordingly provided. In following times the strong Towns of Barnick, and Carlisle, have been the chief Bars, by which we kept the back door shut; and as for other Ports, we had scarce any on the Frontiers, or Sea-Coasts of the Kingdom; though in the midland parts too many. Which being in the hands of potent and factious Subjects, occasioned many to rebel; and did create great trouble to the Norman Kings, till in the later end of the Reign of King Stephen, 1100 of them were levelled to the very ground, and those few which remained dismantled, and made unserviceable. The Maritime parts were thought sufficiently assured by those Rocks and Cliffs, which compass the Island in most parts; and hardly any Cattle all along the shore, except that of Dover; which was therefore counted by the French, as the Key of England. But in the year 1538, King Henry the Eighth, considering how he had offended the Emperor Charles the Fifth, by his Divorce from Queen Katherine; and incurred the displeasure of the Pope, by his falling off from that Sec; as also that the French King had not only married his Son to a Niece of the Pope, but a Daughter of the King of Scots; thought fit to provide for his own safety, by building in all places where the shore was most plain and open, Castles, Platforms, and Block-Houses; many of which in the long time of Peace ensuing were much neglected and in part ruined.

His Daughter Queen Elizabeth of happy memory, provided yet better for the Kingdom. For then not only fortified Portsmouth, and placed in it a strong Garrison; but walled the Kingdom round with a most stately, royal, and invincible Navy: with which she always commanded the Seas, and vanquished the mightiest Monarch of Europe; whereas her Predecessors in their Sea Service, for the most part, hired their Men of War, from the Hansemen, and Genoese. Yet did neither of these erect any Castles in the the inward part of the Realm: herein imitating Nature, who forthwith the head and the feet only, not the middle of Beasts; or some Captain of a Fort, who plants all his Ordnance on the Walls, Bulwarks, and Outworks; leaving the rest by these sufficiently guarded.

The whole Island was first called Albion, as before is said, either from the Giant Albion, or ab albis rupibus, the white Rocks towards France. Afterwards it was called Britain, which name being first found in Aethonius, amongst the Grecians and in Lucretius and Cæsar, amongst the Latines; followed herein by Strabo, Pliny, and all other ancient Writers, except Plutarch only, by whom called Albion as at first; continued till the time of Egbert the first Saxon Monarch, who called the Southern parts of the Island by the name of England, from the Angles, who with the Jutes and Saxons conquered it.

It is in length 320 miles, enjoying a soil equally participating of ground fit for tillage and pasture: yet to pasture more than to tillage are our people addicted, as a course of life not requiring to many helpers, which must be all fed and paid; and yet yielding more certain profits. Hence in former times Husbandry began to be neglected, Villages depopulated, and Hinds for want of entertainment to turn way-beaters: whereof Sir Thomas Moor in his Utopia complaineth; saying, that our Flocks of Sheep had devoured not only men, but whole houses and Towns. Over (saith he) que tam inter esse, tam exiguo solent ali; namque tam videri, & indomiti esse capere, ut homines devent iam feræ, agros, domos, oppida vastent, ac depopulentur. To prevent this mischief, there was a Statute made in the Fourth year of Henry the Seventh, against the converting of Arable Land into Pasture ground; by which course Husbandry was again revived, and the soil made so abounding in Corn, that a dear year is seldom heard of. Our Vines are nipped with the cold, and seldom come to maturity, and are more used for the pleasantness of the shade, than for the hopes of Wine. Most of her other plenty and Ornaments, are expressed in this old Verse following;

Anglia, 1. Mons, 2. Pons, 3. Fons, 4. Ecclesia, 5. Famina, 6. Lانا.

That is to say,

For 1. Mountains, 2. Bridges, 3. Rivers, 4. Churches fair,
5. Women, and 6. Wool, England is past compare.

1. For the Mountains lifting up here and there their lofty heads, and giving a gallant prospect to the lower Grounds; the principal are those of Mendip in Somerset, Malden Hills in Worcestershire, the Chiltern of Buckinghamshire, Colnwood in Gloucestershire, the Peak of Derbyshire, Tork Woods, &c. All of them either bowelled with Mines, or clothed with Sheep, or adorned with Woods. The exact description of which, would require more time than I can spend upon that subject. Proceed we therefore to

2. The Bridges, which are in number 875. The chief of which are, the Bridge of Rechofer over Medway, the Bridge of Bristol over Avon, and the Bridge of London over Thames. This last standing upon 19 Arches of wonderful strength and largeness, supporteth continual ranges of Buildings, seeming rather a Street than a Bridge; and is not to be paralleled with any Bridge of Europe, though of late by some defacement made by fire, Anno 1632, the Buildings are not so contiguous, as they were before,

3. The Rivers of this Country are in number 325. The chief is Thamesis, compounded of two Rivers, Thame and Ips; whereof the former rising somewhat beyond Thame in Buckinghamshire, and the latter beyond Cyrus in Gloucestershire, meet together about Dunelm in Oxfordshire: the issue of which happy conjunction is the Thamesis or Thames. Hence it flyeth between Berky, Buckinghamshire, Middlesex, Surrey, Kent, and Essex; and so wadeth himself to the Kenilth Medway, in the very jaws of the Ocean. This glorious River feeleth the violence of the Sea more than any River in Europe; ebbing and flowing twice a day, more than 60 miles: about whose Banks are so many fair Towns, and Princely Palaces, that a German Poet thus truly spoke,

*Tot campor, sylvas, tot regia tellus, tot hortos,
Artifici excoluit destra, tot vidimus arces;
Ut nunc Antonio Thamili cum Tibride ceteris.*

We saw so many Woods and Princely Towers,
Sweet Fields, brave Palaces and stately Towers:
So many Gardens drest'd with curious care,
That Thames with Royal Tibor may compare.

The second River of note, is Sabrin or Severn. It hath its beginning in Plinlimmon Hill in Montgomeryshire, and his end about seven miles from Bristol: wathing in the mean space, the Walls of Shrewsbury, Worcester, and Gloucester. 3. Trent, so called, for that 30 kind of Fishes are found in it, or that it receiveth 30 lesser Rivers; who having his Fountain in Staffordshire, and gliding through the Countries of Nottingham, Lincoln, Leicester, and Tork, augmenteth the turbulent current of Humber, the most violent stream of all the Isle. Yet Humber is not, to say truth, a distinct River, having a spring-head of his own, but rather the mouth or Altarium of divers Rivers here confluent and meeting together, namely, Toune, Darrent, and especially Ouse and Trent. And as the Danm, having received into its Chanal the Rivers Drave, Sarus, Tibiscus, and divers others, changeth his name into Ister: So also the Trent, receiving and meeting the waters above named, changeth his name into that of Humber; Abus, the old Geographers call it. 4. Medway, a Kenilth River, famous for harbouring the Royal Navy. 5. Tuvede, the North-East bound of England, on whose Northern bank is seated the strong & impregnable Town of Barnick. 6. Tine, famous for New-Castle, and her inexhaustible Coal-pits. These and the rest of Principal ones are thus comprehended in one of Mr. Drayton Sonnets:

Our Flood Queen Thames for Ships and Swans is crown'd,
And fiately Severn for her shore is prais'd,
The Crystal Trent for Fords and Fish renowned,
The Avon fame to Albion Cliffs is rais'd.
Carlegion Chiffer vaunts her holy Des,
Tork many Wonders of her Ouse can tell,
The Peak her Dove, whose Banks so fertile be,
And Kent will say her Medway doth excel.
Cotswold commends her Ips to the Thames,
Our Northern Borders boast of Tuvede fair flood;
Our Western parts extol their Willis Fame,
And the old Lea brags of Danish blood.

4. The Churches, before the general suppression of Abbies, and spoiling the Church Ornaments, were most exquisite: the chief remaining, are 1. the Church of St. Paul founded by Eihelbert King of Kent, in the place where once was a Temple consecrated to Diana: A Fair brick of the largest dimensions of that kind of any in the Christian World. For whereas the so much celebrated Temple of S. Sophia in Constantinople hath but 260 foot in length, and 75 in breadth: this S. Paul is 690 foot long, and 130 foot broad, the main body being 102 foot high, over which the Steeple of the Church was mounted 482 foot more.

Which Steeple being made with Timber, and covered with Lead, was by the carelessness of the Sexton, in the fifth year of the Reign of Q. Elizabeth, consumed with fire, which happening in a thundering and tempestuous day, was by him confidently affirmed to be done by Lightning, and was so generally believed till the hour of his death: but not many years since to disabuse the world, he confest the truth of it; on which discovery, the burning of St. Paul's Steeple by Lightning, was left out of our Common Almanacks; where formerly it stood amongst the ordinary Epoche, or accounts of time. A Church of such a gallant Prospect, and so large dimensions, that had not the late reparation of it been discontinued, it would have been the stately and most majestic Fabrick in the Christian World. 2. The Collegiate Church of S. Peter in Wolmister, (wherein I have the honour to be a Prebendary) famous for the Inauguration and the Sepulture of the Kings of England, the Tombs whereof are the most sumptuous, and the Chapel the most accurate piece of Building in Europe. 3. The Cathedral Church at Lincoln. 4. For a private Church, that of Radcliff in Bristol. 5. For a private Chapel, that of Kings College in Cambridge. 6. For curious Workmanship of the Glass, that of Christ-Church in Canterbury. 7. For the exquisite beauty of the Fronts, those of Wells and Peterborough. 8. For a pleasant lightroom Church, the Abbey Church at Bath. 9. For an ancient and reverend Fabrick, the Minister of Tork. And 10. to comprehend the rest in one, our Lady-Church in Salisbury, of which take these Verses,

*Mira enim; sedes quæ continet annus, in una
Tum tuorum, 4, ferunt, ade fenestram micat.
Marmoris, tunc fusa tot ab arte columnas,
Compositis horis quæ vagus annus habet.
Totus patens portæ, quæ mensuris annus abundat.
Res mira, at veras celebrata fide.*

How many days in one whole year there be,
So many Windows in one Church we see
So many marble Pillars there appear,
As there are hours throughout the fleeting year.
So many Gates as Moons one year do view;
Strange tale to tell, yet not so strange as true.

5. The Women generally are more handsome than in other places, sufficiently endowed with natural beauties, without the addition of adulterate Sophistifications. In an absolute Woman, say the Italians, are required the parts of a Dutch Woman, from the girdle downwards; of a French Woman, from the girdle to the shoulders; over which must be placed an English face. As their beauties, so also are their Privileges the greatest of any Nations neither so servilely submissive as the French, nor so jealously guarded as the Italian: but keeping for true decorum, that as England is termed the Purgatory of Servants, and the Hell of Hosts; so it is acknowledged the Paradise of Women. And it is a common by-word among the Italians, that if there were a Bridge built over the Narrow Sea, all the Wives of Europe would run into England. For here they have the upper hands in the streets, the upper place at the Table, the thirds of their Husbands estates, and their equal share in all Lands, yet even such as are holden in Knights-service: Privileges wherewith other Women are not acquainted. Of high esteem in former times amongst foreign Nations, for the modesty and gravity of their conversation, but of late times so much addicted to the light garb of the French, that they have lost much of their ancient honour and reputation amongst the knowing and more sober men of foreign Countries, who before admired them.

6. The Wool of England, is of exceeding fineness, especially that of Cotswold in Gloucestershire; that of Long-ster in Hampshire; and of the Isle of Wight. Of this Wool are made excellent Broad-cloths, dispersed all over the World, especially Hig-Germany, Muscovy, Turky, and Pessia, to the great benefit of the Realm: as well in return of so much money which is made of them, as in setting to work so many poor people, who from it receive sustenance. Before the time of King Edward the third, English men had not the art, or neglected the use of making Cloth: till whose time our Wool was transported unwrought. And as his Successors have laid impositions on every Cloth fold out of the Realm; his Predecessors had, as their occasions required, some certain Customs granted on every cake of Wool. In the beginning of this Edward's Wars with France, the Cities and Towns of Flanders being then even to admiration rich, combined with him, and aided him in his Wars against that King. And he for his part by the composition then made, was to give them 140000 l. ready money to aid them by Sea and Land, if need required, and to make Bruges, then one of the great Mart-Towns of Christendom, the Staple for his Wools. Here the Staple continued 15 years, at which time the Flemmings having broke off from the Kings; and he having by experience seen what the benefit of those Staples were, removed them from Bruges into England. And for the ease as well of his Subjects in bringing their Wools unto the Ports, as of such Foreign Merchants that came to buy; he placed his Staples at Excester, Bristol, Winchester, Wolmister, Chichester, Canterbury, Norwich, Lincoln, Tork, and Newcastle, for England; at Caermarthen for Wales; and at Dublin, Waterford, Cork, and Tredagh, for Ireland. He further enacted, that no English, Irish, or Welsh-men should transport this Staple commodity, no not by Licence (if any fish should be granted) on pain of Condemnation, and Imprisonment during the Kings pleasure. Lastly, he allured over hither divers Flemmings, which taught our men the making of Cloths; (who are now grown the best Cloth-workers in the World;) and to encourage them in that Art; it was by a Statute of the 27th of Edward the third, Enacted to be Felony, to carry any Wools unwrought. When England had some short time enjoyed the benefit of these Staples, the King removed them to Calice, which he had conquered, and desired to make wealthy: From hence they were at several times and occasions translated, now to one, now to another Town in Belgium: and happy was that Town, in what Country soever, where the English kept a house for this Traffic; the consequence of all people thither to buy, infinitely enriching it. Antwerp in Brabant long enjoyed the English Merchants, till upon some discontents between King Henry the Seventh, and Maximilian Arch-Duke and Lord of Belgium, they removed: but at their return again, were received by the Antwerpians, with solemn Procession, Princely Triumph, sumptuous Feasts, rare Banquetings, and other expressions of much Love, but more Joy. And giving of some Cotswold Sheep by Edward the Fourth, to Henry of Castile, and John of Aragon, An. 1465, is counted one of the greatest prejudices, that ever happened to this Kingdom.

The Wool transported bringeth into the Kingdom no less than 1500000 l. and the Lead half the sum, so that

Levis Guicciardine reporteth. That before the Wars of the Low-Countries, the Flemings and the English bartered Wares yearly to the value of 12 Millions of Crowns.

The next commodity to the Wool, though not mentioned in the verse foregoing, are the rich and inexhaustible Mines of Cole, Lead, and Tin: to say nothing of the Mines of Iron, as bringing more damage to the publick by the spoil of Woods, than profit to particular persons in the increase of their estates. The Mines of Cole, chiefly enrich Newcastle in Northumberland, and by that the great City of London, and many other good Towns besides: which could not possibly subsist in this general decay of Woods, and neglect of planting, but by this Commodity. The Mines of Lead are most considerable in the Peak of Derbyshire; those of Tin in Cornwall, where they dig Tin not much inferior to Silver in itself. A Commodity which brought great wealth to England in former times, the art of making it not being elsewhere known in Europe, till once the Tin-workers, flying out of England for a Murder, passed into Germany, Ann. 1240. and there discovered some Tin-Mines in Misnia, not known before, and set on foot that Trade amongst them, to the great prejudice (saith my Author) of the Earls of Cornwall, who had before the sole Monopoly of that useful metal.

To these particulars being matters of profit and necessity, if I would add such things as are for delight and pleasure, I might subjoin the Bulls and Parks; for which this Kingdom is as eminent among Foreign Nations; as for any of those mentioned in the said old Verse. The Bulls for many, tunable, and of such excellent Melody to a Musical car (brought more to the command of the skilful ringer than in former times) that is thought there are more good Kings of Bulls in this part of the Island than in half Christendom besides. Parks more in England than in all Europe. The first of which kind for the indulging of Venison, being that of Windsor, made by King Henry the first: whose example being followed by his Successors, and the Lords and great men of the Realm; the number so increased in a little time, that at the last, besides 55 Forrests, and 300 Chafers, there were reckoned 745 Parks in England; all well replenished either with Red or Falow Deer.

And that the Deer might graze with pleasure, and the Sheep with safety, great care was taken by our Progenitors for the destruction of Wolves. I know it hath been a tradition of old Writers, That England never had any Wolves at all, and that they would not live here brought from other places: but it is not so: here being force of them, till Edward King of England commuted the 20 l. of Gold, 300 l. of Silver, and 500 head of Cattel imposed as a yearly tribute by King Albion upon Idwallo Prince of Wales; for the like yearly tribute of 300 Wolves: by which means they were quite rooted out in time, the Welsh protesting at the last they could find no more.

The Air of this Country is very temperate, neither so hot as France and Spain in the Summer, because of its Northerly situation; nor so cold in the Winter, because the air of this Kingdom being gross, cannot so free penetrate as the thin air of those Countries. For to say truth, the air in the Winter time is thick and foggy, cloudy, and much disposed to mists; especially near the Sea, and the greater Rivers: inasmuch that many times, the Sun is not seen to shine out clearly for some weeks together. And thereupon there goeth a tale, that the great Countess of Castile being Ambassador to King James in the first Winter of his reign, and tarrying here about a month, is said not to have seen the Sun all the time of his stay; which occasioned him at his going on ship-board, to desire such Lords and Gentlemen as attended him thither, to perform his humble service to the King their Master, and to the blessed Sun of Heaven when they should see him. And something also touching the temperature of the Air, may be ascribed unto the Winds, which participating of the Seas, over which they pass unto us, do carry with them a temperate warmth.

But if warmth were all the benefit we received from the Seas, It might indeed be said, that we were come from Gods blessing into the warm Sun; but it is not so. For there are no Seas in Europe that yield more plenty of Fish than ours. Our Oysters were famous in the times of the old Romans, and our Herrings are now very beneficial unto the Netherlands, to whom, the English-men, referring to themselves a kind of Royalty, (for the Dutch by Custom demand liberty to fish, off Scarborough Castle in Yorkshire) have yielded up the commodity; by which those States are exceedingly enriched, and our Nation much impoverished and condemned for laziness and sloth. Besides the loss of employment for many men, who using this trade might be a fennery of good and able Mariners, as well for the Wars, as for further Navigations and discoveries, cannot but be very prejudicial to the strength and flourishing of the Common-wealth and Empire of England.

But to make this appear more fully in all particulars, I shall extract some passages out of a M.S. discourse of the late Learned Knight Sir John Burroughs, principal King of Arms by the name of Carter, entitled, The Sovereignty of the British Seas. By which it doth appear, that there is fishing in those Seas for Herrings, Pilchards, Cod, Ling, or other Fish, at all times of the year: and that to in plentiful manner, that not long since near Mineral on the Coasts of Devonshire, 500 Ton of Fish was taken in one day, and 3000 pounds-worth in another, near S. Ives in Cornwall; the Hollanders taking at one draught 20 Last of Herrings.

Secondly, That almost all Nations hereabouts, as French, Spaniards, Netherlands, and those of the Haps, do mightily improve themselves both in power & wealth, by the benefit of the English Fishing; inasmuch as 10000 Sail of English Vessels (of which 1400 from the Town of London in East Frisland only) are thought to be maintained by this Trade alone.

Thirdly, That the Hollanders in particular employ yearly 8000 Vessels of all sorts for this Trade of Fishing on our Coasts, whereby they have a Seminary of 15000 Sailors and Mariners, ready for any publick service: all which maintain treble that number of Men, Women, and Children, of several Trades upon the Land.

Fourthly, That for the holding up of this Trade, the said Hollanders, inhabiting a Tract of Land not so big as many of our Shires, do build 10000 Sail of Ships yearly; and thereby furnishing all the parts of the world (even as far as Brasil) with our Commodities; returning home those of other Countries in exchange thereof, which they sell to us many times at their own prices.

Fifthly, That the said Hollanders (as appeared upon computation) made in one year of the Herrings only, caught upon these Coasts, the sum of 5 Millions of Cat-pounds, (the Customs and tenth Fish advancing to the publick Treasury no less than 800000 l. Sterling;) it being thought, that the Herrings caught by those of the Hanse Towns, and other Nations, amount to as great a sum as that.

Sixthly, and finally, That by erecting only 250 Buffs, (Vessels of great Bulk and Stowage, but not swift of sail) for the Herring Fishing, (which is not a sixth part of those which are employed yearly by the Hollanders) either at the publick charge of the State of England, or private Adventurers thereto authorized and regulated, there would be found employment yearly for 1000 ships; and at least 20000 Mariners and Fishers at Sea, and consequently for as many Tradefmen and Labourers at Land; by means whereof, besides the vindication of our credit now as such a loss, there would arise in Customs, Tonnage, Poundage, and other Impots, no less than 300000 l. per Annum to the publick Treasury. The prosecution of which Project (if not in greater proportion than that before) as it was once designed by Mr. Attorney Noy, my much honoured Friend: so do I heartily commend it to the Care of the State, and to his Successors in that Office, as the fittest remembrancers to advance it: there being no readier way than this to make the people wealthy, and the Nation formidable.

For notwithstanding these advantages of Fish, the Diet of England is, for the most part Flesh; in London only there are no fewer than 67500 Beefs, and 675000 Sheep slain, and uttered in a year, besides Calves, Lambs, Hogs, Hens, and Poulterers ware. To prove this, suppose there be in London 60 Butchers Free of the City, wherof every one and one with another, killeth an Oxe a day, as at least they do. Then reckon (as the London Butchers do affirm) that the Foreigners in the Suburbs and Villages sell four for their own. Lastly, count for every Oxe ten Sheep, (for this is also certainly known) to be killed and sold, and (for have both the numbers above-mentioned. The Earl of Goodman, once the Spanish Linger here, having in some several Market days seen the several Shambles of this great City, said to them who made the discovery with him: That there was more flesh eaten in a month in that Town, than in all Spain in a year. Now had I his skill who by the length of Hercules Foot, found out the proportion of his whole body, I might by this provision of flesh consumed in the head-queets at the quantity of that which is spent in the body of the Realm. But this I leave to be determined by an able hand. The usual and natural drink of the Country is Beer, so called from the French word Boire, (for Wines they have none of their own growing, as before is said) which, without controversy, is a most wholesome and nourishing Beverage: and being transported into France, Belgium, and Germany, by the working of the Sea is so purged, that it is amongst them in highest estimation; celebrated by the name of la bonne Biere d'Angleterre. And as for the old drink of England, Ale, which cometh from the Danish word Oela, it is questionless in itself, (and without that commixture which some are accused to use with it) a very wholesome drink; howsoever it pleased a Poet in the time of Henry the Third, thus to decant on it:

*Nescio quid monstrum Stygie conforme paludi,
Cervicium plerumque vocant; nil sibi ista
Dum bibitur, nil clarius est dum minguitur; ergo
Constat, ac quod nullas fecces in ventre relinquit.*

In English thus;

Of this strange drink so like the Stygian Lake,
Men call it Ale, I know not what to make.
Folk drink it thick, and piss it very thin;
Therefore much Drugs must needs remain within.

Now to conclude this general discourse concerning England, there goes a tale, that Henry the seventh (whose breeding had been low and private) being once pressed by some of his Council, to pursue his title unto France, returned this Answer: That France indeed was a flourishing and gallant Kingdom; but England in his mind was a fine Seat for a Country Gentleman, as any could be found in Europe.

Having said thus long in taking a Survey of the Country it self, together with the chief commodities and pleasures of it; and amongst them of the Women also, (as the method of the old Verse led me on:) it is now time that we should look upon the men. And they are commonly of a comely feature, gracious countenance, for the most part gray-eyed, pleasant, beautiful, bountiful, courteous, and much resembling the Italians in habit and pronunciation. In matters of War, (as we are ready to prove) they are both able to endure, and resolute to undertake the hardest enterprises: in peace quiet, and not quarrelsome: in advice or counsel, frank and speedy. Finally, they are active, hearty, and cheerful. And yet I have met with some Gentlemen, who upon the strength of a little travel in France, have grown to be un-Englished (and so affected or besotted rather on the French Nation) that they affirm the English in respect of the French, to be an heavy, dull, and Phlegmatick people; of no dispatch, no mettle, no conceit, no audacity, and I know not what not. A vanity, meriting rather my pity, than my anger. Perhaps in vilifying their Nation, they had consulted with Julius Scaliger, who in the 16. Cap. of his 3d Book De re poetica, giveth of the two most noble Nations, English and Scotch, this bafe and unmanly Character, Gauli belline, Scoti non minus Angli perfidi, ingrati, feri, contempores, stolidi, anestes, inertes, imphibitales, immanes. His bolt (you see) is soon shot, and so you may happily guess at the quality of the Archer. A man indeed of an able learning, but of his own worth so highly conceited, that if his too much learning made him not mad, yet it made him to be too peremptory and arrogant. To revenge a National disgrace on a Personal, is an ignoble victory. Besides Socrates resolution in the like kind in my opinion was very judicious, et de se ipso habebat, sibi deus dixit, et deus vero. If an Ale kick us, we must not put him in the Court. To confuse his sentence in every point, would be to him too great an honour, and for me too great a trouble; it being a task, which of it self would require a Volume. The best is, many shoulders make the burden light; and other Nations are as deeply engaged in this quarrel against that proud Man, as ourself so maliciously hath he there taxed all other people, that that Chapter might more properly have been placed among his Hypercriticks.

How the English and Germans, which of all Nations are thought most given to their bellies do agree and differ in this point; the same Scaliger hath thus shewed in one of his Epigrams.

*Tres sunt Convivae, Germanus, Flander, & Anglus;
Die quis edat melius, quis melius bibat.
Non comedit Germanus, bibis; tu non bibis Angles, Sed comedis; comedis Flandrie, bibisq; bene.*

Dutch, Flemmings, English, are your only guests;
Say which of all doth eat, or drink it best.
Th' English love most to eat, the Dutch to swill,
Only the Flemmings eat and drinks his fill.

Thus was it in his time with the English Nation, though since, I fear we have borrowed too much of the Dutch, and learnt a great deal more than needs of the Flemmings also.

This Nobility of this Country is not of so much unlimited Powers as they are (to the prejudice of the State) in other Countries; the name of Dukes, Earls and Marquesses, being merely titular: whereas in other places they have some absolute or some mixt Government, so that upon any little distails they will stand on their own guard, and fight the power of their Sovereign. And on the other side, the Commonalty enjoy a multitude of Privileges above all other Nations; being most free from Taxes, and burdensome Impositions, but what they take upon themselves by their own consent. They have twice in a year (a laudable custom no where else to be seen) Justice administered even at their own doors, by the Itinerary Judges of the Kingdom: an Order first instituted by King Henry the second. They dwell together with the Gentlemen in Villages, and Towns, which makes them favour of civility and good manners: and live in far greater reputation, than the Yeomen in Italy, Spain, France, or Germany; being able to entertain a stranger honestly, diet him plentifully, and lodge him neatly.

The Clergie was once of very great riches, as appeareth by that Bill preferred to King Henry the fifth, against the temporal Revenues of the Church; in which it was suggested, that they were able to maintain 15 Earls, 1500 Knights, 6000 men of Arms, more than 1000 Almshouses, and yet the King might clearly put up 20000 l. per Annum into his Exchequer. How true this was, I cannot say. But after this, King Henry the eighth took his Opportunities, to pare away the excrencies of it; demolishing the Monasteries, and Religious houses, and paring off the superfluities of Bishopsricks and Cathedral Churches; which he found not a few followers amongst the Ministers and great Officers of State, and Court, in the time of King Edward the sixth, and Queen Elizabeth. Yet left they not the Clergie too poor and naked, or destitute of the encouragements and rewards of learning, but that they have been till the objects of a covetous envy; & that which the former Huipier left them, being thought too much; though for abilities of Learning (I dare boldly say it) not to be parallel'd in the World. For besides 3450 Panishal Benefices, being no Inappropriations; and besides the Vicariages, more of which exceed the competency beyond the Seas; there were left in England at the time of the Reformation under Queen Elizabeth, 26 Bishopsricks, (taking those of Wales into the reckoning) 26 Dioconies, 60 Archidiaconies, and 544 Dignities and Prebends; most of which places of fair Revenue. And as for the maintenance of Priests, Monks, and Friars, before the Reformation, there were reckoned 90 Colleges, besides those in the Universities, 100 Hospitals, 3374 Chantries and Free Chappels, and 645 Abbies and Monasteries; more than half of which had above the yearly income of 200 l. in old Rents, many above 2000, and some 4000 almost. So studious were our Ancestors both in those times of blindness, and these of a clearer light, to encourage men to Learning, and then reward it.

The Souldiery of England is either for the Land or for the Sea. Our Victories by Land are most apparent over the Irish, Scots, Cyprians, Turks, and especially French, whose Kingdom hath been fore taken by the English many times, especially twice by King Edward the Third, and Henry the fifth: this latter making for absolute conquest, that Charles the Seventh, like a poor Roy d'Indes, confined himself to Bourges, where (having callier'd his retinue) he was found in a little Chamber at Supper, with a Napkin only laid before him, a rump of Mutton and two Chickens. And so redoubted even after our expulsion from France, (our civil dissensions) rather causing that expulsion, than the Frenchmen valour) was the English name in that Country: that in the Wars between King Charles the Eighth, and the Duke of Bretagne, the Duke, to strike a terror into his enemies appalled 1500 of his own Subjects, in the Arms and Cross of England. But as the Als, when he had on the Lions Skin, was for all that but an Als and no Lion: so these Britons, by the weak resistance they made against their Enemies, shew'd that they were indeed Britons, and no Englishmen. Spain also tasted the valour of our Land-Souldiers, when John of Gaunt pursuing his Title to Spain, was sent home with 8 Waggon laden with Gold, and an Annual Pension of 10000 marks; as also when the Black Prince re-established King Peter in his Throne. And then also did they acknowledge, though they felt not the puissance of the English, when Ferdinand the Catholic, (surprised the Kingdom of Navarre. For there were then in Navarra, a Town of Guipuscoa, 6000 English Foot, who lay there to join with this Ferdinand in an Expedition against France. Concerning which, Guicardine giveth this Item, That the Kingdom of Navarre may yield rather for the fear and reputation of the English Forces than were at hand, than by any puissance of the King of Aragon. Since those times the Spaniards much esteemed us, as appeareth by this Speech of theirs to our Souldiers at the Siege of Amiens; Tu es tall Souldier, and therein when you come down to the Trenches, we double our guards, and look for blows; but as for those base and cowardly French, when they come, we make account we have nothing to do, but play, or sleep on our Kampanin. The like the Netherlanders can tell; only this is the grief of it: The English are like Pyrrhus King of Epirus, fortunate to conquer Kingdoms, but unfortunate to keep them. Not to say any thing of the late, but great experience, which the English Souldiery hath gotten by the Civil Broils among themselves; at which my heart fo aketh, and my hand fo trembleth, that I shall only say in the words of Lucan,

*Hæc quantum potuit cæli pelagique parari,
Hæc quæ Civiles fuderunt sanguine dextra!*

That is to say,

How much both Sea and Land might have been gain'd
By their dear blood, which Civil wars have drain'd!

As for their power and valour at Sea, it may evidently be perceived in the Battel of Solufe, wherein King Edward the 3d with 200 Ships, overcame the French Fleet consisting of 300 Sail; of which he sunk 200 and flew 30000 Souldiers. Secondly, at the Battel in 88, wherein a few of the Queens Ships vanquished the invincible Armada of the King of Spain, consisting of 134 great Gallies, and Ships of extraordinary bigness. Sir Francis Drake with 4 Ships took from the Spaniard one million and 18200 Ducats in one Voyage, An. 1587. And again with 25 Ships he awed the Ocean, sacked S. Jago, S. Dominica, and Carthagea carrying away with him, besides Treasure, 240 Pieces of Ordnance. I omit the Circumnavigation of the whole World, by this Drake and Candish, and the voyage to Caler: as also how one of the Queens Ships named the Revenge, in which Sir Richard Greenlee was Captain, with 180 Souldiers (whereof 50 were sick on the ball) maintained a sea fight for 24 hours against above 50 of the Spanish Gallies. And thought last after her Powder was spent to the last barrelle yielded upon honourable terms; yet she was never brought into Spain: having killed in that fight more than 10000 of their Souldiers, and sunk four of their greatest Vessels. I omit also the discovery of the Northern passages, by Hugh Willoughby, Davis, and Frobisher; concluding with that of Kekerman, Hæc certum est, omnibus locis gentibus navigandi industria & peritia superiores esse Angli: & populi Anglos, Hollandos. Though now I know not by what neglect, and discontinuance of those honorable employments the Hollanders begin to be craved of our ancient Glories, and would fain account themselves Lords of the Seas, and probably had been so indeed, had not his Majesty by the timely re-inforcing of his naval Powtr, An. 1636. recovered again the Dominion of it.

The English language is a De-compound of Dutch, French and Latine; which I conceive rather to add to its perfection, than to detract any thing from the worth thereof; since out of every Language we have called the most significant words, and equally participate of that which is excellent in them; their imperfections being rejected. For it is neither so boyterous as the Dutch, nor so effeminate as the French; yet as significant as the Latine, and in the happy conjunction of two words into one little inferior to the Greek.

The Christian Faith was first here planted as some say, by S. Peter and Paul; more probably (as others say) by Joseph of Arimathea, whose body they find to have been interred in the Isle of Avallonia where the Abby of Glastonbury after flood. But that of his plantation being almost rooted out by long Persecutions, and no supply of Preachers sent from other places; Lucius a King of Britain (and the first Christian King of Europe,) An. 180. or thereabouts, sent his Ambassadors to Eleutherius the then Pope of Rome to be furnished with a new supply of Pastors, if not to plant, yet at the least to water, and confirm the Gospel planted here before; but almost rooted out again by prevailing Gentilism. At which time Lucius did not only receive the Faith himself, but by the piety of his example, and the diligence of the first Preachers sent from Rome (being both of them natural Britains) it spread by little and little over all his Dominions; and in some tract of time over all the Island. Which being thus recovered to the Faith of Christ, was forthwith furnished with Bishops and Metropolitans, according to the number of the Provinces and principal Cities (twenty eight in all) continuing here as long as Christianity it self. For not to trust herein to the authority of the British History, we find three Bishops of this Isle subscribing to the Council of Arles, An. 314. viz. Eborius Bishop of Lark, Restinus Bishop of London, and Adelfus Bishop of Colchester, there called Colonia Londinensium and some of them also present in the Council of Sardica, An. 358. concurring with the rest in voting to the condemnation of the Arian Heretics; and the same or others the next year in the Synod of Arimin. And when the Britains were expelled their native Chantry, or shut up in the mountainous parts of the Ordovices, and Silures, which we now call Wales; they carried Christianity and Bishops along with them: Augustine the Monk, finding no fewer than seven Bishops in the British Church, when he was sent by Gregory the Great to convert the English. And yet it is no fabulous vanity, (as some men suppose) to say that Augustine the Monk first preached the Gospel in England: because it must be understood, not with Relation to the Britains, but the English Saxons: from whom these parts of the Isle had the name of England; and from whom both the Britains, and the Faith it self were driven into the Mountains of Wales & Cornwall, and Heathenism introduced again over all the Kingdom. Long after which it pleased God, that Gregory the Great, (but at that time a Deacon only in the Church of Rome) seeing some hand-some youths to be sold in open Market, demanded what and whence they were: to whom it was answered they were Angli: and well may they be so called (saith he) for they seem as Angels. Asking again of what Province they were amongst the Angli; and answer being made of the Province of Deira (part of the Kingdom of the Northumbrians) therefore (saith he) De ira Deus sum liberandi. And lastly understanding that the King of that Nation was named Ale; how fitly (saith he) may he sing Alleluia to the most High God! After which time he seriously endeavoured the Conversion of the English Nation; which being Pope he happily effected, by the travel and diligence of Augustine the Monk, the first Archbishop of Canterbury. And so well did the work prosper after this beginning, that not only all the Saxons did receive the Gospel, but communicated the Light of it to other Nations: the Hassians, Francoburgs and Turingians, being converted by Winfred; the Frisians or Hollanders by Willibrod the first Bishop of Utrecht; the Saxons of Westphalia, by Wladrode, the first Bishop of Breda; all of them being English Saxons, as we find in Brady and Iome others.

Now as these parts of Britain were the first which generally entertained the Gospel, so were they the first also in these later times, which universally submitted to the Reformation of such corruptions, as had been brought upon them by the power and tyranny of the Church of Rome. Endeavoured first in France, by the Alloings, and Waldenses, as was said before. Who being suppressed and ruined by the Sword of the King of France, thrust themselves in the mountainous parts of Gascogne and Guienne, then in possession of the English, who by that means became acquainted with their Doctrines: maintained here publicly by Wiclif, and spreading under-hand amongst the people of this Kingdom, till the times of Luther and the Reformation by him aimed at. Which being in most other Countries received tumultuously, by the power of the people; was here admired upon mature deliberation, by the authority and consent of the Prince and Prelates: the Archbishops in this great work, without respect unto the Dictates of Luther or Calvin, looking only on Gods Word and the Primitive Patterns, abolishing such things as were repugnant unto either, but still retaining such Ceremonies in Gods public worship, as were agreeable to both, and had been countenanced by the practice of the Primitive times. A point wherein they did observe a greater measure of Christian prudence and moderation, than their neighbour Churches; which in a more detestation of the See of Rome, allowed of nothing which had formerly been in use amongst them, because defiled with Papish Errors and abuses: and thereby utterly averting those of the Papal party from joining with them in the work, or coming over to them when the work was done. Whereas had they continued an allowable correspondence in these extraneous of Religion, with the Church of Rome; their party in the world had been far greater, and not so much stomached as it is. And so it was conceived by the Marquess de Rhosie, after Duke of Sully and Lord High-Treasurer of France, and one of the chief men of that party there: when being sent Ambassador to King James, from King Henry the fourth, he had observed the Majesty and Decency of Gods public Service, in some Cathedrals of this Kingdom; Religion would be some defaced and trod under foot if not preserved and fenced about with the hedge of Ceremonies.

As for the Government of the Church since the last Conversion, as by the piety and example of Lucius there were founded three Archbishopsricks, and 25 Bishopsricks, according to the number of the Archie-Flamines, and Flamines (whose great Revenues were converted to more sacred uses in the times of Idolatry:) So by the like pious care of Pope Gregory the Great, by whose means this last Conversion happened; Archbishopsricks, and Bishopsricks were designed to convenient places. The number 26 in all; to each Province twelve, besides the two Archbishopsricks and Metropolitans: wherein he had the happiness to have his desires fulfilled, though the number was not made complete till these later days, nor with such equal distribution, as he did intend. For in the Province of Tork laid waste and desolate by the Danes, and not so soon converted as the other was; the number of the Suffragan Bishops came not up to his purpose, but did as much exceed in the Province of Canterbury: especially when K. Henry the 8th had incorporated Wales with England and founded five Episcopal Sees out of the ruins and Remains of some principal Monasteries: of which none but the Bishopric of Chester (and that of the Isle of Man, which maketh up the 27th, where laid out the Province of Tork, And so it stood notwithstanding the alterations of Religion, without any dispute, till Calvin having hammered out his new Presbytery, and recommended it to the use of all Christian Churches (the History whereof we had succinctly in the Alpine Provinces) found many apt Scholars in most places to decry this Order, though conformant to the word of God, and most pure Antiquity.

But the truth is, it was not so much the Authority of Calvin, or the malignant zeal of Beza, or the impetuous clamors of their Disciples, which caused the Episcopal Order to grow out of credit; as the Avarice of some great persons in Court and State, who greedily gaped after the poor remnant of their Possessions. It had been else a miracle that Calvin's Plat-form made only for the use of a private City, and not proportioned, nor so intended at the first, to the state of other Churches, especially where the Bishops had been instrumental in the reformation: should be so readily received in some Kingdoms, and so importantly and clamorously desired in others.

The most valorous Soldiers of this Country, when possessed by the Britains; where 1. Cassibellane, who twice repulsed the Roman Legions, though conducted by Cæsar; and had not a party here at home been formed against him, he had for ever done the like. 2. Prasutagus, King of the Iconi, 3. Constantine the Great, 4. Arthur, one of the Worlds nine Worthies. In the times of the Saxons, 5. Guy Earl of Warwick, 6. King Edmund Ironside and 7. Canutus the Dane. Under the Normans, of most note have been 1. William surnamed the Conqueror, 2. Richard, and 3. Edward, both the first of those names, so renowned in the Wars of the Holy-Land, 4. Edward the 3d, and 5. Edward the Black Prince, his Son, dux fulminis belli, as famous in the Wars of France: 6. Henry the 5th, and 7. John Duke of Bedford his Brother, of equal gallantry with the other. 8. Montacute Earl of Salisbury. 9. Sir John Falstaff, and 10. Sir John Hawkwood, of great esteem for valour in France and Italy: not to defend to later times. And for Sea Captains, those of most note, have been Hankyn, Willoughby, Burroughs, Jenkinson, Drake, Frobisher, Cavendish and Greenville, of some of which we have spoke already, and of the rest we may have an opportunity to speak more hereafter.

Scholars of most renown amongst us, 1. Alexander, one of the Founders of the University of Paris. Beda, who for his Piety and Learning obtained the Attribute or Adjunct of Venerabilis. Concerning which, the Legends tell us, that being blind, his Boy had knavishly conducted him to preach to a heap of stones; and that when he had ended his Sermon with the Gloria Patri, the very stones concluded, saying, Amen, Amen, Venerabilis Beda. But other of the Monkish Writers do assign this reason and both true alike; that at his death some unlearned Priest intending to honour him with an Epitaph, had thus far blundered on a verse, viz. Hic sunt in fissa Bedæ ossa: but because the Verse was yet imperfect, he went to bed to consider of it, leaving a space between the two last words thereof; which in the mourning he found filled up in a strange Character, with the word Venerabilis; and so he made his Verse, and Beda (pardon this diversion) obtained that Attribute. 2. Anselm, and 4. Bradwardin, Archbishops of Canterbury. Men famous for the times they lived in, 5. Alexander of Hales, Tutor to Thomas Aquinas, and Bonaventure. 6. Thomas of Walden, the professed Enemy of Wiceliff, against whom he wrote 7. John Wiceliff Parson of Lutterworth in the Country of Leicestershire, who so valiantly opposed the Power and Errors of the Church of Rome; though he vented many of his own. Then came the time of the Reformation, 1. John Jewel Bishop of Salisbury, to whose Learned and Industrious Labours, in defence of the Religion here by Law established, we are still beholden. 2. Dr. John Reynolds, and 3. Mr. Richard Hooker, both of Corpus Christi College in Oxon; the first, a man of infinite reading, the second of as strong a judgment. 4. Dr. Whitaker of Cambridge, the Antagonist of the famous Bellarmine. 5. Dr. Thomas Wilson, and 6. Dr. Lancelot Andrews, both Bishops of Windsor, the Ornaments of their several times. 7. Bishop Montague of Norwich, a great Philologist and Divine. 8. Dr. John Whitgift, and 9. Dr. William Laud, Archbishops of Canterbury. Of which last, and his discourse against the Jesuits, Sir Edward Dering his professed Enemy, hath given this Character, that in that Book of his he had mizzed the Jesuits, and should strike the Popists under the fifth rib, when he was dead and gone: and that being dead, whereforever his grave should be, PAULUS (whose reputation he endeavored, and had almost finished) would be his perpetual Monument, and his Book his lasting Epitaph. And as for those who have stood up in maintenance of the Church of Rome, those of most note were Dr. Harding, the Antagonist of Bishop Jewel. 2. Nic. Sanders, and 3. Dr. Thomas Stapleton: to whose Writings the great Cardinal Bellarmino doth stand much indebted. 4. Campan, and 5. Parsons, both Jesuites; and 6. William Reynolds, a Seminary Priest; and the Brother of Dr. John Reynolds spoken of before. Of which two Brothers (by the way) it is very observable, that William was at first a Presbyter of the Church of England, and John trained up in Pope beyond the Seas, William out of an honest zeal to reduce his Brother to his Church, made a journey to him: where in a Conference between them it fell out, that John being overcome by his Brothers Arguments, returned into England, where he became one of the more strict or rigid sort of the English Protestants, and William being convinced by the Reasons of his Brother John, stayed beyond the Seas, where he proved a very violent and virulent Papist. Of which strange accident, Dr. Alabaster, who had made trial of both Religions, and amongst many notable Whimsies, had some fine Abilities, made this following Epigram; which for the Excellency thereof, and the Rarities of the Argument, I shall here subjoin,

*Bella inter geminos pluraquam Civilia Fratres, Traxerat ambigua Religiois apex.
Ille Reformatæ Fidei pro partibus inquit;
Iste Reformatandam denegat esse fidem.
Propositis causæ rationibus, alter utrumque
Concurrere pares, & occidere paros.
Quod fuit in votis, Fratrem capis alter-utrumque;
Quod fuit in fatis, perdidit utrumque fidem.
Captivi gemini sine capivante fuerunt,
Et victor victi transfuga castra petiit.
Quod genus hoc pugna est, ubi victus gaudet uterque;
Et tamen alter-uter se superasse docet?*

Which excellent Epigram, though not without great disadvantage to the Latine Original, I have thus translated:

In points of Faith we undetermined jars,
Betwixt two Brothers kindled Civil Wars.
One for the Churches Reformation stood;
The other thought no Reformation good.

The points propos'd, they traversed the field
With equal skill, and both together yield.
As they desir'd, his Brother each subsidies;
Yet such their Fate, that each his Faith did lose.
Both Captives, none the prisoners thence do guide;
The Victor flying to the Vanquish'd side.
Both joy'd in being Conquer'd, (strange to say)
And yet both mourn'd because both won the day.

And then for men of other Studies, 1. Lindwood the Canonist, 2. Cajus, and 3. Covel, eminent in the studies of the Civil Laws. 4. Bradton, and 5. Brown of old times; 6. Dier, and 7. Coke of late days, as eminent for their knowledge in the Laws of England. 8. Johannes de Sacro Bofco, the Author of the Book of the Sphere; and 9. Roger Bacon, a noted Mathematician in the darker times. 10. Sir Francis Bacon the Learned Viscount of St. Albans, of whom more hereafter. 11. Sir Thomas More, Lord Chancellor, one of the Rethorers of Learning to the life of Great Britain. 12. Sir Henry Savile of Eaton, the reviver of Chrylogism. 13. Sir Henry Spelman, a right Learned Antiquary, and a Religious assertor of the Churches Rights. 14. Camden, Clarendon, the Pausanias of the British Islands. 15. Matthew Paris, 16. Roger Hoveden, 17. Henry of Huntingdon, 18. William of Malmesbury, 19. Matthæus Westminster, and 20. Thomas of Walsingham; all known Historians. And finally for Poetry, 1. Gower, 2. Lydgate, a Monk of Bury; 3. the famous Geoffrey Chaucer, Brother in Law to John of Gaunt the great Duke of Langcastr; of which last Sir Philip Sidney used to say, that he marvelled how in those misty times he could see so clearly, and others in so clear times go so blindly after him. 4. Sir Philip Sidney himself, of whom and his Arcadia, more when we come to Greece. 5. The renowned Spenser, of whom and his Fairy Queen, in another place. 6. Sam. Daniel, the Lucan, 7. with Michael Drayton, the Virg of the English Nation. 8. Beaumont, and 9. Fletcher, not inferior unto Terence and Plautus, with 10. My friend Ben. Jonson, equal to any of the Ancients for the exactness of his Pen, and the decorum which he kept in the Dramatic Poems, never before observed on the English Theatre. Others there are as eminent both for Arts and Arms, as those here specified, of whom, as being still alive, I forbear to speak; according to that caution of the Historian, saying, Vivorum ut magna admira-tio, ita censura est difficilis.

But from the Men to return again unto the Country, we find it to be subject (according to the several respects of Church and State) to a treble division; viz. 1. into 6 Circuits designated to the Itinerary Judges: Secondly, into 22 Episcopal Dioceses. Thirdly, into 40 Shires. The Realm was first divided into Circuits by King Henry the Second, who appointed twice in the year, two of the most grave and Learned Judges of the Land, should in each Circuit administer Justice in the chief or head Towns of every County. Of these Judges, one sitteth on matters Criminal, concerning the life and death of Malefactors: the other in Actions Personal, concerning Title of Land, Debts, or the like, between party and party. The first Circuit (for we will begin at the West) comprehendeth the Counties of Wilt, Somerset, Devon, Cornwall, Dorset, and Southampton. The second containeth the Counties of Oxford, Berks, Gloucester, Monmouth, Hertford, Warwick, Salop, and Stafford. The third hath in it the Counties of Surrey, Suffolk, Kent, Essex, and Hertford. The fourth consisteth of the Shires of Buckingham, Bedford, Huntingdon, Cambridge, Norfolk, and Suffolk. The fifth of the Shires of Northampton, Rutland, Lincoln, Nottingham, Darby, Leicester, and Warwick. And the sixth and last, of the Shires of Tork, Durham, Northumberland, Cumberland, Wiltmerland, and Lancaster. So that in these six Circuits are numbered 38 Shires. The two remaining are Middlesex, and Chester: whereof the first is excepted, because of its vicinity to London; and the second as being a County Palatine, and having peculiar Judges and Counsellours to it self.

The second Division, but more ancient far in point of time, is that of Dioceses, 22 in all, proportioned according to the number of Episcopal Sees, each Diocesis having in it one or more Arch-Deacons, for dispatch of Ecclesiastical business; and every Arch-Deacon subdivided into Rural Deanries, fewer or more, according to the bigness and extent thereof. Of these there are but four in the Province of Tork, that is to say, the Diocesses of Tork, Chester, Durham, and Carlisle: the other 18 (together with the 4 of Wales) being reckoned into that of Canterbury. In respect of which great authority and jurisdiction on the Archbishops of Canterbury had anciently the titles of Primates and Metropolitans of all England; and for some Ages before the Reformation, used to take place in all General Councils, at the Popes right foot. Which Custom took beginning at the Council of Laterane, when Urban the second called Anselm the Archbishop of Canterbury from amongst the other Prelates then assembled, and placed him at his right foot, saying, Includamus hunc in Orbe nostro tanquam altissimus Orbis Papat. This happened An. 1099. They were anciently also Legati nati nati; which honourable Title was first given to Archbishop Theobald, by Innocent the Second, and continued unto the times of their Government, and to have the benefit of their Council, being men of Learning; both the Archbishops and the Bishops, were anciently privileged to have their place and suffrage in the Court of Parliament (as ever since any Parliaments were first held in England) as Peers of the Realm; and that too in a double respect: first in relation had to their sacred Office, and secondly to those temporal Estates and Baronies, which they held of the King. Yet did they not enjoy in the times of their greatness of power and flourishing, all the Privileges and Privileges of the temporal Barons: as neither being tried by their Peers in Criminal causes, but left to an Ordinary juris; nor suffered in examinations to make a Protection against their honour, to the truth of the Fact, but put unto their Oaths like others of the lower Clergy. As for their Ecclesiastical Courts, it was anciently ordered also, that besides such as appertained to the Archbishops themselves; besides those holden by the Chancellors and Arch-Deacons of every Bishop, in their several Diocesses; and some in many private Parishes which they call Peculiar: and finally, besides the Courts of Visitation, held every two years by the Arch-Deacons or their Official, and every third year by the Bishop himself in person, or his lawful Deputy: there should be also Synods or Convocations, which are the Parliaments of the Clergy, attended primarily for the Reforming of the Church in Doctrine and Discipline; and secondarily, for granting Tithes and Subsidies to the King: which Synods, whether they be National, or Provincial only, do naturally consist of all the Right Reverend Fathers, the Arch-bishops, Bishops, the Deans, Arch-Deacons, and one Prebend out of each Cathedral, and a certain number of the Clergy, (two for every Diocesis) elected by the rest to serve for them in that great Assembly: the Clergy not being bound antiently by any Act, to which they had not given consent by those their Proxies: Of which so called and met together, the Bishops sitting by themselves make the Upper House, the Deans, Arch-deacons, and the rest, do constitute the Lower House of Convocation.

the Wealth and treasure of the Kingdom. By means whereof, that every day increaseth in wealth and beauty; the reit (except Britol only) do decay as fenibly; that City being like the Spleen in the body natural, the monstrous growth whereof fareth all the rest of the Members. Liene excrefcens, reliquum corpus contabefcit, as the Doctors have it.

There are in England but two Universities, which may equallize, may ten of all other Countries (so that Paris be not in the number) most of them being no better than our Colleges of Wigton, Exon, or Winchester; and none so liberally endowed, as some one of those in the Universities. Of which there are 16 in Cambridge, some of them called only by the name of Halls, but these endowed with Lands and Fellowships as the others are. In Oxford there are 18 Colleges endowed with Lands, besides five Halls, where Students live at their own charges; in both of them Professors of the Arts and Sciences, as also of Divinity, Law, Physick, and the Learned Languages, with liberal Salaries, and in each to the number of 3000 Students, so regular in their lives and conversations, as are not to be found in the World besides. The fairer and more ancient, Oxford, which of long time, together with Paris in France, Bononia in Italy, and Salamanca in Spain, hath been honoured with the Title of Generale Studium. For that the University of Cambridge, though giving up her hand to her Sister of Oxford, the may take place of all the Universities in the World besides is not so long standing as that of Oxford, is evident by the testimony of Robertus de Remyngton, cited by Malice Camden, viz. Roganne Edwardo primo, (it should rather be read secundo) de studio Gradibus factis ad Academicam, fecti Oxoniensis: where the word ficti doth not import an identity of the time; but a relation to Oxford, as to the pattern. We see this truth yet clearer in the Wall of Pope John the 21, the contemporary of our Edward the Second, as I find in the work of that great Searcher of Academical Antiquities Mr. Brian Trivine. Apollistica Auctoritate statimimus (saith the Bull) quod Collegium Magistrorum et Scholarium ejusdem studii (speaking of Cambridge) Universitas sit censenda, &c. But what need more than the Resolution of the Commons of the first Parliament holden under K. James? For when the Clerk of that House had put the name of Cambridge before Oxford, they taking indistinctly that Hythron Proteron, commanded the Antiquities of both Universities to be searched, and after search made, gave the place to Oxford. But to proceed, the University of Cambridge as it was much of later Foundation, so was it long before it grew into esteem; inasmuch, that when William of Wansfete Bishop of Winchester, and Founder of Magdalen College in Oxon, (whereof I was once an unworthy Member) perfwaded King Henry the Sixth to erect a College in Oxford, as some of the Kings his Predecessors had done before him: immo potius Cantabrigie (replied the King) Ut dux sit fieri possit in Anglia Academicam habeam. Now, saith the King in Cambridge rather, that fo, if possible, I may have two Universities in my Realm of England.

As for the Story of this Country, that it was first peopled out of Gaul, is affirmed by Cesar, and proved by many strong and concluding Arguments; as their Religion, Manners, Languages, Customs, and the names of the one to the other. To omit therefore the Fable of Brute, and the Catalogue of 68 Kings, which are said to have reigned here successively before the coming of the Romans: Certain it is, that Cesar found the Country canted into many Kingdoms (four in Kent alone) and the people to be very rude and illiterate. Such Learning as they had was locked up in the breasts of the Druides, who committed nothing into Writing, and by that means kept the People in continual ignorance: communicating what they knew to none but those of their own Order, and therein being fought to by the Druides or Priests of Gaul; who came over into this Island to them, and did from them receive the knowledge of their sacred Myteries. Being conquered or discovered rather by Julius Cesar, it was not so much as looked after by the two next Emperors: Augustus and Tiberius counting it an high point of Wildom, not to extend the Empire beyond the Ocean. Caligula had once a mind to the Adventure, but he durst not follow it. But Claudius, his Successor, undertook the Enterprize, solicited thereunto by Vericus a noble Briton, who for sedition and some practices against the publick, was expelled the Country. Hereupon Aulus Plautius is sent over with some Roman Forces, by whom and P. Ostorius Scapula, his Successor, Cadigonus and Caracallus two Kings of the Britains, were severally overcome in battel, a Roman Colony planted at Camalodunum, (now Maldon in Essex) and the Southern parts thereof reduced to the form of a Province. After this time by little and little the whole was conquered, as far as to the Frythes of Dunbarton and Edinburgh. Agriculture in the time of Domitian, having the happiness and good fortune to go beyond the furthest of this Predecessors; and so much moderation not to venture further, where there was nothing to be got but blows, cold, and hunger.

At the first entrance of the Romans, the Island was divided into several Nations, each governed by its own Kings and particular Princes, different in their ends and counsels, and so more easily subdued by united Forces. The principal of which (for it is needless to make mention of inferior Clans) where 1. the Demmonii, containing Dawshire, and Cornwal, whose chief Cities were Ipsa, now Exeter and Velva near the Town of Falmouth in Cornwal. 2. The Durovorigi, inhabiting only in the County of Dorset, whose chief City was Durnom or Durnova, which we now call Dorchester. 3. The Belge, planted in the Counties of Somerset, Southampton, and Wilt, whose chief Cities were Aque Calide, now Bath; Venta Belgarum, now Winchester; and Sorbidunum, the seat of old Salisbury. 4. The Atrebatii, confined within Devshire only, the chief City of whom was Gualena, where now is Wallingford. 5. The Regni, possessed of Wessex and Surrey, whose chief Cities were Vindeli, now Winchester; and Neomagus, situate some ten miles from London. 6. The Kantiani, or the Kentish, having Dumonia, now Canterbury; Dubris, now Dover; and Rheupie, now called Richborough, for their principal Cities. 7. The Trinobantes of Middlesex, and Essex, where London called afterwards Augusta Trinobantum; and Camalodunum the first Roman Colony, now called Maldon, the Seat-Royal of Cymbelinus, King of the Trinobantes in the time of the Romans. 8. The Cantabraci, dwelling in the Counties of Buckingham, Bedford, and Hertford, whose Towns of most importance were Magenium, now called Dunstable; and Verulamium, (near St. Albans) the strongest Hold the Britains had in their Wars with Cesar. The Iconi, living in the Counties of Suffolk, Norfolk, Huntington, and Cambridge; their principal Cities being Fila Paugitani, now St. Edmundsbury; Sito-magus, now Thetford; Durois, now Gudnacholster; and Combortum, or Cambridge. 10. Coritani, who took up the whole Counties of Lincoln, Leicester, Rutland, Nottingham, Northampton, and Darby; their principal Towns of which were Lincoln, now Lincoln; Ruge, where now is Leicester; Gusefome not far from Littleborough, now called Bridge-Crofton; Agdoes, now Leighton, a small Village near Newark, upon Trent; Triponum, now Torrey, not far from Northampton. 11. The Brigantes, the greatest Nation of the Island, filling all Yorkshire, the Bishoprick of Durham, Cumberland, Wigmoreland, and the County Palatine of Lancaster, in a word all the North of England, (except Northumberland, the dwelling of the (12) Ostodini, whose chief City Town was Brennium, thought now to be Ribchester in Riddelsdale.) Principal places of which be large and potent Nation, were Ipsanum, now Aldbrough in the North Riding; Eboracum or York, in the West Riding; and Pensaria, thought to be Beverly, in the East Riding of Yorkshire; Vindonum, where now is Winchester, in the Bishoprick; Epiacum, now Pop Castle, in Cumborland; Calatun, now Wharfedale in Wigmoreland; and Ribidunum, now Ribblesdale in the County Palatine of Lancaster. 13. The Caracii, seated in the Counties of Chesher, Salop, Worcester, Stafford, and Warwick, whose principal Towns were, Devania, or Legio vicinia Victrix, now Welf-Chesher; Orcinium, now Worcester, an ignoble Village; Pennorcinum, now Peckridge, not far from Stafford; Brannogenium, now Worcester; Munton, now Mansfield, on the River Avon. 14. And last of all, the Dubni of Oxford, and Gloucestershire: Principal places of the which were Darcinia, now Dorchester, seven miles from Oxford, and Corinnum, or Cyrenester, near the head of the Thames. Such names as are comprehended under the name of Wales, and Scotland, shall be remembered when we come to speak of those Countries.

These, and the rest of Wales and Scotland (as far as the Romans did proceed, being once subdued, Britain became a Member of the Roman Empire; yet so that many of the Tribes had their own Kings, and were suffered to govern by their own Law: it being a known Custom amongst the Romans, as we find in Tacitus, habere sinitis instrumenta de Reges, to permit Kings sometimes in the conquered Countries, making them instrumental to the peoples bondage. And it is said of Lucius Venn the Roman Emperor, that having put an end to the Parthian War, Reges Regibus, Provincias Comitibus suis regendas did: he gave those King Kingdoms he had conquered to be ruled by Kings; the Provinces to be governed by Provincial Earls. Kings of which kind were Cadigonus and Prasutagus, spoken of by Tacitus; Lucius, before mentioned, the first Christian King, and Coelus the Father of Helenus, Mother of Constantine the Great. But as afterwards in the Heptarchie of the Saxons, that King who overruled the rest, and was of most power and estimation, was called the Monarch of the English: so probable enough it is, that amongst the British Kings, who was in most credit with the Romans, or of most power amongst his neighbours, might be permitted to assume the Title of King of Britain. The Catalogue of whom from Cassibela to Constantine, I have here subjoined, according to the tenor of the British History,

The Kings of Britain after the coming in of the Romans.

A. Ch.

1. Cassibela, King of the Trinobantes, Commander of the Britains in the War against Julius Cesar.
2. Ticonantius.
3. Cymbelin.
4. Gaidorius.
45. Arviragus, by Helior Boetius, called Prasutagus, in whose time Britain was subdued by Aulus Plautius, sent hither from the Emperor Claudius.
73. Marius.
73. Coelus, the supposed Founder of Colchester.

180. 8. LUCIUS the first Christian King of Britain, and of all the World: who dying without Issue, left the Roman Emperor his Heir.
207. 9. Severus, Emperor of Rome, and King of Britain.
211. 10. Bassianus Caracalla, Son of Severus, Emperor of Rome after his Father, who lost the Kingdom of Britain to
218. 11. Caracallus, a Native of the Island; who rebelling against Caracalla, obtained the Kingdom for himself.
225. 12. Allectus.
232. 13. A. Valerianus.
240. 14. Coelus II. the Father of Helenus.
289. 15. Constantine, Emperor of Rome, in right of Helenus his Wife, succeeded on the death of Coelus the 2d.
16. Constantine the Great, the Son of Helenus and Constantine, who added his Estates in Britain to the Roman Monarchy.

But to proceed, Britain being thus made a Member of the Roman Empire, it was at first divided into three Provinces only, that is to say, Britannia prima, (so called because first subdued) containing all the Counties on the South side of the Thames, and those inhabited by the Trinobantes, Iconi, and Cantabraci, whose Metropolis or chief City was London. 2. Britannia secunda, comprising all the Nations on the Further side of the Thames, whose chief City was Cat Leu upon York, in the County of Manum; and 3. Maxima Caesariensis, including all the rest of the Northern border, whereof the Metropolis was York; each Province having several Cities, 28 in all. Accordingly, the Church conforming to the Platform of the Civil State, there were appointed for the Government hereof eight and twenty Bishops, residing in those several Cities: three of the which residing in the principal Cities, where honoured with the Title of Metropolitans, and a superiority over all the Bishops of their several and respective Provinces, and in this state it stood till the time of Constantine, who in his new moulding of the Empire, altered the bounds, and enlarged the number of the Provinces; adding two more unto and out of the former, viz. Valentia, containing all the Country from the Firth of Solway, and the Pict-mall on the South, to the Firth of Edenburgh and Dunbarton North, and Flavia Caesariensis, comprehending all between Thames and Humber, the rest betwixt the Humber and the bounds of Valentia, continuing under the old name of Maxima Caesariensis, though now made less than any of the other four. The number of the Provinces being thus enlarged, he made the whole a full and complete Dioecesis of the Roman Empire (whereas Spain had Tingitana added to it, as before was shewn) subordinate as Spain was also the Præfectus Prætorio Galliarum, and governed by his Vicarius or Lieutenant General. Of which division, or rather subdivision of the Roman Provinces, there was no other alteration made in the Ecclesiastical government, but that the British Church became more absolute and independent (as each Dioecesis had) residing in the same City with the Vicar or Lieutenant General (which was then at Tork) of as great power and jurisdiction in the Isle of Britain as any Patriarch at Alexandria, Rome, or Antioch; in their several Patriarchates. The Metropolitans were no more than before they were: It being ordered by a Canon of the Council of Chalcedon, that their number should not be augmented by any alteration made of the Roman Provinces. As for the Forces which the Romans kept here in continual pay, as well to keep their Coasts and Frontiers against the Enemy, as for retaining of the Natives in their due obedience; they came in! (if Panorol be not mistaken in his reckoning) to 23000 Foot, & 2000 Horse: three Legions keeping here, their cantant and continual Residence, that is to say, the sixth Legion, furnished Vidrix at Tork; the 20th Legion, furnished Alidrix, at Wet-Chester; and the second Legion, sometimes at Ipsa Damnonium, which is now Caer Leon up on Ush. Which Legions with their Aids and Cohorts, may well make up the number spoken of before. Of to high estimation was this Island in the State of Rome.

Yet could not all these Forces preserve the Country from foreign Enemies; but that in the declining of the Roman Empire, the Saxons made great spoils on the coasts thereof; as did the Scots and Picts on the Northern borders: against all which the Romans held out well enough, and made good their ground; till the recalling of the Legions out of Britain for defence of Italy it self, then waited and destroyed by the barbarous Nations. Which happened in or about the year of Christ 407, and some 470 years from the first invasions; Honorius being at that time the Roman Emperor, and Vitorinus the last Governor for the Empire, in the Isle of Britain. For though the noble Aetius, on the Petition and complaint of the slaughtered people, unmercifully butchered by the Scots and Picts, sent some small Forces to assist them against those Enemies; yet were they presently called back for the defence of Gaul, against the Hunners breaking in upon it. And then the wretched Britains hopefull of all help from Rome, and being unable, by their own strength to repel the Enemy, by reason of their long ease and dilute of Arms, applied themselves to Aldroenus King of Armorica in France, (called Little Britain) a Prince extracted from the same stock, for relief and succour. Whose Brother Constantine (according to the British story) passing over with a competent Army, and having valiantly repelled the barbarous people, was crowned King of Britain, the first of a new race of Kings, which swayed the Scepter, with much trouble and continual conflicts; either against the Scots or Saxons, till they were finally subdued and shut up in Wales. Of whose most observation in the course of the story were, 1. Constantine the first King, and the restorer of the Country to Peace and quiet, traitorously murdered by a Pict, 2. Vortiger, E. of the Guspers, (now Cornwall) Protector of Constantine the Son of Constantine, taken out of a Monastery; after whose death, (wherein he was conceived to have had an hand) he got the Kingdom to himself, but being unable to defend it against the Enemy, and make his title all good against the other children of Constantine, first called in the Saxons, 3. Vortimer, eldest Son of Vortiger, who overthrew the Saxons in many battles; but in the midst of his Successes was poisoned by Roxena a Saxon Lady, second Wife of Vortiger, 4. Arthur, one of the Worlds nine Worthies, of whom the Monkish Writers, and other Legendaries, report so many idle and impossible actions. Doubtless he was a Prince of most perfect virtue; a great preserver of his Country from approaching ruin, and worthy the Pen of an able Panegyrist; by whom his brave achievements might have come entire unto us, without the intermixture of those feats of Chivalry, asfabulated to him and his Knights of the Round Table. For by the overtraining of some Monkish Writers, Gosfrey of Monmouth, and the rest, they have given too just occasion to posterity to suspect that virtue, which they intended to advance; and filled us with as much ignorance of the story, as admiration of the persons. But this hath not been the ill hap of King Arthur, and his Nobles only; Charlemain, and the Twelve Peers of France, men of great virtue and renown, suffering as deeply in the same kind by the folly of the French Romances. It is affirmed of this Arthur, (but how true I know not) that he began the custom of celebrating the Nativity of our Lord and Saviour for the twelve days following, with such pastimes and sports as are (or have been used of late) by the Lords of Misrule in some Gentlemen's houses: an Institution which the Scottish Writers of those times much blame. Perhaps not unjustly; it being a time more fit for our devotions than such rude sports. But to proceed, King Arthur, dying left the Crown to the 5. Constantine, the Son of Cador Duke of Cornwall his nearest Kinsman, slain by Aureliant Cananus, his own Nephew, who succeeded after him; which faction did so weaken the distressed Britains, that they were forced to withdraw themselves beyond the Severn: as 6. Caradoc, or Caradoc, by the joint Forces of the Saxons, to change the plain Countries beyond the Severn for the steeper, but more fruitful Mountains. Of the rest, till Cadwalader, there is little left of any certainty, but their names only; which are thus ranked in the second race of

  - 627 16. Cadwalader, the last King of the Britains, who on a superstitious zeal travelled in a pilgrimage to Rome, there to receive the habit of a Religious Order from the hands of Pope Sergius, whom he dyed not long after, Anno 689. After whose death, his Successors were no longer called Kings of Britain, but Kings or Princes of Wales. And there we shall be sure to find them.

And so the Britains leave the Stage, and the Saxons enter; a great and potent Nation amongst the Germans, but greater by the aggregation of many people, under their name and service, than in themselves: the Jutes and Angles joining with them, and passing in Account as the same one Nation, their Countries different as their names until this Conjunction; but neighbouring near enough to unite together: the Angles dwelling at the first in that part of the Cimbrian Chersonese, which we now call Slavick, where still the Town called Angelen, doth preserve their memory: the Jutes upon the North of them, where there is still a Province called by the name of Jutland; the Saxons South of both in the Dukedom of Holsatia, situate in the very neck of that Chersonese; where it joincth with Germany; joining their powers, they spread themselves with good success, to the South and West; of which more hereafter. And growing Master of the Seas, infected with continual Piracies the Coasts of Britain; occasioning herein an Officer of great trust and power, appointed to defend and scour those Seas, in the Notitia, called Comes Littoris Saxonici. Known by this means amongst the Britains, they were called in by Vortiger, to aid him against the Scots and Picts; whom they overcame in a pitched pitched field near Stanford, in the County of Lincoln: for to far had the barbarous people marched without any resistance. Reward for this Victory with the Isle of Thanet, and after with the whole County of Kent, they began to quarrel with their Hosts whom by degrees they dispossest of all the Country on this side of Severn; parceling it into seven Kingdoms, called the Saxons Heptarchie, that is to say, 1. Of Kent, 2. Of the South-Saxons, 3. Of the West-Saxons, 4. Of the East-Saxons, 5. Of the East-Angles, 6. Of the North-Humberts, and 7. of the Mercians. The beginning period, and Kings of which several Kingdoms, and the uniting of them into one Monarchy, we next to shew.

1. The Kingdom of KENT, confined within that County only, was begun by Hengist, who with his Brother Horfus had the leading of the Saxons Forces, at their first entry into Britain, An. 455. being the sixth year after their first coming in: who reformed Paganism to this Country, when the rest of the Isle was Christian, occasioned the distinction of Kent and Chesham. The Kentish afterwards the first of the Saxons who received the Gospel, by the preaching of Augustine the Monk, the Apostle of the English Saxons. Principal Cities of this Kingdom, where 1. Canterbury, once the Regal seat of the Kings of Kent, till given by Ethelbert, on his conversion to Augustine the first Archbishop thereof and his Successors; afterwards the See of those Archbishops, who had here their Palace and Cathedral, the Kings removing to Reudber, seated in the East part of the Country, about seven or eight miles from the Sea, a little Brook serving it thence with some commodities. A City of more Antiquity and fame, than beauty; being now ruinous and decayed, and having nothing in it worth observation, but the Cathedral Church, first founded by Ethelbert before mentioned; but afterwards new built upon his foundations, in the form it now stands by Archbishop Laufank, Will. Carboyle, and some other of their Successors in the said See. The Arch-episcopal Palace is a goodly building, and the ruins of S. Augustines Monastery shew what once it was. 2. Dover, anciently called Dubris, seated on the Sea-front, where the passage is shortest into France; for that cause Fortified with a strong and (in those days accounted an) impregnable Castle; clemeed one of the keys of England; and the chief of the Cinque Ports; now giving the title of an Earl to the house of Husford, chief of the Family of the Carvers, nearly allied to Queen Elizabeth of Famous memory. 3. Recheber, seated on the Medway, not far from Chatham (the situation of the Royal Navy) ancient City, but of no greatness; in former times called Dunbrin, after that Raffa, thence the name of Raff-Chatham Bishops See, the second for Antiquity in all the Island. 4. Maidstone, upon the Medway also near the head thereof, the largest and most beautiful in all this Country, and most commodiously seated for publick business.

- 455 1. Hengist, the first King.
  - 488 2. Erik, or Ofsa.
  - 512 3. Offa.
  - 532 4. Immirek.
  - 561 5. Ethelbert, the first Christian King of this Country.
  - 617 6. Edwald.
  - 641 7. Ercmbert.
  - 665 8. Egbert.
  - 673 9. Lotharius.
  - 686 10. Edrick.
  - 693 11. Wighard.
  - 720 12. Egbert II.

- 749 13. Ethelbert II.
- 754 14. Alricus.
- 793 15. Ethelbert III.
- 797 16. Guthred.

805 17. Bardred, the last King of Kent, who lost both life and Kingdom to Egbert, King of Wessex, or the West-Saxons, Anno. 824. The Progeny of Hengist having been before extinguished in the person of Alricus, overthrown and slain by Offa, the great King of the Mercians.

II. The Kingdom of SOUTH-SEX, or of the SOUTH-SAXONS, was begun by Ella, a noble Captain of that People, An. 488. It contained only the two Counties of Suffex and Surrey, which were thence denominated, the first so called quasi South-Sex, the Country of the South-Saxons; the second quasi South-Reg, as lying on the South-side of the River Thames, in the same sense as S. Maries Church on the other side of that River (in respect of London) is called S. Mary Over Reg. The Christian Faith suppressed here, as in other places, was restored again in the time of King Edmund, by the preaching of S. Wilfride, Archbishop of York, living here in Exile. Places of most importance in it, were 1. Chichester, built by Cissa the 2d King thereof, and called Cissanaster, encompassed almost round with the River Lavant, falling not far off into the Sea: the chief Town of Suffex, and a Bishops See, removed hither from Scalpy, a Demy-Island, in the time of the Norman Conqueror, where it was first planted by Archbishop Wilfride. 2. Hastings one of the Cinque ports, in Suffex also; the landing place of the Normans, and famous for the overthrow of King Harold in the fields adjoining. 3. Gustaford, upon the River Wye, the chief Town of Surrey, well built, and having in it two Parish-Churches. 4. Arundel, in a Dale or Valley on the River Arun, and from thence so named: belonging to the Crown in the time of the Saxons, when given by the Testament of King Affide unto Aethelric, his Brothers Son. Of great note for a beautiful and capacious Castle; but more for giving the title of Earl to the noble Families of the Albanyes, the Fitz-Alans, and the Howards: this last of such a large and diffused Nobility, that in the year 1641, there were no fewer than 8. Howards, in the house of Pecore. 5. Kingston upon the Thames, so called to distinguish it from Kingham upon Hull in Yorkshire; heretofore Famous for the Coronation of the Monarchs of the English-Saxons, whence it had the name of Kingham, or the Kings Town. This Kingdom had only three Kings, crowned in the infancy thereof by more potent neighbours.

The Kings of the South-Saxons.

- A. Ch.
- 488 1. Ella, the first King.
  - 514 2. Cissa, the Son of Ella, who lost his life and Kingdom to Cerdic King of the West-Saxons.
  - 530 3. Cheulric, King of West-Sex, called himself King of the South-Saxons.
  - 4. Edelmarch, or Eidwold, the first Christian King, overcome and slain in battle by Cadwalader, King of the West-Saxons, Anno 687. After whose death Berthar and Aethelm, two Brethren, took on themselves the Government, with the title of Dukes or Captains; and held it for a little while. But not being able to withstand the puissance of the West-Saxons, this Kingdom was subdued by Ina, the Successor of Cadwalader; by whom united to that Crown.

III. The Kingdom of WEST-SEX, or the WEST-SAXONS, the third in order, and that which did in time prevail prevail over all the rest; contained the Counties of Cornwall, Devon, Somerset, Dorset, Wilts, Southampton, and Berks: begun by Cerdic, a noble Commander of the Saxons, arriving with new Forces out of Germany, Anno 495. who having overcome the Britains of this Western Tract, conducted by Natanland their Chieftain, entitled himself King of the Wight-Saxons, Anno 522. The Christian Faith suppressed here, as elsewhere, was restored again in the time of King, their first Christian King; by the preaching of S. Birinus Bishop of Dorchester near Oxford, then a great City, no fewer than ten parishes, now reduced to one.

Chief Cities of this Kingdom, were 1. Exeter, a fair and goodly City, and a Bishops See, removed thither from Cridington or Kinton, by Leofricus, An. 1049. Seated upon the Bank of the River Ex, whence the name of Exeter; environed with deep ditches, and very strong Walls, in compass about a mile and half extends the Suburbs, in which are contained in all 15 Parish Churches, besides the Minster, a beautiful and stately Fabric. 2. Bath, so called from the Baths there being, the chief City of Somerset, by the Latins called Aqua Solis; by the Greeks θεῖα ὕδατος for the self same reason. Situate in a low Valley, environed about with Hills very steep and high, from whence come many Rivulets and fresh Springs, to the great Commodity of the people. A fine near Town, and beautified with as near a Church, heretofore a Monastery, partner with Wells, the Bishop's See, in the title Episcopal, and gives the Title of an Earl to the Noble Family of the Bourchiers. 3. Palmouth in Cornwall, seated upon a large and capacious Bay, so full of Creeks and Roads, capable of the best Ships, that it is said an hundred Sail of Ships may be lodged therein with such convenience, that from the top of the one, the Mast of another is not to be seen; the mouth or entrance of it defended for the greater safety with two very strong Castles built by Henry the 8th, that of S. Mandis on the East, and that of Pendans (commonly called Pendennis) upon the West. 4. Dorchester, the chief Town of Dorsetshire, which is thence denominated, by Antoninus called Durnovaria, the principal at that time of the Durotriges: an Inland Town, and consequently of no great trading: not so much famous for ought else as giving the Title of a Marquess to Henry Earl of Kingdom of the noble Family of the Pierreponts. 5. Wilton, the head Town, in those times of Wiltshire, and a Bishops See, honoured with the residence of several Bishops. But by translating of the See to Sarum (or Sarisbury) as the fitter place, and carrying thither there withal the thowrware which before was here; it fell by little and little into decay; and is now hardly worth the reputation of a great Town. 6. Winchester called Ventia in the times of the Romans, by the Saxons, Vent-easter, situate on the banks of a pleasant River, the seat Royal of the Wight-Saxon Kings, who had here their Palace called Wolsey: so named from the Kings of the Wolpian Family, and the situation of it in the circlings of the forefard River, which the old Saxons called an Eye: not from the Wool-Staple here kept, as some; much less from Cardinal Wolsey, as others most absurdly think. The house given after to the Bishops, and made their Palace. The Town in compass two miles, besides the Suburbs; commodiously seated in a low place, between very steep Hills, by which it is defended both from cold and wind. Afflicted very much since those times both by War and Fire, half of the ground within the Town being Fields and Gardens; but still adorned with a Magnificent Cathedral, and a gallant (but no great) Castle, bravely mounted upon an Hill for defence and prospect; besides a College, and an Hospital added since those days. 7. Southampton, conveniently seated on an Arm of the Sea, capable of Ships of burden to the very Key; which maketh it one of the richest Towns in those parts of England. Well built, of fair large streets, beautified with five Parish Churches, and fortified with high Walls, a double Ditch, and a right strong Castle: but the Castle now decayed and ruined. 8. Reading, on the Banks of the River Kennet, where it falleth into the Thames, by which means it hath the convenience of both Rivers: a Town of great Trade for Clothing, well built, and of three Parish Churches; heretofore beautified with a strong Castle, and a goodly Monastery, but both decayed. 9. Windsor, called Wandelsford on the old Saxon, situate near the Banks of the Thames on a rising Ground, which gives it a fair prospect over all the Country; adorned in succeeding times with a Palace Royal of the Kings of England, and the Seat of the Order of the Garter, 10. Wallingford, the Guallena of the Ancients, and then the chief Town of the Attrebatii, as it was afterwards (in the time of the Saxons) of the County of Berk; a mile in compass at that time within the Walls, fortified with an impregnable Castle, and adorned with twelve Parishes. So delatored by a Plague, An. 1348. that there is now but one Church left, hardly Inhabitants enough to keep it in repair; and nothing of the Walls left (as much of the Castle) but the track and ruins.

IV. The Kingdom of EAST-SEX, or the EAST-SAXONS, was begun about the year 527, by Ethelwin, descended from Woden, the common Progenitor of the Saxons; from whom we have the name of Woden-day, or Wodensday, as they called it formerly. It contained only the Counties of Middlesex, Essex, and so much of Hartfordshire, as is in the Diocesis of London. The Christian Faith expelled here as in other places, was restored again in the time of Sebert, the Founder of the Abbey Church of S. Peter in Westminster, by the Preaching of Mellitus the first Bishop of London after the entrance of the Saxons, suppressed again by Seward, and Sigbert, the Sons of Sebert; but settled stronger than before by Codda, the next Bishop. Principal Cities of this Kingdom, besides London, spoken of already, were. 1. Westminster, situate in those times a mile from London, now adjoining to it. The See of the Archbishop of London in the time of the Britains; afterwards by the Saxons called Thorn-ye, or the Thorny Island; till the new Minster built by Sebert as before is laid, and the Wigton situation of it in regard of St. Pauls, built at the same time by Ethelbert the King of Kent; gained it this new name. A City honoured with the Seat of the Kings of East-SEX, and since those times with that of the Kings of England; the names of the Old Palace of the one, and the New-Palace of the other, still remaining there: beautified upon that occasion with more stately and magnificent houses, belonging to the King, Bishops, and Nobility, than all the other in the Kingdom, having of late a new Town added to it in the Convent Garden (a place belonging formerly to the Monks of Westminster) for uniformity of building, and handsome streets, inferior to no City of France or Italy. 2. Colchester, the chief Town of East-Sex, situate near the Sea, on the River Cole; a Colony of the Londoners in former times, thence called Colonia Londinensium, and Colonia only, then a Bishops See: from which, or from the River, with the Addition of Cestor, after the manner of the Saxons, came the name of Colchester. A fair and well built Town, and of good resort, fortified with an old Roman Wall, and having in it to the number of 14 Churches. 3. Ebschester in Dorset Hundred, were S. Ceadla the second Bishop of London, baptized the re-lapsed East-Saxon. 4. Hartford, the chief Town of the County so called; by Beda named Hertsford, and of great note in his time for a Synod there held in the dawning of the day of Christianity amongst the Saxons; in which S. Augustine the Monk, the first Apostle of that people, had a conference or consultation with the British Bishops: More memorable in the following times, for giving the title of an Earl to the illustrious Family, summamed De Clare; the addition of an Honour, and a goodly Patrimony to John of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaster; and at this time, title of Earl, and Marquess to the noble Family of the Seymours.

V. The Kingdom of the EAST-ANGLES, so called from the Angli or Engliffi, which possessed these parts, and the Eastern situation of it; begun by Eissa, a great Commander of the Saxons, Anno 575. contained the Counties of Norfolk, Suffolk, Cambridgeshire, and the Isle of Ely. The Christian Faith first planted here in the Reign of Redwall the third King, by the Ministry of Felix a Burgundian, the first Bishop of the East-Angles, the See whereof was afterwards removed to Norwich. Places of most importance in it, were 1. Dunwich on the Sea-shore, the first Bishops See of the East-Angles, for the County of Suffolk; then a Town capable of that dignity, now ruinous, decayed, and for the greatest part worn into the Sea. 2. Islewich in the same County of Suffolk, and the chief of the Country, a rich, populous, and well traded Empory, consisting of no fewer than twelve Parish Churches.

ches. 3. Norwich, the head City of Norfolk, situate on the River Tara, which runs thence to Tarmouth, lying out in length a mile and an half, half as much in breadth, & in that Circuit comprehending about 20 Parishes: well walled about with many a Tower, & 12 Gates for entrances; but hath within it much waste Ground, the City suffering great loss both in wealth and buildings, by Kar Rebellion, in the time of King Edward the sixth. Recovered of the first blow by the Dutch Manslaughter, of the last still languishing; yet still it glorieth in the beauties of a fair Cathedral, the three Palaces of the Bishops, the Dukes of Norfolk, and the Earls of Surrey, and the ruins of an ancient Castle of the Saxons building, 4. North Elmham, the Bishops See of the East-Angles, for those parts which we now call Norfolk: both this and that at Dunwich ruined in the Danish Wars, but this reviving at the end of 100 years and here continuing, both Sees united unto one, till removed to 5. Thetford, another Town of this County, situated on the confluence of the Thet, and the lesser Ofis; a larger Town than either of the other two, from whence at last removed to Norwich. 6. Cambridge, the chief Town of that County, by Antonine called Camuloton whence the Modern name: unless we rather fetch it from a Bridge over the River Cam or Grant (for some call it Grantbridge) as perhaps we may. A Town well built by reason of the University, said to be founded by Sigbert, King of the East-Angles, of whom it is affirmed by Beda, that he founded a School for the education of Children in the ways of good Learning; but he speaketh neither of University, nor nameth Cambridge for the place. 7. Ely, situate in the Isle so named, occasioned by the divided streams of Nen and Ofis, with the over-flotes of other Rivers; turning a great part of this tract into Fens and Marishes, the Inhabitants whereof were called Girithi. A place of no great beauty or reputation, as situate in a foggy and unhealthy air; but only for a fair Monastery built by S. Ethelreda, Wife of Egfride, King of the Northern, by her made a Nunnery; afterwards rebuilt and replenished with Monks by Ethelwald Bishop of Winchester, Anno 970. it thereabouts; finally made a Bishops See in the time of King Henry the first, Anno 1109.

870	15 S. Edmund , descended from Anna , the seventh King hereof, Martyred by the Danes for his stout and constant preference in the Faith of CHRIST ; from whence the fair Town of St. Edmundsbury, in the County of Suffolk, took denomination. After whose death the Kingdom was possessed by the Danes, till vanquished by King Edward the Elder, by whom it was united unto the rest of England.

VI. The Kingdom of NORTHUMBRIA, so called from the situation on the North of Humber, contained the Counties of Tork, Lancashire, Durham, Westmerland, Cumberland, and Northumberland, properly so called; and all the Southern parts of Scotland, as far as to the Fryther of Edinburgh and Dunbritton, formerly reckoned of as Members of the Roman Empire. Extorted from the Britains by Ossa the Son, and Eufsa the brother of Hengist, Conductors of new Forces hither; (all of the Nation of the Angle) by the leave of Vortiger, upon pretence of guarding these Countries from the incursions of the Scots and Picts. By them divided into two Provinces, the one called Deira, extending from the Humber, to the River of Tees; the other called Bernicia, reaching from Tees to the two Fryther before-mentioned: both governed a long while by Dukes, under the Sovereignty and homage of the Kings of Kent. In the year 547, Duke Ida takes unto himself the title of King of Bernicia, and An. 559. Duke Ella, doth the like in Deira. The Towns of most notice in this last (for the former is now reckoned as a part of Scotland) besides Tork spoken of before, were R. Lancaster, the chief Town of that County, situate on the River Leon, which with addition of Cæster much used by the Saxons, made the name thereof; called for the same reason Longowicis by the Emperor Antonine. The Town not very well peopled nor much frequented, but of sufficient fame in our English Annals for those Noble persons which have successively borne the titles of Earls and Dukes of it; the greatest Princes for Revenue, of any Subjects in Christendom. 2. Kendal, or Candale, situate in a dale on the River Can, whence it had the name; the chief Town of Westmerland: built in the manner of a Cæsis, two long and broad streets thwarting one another. A rich, populous and well traded Town, especially for the making of fine woolen cloth, but of more fame for giving the title of an Earl to John Duke of Bedford, Regent of France; and to John de Foix, created Earl hereof by Henry the sixth. 3. Carlisle, upon the River Edon, a frontier Town betwixt the Romans and Scots, as now between the Scots and English: consumed to ashes in the time of the Danish furies; afterwards rebuilt by William Rufus, made an Episcopal See in the reign of K. Henry the first, and beautified with a Cathedral founded at the perswasion of Athelwulf, the first Bishop hereof. 4. Monck-chester, on the Northern banks of the River Time, which maketh there a safe and capacious Haven. Of no great note till the Norman Conquest, when from a Castle built by Robert Son of William the Conqueror, it was called New-Castle: growing from that time forwards to such wealth and trading, by the neighbourhood of the Cole-mines there, that it is now the goodliest Town in all the North; fortified with strong Walls, beautified with five fair Churches, and giving to the L. Will. Cavendish, Viscount Mansfield, the honorary titles of Earl and Marquis. 5. Hagulfstade, or Hætteld, by the Romans called Asclodunum, by the Normans, Hexam: a Bishops See in the first time of Christianity amongst these Northumbrians, specially so called, converted to the Faith in the time of Oswald their tenth King, by the Ministry of Aiden the first Bishop of Lindisfarne: Eusa the fifth Bishop, erecting here an Episcopal See for the better propagation of the Gospel among this people; after a succession of ten Bishops ruined and suppressed by the Danish furies. 6. Dunholm, now Durham, situate on a Hill, as the name importeth, a Bishops See, translated hither with the body of St. Cuthbert, An. 950 or thereabouts, from Lindisfarne, a small Island on the Coast of Northumberland, where it was first erected by S. Aidanus, the first Bishop thereof: planted in Lindisfarne, because of the folitude of the place; translated thither to avoid the fury of the Danes, who then raged extremely in these Quarters. And being settled here, was fortified with such ample privileges and possessions, by the Saxon Kings: that the Bishops were reputed for Count Palatines, at and before the Norman Conquest. 7. Halifax, in the West Riding of Yorkshire, of great wealth by making of cloth. 8. Rippon, in the same, adorned with a fair Cathedral or Collegiate Church, subordinate to that of Tork. 9. Godmanham, (by Beda called Gatmandin Gaham) famous in those days for a Temple of the Saxon Idols, burnt down and utterly destroyed by Coiffe, the chief Priest thereof, converted to Christianity by Paulinus the first Archbishop of Tork, and the Apostle of the Northumbrians in these parts. The Catalogue of the Kings of which mighty Nations, by reason of the division of it into two Kingdoms as before is said, is very intricate and confused, the Kingdoms being sometimes united and sometimes dis-joined. But in regard the most prevalent King of either, was called King of Northumberland, the other of Bernicia or Deira only, I shall accordingly subjoin them in this order following.

The Kings of Northumberland.

- A. Ch.
 549 1 Ida the first King.
 560 2 Ella, King of Deira.
 569 3 Ethelrick, Son of Ida King of Bernicia.
 593 4 Ethelfride.
 617 5 Edwin, Son of Ella, the first Christian King.
 633 6 Osric.
 634 7 Oswald.
 645 8 Osric, who having subdued and slain Osric King of Deira, was the first absolute King of all Northumberland, no more divided after that.
 671 9 Egfride.
 686 10 S. Alfride.
 705 11 Osric.
 716 12 Kenned.
 718 13 Osric II.
 729 14 Godwin.
 738 15 Ogbert.
 758 16 Eusebius.
 759 17 Edmund.
 765 18 Alured.
 774 19 Ethelred.
 778 20 Alfwald.
 719 21 Osric II.
 794 22 Ethelred II. After whose death, slain by his treacherous and rebellious Subjects (as many of his Predecessors had been before) the Kingdom became distracted into parts and Factions; invaded by the Danes on the one side, the Scots and Picts on the other; who during these distractions had possessed themselves of all the Countries on the other side of the Tweed. At the last Anno 827, they yielded themselves to Egbert, the most Potent King of the West-Saxons, ruled by his Deputies for a while, then subdued by the Danes, and finally recovered, to the Crown of England, by Alfred and Edith, An. 950, or thereabouts. Content since that to give the Title of an Earl to some eminent persons both of English and Norman Races: as it hath done since the first year of King Richard the seconds to the Noble Family of the Forbes, descended by Joseline of Brabant, Brother of Adelice the second Wife of King Henry the first, from Charles the

the Great, Emperor, and King of France, and that too in a clearer Line than the Dukes of Lorrain, who so much lost of it.

VII. The Kingdom of MERCIA, was begun by Crida, or Crodda, a great Commander of the Angli, or English Nation, who settling in the heart of Britain, where the people were least used to Arms, made themselves Masters of the Counties of Gloucester, Worcester, Hereford, Salop, Cheshire, Stafford, Derby, Nottingham, Leicester, Rutland, Lincoln, Huntingdon, Northampton, Warwick, Oxon, Buckingham, Bedford, and the rest of Hampshire: which bounded in a manner by all the rest of the Saxon Kingdoms, had the name of Mercia, from the word Meare, which signifieth a bound or limit. The Christian Faith suppressed here, as in other Kingdoms of the Saxons, was restored again in the Reigns of Penda, Peada, and Wulfhere, by the preaching of St. Chad the first Bishop of Lichfield.

Places of most observation in it, 1. Hereford, seated on the Banks of the River Wye, in the middle of most flourishing Meadows, and no less plentiful Corn fields; raised out of the Ruines of Aricionem here placed by Antonine, the tract of which name it doth still retain. A Bishops See in the time of the Britains, restored to that dignity by the Saxons, An. 680, the honourable title of the holms, once Earls herof; and afterwards of Henry of Huntingdon Duke of Hereford. 2. Worcester, pleasantly seated on the Severn, over which it hath a very fair Bridge with a Tower upon it. A Bishops See, Anno 679, beautified with a fair Cathedral, and every way considerable for situation, number of Churches, neat Buildings, the industry of the Inhabitants, and giving the Title of an Earl to the Noble Family of the Somerjets, extracted by the Beaumonts from John de Gann. 3. Lichfield, the first Bishops See amongst the Mercians, founded there Anno 646, by Osric King of the Northumbrians, but fixed and settled by St. Chad in the Reign of Wulfhere King of the Mercians: endowed in the very Infancy with such fair possessions, that in the year 793 Adulfus the Bishop herof, was made Archbishop of the Mercians. But it proved only a personal honour, and died with him. 4. Coventry, so called from an old Convent or Religious house, which gave name unto it: Situate in Warwickshire, and now the principal tract of that County, though esteemed a County of it self: beautified with a goodly Wall, two fair Parish Churches, large Streets, and very handsome Houses. A City of great Trade & Riches, though destitute of all advantages which a Navigable River might afford it: heretofore of great Fame for a stately Monastery, to which the See Episcopal was for a while removed from Lichfield, now a ruin only. 5. Leicester, once a Bishops See, the Dioecese taken out of thence, to Lincoln. Beautified in those days with a fair Collegiate Church, a magnificent Abbey, and a strong Castle; and decayed and ruined by the iniquity and injury of the later times: the Town remaining in as good plight both for Trade and Buildings, as most Towns do which want a Navigable River. Of most fame for the Earls thereof, Algar and Edwin, noble Saxons, Simon de Monfort the Catharine and great Incendiary of this Kingdom, the Princes of the House of Lancaster, who bore this Title; with some others since. 6. Derby, upon the River Derwent, a well-traded Town, and of good resort; adorned with five Churches, a goodly Stone Bridge, and a large Market-place; the honorary title of the noble Family of the Stanleys, created Earls herof by King Henry the Seventh. 7. Nottingham, seated on the Trent, but very high upon an hill, which overlooks it. For Buildings, fair streets, and a spacious Market-place, not giving way to many Cities; but of most fame for a Royal and magnificent Castle, which for strength, stateliness, and prospect, may justly challenge the precedence of most in England. 8. Lincoln, a Town in those days of great strength and note, one of the best peopled Cities in all the Heptharic and of great Merchandise and Traffick both by Sea and Land: in whose time Konigius, then Bishop of Dorchester, thought fit to translate hither the Episcopal See. Now much decayed, and thence the Proverb, that Lincoln was, London is, &c. The chief fame which now it hath, is for the Minster, one of the stateliest Piles in England, and perhaps in Christendom; high seated on a Hill, and from thence discerned over all the Country. 9. Huntingdon, or the Hunters Town, from the great sport the Hunters found in the neighbouring Forest, commodiously seated on the Northern bank of the River Ouse, rising on the North with a lofty ascent, consisting of four Parish Churches, and shews the ruins of a Castle built by Edward the Elder, An. 917. 10. Peterburgh, seated in a Nook or Angle of Northamptonshire, where formerly had been a Gulf or whirlpool of exceeding depth; but made firm ground by Wulfere King of the Mercians, when he laid the Foundations of the Monastery, Anno 633, dedicated to St. Peter, whence it had this name; before then called Medanthe. A Town, but for the Church, of no great esteem, as standing out of the way for Trade, and in no plausible place for health or pleasure; yet shewing two handsome streets, a large Market-place, and a fair Parish Church (besides the Abbey) made an Episcopal See by King Henry the 8th. 11. Northampton, built on the Northern Bank of the River Antona, (now Nen) whence it had the name. A Town which for the beauty and circuit of it need not give way to many Cities; fortified heretofore with a very strong Castle, and seated in good an Air, that once the Students of Cambridge had a purpose to remove their University hither. The Noble Family of the Comptons are now Earls herof. 12. Bedford, so called from Bed and Lodgings on the Ford, built on both sides thereof for the use of Travellers, growing in time to so great biggness as to contain in it five Parish Churches: famous in former times for the great Battel fought in the adjoining fields, Anno 572, in which Cuthwulf the Saxon vanquished the Britains, and became Master of the Country: But more famous for giving the title of Duke to John of Lancaster, Regent of France for King Henry the sixth, and Jasper of Hatfield, Uncle to King Henry the 7th. 13. St. Albans, so called from a famous Monastery, here founded by Offa the great King of the Mercians, in honour of St. Albans, the Proto-Martyr of Britain, a Citizen of Verulamium, near adjoining to it: out of the ruins whereof, decayed by age, and destroyed by War; arose the present greatness of St. Albans, the fairest and best traded Town in the County of Hartford. 14. Buckingham, the chief Town of the County so called, situate on the River Ouse: fortified by King Edward the Elder against the Danes, Anno 915, otherwise not much observable, but for those many noble personages which have had the title of Dukes herof.

The Kings of Mercia.

- A. C.
 582 1 Crodda, the first King.
 593 2 Webba.
 614 3 Cheol.
 626 4 Penda.
 656 5 Peada, the first Christian King.
 659 6 Wulfhere.
 675 7 Ethelred.
 704 8 Kenned.
 709 9 Ethelred.

- 716 10 Ethelbald, overcome by Cuthbert King of the West-Saxons, at a Fight near Burford in the County of Oxon, the place still called Battle-Mill.
- 758 11 Offa the Great.
- 796 12 Egfrid.
- 797 13 Kenulf.
- 819 14 Kenelm.
- 820 15 Cheulwolf.
- 821 16 Bernalf.
- 824 17 Ludecan.
- 826 18 Witluf, overcome in fight (as were his two Predecessors) by Egbert King of West-Sax, became his tributary.

839 19 Berthulf.

852 20 Burhard, a substituted King of the West-Saxons, and the last King of the Mercians (the short Reign of his six Predecessors portending that fatal period to be near at hand.) After whose death, Anno 856, this Kingdom for some few years tyrannized over by the Danes, was united by King Alfred to the English Monarchy.

Such was the Order and Succession of the Saxon Kings, during the Heptarchie, or division of it into seven Kingdoms; continuing separate and distinct till the prevailing Fortune of West-Saxons brought them all together into one, by the name of England. But so, that they were subject for the most part unto one alone, who was instituted Rex Gentis Anglorum: those which were stronger than the rest, giving the Law unto them in their several turns, and are these that follow:

The Monarchs of the English Saxons in the time of the Heptarchie.

- A. C.
- 455 1 Hengist, King of Kent, who first brought the Saxons into Britain.
- 481 2 Ella, the first King of the South-Saxons.
- 495 3 Cerdic, the first King of the West-Saxons.
- 534 4 Kenric, King of the West-Saxons.
- 561 5 Cheulinf, or Celingus, King of the West-Saxons.
- 562 6 Ethelbert, King of Kent, the first Christian King of the Saxons.
- 616 7 Redwald, King of the East-Angles.
- 617 8 Edwin, King of Northumberland.
- 634 9 Offwald, King of Northumberland.
- 643 10 Osfric, King of Northumberland.
- 659 11 Wulfhere, King of Mercia.
- 675 12 Ethelred, King of Mercia.
- 704 13 Kenred, King of Mercia.
- 709 14 Chelred, King of Mercia.
- 716 15 Ethelbald, King of Mercia.
- 758 16 Offa, the great King of the Mercians.
- 794 17 Egfrid, King of Mercia.
- 796 18 Kenulf, King of Mercia.
- 796 19 Egbert, the son of Almund, King of the West-Saxons, who having vanquished all the rest of the Saxon Kings, and added most of their Estates unto his own, caused the whole united body to be called Engel-land, or England, in a Parliament or Council held at Winchester, Anno 819, being the 19th year of his Reign over the West-Saxons; and by that name he was then crowned in the presence of his Nobles, and the rest of his Subjects, leaving it unto the rest of his Successors.

But before we come the recital of their names, we are to take notice of the Danes, the next considerable Actors on the Stage of England, who in the time of this

Egbert, first invaded the Country, and after exercised the patience of his posterity, till in time they got the Kingdom to themselves. Of the Original and first Successors of this people, we shall speak more at large when we come to Denmark. Suffice it here to know, that having taken up the void Rooms of the Justices and English in the Cumbria Chorliffe, they thought it not amiss to follow them into Britain also; making a discovery of some part of the Coast thereof with three Ships only, Anno 787, being the first year of British (the Father of Egbert) King of the West-Saxons. Which having done, and prepared themselves for the undertaking, in the time of Egbert they invaded Northumberland, the Isle of Sheppey in Kent, and the Coasts of Wales; not without much difficulty driven out by him. In the Reign of the three Kings succeeding having vanquished the Northumbrians, East-Angles, and a part of the Mercians; they erected many petty Tyrannies: by Alfred first stopped in their Career, by Edward the Elder out of the East-Angles, and by Alfred King of Northumberland also; the Danes for some time after being subject to the English Government, mixing in marriages and alliance, and incorporated with them. By the valour and good Fortune of Swein their King, they recovered their power again in England; and in the person of Canutus obtained the Kingdom: who having impudently sent back his Danes into their Country (as if Kingdom got by force, could be held by favour) opened a way to their exclusion from the Crowns, which happened within seven years after his decease. Which said, we come to the Successions of

The Kings of England of the Saxon Race.

- 819 1 Egbert, the last King of the West-Saxons, and the first of England, 18.
- 837 2 Ethelwolf, the eldest Son of Egbert, 20.
- 857 3 Ethelbald, the eldest son of Ethelwolf, 1.
- 858 4 Ethelbert, the brother of Ethelbald, 5.
- 863 5 Ethelred, the brother of the two former Kings, the third Son of Ethelwolf, and as much molested by the Danes, as his brethren were, 10.
- 873 6 Afride, the fourth Son of Ethelwolf, who totally united the Saxon Heptarchie into one Estate, vanquished the Danes, whom he made subject to his commands, though he could not expel them. He divided England into Shires, and restored the University of Oxon.
- 900 7 Edward, furnished the Elder, the son of Afride, who recovered the East-Angles from the power of the Danes, whom he shut up in Northumberland, 24.
- 924 8 Alfred, the Son of Edward, who subdued the Britains of Cumberland and Conwall, and compelled the Danes to submit themselves to the English Government. In his time lived Sir Guy of Warwick famous for overcoming Colbrand the Danish Champion (the great Goliath of that people) near the Walls of Winchester, 10.
- 940 9 Edmund, the Brother of Alfred, by whom the Danes of Northumberland were brought under obedience, and the Kingdom of the Britains in Cumberland utterly subverted.
- 946 10 Edred, the Brother of Edmund and Alfred, so fortunate against the Danes, that he compelled them to be Christianized, 9.
- 955 11 Edwy, the Son of Edmund.

- 955 12 Edgar, the Brother of Edwy, surnamed the Peacable, the most absolute Monarch of England, since the time of the Saxons; by whom the tribute of money imposed by Aethelstan on the Wicels, was exchanged into a tribute of Wolves, 16.
- 975 13 Edward II. Son of Edgar, treacherously murdered by his Stepdame, to make way for Ethelred her son; hence surnamed the Martyr, 3.
- 978 14 Ethelred, the younger Son of Edgar, and half Brother of Edward, enjoyed the Crown unjustly which he got unjustly. Oppressed and broken by the Danes, he was fain to buy his peace of them at the yearly tribute of 10000 pounds; enhanced to 48000 pounds within short time after; which monies were raised upon the Subjects, by the name of Danegeld. Weary of the exactions, he plotted warily with his Subjects to kill all the Danes, as they slept in their beds; which accordingly was put in execution on St. Briens night, November 12, Anno 1012. To revenge this outrage and dishonour, Swein King of Denmark, with a Fleet of 350 Ships came unto England; the fear whereof compelled Ethelred, a weak and impuissant Prince to fly into Normandy; leaving his poor Subjects to the mercy of the Danish Tyrant, who miserably plagued them till his death. To whom succeeded his Son Canute (Canutus) a more temperate Prince; who though Ethelred now returned, or his Son Edmond Ironside, a most valiant King, did in the end possess himself of the whole Kingdom.
- 1016 15 Edmond II. surnamed Ironside, having in vain attempted to recover his Kingdom, at last divided it with Canutus: not long after which he was treacherously and basely murdered, by Edward, surnamed the Out-Law, his eldest Son, who was Grandfather of Edgar Atheling, and Margaret, Wife of Malcolm the third, King of the Scots.

The Danish Kings.

- 1017 1 Canutus King of Denmark and Norway, after the death of Edmond the second sole King of England. He married Emma the widow of Ethelred, and Daughter of Richard Duke of Normandy, 20.
- 1037 2 Harald the base Son of Canutus, surnamed Harfager, 4.
- 1040 3 Canutus II. commonly called Hardy Canute, the lawful Son of Canutus by Emma the Widow of Ethelred the second, and Mother of Edward, surnamed the Confessor, the last King of the Danes in England. After whose death that people having tyrannized in England for the space of 255 years, (of which they reigned only 26) were utterly expelled the Country, or passed in the Account of English; Edward the Confessor, the youngest Son of Ethelred, being advanced unto the Throne, by the power and practices of his Mother Emma, and the absence of the Children of Edmond Ironside his elder Brother, Anno 1042.

Now concerning the Danes abiding here, and going hence as they did, I observe three customs yet in use amongst us. First, each English house maintained one

Dane, who living idly like the Drone among the Bees, had the benefit of all their labour, and was by them called Lord Dane; and even now when we see an idle fellow, we call him a Lord Dane. 2. The Danes used when the English drank, to stab them or cut their throats: to avoid which villany, the party then drinking, requested some of the next unto him to be his surety of pledge, which he paid nature her due: and hence we have our usual custom of pledging one another. 3. The old Romans at the expulsion of their Kings, annually solemnized the Fugalia: according to which pattern the joyful English having cleared the Country of the Danes, instituted the annual Sports of Hock-tide; the word in their old tongue, the Saxon, importing the time of foaming, or triumphing. This solemnity consisted in the merry meetings of the Neighbours in those days, during which the Festiva lasted, and was celebrated by the younger sort of both Sexes, with all manner of exercises, and pastimes in the Streets, even as Shrove-tide yet is. But now time hath so corrupted it, that the name excepted, there remaineth no sign of the first institution.

The Saxons re-enthroned.

- A. C.
- 1442 16 Edward III. surnamed the Confessor, half Brother both to Edmund Ironside, and Hardy Canute the Dane, called out of Normandy, where he lived, with the Dukes his Cousins, succeeded in the Realm of England. This King collected out of the Danish, Saxon, and Mercian Laws, one universal and general Law, whence our Common Law, is thought to have had its original: which may be true of the written Laws, not of the customary and unwritten Laws; these being certainly more ancient. He was in his life of that holiness that he received power from above to cure many diseases, amongst other, the swelling of the Throat, called by us the King-Evil: a Prerogative that continueth Hereditary to his Successors of England. Finally, after his death, he was Canonized for a Saint; and died, having reigned 24 years.
- 1666 17 Harald II. Son to Earl Godwin, was chosen King in the non-age of Edgar Atheling, Grandchild to Edmond Ironside, the true Heir of the Kingdom: to which Hirald might pretend some title as being both unto Earl Godwin by Thyra the base Daughter of Canutus the first, Sister by the whole blood to Harald Harfager; and of the half blood to Canutus the second, the last King of the Danes in England. But William Duke of Normandy, (of which people we have spoke already when we were in France and shall speak more at large when we come to Denmark, as the last Actor on the Theatre or Stage of England), This William (I say) pretending a Donation from his Cousin, King Edmond the Confessor, invaded England, slew Harald, and with him 666 54 of his English Soldiers, and possessed himself of the Kingdom; using such Policy in his new Conquest, that he utterly disheartened the English from hopes of better fortune. From him beginneth the new account of the Kings of England, those of the former Line being no longer reckoned in the computation of the first, second, or third, &c.

The Norman Kings.

- A. C.
1067 1 William, surnamed the Conqueror, after the vanquishment and death of Harold, acknowledged and Crowned King, altered the ancient Laws of England, and established those of Normandy in the place thereof: governing the people absolutely by the power of the Sword, and giving a great part of their Lands to his former Followers, and such as were engaged in the Action with him; from whom most of our ancient Families do derive themselves; those Lands to be holden in Knights-Service, which drew along with it the Wardship of the Heir in Minority, as a charge laid upon the Land.
- 1089 2 William II. surnamed Rufus, second Son to the Conqueror, succeeded by the appointment of his Father, and was Crowned King; slain afterwards in the New Forest, by an Arrow levelled at a Deer.
- 1102 3 Henry, for his Learning, surnamed Beau-Clerk, the third Son of the Conqueror, in the absence of his Brother Robert (in the Holy-Land Wars) entered on the Kingdom, and afterwards took from him also the Dukedom of Normandy, and put out his eyes. Deprived of all his male-issue, he left one only Daughter whose name was Maud; first married to the Emperor Henry the fifth, and after to Geoffrey Plantagenet Earl of Anjou, Touraine, and Maine. 34.
- 1136 4 Stephen, second Son of Stephen Earl of Champaigne and Blais, and of Allice Daughter to the Conqueror, succeeded; who to purchase the peoples love, released the Tribute called Danegelt: he spent most of his Reign in War against Maud the Empress. 19.

The Saxon Blood refused.

- 1155 5 Henry II. Son to Maud the Empress, Daughter to Henry the first, and to Maud Daughter to Malcolm King of Scotland, and Margaret Sister to Edgar Archbishop, restored the Saxon blood to the Crown of England. His Father was Geoffrey Earl of Anjou, Touraine, and Maine; which Provinces he added to the English Empire, as also the Dutchy of Aquitain, and the Earldom of Poitou, by Eleanor his Wife; and a great part of Ireland by Conquest. Happy in all things, the unnatural rebellions of his Sons excepted. 34.
- 1189 6 Richard, the Son of Henry, surnamed Cœur de Lyon, warred in the Holy Land, overcame the Turks, whom he had almost driven out of Syria, took the Isle of Cyprus; and after many worthy achievements returning homewards to defend Normandy, and Aquitain against the French, was by Tempest cast upon Dalmatia; and travelling through the Dominions of the Duke of Anstria, was taken Prisoner, put to a grievous ransom, and after his return slain at the siege of Chalus, in the Province of Limousin. 12.

- 1201 7 John, Brother of Richard, an unhappy Prince, and one that could expect no better, as being an unnatural Son to his Father, and an undutiful Subject to his Brother. Distressed for a great part of his Reign by Wars with his Barons, outed of all Normandy, Aquitain, and Anjou, by the power of the French, to whom also he was likely to have lost the Realm of England. Finally, after a base submission of himself and his Kingdom to the Popes Legate, he is said to have been poisoned at Swinsede Abbey. 17.
- 1218 8 Henry III. Son of John, expelled the invading French out of England, and by a compulsion with Lewis the 9th, was restored unto the Dukedom of Guyenne, held by his Successors till the Reign of King Henry the 6th. Exhausted by the Pope, and oppressed a long time by his factious and unruly Barons, but at last victorious. 56.
- 1274 9 Edward, the Son of Henry, awed France, subdued Wales, brought Scotland into subjection, of whose King and Nobility he received homage. 34.
- 1308 10 Edward II. Son of Edward the first, a dilute Prince, hated of the Nobles, and contemned by the Vulgar, for his immaculate love to Pierce Gaveston, and the Spencer, was twice shamefully beaten by the Scots; and being deposed by a strong faction raised against him by his Queen, and Roger, Lord Mortimer, was barbarously murdered in Blackley Castle. 19.
- 1327 11 Edward III. Son of Edward the second, a most Vertuous and Valorous Prince, brought the Scots to obedience, overthrew the French in two great Battels, took the Town of Calice, and many fair possessions in that Kingdom. 50.
- 1377 12 Richard II. another of our unfortunate Kings, lost many of his Peers in France, and at last being over-awed by his two great Uncles of Lancaster, and Gloucester, and taken Prisoner by his Cousin the Duke of Hereford, he was forced to resign his Crown, and afterwards was murdered at Ponfret Castle.

The Lancastrian Line.

- 1399 13 Henry IV. Son to John of Gaunt Duke of Lancaster, the fourth Son of Edward the 3d, was by the power of the Sword, but with the consent of the People, settled in the Throne, and spent his whole Reign in suppressing homebred Rebellions. 15.
- 1414 14 Henry V. the Mirror of Magnificence, and perfect Son of true Vertue, pursued the Title of France, and won it, being ordained Heir apparent to the French Crown, but lived not to possess the Kingdom. 9.
- 1423 15 Henry VI. a Pious, but unfortunate Prince, was crowned King of France in Paris, which he held during the life of his Uncle John of Bedford, and Humfrey of Gloucester after whose deaths, he not only lost France to the French, but England and his life to the Turkish Faction. 38.

The

The Yorkish Line.

- 1461 16 Edward IV. Son of Richard Duke of York, the Son of Richard Earl of Cambridge, and Grandson of Edmund of Langley Duke of York, the fifth Son of King Edward the third, challenged the Crown in right of the Lady Anne his Grandmother, Daughter of Roger Mortimer Earl of March, the Son of Edmund Mortimer Earl of March, and of Philippa, his Wife, sole Daughter of Lionel Duke of Clarence, the third Son of the said King Edward, and Elder Brother of John of Gaunt. The claim first set on foot by his Father the Duke of York, who lost his life in pursuance of it in the Battel of Wakefield, with better fortune and success, pursued by King Edward himself, who finally after nine bloody Battels fought between the Houses (specialy that of Townton, in which were slain 36000 English) was quietly seated in the possession of England and Ireland. 23.
- 1484 17 Edward V. his Son, was before his Coronation murdered by his Uncle Richard, in the Tower of London.
- 1484 18 Richard III. Brother of Edward the 4, a most wicked and tyrannical Prince, to make way unto the Diadem, murdered King Henry the Sixth, and 2. Prince Edward his Son. 3. George Duke of Clarence, his Brother. 4. Halings a faithful Servant to King Edward. 5. Rivers, Vaughan, and Gray, the Queens Kindred. 6. Edward the 5th, his Sovereign, with his Brother Richard. 7. Henry Duke of Buckingham his dear Friend, and greatest Coadjutor in these his ungodly practices; and his own Wife Anne, so to make way to an incestuous marriage with his Niece Elizabeth, the eldest Daughter of Edward the 4th; but before the solemnity, he was slain at Bolworth. 3.

The Union of the Families.

- 1487 19 Henry VII. Earl of Richmond, Heir to the Houle of Lancaster, (as Son of Margaret Daughter of John Duke of Somerset, Son of John Earl of Somerset, Son of John of Gaunt Duke of Lancaster) after the overthrow of Richard, married Elizabeth, Daughter and Heir to Edward the 4, uniting by that marriage the divided Families. He was also extracted from the British and French Royal Blood, as being Son to Edmund Tudor Earl of Richmond, Son to Owen Tudor (descended from Cadwaladar, the last King of the Britains) and Katharine of France, Widow of Henry the 5. His whole Wars was against home-bred Rebels, the chief being Lambert, and the Followers and Fautors of Perken Warbeck. 23.
- 1509 20 Henry VIII. Heir to both Families, between which were fought for the Diadem 17 pitched Fields; in which perished 8 Kings and Princes, 40 Dukes, Marquesses, and Earls, 200000 of the common people, besides Barons and Gentlemen. This King banished the usurped Supremacy of the Popes, and began the Reformation of Religion; though formerly he had writ a Book against Luther, for which the Pope gave him the honourable Title of The Defender of the Faith; afterwards made Hereditary by Act of Parliament to his Heirs and Successors. A Prince of great virtues, but of greater virtues. 38.

1547 21 Edward VI. the Son of Henry the 8th, by Jane Seymour his third Wife; out of whose Womb he is said to be cut, to come into the World, as Cesar was: but he had neither Cesar's Fortune nor length of life; dying very young, and his Affairs conducted by divided Councils; though otherwise of great Lopes, and of a pregnancy of judgment above his years. 6.

- 1553 22 Mary, the Daughter of King Henry the 8th, by Katharine of Spain, the Widow of his Brother Arthur, restored the Popes Supremacy banished by her Father, with the whole mass of Popery abolished in her Brother's Reign. To which Religion so addicted, that in the short time of her Reign there was more blood shed, than in the whole 44 years of her Sister Elizabeth. In the last year of her Reign she lost Calice to the French, which proved the loss of her life also, as it was supposed. 5.
- 1558 23 Elizabeth, the Daughter of King Henry the 8th, by the Lady Anne Bullen his second Wife, a most gracious Heroick Princess, was by the Divine Providence of God preserved from the Practices of her Enemies in her Sisters Reign, to sway the Scepter of the Kingdom. She pursued the Reformation of Religion, begun in the times of her Father and Brother; refined the corrupt Coin brought in by her Father, furnished the Royal Navy with all kind of Warlike Ammunitions; encreased the Revenue of the Universities; by the Statute of Provisions, succoured the Scots against the French; the French Protestants against the Papists, and both against the Spaniards: defended the Netherlands against the attempts of Spain; commanded the whole Ocean; entered League with the Muscovites; and was famous for her Prudence and Government amongst the Turks, Persians, and Tartars, yea her very Enemies. Finally she died in the 45. year of her Reign, and the 70. of her life, on the 24. of March, Anno 1602, according to the computation of the Church of England, which beginneth the New Year with the Feast of the Annunciation. To whom succeeded JAMES the Sixth, King of the Scots, with the joy of all men, as the next undoubted Heir of the Crown. Of whom we shall say more when we come to speak of the Monarchs of Britain: of which he was the first since the fall of the Roman Empire, and such more properly than the greatest of all those Emperours had been before: None of them having all the North parts of Britain itself, or any part of Ireland at all, nor many of the Isles adjoining, under their Dominion.

In the mean time to look on England as a State distinct, we will consider it and the Kings thereof, with reference to reputation abroad, and power at home; with the Revenues, Arms, and Military Orders of it, as in other places. And first for Reputation, when all Christendom in the Council of Constance, was divided into Nations, Anglicana Natio was one of the Principal, and not Sulavertis of France or Italy, in all affairs concerning the Doctrine, discipline and peace of the Church, which were there debated. And for the place due to the Kings hereof in those

General

General Councils, and the rank they held among other Christian Princes; I find that the Emperor of Germany was accounted Major filius Ecclesie; the King of France, Minor filius; and the King of England, Filius tertius & adoptivus. The King of France in General Councils had place next the Emperor, on his right hand; the King of England on his left hand, and the King of Scotland next before Capite. Now indeed the King of Spain being too much improved, is the dearly beloved Son of the Church; and arrogate to himself the place above all other Princes: but in time of Pope Julius, the controversy arising between the Ambassadors of the two Princes for precedence; the Pope adjudged it to belong of right unto England. And Pope Pius the Fourth, upon the like Controversy arising between the Ambassadors of France and Spain, adjudged the Precedency to the French.

Touching the Souldiery of Engl. and their most notable achievements, both by Sea and Land, sufficient hath been said already. What Forces the Kings hereof have been able to raise, and may command for present service; will best be seen by the addition of King Henry the 8th. at Bullough, the Armies of Queen Elizabeth in 88. and the numbers of the Trained Bands of the several Counties. First, for the Action of King Henry the 8th. he had in his Avant guard 12000 Foot, and 500 Light Horse in blew Jackets with red Guards; in the Rere-guard a like number both of Horse and Foot; and in the main Battle 20000 Foot, and 2000 Horse, all in Red Jaquets and yellow Guards: the whole number 44000 Foot, and 3000 Horse. They drew after them 100 great Pieces, besides small ones, and for conveyance of their Ordnance, Baggage, and other necessities, no fewer than 25000 Draught-horses, besides other carriages. In the next place for 88. the Queen dispersed in several places on the Southern Coasts of the Kingdom, to hinder the landing of the Enemy, 25000 Souldiers of both sorts, at Tilbury, for the defence of the City of London, under the Command of the Earl of Leicester, 22000 Foot, and 1000 Horse; and for the Guard of her own person, under the Lord Hunsdon, 34000 Foot, and 2000 Horse: in all the number of 84000 men: besides those goodly Troops which the Nobility and Gentry did present her with, at their own proper charges. And as for the Trained Bands, the number of both sorts disciplined and mustered to be ready upon all occasions: in the eighth year of King James, (for I have since seen no Muster-Roll of them) amounted to 296130 able men, 141315 armed men, 935 Demicalens, 6777 Light-Horse, 19345 Pioneers; besides what was required of Peers and Prelates, supposed to amount to 20000 armed men, and 4000 Light-Horse. And for their strength at Sea, besides the Navy Royal, consisting of about 30 gallant Ships, (besides the lesser Vessels,) the best and bravest that any Prince in Christendom can boast of, as his own propriety: there are such store of Collier and Merchant Ships, fit for any service, that in the year 88 aforesaid, the Queen had 100 Sail of good Ships to oppose the Spaniards; and 20 more to wait upon the motions of the Duke of Parma. And in the year 1597, she set out for the Ind Voyage, no fewer than 120 Sail of all sorts, of which 60 were men of War.

As for the Revenues of this Kingdom, Boterus reckoned them in the time of King Henry the 7th, to be no more than 400000 *Crown*s per annum; but afterwards they were improved to a million. more, by King Henry the 8th, the dissolution of Monasteries, and the benefit redounding from the Court of Wards, making that improvement. And to fix the truth, the Universal dissolution of Religious Houses of all sorts, did for the time fo mightly increase his annual Income, that he was fain to erect two new Courts (the Court of Augmentation, and the Court of Surveyors) for the better managing of the same. But these Additions being waited by his own exorbitant expences, and the several Alienations made by King Edward the sixth; those Courts of new Erection were dissolved again; and the Revenue fell so short of its former height, that in the 12. year of Queen Elizabeth, the profits of the Crown (besides the Court of Wards, and the Dutche of Lancaster) came to no more than to 1831971. 4s. Of which 1106124. 13s. went that year out upon the Navy, the charge of Household, and other necessary assignments. Since which time the great increase of trading, both at home and abroad, and the great glut of money in all parts of the World, hath added very much to the Intrado. The certainty whereof as I do not know, so neither will I aim at it by uncertain Hearsay.

The Principal Orders of Knighthood are, and were, 1. the Roma Table, instituted by Arthur King of the Britains, and one of the Worlds Nine Worthies. It consisted of 150 Knights whose names are recorded in the History of King Arthur, there where Sir Ure a wounded Knight came to be cured of his hurts: it being his fate that only the best Knight of the Order should be his Chirurgien. The Arms of most of these, with their several Blazons (I know not on how good authority) we find in Barthelemy, Sir Tristram, Sir Lancelot, Sir Gawain, &c. all placed at one Round Table, to avoid quarrels about priority and place. The Welsh and Table hanging in the great Hall at Windsor, is, I fully called Arthurs Round Table, it being not of sufficient Antiquity and containing but 24 Seats. Of these 12 there are reported many fabulous Stories. They end with their Founder, and are signed by that Lancelot France, Rablaies, to be the Ferry-men of Hell; and that their pay is a piece of mouldy bread, and a hallop on the nose.

2. Of S. George, called commonly the Garter, instituted by King Edward the third, to increase virtue and valour in the hearts of his Nobility; or as some will, in honour of the Countess of Salisbury Garter, of which the King formerly had been enamoured. But this Tale to be a vain and idle Romance, derogatory both to the Founder, and the Order; first published by Petard Virgil, a stranger to the affairs of England, and by him taken upon no better ground than fama vulgi; the tradition of the common people; too trifling a Foundation for so great a building; Common bruit, being so infamous in History, that wise men neither report after it, nor give credit to any thing they receive from it. But for this time or common bruit, the vanity and impracticabilities thereof have been elsewhere canvassed. Suffice it to observe in this time and place, that the Garter was given unto the King, in testimony of that bond of Love and Affection, wherewith the Knights or Fellows of it were to be bound severally unto one another, and of all of them jointly unto King as the Sovereign of it. So faith the Register of the Order, (in which occurreth not one word of the Ladies Garter) affirming that King Edward did so fit the habit unto that design, Ut omnia ad amicitiam & concordiam tendere nemo non intelligat. But to return unto the Order, there are of it 26 Knights, of which the Kings of England are Sovereigns: and is so much desired for its excellency that 8 Emperours, 21 Foreign Kings, 21 Foreign Dukes and Princes, besides divers Noble men of other Countries have been Fellows of it. The Ensign is a blew Garter buckled on the left leg, on which these words are embroidered, viz. Honry juxta qui mal y pensé. About their necks they wear a blew Ribband, at the end of which hangeth this Image of St. George, upon whose day the Installations of the new Knights are commonly celebrated.

3. Of the Barb, brought first into England, 1399. by Henry the Fourth. They are created at the Coronation of Kings and Queens, and the Installation of the Princes of Wales: their duty to defend true Religion, Widows, Maids, Orphans, and to maintain the Kings Rights. The Knights thereof distinguished by a Red Ribband, which they wear ordinarily about their necks, to difference them from Knights Bachelors, of whom they have in all places the precedence; unless they be also the Sons of Noblemen, to whom their birth gives it besides all Orders.

4. Of Baronets, an Order instituted by King James in the 9th year of his Reign, for the furtherance of the Plantation of Ulster. They have Precedency of the Knights of the Bath, but not of those of the Garter, nor of the younger Sons of the Nobility. But this being Hereditary, not personal, and rather Civil than Military; is not to properly to be ranked amongst Orders of Knighthood.

The Arms of the Realm of England, are Mars, 3 Lyons passant Guardant, Sol. The reason why these Arms quartered with the French, took the second place, are, 1. Because that France at the time of the first quartering of them, was the larger and more famous Kingdom. 2. That the French seeing the honour done to their Arms, might more easily be induced to have acknowledged the English Title. 3. Because the English Arms were compounded of the Lion of Aquitaine, and the two Lions of Normandy, being both French Dutchie.

There were in England, at and since the time of the Reformation.

W A L E S.

W A L E S is bounded on all sides with the Sea, except towards England on the East; from which separated by the River Dee, and a line drawn to the River Wie. Anciently it extended Eastwards to the River Severn, till by the purchase of Offa the great King of the Mercians, the Welsh or Britons were driven out of the plain Countries beyond that River, and forced to betake themselves to the Mountains; where he caused them to be shut up and divided from England by an huge Ditch, called in Welsh, Clawd Offa, i.e. Offa's Dike: Which Dike beginning at the influx of the Wie into the Severn, not far from Chepstow, extendeth 84 miles in length, even as far as Cheshire, where the Die is mingled with the Sea. Concerning which Ditch, there was a Lie made by Harold, That if any Welsh-man was found with a Weapon on this side of it, he should have his right hand cut off by the Kings Officers.

The name of Wales some derive from Idwallo, the Son of Cadwallader, who with the small remainder of his Britons, yet made good the faithfulness of this Country, and was the first who had the Title of King of Wales. Others conceive that the name of Welsh and Wales, was given them by the Saxons: who having possessed themselves of all the rest of the Countrey, called the Britons, who lived hereby the name of Walsh, which in their Language signified as much as Aliens; because they differed from them both in their Laws and Language: which is the general opinion. Most probable it is, that as the Britons derive their Pedigree from the Gauls (as before was proved) for they might still retain the name; and were called Walsh by the Saxons, instead of Gauls: for the Saxons used in most words W for G, as Ware for Guerre, Warden, for Guardian, and the like. And this to be believed rather, because the Frenchmen to this day call the Country Galles, and the eldest Son of England, Le Prince de Galles: as also that the Dutch or Germans (of whom the Saxons are a part) do call such Nations as inhabit on the Skirts of France, by the name of Wallons.

The ancient Inhabitants hereof in the time of the Romans, before it had the name of Wales, were the Silures possessing the Counties of Haverford, Brecknock, Radnor, Monmouth, and Glamorgan, all Gloucestershire beyond the Severn, and the South parts of Worcestershire on the same side also: their chief Towns, Ariconium, now Hereford, (not reckoned since the time of Offa, as a part of Wales), Baleim, now Bath; Bryn Brecknock, Cubannium, now Abercarn, in Monmouth; Magni, now New Radnor, in the County so named; and Boonum now Bowton, in Glamorgan. 2. The Dinets, possessing Cardigan, Caermarthen, and Pembroke, whose chief Towns were Llanvinnion, now New-Castle, in Caermarthen; Mariidunum, or Caermarthen it self; and Octipia, where now stands S. David, by the Welsh called Menem, whence that Bishop hath the name of Menecensis in Latine. 3. The Ordovices, inhabiting the Counties of Merioneth, Carnarvon, Anglesey, Denbigh, Flint, and Montgomery, with the North part of Worcestershire beyond the River Severn, and all Shropshire, on the same side of the River. Their chief Towns were Segontium, now Caer Segont, in Carnarvonshire; Conomum, now Conwy in the same County; Bonium, where after stood the famous Monastery of Banochor, in Flintshire; and Mediolanum, now Llanllewellyn, in the County of Montgomery. By these three Nations was all that Tract possessed, which lay on the other side of the Severn. A very stout and hardy people, and so impatient of the yoke, that two of the three Legions which the Romans kept constantly in Britain, as before is said, were planted in and near this People, the better to contain them in due obedience: that is to say, the second Legion at Caer Leon upon Orkney, where now stands Wesf-chester. So difficult a thing it was to make this Nation subject to the power of Rome; and no less difficult to bring them under the Command of the Saxons: whom they withstood, when all the rest of Britain had been conquered by them; and lived to see their Victors overcome by the Normans, before themselves had yielded to a Foreign yoke.

The Christian Faith planted amongst the Britons, in the time of Lucius, they still retained, when all the rest of the Island had been relapsed to Paganism; and they remained it not in secret, as afraid to own it, but in a well counterfeited Church. Inasmuch that Angusfine the Monk, when he first Preached the Gospel to the English Saxons, found here no fewer than seven Bishops; that is to say, Herfordensis, Tavenfis, Paternensis, Banchorensis, Elwensis, Worcesterensis, and Morgawensis, (or rather Menecensis;) all which, excepting only Paternensis, do still remain remain among us, though in other names Hereford, and Worcester, (Wicciensis) reckoned now in England; St. David's or Menevensis, Taenensis, or Londaff, Bangor, and Elyensis or St. Asaph, in Wales, according to the present boundaries and limits of it: And as they did retain the Faith, to they retained it after the tradition of their Predecessors; neither submitting unto Anglicanism as Archbishop of Canterbury, nor to the Pope from whom he came as Occumenical, or chief Pastor of the Church of Christ; nor receiving any new Doctrines or Traditions from them: but standing to those Principles of Liberty, and Religion which they were possessed of, till all the world almost had yielded to that powerful Sec. Not manumitted from the vassalage and thralldom to it, till they embraced the Reformation of the Church of England in Doctrine, Discipline, and Worship: the Liturgy whereof was by the command of Queen Elizabeth, translated into the Welsh or British; as the Bible also was by virtue of an Act of Parliament in the fifth of that Queen, the care thereof committed to the Bishop of Hereford, and the four Bishops of Wales. But because the Bible then set forth was only in a large Church Volume, it was in the beginning, of the Reign of King Charles reduced to a more portable Bulk, at the cost and charge of my Cousin Mr. Rowland Heylin, one of the Aldermen of London; who also caused the Book called The Practice of Piety to be Printed in that Language for the instruction of the People; and a Welsh or British Dictionary to be made and published, for the understanding of the Language.

But to return unto the Church, and Affaires thereof, for the better ordering of the same, it hath been long ago divided into four Dioceses (besides that of Hereford) for the exercise of Ecclesiastical Discipline, those Dioceses subdivided into 9 Arch-Deaneries, as before in England; all subject heretofore to their own Primate, or Archbishop, residing in the City of Iffa Silurum, the Metropolis of the Province of Britannia Secunda, called by the Welsh or Britons, Caer-Leon, or the City of the Legion, from the second Legion, first there for defence of the Province; and Caer-Leon upon Usk, because situate on the River so named. But this City being too much exposed to the fury of the Saxons, the Archbishop's See was translated to Meneu, standing on a Promontory in the extreme Angle of Pembroke-shire; by David then Archbishop thereof, and near of kin to Arthur, that renowned King of the Britons: from whom, in tract of time, the name of Meneu being left off, the See and City came to be called St. David's. From David unto Sampson the 26. Archbishop of the Welsh, (being above 400 years) did they hold this Dignity; but then the Pestilence extremely raging in their parts, Archbishop Sampson carried with him the Episcopal Pall, and therewith the Dignity it self to Dale in Bretagne. After which time we hear of no Archbishop in Wales, in name and Title, though the power proper thereto still remained amongst them: the Welsh Bishops acknowledging no other Primate, nor receiving Consecration from any other hands than their own Bishop of St. David's, till Bishop Barnard was compelled to submit himself to the Power and Jurisdiction of the Archbishop of Canterbury, in the time of King Henry the first.

But it's time to look upon the face of the Country as it stands at the present, which we find Mountainous and Barren; not able to maintain its people but by helps elsewhere. To make amends for which defect, there were some Silver Mines discovered in it not long since, by Sir Hugh Middleton, Knight and Baronet; not only to the great honour of his own Country, but to the profit and renown of the whole Island of Great Britain. Their chief Commodities are coarse Clothes, entitled commonly by the name of Welsh Freeze, and Cottens; which Merchandise was heretofore brought to Offlowre (the furthest Town of Shropshire) as the common Empory; and there bought by the Merchants of Shrewsbury. But the Welsh coveting to draw the Staple more into their own Country, occasioned the Merchant to hold off from buying their Commodities: till in the end the Merchant got the better of them, and enforced them to settle the whole Trade at Shrewsbury, where it still continueth.

To speak of Mountains in a Country which is wholly mountainous were a thing unnecessary: yet of most note are those of 1. Snawdon, 2. Brechin; Rardvare, and 3. Plinlimmon. Not much observable but for their vast height, and those many notable Rivers which issue from them. The principal whereof are, 1. Dee, in Latine called Devva, arising out of Rardvare Hills in Merioneth-shire, and running into the Sea not far from Chester. Over this River Edward King of England was rowed triumphantly in his Barge by eight inferior Kings, Vassals and Tributaries to him, that is to say, Kenneth King of the Scots, Malcolm King of Cumberland, Mac-enis King of the Isles, Dufwal, Gjizib, Hovet, Jago, and Indethel, Princes of Kings of Wales: using these words to such as attended at him, that then his Successors might call themselves Kings of England when they did the like. This was in the year 923, and the last of his Reign. 2. Wye, in Latine called Vaga, arising from Plinlimmon Hills, and emptying itself into the Severn at Chepstre. More in the heart of the Country (for there are but borders for the greater part of their course) 3. Conwy, which rising in Aberneth-shire, and dividing the Counties of Denbigh and Caernarvon, mingleth with the Sea at Abn Conwy. 4. Tywi, which rising in Montgomery-shire, and passing betwixt the Counties of Cardigan, Pembroke, and Caernarvon, runneth into the Sea a little below Cardigan. 5. Cledid, which runneth quite through Pembroke-shire, emptyeth itself into Milford Haven, one of the most capacious and safest Havens, not of England only, but of all the world.

The Men are of a faithful carriage towards all men, especially towards one another in a strange Country, and towards Strangers in their own. Of a temper quickened much inclining to Choler, as being subject to the Plague by Aristotle called Exanthema by which men are quickly moved to Anger, and as soon appeased: of all Angels the best and noblest. Their Language (the old British) hath the least commixture of foreign words of any in Europe; and by reason of its many Consonants and guttural Letters is not so pleasing as some others in the Pronunciation. A Language not much studied by these of other Nations; in regard that such of the Inhabitants have addicted themselves to learning, have rather chose to express themselves in the Latine or English tongues, than that of their own Native Country. The principal of which (not to say any thing of Merlin, the Sage of the Welsh or British) were 1. Gildas, for his great knowledge surnamed Sapient. 2. Gosfy of Monmouth, and 3. Gwal-dus Cambrensis, the Historians; and of later times 4. William Morgan, the Translator of the Bible into Welsh, for which performance most deservedly made Bishop of Londaff. 5. Sir John Price the Antiquary. 6. Owen the Epigrammatist, &c.

The whole Country (not taking in the Counties of Shropshire and Monmouth into the reckning) containeth 12 Shires only: of which, seven were set out by King Edward the first, that is to say, Clamorgan, Pembroke, Caernarvon, Cardigan, Merioneth, Anglesey, and Caernarvon; the other five, viz. the Counties of Denbigh, Flint, Montgomery, Ruthin, and Brecknock, were after added out of the the Marchlands by King Henry the 8. These 12 Shires are again contracted or subdivided into 4 Circuits, for the administration of Justice. Of which the first containeth the Counties of Montgomery, Flint and Denbigh; the second those of Caernarvon, Anglesey, and Merioneth; the third those of Caernarvon, Cardigan, and Pembroke; and the fourth those of Clamorgan, Brecknock, and Ruthin.

In these 12 Shires are reckoned one Chafe, 13 Forests, 36 Parks, 230 Rivers, and an hundred Bridges. They contain also 126 Parishes, amongst which, four Cities, 57 Market Towns, and 41 Castles of the old erection. The Cities, small, poor, and inconsiderable. The Market Towns, though especially on the Marches and out-parts of the Country, very fair and strong; as being not only built for Commerce and Trade, but fortified with Walls and Castles to keep in the Welsh: and so employed till the incorporating Watts with England took away all occasion of the old hostilities. And for the Castles in the Inlands, partly by the iniquity of time, which is edax rerum, but chiefly by the policy of the Kings of England, who would not suffer any places of strength to remain in a Country almost inaccessible, and amongst men apt to take the advantage offered; the very ruins of them are now brought to ruin.

But to proceed more particularly, the four Cities (or Episcopal Seats) are 1. S. David's, formerly the Metropolis of Wales, situate on the Promontory in Pembroke-shire, by the Ancients called Ollipita; in a safe place, and far enough from the Saxons, whom the Welsh most feared; but incommode enough for all the rest of the Clergie to repair unto it: and not so safe neither unto the Inhabitants of it, in respect of sundry other Nations, who have often spoiled and defaced it. For standing near the Sea, it hath been frequently visited and spoiled by the Danes, Norwegians, and other Pyrats, inasmuch that the Bishops were enforced to remove their dwelling to Caernarvon: which brought the City (small enough before, when it was at the biggest) to the condition of a Village. 2. Llan-bech, upon the River Tiffe, whence it took the name; Llan, in the Welsh or British, signifying a Church; Llan-bech, the Church upon the Tiffe: the Bishops whereof derive their Lineal succession from those of Caer-Leon upon Usk, though the Primacy or Archbishop's See were removed to Meneu. A small Town now it is, God wot, nothing to rank it for a City but the Cathedral Church, and the Prebends houses. 3. St. Asaph, a small Town in Flintshire, so called from St. Asaph, by whom the Cathedral Church was founded, about the year 560. Situate on the Banks of the River Elyw, thence called Llan-elyw by the Welsh, the Bishop Elywensis in some Latine Writers. 4. Bangor, upon the Menai a branch of the Irish Sea, of no more beauty and renown than the other three; but only for the Cathedral founded here by the first Bishop, defaced by Owen Glendower, and afterwards re-edified by Henry Dow, Bishop heretof, An. 1496.

Towns of chief note (for these Cities have not so much in them which is worth the noting) are 1. Shrewsbury counted now in England, but heretofore the Seat of the Princes of Powys-Land, who had here their Palace; which being burnt in some of their broils with England, is now converted into Gardens for the use of the Townsmen. The Town well traded and frequented by the Welsh and English, the common Empory of both; well built, and strongly situate on a rising ground, almost encompassed with the Severn; that part thereof which is not fenced by the River, being fortified with a very strong Castle, the work of Roger de Montgomery, the first Earl heretof, Anno 1067. Over the River for convenience of passage it hath two Bridges, and but two, the one towards England, and the other called the Welsh Bridge: which is towards Wales, built by Leoline or Llewellyn the first, one of the Princes of North-Wales; whose they conceive to be that Statua which is there standing on the Gate, Remarkable since the times of King Henry the sixth, for giving the Title of Earl to the noble family of the Talbots: a Family of great Honour, and as great an Estate, till the parceling of the Lands betwixt the Daughters and Co-heirs of Gilbert Talbot late Earl heretof; according to the ill Custom of England, where many times the Estate goes to the Females and the Honour (with nothing to maintain it) to the next Heir-male. 2. Bangor, by Beds called Brancorunaburg, a famous Monastery of the Britons: containing above 2000 Monks, attending their devotions at the times appointed, at other times labouring for their livelihood: most cruelly and unmercifully slaughtered by the Saxons, at the instigation of Asaph the first Archbishop of Canterbury, offended that they would not yield unto his authority. 3. Caernarvon, on the Menai before mentioned, not far from Bangor, (the Monastery of Bangor being in Flintshire) well walled, and fortified with a strong Castle by King Edward the first, after his conquest of the Country, formerly much esteemed to, for the Chancery and Exchequer of the Princes of North-Wales. 4. Denbigh, well seated on the Banks of the River Irryd, which from thence runs into the Clyd, the furthest River of all those parts. A Town well traded and frequented, especially since it was made by King Henry the 8. the head Town of a County: before which time of great report, as being the head Town of the Barony of Denbigh, conceived to be one of the goodliest Territories in England; having more Gentlemen holding of it than any other. 5. Mairavall, not far from Montgomery, heretofore a fair and capacious Town, honoured with the Palace, and made the chief Seat of the Princes of Powys-Land, thence called Kings of Mairavall, now a poor Village. 6. Caernarben, Maridunum anciently, whence the modern name, the Britons adding Caer unto it: not called so from Caer-Merlin, or the City of Merlin, here chanted by the Lady of the Lake, in a deep Cave heretofore, as old Fablers and Romances tell us. A fair large Town, beautified with a Collegiate Church; to which there was a purpose in the time of King Edward the sixth, of removing the Episcopal See from St. David's. Not far off, on the top of an Hill, stands Dinevor Castle, the chief Seat of the Princes of South-Wales, thence called Kings of Dinevor; who had their Chancery and Exchequer in the Town of Caernarben. 7. Hawford, Wesf, situated in the Chersford, or Demy Island of Pembroke-shire, by the Welsh called Ros; by the English, Little England beyond Wales, by reason of the English tongue there spoken: a Town the best Traded and frequented of all South-Wales. 8. Milford, in the same County of Pembroke, famous for giving name to the most safe and capacious Haven in all the Island, consisting of sundry Creeks, Bays, and Roads for Ships, which make it capable of entertaining the greatest Navy: the landing place of Henry the 7th when he came for England. 9. Monmouth, situate at the mouth or influx of the River Attan, (where it falleth into the Wye) whence it had the name. A Town belonging anciently to the House of Lancaster, the Birth-place of King Henry the Fifth, called Henry of Monmouth. That one particular add no more. 10. Llan-dow, a Town of great report, by reason of the Court and Council of the Marches, kept here for the most part ever since the incorporating of Wales with England, for the sake of the Welsh, and bordering Subjects, in their Suits at Law.

Situate on the confluence of the Temd, and Corve, and beautified with a very strong Castle: the Palace heretofore of some of the Princes of Wales; of the Blood-Royal of England, at such times as they resided in this Country (of which more anon), and of late times, the ordinary Seat of the Lord President of Wales: now reckoned, as all Shropshire on that side of the Severn, as a part of England. Of Anglesey and the Towns thereof, we shall speak hereafter, now taking notice only of Aberffraw, the Royal Seat sometimes of the Princes of North-Wales, called these Kings of Aberffraw.

The Story of the Britains till the time of Cadwalader their last King, we have had before. After whose retirement unto Rome, the whole name and Nation became divided into three bodies; that is to say the Cornish Britains, the Britains of Cumberland, and the Britains of Wales. The Cornish Britains governed by their own Dukes, till the time of Egbert the first Monarch of England by whom subdued An. 809 and made a Province of that Kingdom. The Britains of Cumberland had their own Kings also (some of whose names occur in Story) till the year 946 when conquered by Edmund King of England, the Son of Aethelstan, their last King being named Dummlus, as Matthew of Westminster informs us. But the main body of them getting into the mountainous parts beyond the Severn, did there preserve the name and reputation of their Country: although their Princes were no longer called Kings of Britain, but of the Walls men or Welsh; and much also they had to make good that title: all the plain Country beyond Severn being taken from them by Offa King of the Mercians: and themselves made Tributaries for the rest by Egbert before mentioned, by Aethelstan afterwards. Which last imposed a Tribute on them of 20 pounds of Gold, 300 pounds of Silver, and 200 head of Cattle yearly; exchanged in following times for a Tribute of Wolves. But howsoever, they continued for a time the title of Kings, whose names are thus set down by Glover, in his Catalogue of Honour, published by Milles.

The Kings of Wales.

A. Ch. 690 1 Idwallo, Son of Cadwalader.
720 2 Roderick, Son of Idwallo. 25.
755 3 Conan, Son of Roderick. 63.
818 4 Mervin, the Son in law of Conan. 25.
843 5 Roderick II. surnamed the Great, Son of Mervin, who divided his Kingdom, finally enough before, amongst his Sons: giving Guineidh, or North Wales to Amawbawl his eldest Son; to Cadel, his second Son, Debenbarth or South-wales; and Powys-land to his youngest Son Mervin: conditioned that the two younger Sons and their Successors, should hold their Estates in Fee of the Kings of North-wales, and acknowledge the Sovereignty thereof, as Liegesmen and Homagers. According unto which appointment, it was ordained in the Constitutions of Howel Dha, the Legislator of Wales, that as the Kings of Aberffraw were bound to pay 63 pounds in a way of Tribute to the Kings of London; so the Kings of Dyncewar and Matraual should pay in way of Tribute the like sum to the Kings of Aberffraw. But notwithstanding the reservation of the Sovereignty to the Kings of North-wales, Roderick committed a great Solacism in point of State; by this dismembering of his Kingdom, especially at a time when all the Kingdoms of the Saxons were brought into one, and that one apt enough upon all occasions to work upon the weakness of the neighbouring Welsh: which had they continued under one sole Prince, might have preserved their liberty, and themselves a Kingdom as well as those of Scotland, for so long a time, against the power and puissance of the Kings of England.

Yet was not this the worst of the mischief neither; his Successors subdividing (by his example) their small Estates into many parcels, inasmuch that of the Eight tributary Kings which rowed King Edgar on the Dee, five of them were the Kings or Princes of Wales. But Roderick did not think of that which was to come, whom we must follow in our story, according to the division of the Country made by him into three Estates of North-Wales, South-Wales, and Powys-land.

1. NORTH-WALES, or Guineidh, contained the Counties of Merioneth and Caernarvon, the Isle of Anglesey, and the greatest parts of Denbigh and Flint-shire. The chief Towns whereof are Bangor, Dinbydd, Caernarvon, Aberffraw (spoken of before), and Anglesey, whereof we shall speak more hereafter. The Country (Anglesey excepted) the most barren and unfruitful part of Wales; but withal the safest and furthest from the danger of the encroaching English, which possibly might be the reason why it was set out for the portion of the Eldest Son, in whom the Sovereignty of the Wales was to be preserved by the Kings.

Princes of North-Wales.

A. Ch. 877 1 Amarawd. 36.
913 2 Idwallo, Son of Amarawd.
3 Merick, Son of Idwallo.
4 James, or Jago, Brother of Merick.
5 Conan, Son of James or Jago.
1076 6 Gryffith ap Conan.
1099 7 Owen Guineidh, Son of Gryffith.
1120 8 David ap Owen, Son of Owen Guineidh.
1178 9 Llewellyn ap forwerth, the Nephew of David.
1194 10 David ap Llewellyn.
1240 11 Llewellyn II. Son of Gryffith, the Brother of David ap Llewellyn, the last Prince of Wales of the British Race. Of whom it is said that once consulting with a Witch, he was told by her, that it was his destiny, to be carried in triumph through London, with a Crown on his head. Hereupon making free Excursions on the English Borders, he drew upon himself the whole power of King Edward the first, which not being able to withstand, and the King as willing on the other side not to fight with Mountains, Commissioners were appointed to conclude the differences: Robert Lord Tipoff and some others, for the King of England; for the Welsh Prince, Grono ap Hejyn, a great man of that Country, descended from Brocevel Skythrac, one of the Princes of Powys-land, (from whom all Cambrian Clarencians by of any credit, the Author of these Papers doth derive his Pedigree) under whom that Family had the Office of Hereditary Cup-bearer, and from thence their name, Hejyn, Promis, five a puelis, qua vox in proprium nomen abiit, (saith the Welsh Dictionary) By those Commissioners it was concluded and agreed, that Llewellyn should enjoy a part of the Country with the title of Prince, during his life: the rest in present, and the whole after his decease, to be surrendered over to the King of England. But David the Brother of Llewellyn, finding himself excluded by this agreement, from the hope of succession, incensed his Brother and the Welsh to a new Revolt: the issue whereof was the taking of David, executed by the hand of Justice; and the death of Llewellyn, slain in Battle near the Buich in Brocevel Skythrac. Whose head being pitched upon a stake, and adorned with a Paper-Crown, was by a Host taken carried triumphantly through London, An. 1282. And so the Prophesie was fulfilled. In him ended the Line of the Princes of North-Wales, after they had for the space of 405 years reigned not only the private Undertakers and venturers of England, but the Forces of many Puissant Monarchs; whose attempts they always made frustrate, by retiring into the heart of their Country, and leaving nothing for the English to encounter with, but their Woods and Mountains. But now the fatal period to the British Liberty being come, they were constrained to yield to the stronger. What followed after this, we shall see anon.

The Arms of these Princes was quarterly Gules and Or, four Lions passant guardant counterchanged.

2. POWYS-land contained the whole Counties of Montgomery, and Radnor, all Shropshire beyond the Severn, with the Town of Shrewsbury, and the rest of Denbigh and Flint-shires; comprehending by the estimation of those times, 15 Cantreds or hundreds of Villages: the word Cant signifying an Hundred, and Trit a Village. The principal Cities or Towns of it, were, S. Asaph, Shrewsbury, Matraual, spoken of before. A Country more pertaking of the nature and fertility of England, than the parts belonging unto Guineidh, or North-Wales; but always lying in harms way, by reason of the Neighbourhood of the more potent English: and therefore given by Roderick to Mervin, his youngest Son, partly because he was the youngest; but chiefly because he was a man of an approved valour and so more fit to have his portion upon the Borders. In his Line it continued a long time together, but much afflicted and dismembered by the Earls of Chesler and Surewbury, who took from them a good part of Flint, Denbigh, and Shropshire; and by the Princes of North-Wales, who call many a greedy eye upon it. Of the Successors of Prince Mervin, I find no good Constat, more than of Brocevel Skythrac before remembered. The last that held it at all entire was Meredith ap Bleithyn, which holding the ill example of Roderick Mawr, divided it betwixt Maddoc, and Gryffith, his two Sons. Of which Maddoc dyed at Winchester, An. 1160. in the time of King Henry the second, his part hereof depending after his decease, on the Fortunes of Gwynedd: and Gryffith was by Henry the first made Lord of Powys (the title of Prince left off as too high and lofty.) In his race it continued till the time of King Edward the first: to whom at a Parliament holden in Shrewsbury, Owen ap Gryffith, the 5. from Gryffith ap Meredith before mentioned, surrendered his place and title; and received them of the King again to be holden in Capite and free Baronage, according to the custom of England. Avon, or Havon, Daughter and Heir of this Owen ap Gryffith, was married unto John Charles, Vallet (or Gentleman) of the Privy Chamber to King Edward the second, by whom, in right of his Wife, he was made Lord Powys. Edward the fifth also of this Line of the Charletons, was the last of that House; his Daughter Jane conveying the Estates and Title to the House of the Greys; and of them also five enjoyed it, the last Lord Powys of the Line or Race of Mervin, being Edward, Grey, who dyed in the days of our Grand-Fathers. And so the title lay extinct, until revived again in the person of St. William Herbert of Red-Castle, descended from the Herberts, Earls of Pembroke; created Lord Powys by King Charles the first, An. 1639.

The Arms of the Princes of Powys-land, were Or a Lyon Rampant, Gules.

3. SOUTH-WALES, or Debenbarth, contained the Counties of Monmouth, Glamorgan, Caermarden, Cardigan, & Brocevel; the greatest & most fruitful part of all Wales; but more exposed to the invasion of Foreign Nations, English, Danes, Flemings, and Norwegians; by whom the Sea Coasts were from time to time most grievously plagued: inasmuch that the Kings and Princes hereof were inforced to remove their Seat from Caermarthen, where it was fixt at first, unto Dyncewar Castle, as a place of greater strength and safety; where it continued till the Princes of it were quite extinct, called from hence Kings of Dyncewar, as before is said. The chief Towns of it, Caermarthen, Monmouth, Landaf, S. David, spoken of already. The Kings and Princes, as far as I can find upon any certainty, are these that follow.

The Princes of South-Wales.

A. Ch. 877 1 Cadel, the Son of Roderick Mawr.
2 Howel.
907 3 Howel Dha, Sovereign King of Wales.
948 4 Owen, the Son of Dha.
5 Meredith, Son of Owen.
958 6 Aneaw, or Evanus, Brother of Meredith.
7 Theodore the Great.
1077 8 Rhef ap Theodore.
1093 9 Gryffith ap Rhef.
10 Rhef II. ap Gryffith.
11 Gryffith ap Rhef, the last Prince of South-Wales of the Line of Cadel, after they had with great struggling maintained their Liberty for the space of 300 years and upwards: but so that though they still preserved the title of Princes, they lost a great part of their Country to the Norman-English. For in the Reign of William Rufus, Bernard de Newmark a Noble Norman, seized upon those parts which now make the County of Gloucester; being then a fair and goodly Lordship: and Robert Fitz-Hamon, with some other noble Adventurers, made themselves Masters of Glamorgan; in which the posterity of some of them are still remaining. Encouraged by their good success, Anulph of Montgomery, in the time of King Henry the first, won from the Welsh a great part of Dyvet, and we now call Pembroke-shire; as the Earls of Warren, and Lord Mortimer about the same times did prevail exceedingly in the Conquest of Cardigan and Monmouth. So that the poor Princes had no Country left entire, but Caermarthen only, too little to maintain them in so high a title. And though this last Gryffith, in the time of the Wars in England, betwixt Maud the Empress, and King Stephen, had recovered a great part of his lost Estate, yet neither he nor his did enjoy it long, himself deceasing shortly after, and his two Sons, Cymmerick and Meredith, being taken by King Henry the second, who most cruelly put out their eyes: Yet did the Welsh, as well as possibly they could, endeavour to preserve the liberty which their Fathers left them; till the Felicity and Wisdom of King Edward the first, put an end unto the Wars of Wales, and settled them in some degree of peace and quiet.

But before we come to speak of this, we are to show another Catalogue of the Kings and Princes of Wales, different from the succession of them before laid down; and made according to the History of Wales, writ by Humphrey Lloyd: this Catalogue containing the succession of the greater and predominant Princes, whether of Gwynedd, Debenbarth, or Powys-land; such as gave law unto the rest, and had the honour to be called Kings of Wales, though Princes only of their own proper and particular Countries; as formerly we had a Catalogue of the Predominants of the English Saxons, made out of the Predominant Princes of the Saxon Heptharke. Only we shall find more in the following Catalogue, who were not naturally and lineally Princes of any of the three, and therefore not expressed in the former Tables; but such as by strong hand had intruded into those Estates, to the prejudice of the right heirs, overpowered by them.

The

The Kings and Princes of Wales, according to the Welch History.

- A. Ch.*
 688 1 Ivor, a potent Inter-per, upon Cadwalader's departure usurped the Kingdom.
 690 2 Iwallo, or Edwall, Son of Cadwalader, restored unto his Fathers Throne.
 720 3 Roderick Malwinno, the Son of Iswallo.
 755 4 Canan Tiendathary, the Son of Roderick.
 820 5 Mervin Orich, in right of Eisibit his Wife, the Daughter of Canan.
 843 6 Roderick Mawre, (who divided Wales into three Estates) the Son of Mervin.
 877 7 Amarawdb, Prince of Gwynedth, the Son of Roderick Mawre.
 913 8 Edwal Voel Prince of Gwynedth, Son of Amarawdb, made tributary to Abelstan King of England.
 940 9 Howel Dda, (or the Good) Prince of Debenbarth, and Powys.
 948 10 Jevas, and Jago, Sons of Edwal Voel, to whom King Edgar did release the Tribute ordained by King Abelstan, to be paid in money, for a tribute of Wolves; of which we spake before when we were in England.
 982 11 Howel, the Son of Jevas, succeeded in the Kingdom of Wales, his Father being still alive, and of right Prince of Gwynedth.
 984 12 Cadwallan, the Brother of Howel.
 986 13 Meredith ap Owen, Prince of Debenbarth.
 992 14 Edwal III. Son of Merick, the Eldest Son of Edwal Voel, which Merick, had been permitted, as unfit for Government.
 1003 15 Aedan ap Blethored, an Ullurper.
 1015 16 Llewellyn ap Sisyll, descended from Amarawdb, the first Prince of Gwynedth or North-wales.
 1021 17 Jago ap Edwal, Prince of Gwynedth, Son of Edwal the third.
 1037 18 Griffith Llewellyn, the Son of Llewellyn ap Sisyll, and the Lady Angharad.
 1061 19 Blithyn and Rhywallon, Sons of Angharad, the Daughter of Meredith ap Owen Prince of Debenbarth, by a second Husband.
 1073 20 Tiabaern ap Caradoc, Cousin to Blethyn.
 1078 21 Griffith Prince of Gwynedd, Son of Conan, the Son of Jago ap Edwal, one of the Princes of the fame, did Homage to William the Conqueror, and was the last that had the title of King of Wales.
 1137 22 Owen Gwynedd Prince of Gwynedd, and Sovereign Prince of Wales, Eldest Son of Griffith.
 1169 23 David ap Owen Prince of Gwynedd, the younger Son of Owen Gwynedd.
 1194 24 Llewellyn, Son of Forwerth, eldest son of Owen Gwynedd, excluded by David his younger Brother.
 1242 25 David ap Llewellyn Prince of Gwynedd, Son of Llewellyn ap Forwerth.
 1246 26 Llewellyn Son of Griffith, the Brother of David, the last Sovereign Prince of Wales, of the race of Cadwalader; overcome and slain in Bartel by King Edward the first, An. 1232. as before is said: by means whereof the Principality of Wales was added to the Cr on of E. gland.

When King Edward had thus fortunately effected this great business, he gave unto his English Barons and other Gentlemen of note, many fair Signiorities and Estates; as well to reward them for their service in the Conquest, as to engage to many able men, both in purse and power, for the perpetual defence and subjection of it. As for the Lordship of Flint, and the Towns and Estates lying on the Sea-Coasts: he held them in his own hands, both to keep himself strong, and to curb the Welsh; and (wherein he dealt like the politic Emperor Augustus) pretending the ease of such as he had there placed; but indeed to have all the Arms, and men of employment under himself only.

This done, he divided Wales into seven Shires, viz. 1. Glamorgan, 2. Carmarden, 3. Pembroke, 4. Cardigan, 5. Merioneth, 6. Carnarvon, and 7. Anglesey, after the manner of England. Over each of these, as he placed a particular English Lieutenant, so he was very desirous to have one general English Vicegerent, over the whole Body of the Welsh. But this when they mainly withheld of him for his Wife, then great wit Child, to Carnarvon, where the was delivered of a Son. Upon the news whereof the King assembled the British Lords, and offered to name them a Governour born in Wales, which could speak one word of English, and whose life no man could tax. Such an one when they had all sworn to obey, he named his young Son Edward; since which time our Kings Eldest Sons are called Princes of Wales. Their Investiture is performed by the imposition of a Cap of Estate, and a Coronet on his head that is invested, as a token of his Principality; by delivering into his hand a Scepter, being the emblem of Government; by putting a Ring of Gold on his finger, to shew him that now he is a Husband to the Country, and a Father to her Children; and by giving him a Patent, to hold the said Principality to him and his heirs Kings of England. By which words the separation of it from the Crown is prohibited; and the Kings keep in themselves for excellent an occasion of obliging unto them their eldest Son, when they please. In imitation of this Custom, more ex Anglia translatum (saith Marianus) has the first of Cassile and Leon, made his Son Henry Prince of the Asturias; which is a Country for craggy and mountainous, that it may not improperly be called the Welsh Spain. And all the Spanish Princes even to these times, are honoured with this Title of Prince of the Asturias.

Notwithstanding this provident care of Edward the first, in establishing his Empire here; and the extreme rigour of Law here used by Henry the 4th, in reducing them to obedience, after the rebellion of Owen Glendower: yet till the time of Henry the 8th, and his Father, (both being extract from the Welsh blood) they seldom or never contained themselves within the bounds of true Allegiance. For whereas before they were reputed as Aliens, this Henry made them (by act of Parliament) one Nation with the English, subject to the same Laws, capable of the same preferments, and privileged with the same immunities. He added also 6 Shires to the former number, out of these Countries which were before reputed as the Borders and Marches of Wales; and enabled them to send Knights and Burgesses unto the English Parliaments: so that the name and language only excepted, there is now no difference between the English and Welsh an happy Union.

The same King Henry established for the ease of his Welsh Subjects, a Court at Ludlow, like unto the ordinary Parliaments in France: wherein the Laws are ministered according to the Fashion of the Kings Courts of Westminster. The Court consisted of one President who is, for the most part, of the Nobility, and is generally called the Lord President of Wales; of as many Counsellors as the King shall please to appoint; one Attorney, one Solicitor, licitor, one Secretary, and the four Justices of the Countie of Wales. The Town it self (for this must not be omitted) adjoined with a very fair Castle, which hath been the Palace of such Princes of Wales, of the English blood, as have come into this Country, to solace themselves among their people. Here was young Edward the 5th, at the death of his Father; and here dyed Prince Arthur, Eldest son of Henry the 7th: both being sent either by their Fathers to the fame end, viz. by their preference to fatisfe and keep in order the unquiet Welsh-men. And certainly, as the preference of the Prince was then a terror to the rebellious, so would it now be as great a comfort to this peaceable people.

What the Revenues of this Principality are, I cannot say: yet we may boldly affirm that they are not very small, by these reasons following, viz. 1. By the Composition which Llewellyn, the last Prince of Wales, made with Edward the first: who being Prince of North-wales only, and dispossessed of most of that, was fain to redeem the rest, of the said King Edward, at the price of 50000 Marks (which comes to 100000 pounds of our present money) to be paid down in ready coin; and for the residue to pay 1000 l. per annum. And 2dly, by those two circumstances, in the marriage of the Lady Katharine of Spain, to the above-named Prince Arthur. For first, her Father Ferdinand being one of the warriest Princes that ever were in Europe, giving with her in Dowry 200000 Ducats; required for Joynture, the third part only of this Principality, and of the Earldom of Cheshire. And secondly, after the death of Prince Arthur, the Nobles of the Realm perswaded Prince Henry to take her to Wife; that so great a Treasure as the yearly Revenue of her Joynture, might not be carried out of the Kingdom.

The Arms of the Princes of Wales differ from those of England, only by the addition of a Label of three points. But the proper and peculiar device, and which we commonly, though corruptly, call the Princes Arms, is a Coronet beautified with three Orich Feathers, and inscribed round with ICH DIEN, that is, I serve; alluding to that of the Apostle, The Hair while he is a Child differeth not from a Servant. This Coronet was won by that valiant Prince, Edward the Black Prince, at the Battle of Crecie, from Joba King of Bohemia, who did there wear it, and whom he there slew. Since which time it hath been the Cognizance of all our Princes.

I will now that up my discourse of Wales, with that testimony of the people, who ch Henry the second used in a Letter to Emanuel Emperor of Constantinople; The Welch Nation is so adventurous, that they dare encounter naked with armed men ready to spend their blood for their Country, and pawn their life for praise: and adding only this, that since their incorporating with the English, they have shewed themselves most loyal, hearty, and affectionate Subjects of the State: cordially devoted to their King, and zealous in defence of their Laws, Liberties and Religion, as well as any of the best of their fellow-Subjects; whereof they have given good proof in these later times.

There are in Wales.

The BORDERS.

Before we come into Scotland, we must of necessity pass through that Barbarous ground, lying between both Kingdoms, called THE BORDERS; the Inhabitants whereof are a kind of military men, subtle, nimble, and by reason of their often skirmishes, well experienced, and adventurous. Once the English Border extended as far as unto the Fryth, or Strait of Edenburgh on the East, and that of Dunbar on the West (the first Fryth, by the Latines called Bodvaria and the later Glossa;) betwixt which, where now standeth the Town of Sterling, was an ancient Bridge, built over the River which falleth into the Fryth of Edenburgh; on a Cross standing whereupon, was writ this Passport;

I am Free-march as passengers may ken,
 To Scots, to Britains, and to English-men.

But when England groaned under the burden of the Danish oppression, the Scots well husbanded that advantage; and not only enlarged their Borders to the Tweed, but also took into their hands Cumberland, Northumberland, and Westmerland. The Norman Kings again recovered these Provinces, making the Borders of both Kingdoms to be Tweed, East; the Solway, West; and the Cheviot hills in the midst. Of any great wars made on these Borders, for any particular Officers appointed for the defence of them, I find no mention till the time of Edward the first; who taking advantage of the Scots disagreements about the succession of Alexander the third, hoped to bring the Country under the obedience of England. This Quarrel betwixt the two Nations he began, but could not end: the Wars surviving the Author; so that what Velleins saith of the Romans and Carthaginians, I may as well say of the Scots and English: for almost 300 years together, ane bellum inter eos populos, aut belli preparatio, aut infide pax fuit. In most of these conflicts the Scots had the worst. So that Daniel in his History seemeth to marvel how this Corner of the Isle could breed so many, had it bred nothing but men, as were slain in these wars. Yet in the Reign of Edward the second, the Scots (having twice defeated that unhappy Prince) became so terrible to the English Borderers, that a hundred of them would fly from three Scots. It is a custom among the Turks, not to believe a Christian or a Jew complaining against a Turk, except their accusation be confirmed by the Testimony of some Turk also; which seldom hapning, is not the least cause why so little Justice is there done the Christians. In like manner, it is the Law of these Borderers, never to believe any Scots complaining against any English-man, unless some other English-man will witness for him; and so on the other side. Ex jure quodam inter limitatos rati (saith Cambden in his Elizabeth.) nullus nisi Scotus in Scotum, nullus nisi Anglus in Anglum, restis admittitur. This custom making void in this fashion all kinds of accusations, was one of the greatest causes of the Infolencies of both sides committed. Besides, there were divers here living, which acknowledged neither King; but sometime were Scots, sometime English, as their present crimes and necessities required protection, or pardon. To keep in this people, and secure their Borders, there were in each Kingdom three Officers appointed, called the Lords Wardens of the Marches: one being placed over the East, the other over the West, the third over the middle Borders. In England, the Warden of the East Marches had his Seat at Berwick, (a Town of great strength, and which for the convenience of its situation tion, was the first thing which the English took care to defend, and the Scots to surprise, of which he was also Governor. The Varden of the West Marches had his Seat in Carle, which Henry the 8. for that cause well fortified. The Varden of the middle Marches had no settled place of residence, but was sometimes in one place, sometimes in another, according as occasion required; the Office being executed for the most part, by the Wardens of the Eastern or Western Marches. But Imperium terminus ante feuit, by the blessed Marriage of the Kingdoms, that being now the middle of the which was then the bounds of two Empires; these Officers, and the cause of them, the Wars, are quite extinguished.

SCOTLAND.

S C O T L A N D is the Northern part of Britain, separated from England by the River Tweed and Solway, and the Cheviot Hills, extending from the one to the other. It is in length) according to Polydore Virgil 480 miles, but of no great breadth; there being no place distant from the Sea above 60 miles, and the Country ending like the sharp point of a Wedge. And for the length assigned unto it by Polydore, it must be made up by measuring the Crooks and Windings of the shores, every where thrusting out with very large Promontories, and cutting deep Indentures into the Land. For measuring in a straight Line from North to South, the length thereof from Solway Frith to the Strathly-head, amounteth but unto three hundred and ten Italian miles; and from Berwick unto Strathly-head, is a great deal shorter. So that there is no such over-estimate in the Maps of Britain, nor such necessity to correct them, as was sometimes thought.

It was once called Caledonia, from the Caledonians a chief People of it: sometimes Albania, from Albanus or Braid Albania principal Province in the North. But the most usual name is Scotia or Scotland; though the reason of the name be not agreed on. Some fabulous Writers of their own fetch it from Scota, the Daughter of an Aegyptian Pharaoh, of whom more when we come to Ireland. Others with better reason (though that none of the best) from the Scoti, Scitti, or Scythi, a German, or Sarmatian people, of noted fame; whom they will have to seize first on some parts of Spain, from thence to transplant themselves into Ireland; and out of Ireland into the Hebrides or Western Islands, now parts and members of this Kingdom. The more probable opinion is, that they were no other than meet Irish, (whose language, habit, and the most barbarous of their customs, the Highlanders, or natural Scots do still retain) united in the name of Scot, about the declination of the Roman Empire: the word Scot signifying in their language, a body aggregated into one out of many particulars; as the word Alban in the Dutch, Scot illud dicitur (saith C Camden out of Matthew of Westminster) quod ex diversis rebus in unum accrevit aggregatur. First mentioned by this name in some fragments of Polyphy (who lived about the time of the Emperor Arrian) as they are cited by S. Hieron, after the death of Constantine much spoken of in approved Authors, as the confederates of the Picts, in harrying the Roman Province.

The whole divided commonly into the Highlands; and the Lowlands. The Highlanders or Irish Scots inhabiting the Hebrides; and the West parts of the Continent adjoining to them, more barbarous than the Irish Irish at this day: it not to be civiliz'd (as King James observed in his most excellent Basilicon Doron) by planting Colonies of the more Inland, orderly Scots among them. The Lowlanders or English Scots (as I well may call them) inhabiting on this side the two Fyths of Dumfriesshire and Edinburgh, and the plainer Countries along the German Ocean, are the more civil of the two, as being of the same Saxon race with the English. This is evident, first by their Language, being only a broad Northern English; a Dialect only of that tongue: 2. By the Testimony of the Highlanders themselves, who are the true Scots, and speak the old Irish language; by whom the Lowlanders and the English are called by the same name of Saxons: 3. by the general consent of all Historians, affirming that the Kingdom of the Northumbers or English Saxons, beyond Hammer, extended as far Northwards as the two Fyths before mentioned; and there continued for the space of 300 years: and 4. By the confession of some ingenious Gentlemen of that Nation, who grant it for a probable Tenet, that the Saxons and the Scots invading Britain about the same time, the Saxons might extort the Eastern shore lying next their Country, from the old Inhabitants; as well as the Scots did all the Western parts which lay next to Ireland, and the Hebrides or Western Islands, from whence they first passed into Britain.

The Country for the most part, especially beyond the limits of the Roman Province, is very barren and unfruitful, not able to afford sustenance for the Natives of it; they were not a people patient of want and hunger; temperate in diet, and not accustomed unto that riot and excess, used commonly in richer and more plentiful Countries. Fruit they have very little, and not many Trees either for Building or for Fuel: the people holding, as in France, at the Will of the Lord, and therefore not industrious to build, or plant. Their chief Commodities are coarce Cloth, Fish in great abundance, Hides, Lead, and Coal, of which two last their Mountains do afford some rich undecaying Mines.

The People have been noted by their best Writers, for some barbarous Customs entertained amongst them, one of which was, if any two were displeased, they expected no law, but bang'd it out bravely, one and his Kindred, against the other and his: and thought the King much in their common, if they granted him at a certain day to keep the Peace. This fighting they call their Feides, a word barbarous, that were it to be expressed in Latine or French, it must be by Circumlocution. These deadly Feides, King James in his most excellent Basilicon Doron adviseth his son to redress with all care possible; but it pleased God to give him so long a life as to see it in his own days remedied: wherein he got a greater Victory over that barbarous born people, than ever did any foreign Prince, or any of his Predecessors could do before him; and indeed truly royal, and worthy himself. Another Custom they had of that nature, that the like was hardly ever heard of amongst the Heathen, and much less in Christianity, which took beginning, as the Scottish Historians affirm, in the Reign of Ewin the third, who is the Fifteenth King in their Catalogue, after the first Fergus. This Ewin being a Prince much addicted, or wholly rather given over unto lechituousness, made a Law, That himself and his Successors should have the Maidenhead, or first Nights lodging with every Woman, whose Husband held Land immediately from the Crown; and the Lords and Gentlemen of all those whose husbands were their Tenants or Homagers. This was, it seems, the Knights-service which men held their Estates by; and continued till the days of Malcolm Canmor: who at the request of his Wife Margaret, (she was the Sister of Edgar Atheling) abolished this Law, and ordained, That the Tenants by way of commutation, should pay unto their Lords a mark in money; which Tribute the Historians say is still in force. It was called Marchetia mulieris: but whether from Mark, a horse in the old Gallique (implying the obscene signification of Equivocal) as Mr. Seldon thinks, or from Marce, the sum of money by which it was afterwards redeemed, I cannot determine. Certain I am that this last Custom was of such a barbarous and brutish nature, that the Custom of the Indians in giving to the Bramine the first nights lodging with their Brides; and that of many Savage unconverted Nations in prostituting their wives and Daughters to the lusts and pleasure of their Guests; have not more unchristianity in them, than this of those Scottish Christians, if I may to call them.

These Customs shew the ancient Scots to be rude and barbarous, partaking little of the civility of the neighbouring Nation: nor are they so broken of the former, but that they are observed by a modern Writer, to be still greedy of revenge where they find means to take it; as also to be a subtle and politic people, inclined to Factions and Seditions amongst themselves; which he that reads their Stories cannot choose but see. A people, as King James observeth in his Basilicon Doron, ever weary of the present State and desirous of novelties, accustomed to judge and speak rashly of their Kings and Princes; towards whom they have always carried themselves with such untoward civilities, that more Kings have been betrayed, murdered and deposed by the Scots, than by all the Nations in the World. But take them in themselves without these relations, and they are said to be an industrious people, capable of all Sciences which they give their minds to, and generally well versed in Grammatical Learning, of which most of their Country have a smattering. And of most note in point of Learning, have been 1. Marianus (surnamed Scotus), and 2. Hector Boetius, the Historians. 3. John Major, a well-known Schoolman, for the times before the Reformation. And for the times that followed, 4. George Buchanan, an ingenious Poet, but an unfound States-man; whose History, and Dialogue De jure Regni, have wrought more mischief in the World, than all Marci works. Not to have been remembered here, but because he was Paganodote to 5. King James, of most famous memory; whose Printed works declare his large abilities in all kinds of Learning. 6. Napier, the Laird of Marchmont, the 7. Barclay, the Father and the Son. 8. John Skene, the best Antiquary of this Nation. 10. Doctor John Maxwell, the late learned Bishop of Ross, and my very good friend; besides some others of less note.

The Christian Religion was here planted by divers men according to their several Nations, who did here inhabit amongst the Low-Landers, or Saxon-Scots, by Aidan the first Bishop of Lindisfarne, or Holy Island; amongst the Picts, inhabiting the South-Eastern parts, by Ninias, Bishop of Candida Cafa, or Whit-borne, in Galloway; amongst the Northern-Picts, An. 555; and finally amongst the Scots, by Taladan, a Deacon of Rome, sent to them higher for that purpose by Pope Celestine An. 435; or thereabouts. And for the Reformation of Religion, overgrown with the rust and rubbish of the Romish Church, (degenerated from it self in the latter days) it was here made good by a strong hand, according to the judgment of Knox and others: nor taking counsel with the Prelates nor staying the leisure of the Prince as they did in England; but turning Prince and Prelates, out of all authority; made by that means more naturally subject unto alterations than it had been otherwise; or only to be made good by the same violence which first introduced it. 'Tis true, that for a while being in danger of the French, and of necessity to support themselves by the power and favour of the English; they bound themselves by a solemn Subscription, to adhere only to the Rites and Ceremonies of the Church of England, and to observe that form of Worship which was there established. Religionis cultus, et Ritibus cum Anglis communibus subsisteremus; as is affirmed by Buchanan, their own State Historian. But no sooner was that danger over, but they found opportunity and leisure to affect their ends; and have endeavoured ever since by practices, and correspondence with that party here, and finally by force of Arms, to thrust their own Constitutions and Form of Worship on the Church of England.

As for the Government of the Church, it was originally by Bishops (as in all parts else; ) but to as they exercise their Functions and Jurisdictions in all places equally, whereof ever they come: The Kingdom not being divided into Dioceses, till the time of Malcolm the third An. 1070, or thereabouts. Nor had they any Archbishop till the year 1428. The Archbishop of Torke being accounted and obeyed before that time, as the Metropolitan of Scotland. But being once settled in an orderly and constant Hierarchy, they held the same unto the Reformation began by Knox; and when he and his associates approving the Genevian plan-form, took the advantage of the minority of King James the Sixth, to introduce the Presbyterian Discipline, and suppress the Bishops; forbidding them by their own sole authority, to intermeddle any more in matters which concerned the Church, and Censuring the Kingdom into Presbyteries of their own assigning. And that the King might not be able to oppose their doings, they kept him under by strong hand, imprisoned him at Stirling, made him fly from Edenburgh, removed from him all his faithful Servants, and seized upon his principal Fortresses; and in a word, so baffled and affronted him upon all occasions, that he was minded many times to have left the Kingdom and retire to Vence, which doubtless he had done, (as I have heard affirmed by some of great place and power) had not the hopes of coming at the last to the Crown of England, made him stay it out: So that his Majesty of No Bishop, no King, was not made at random, but founded on the sad experience of his own condition. And though upon the fence of those inconveniences, which that alteration brought upon him, he did afterwards with great both Policy and Prudence, relearn again the Episcopal Order, and settled it both by Synodical Acts, and by Acts of Parliament: yet the same restless spirit breaking out again in the Reign of his Son, An. 1638, did violently eject the Bishops, and suppress the calling; and set up their Presbyteries throughout the Kingdom, as in former times.

The famous or miraculous things rather of this Country are, 1. The Lake of Nitton, part of whose waters do con-himself in the North of Britain, is, according to the above named Heitor Botinus, one Fergus, which in the time that Ceyl governed the Britains, came (forthwith) into these parts out of Ireland. From him, unto Engenius, we have the names of 39 Kings in a continued succession: which Engenius, together with his whole Nation, is said to have been exiled the Island, by a joint confederacy of the Romans, Britains and Picts. Twenty and seven years after the death of this Engenius, they were reduced again into their possession here, by the valour and conduct of another Fergus, the second of that name. To this Fergus I refer the beginning of this Scottish Kingdom in Britain, holding the stories of the former 39 Kings to be vain and fabulous. Neither want I probable conjecture for this assertion, this expedition of Fergus into Britain being placed in the 424 year of CHRIST, at what time the best Writers of the Roman Story, for those times, report the Scots to have first feared themselves in this Island.

The Kings of chief note in the course of the whole Succession are; 1. Abthans, who died in the year 809 and in his life contracted the offensive and defensive league with Charles the Great, between the Kingdoms of France and Scotland. The Conditions whereof were; 1. Let this league between the two Kingdoms endure for ever; 2. Let the enemies unto one be reputed and handled as the enemies of the other; 3. If the Saxons or Engelsmen invade France, the Scots shall fend either such numbers of Souldiers as shall be desired, the French King defraying the charges; 4. If the Engels invade Scotland, the King of France shall at his own charges lend competent assistance unto the King of Scots. Never was there any league, which was either more faithfully observed, or longer continued, than this between these two Kingdoms: the Scots on all occasions so readily assisting the French, that it grew to a proverb, or by-word, He that will France win, must with Scotland first begin. 2. Kenneth the 2d, who having utterly subdued and destroyed the Picts, extended his Dominions over all the present Scotland, delivered to be accepted the first Monarch of it: the Picts (being either rooted out, or so few in number, that they passed eitherwards in the name and account of Scots) from that time forwards never mentioned in any Author. 3. Malcolm the first, who added Wesmerland and Cumberland unto his Dominions, given to him by King Edmund of England, the Son of Abthans, to have his aid against the Danes, or to keep him neutral. After which time, those Counties were sometimes Scottish and sometimes English, till finally recovered by King Henry the second, and united to the Crown of England, never since disjoined. 4. Kenneth the third, who, by consent of the Estates of his Realm, made the Kingdom hereditary to descend from the Father to his Eldest Son, before which time (keeping within the compass of the Royal Family) the Uncle was sometimes preferred before the Nephew, the eldest in years, though further off, before the younger Kinman, though the nearer in blood. After which time (the opposition and interruption made by Constantine the third, and Donald the fourth excepted only the Eldest Sons of these Kings, or the next in birth, have succeeded ordinary in that Kingdom. This Kenneth was one of those Tributaries and Vassal Kings, which sowed King Edgar over the Dee, near Chesler, in such pomp and Majesty. 5. Macbeth of whom there goeth a famous Story, which shall be told at large anon. 6. Malcolm the third, the Son of Macbeth, who lived in England during the whole time of Macbeth's Tyranny; and thence brought into Scotland at his return, not only some Civilities of the English garb, but the honourary Titles of Earls and Barons, not here before mentioned. At the persuasion of the Lady Margaret his wife, (Sister of Ed- gar, furnished Abthels, and after his decease the Heir of the Crown of England) he abolished the various custom spoken of before. He did Honour to the Conquerour for the Crown of Scotland, but after his siding against him with the English, was slain at Alford. 7. David, the youngest Son of Malcolm the third, succeeded (his two Brothers Edgar and Alexander dying without Issue) in the Throne of his Father; and in right of his Mother the Lady Margaret, Sister and Heir of Edgar Abthels, and Daughter of Edward the Eldest Son of Edmund the second, surnamed Ironside, King of England, had the best title to that Kingdom also: but dispossessed thereof by the Norman Conqueror, with whom by reason of the great puissance of those Kings, and the little love which the English bare unto the Scots, not able to dispute their Title by force of Arms. From Maud the Sister of this David, married to Henry the first of England, descended all the Kings of England (King Stephen excepted) to Queen Elizabeth's death; from David all the Kings of Scotland, till King James the sixth, who on the death of Queen Elizabeth, succeeded in the Crown of England, in right of his descent from another Margaret, the eldest Daughter of King Henry the seventh. So that in his person there was not an union of the Kingdoms only under the Title of Great Britain, but a restoring of the old Line of the Saxon Kings (of which he was the direct and indubitate Heir to the Crown of England); the possession whereof had for so long time continued in the Posterity of the Norman Conqueror. And upon this descent it followeth most undeniably, that though the Norman Conqueror got the Crown of England by the power of the Sword, from the true Heirs of Edmund the II, surnamed Ironside, and that his Successors had enjoyed it by no other Title till Queen Elizabeth's death: yet James, the first Monarch of Great Britain, succeeded by a right descent from the Saxon Line; without relation to the Conquest of the Norman Bastard. 8. William, the Brother of Malcolm the fourth, and Nephew of David before mentioned by his Son Prince Henry, (who died in the life of his Father) being taken Prisoner at the Battle of Alnwick, did homage to King Henry the second for the Crown of Scotland, and was thereupon restored to his Liberty, and his Realm to peace. What doth occur concerning the succeeding Kings, when their Affairs with England and the World abroad became more considerable, we shall see anon.

In the mean time proceed we to the story of Macbeth than which for variety of action, and strangeness of events, I never met with any more pleasing. The story in brief is this: Duncan King of the Scots had two principal men, whom he employed in all matters of importance Macbeth and Banquo. These two travelling together through a Forest, were met by three Fairies Witches (Weirds the Scots call them) whereof the first making obedience unto Macbeth, saluted him Thane (a title unto which that of Earl afterwards succeeded) of Glamis the second, Thane of Cawder; and the third, King of Scotland. This is unequal dealing, saith Banquo, to give my friend all the honours, and none unto me; to which one of the Weirds made answer, that he indeed should not be King, but out of his loyns should come a race of Kings that should for ever rule the Scots. And having thus said, they all suddenly vanished. Upon their arrival to the Court, Macbeth was immediately created Thane of Glamis; and not long after, some new service of his requiring new recompence, he was honored with the title of Thane of Cawder. Seeing then how happily the prediction of the three Weirds fell out in the former; he resolved not to be wanting to himself in fulfilling the third, and therefore first he killed the King, and after by reason of his command, among the Souldiers, and common people, he succeeded in his Throne. Being scarce warm in it, he called to mind the prediction given to his Companion Banquo: whom hereupon suspecting as his supplanter, he caused him to be killed, together with his whole Posterity; Fleance one of his Sons escaping only, with no small difficulty, into Wales. Freed as he thought from all fear of Banquo and his Issue, he built Dunfian Castle, and made it his ordinary seat: and afterwards on some new fears, consulting with certain of his Wizards about his future Estate, was told by one of them, that he should never be overcome, till Bernane Wood (being some miles distant) came to Dunfian Castle; and by another, that he should never be slain by any man which was born of a Woman. Secure then as he thought, from all future dangers, he omitted no kind of libidinous cruelty, for the space of 18 years; for so long he tyrannized over Scotland. But having then made up the measure of his iniquities, Mac-duffe the Governor of Fife, associating to himself some few Parties, equally hated by the Tyrant, and abhorring the Tyranny; privily met one evening at Bernane Wood: and taking every one of them enough in his hand, (the better to keep them from discovery) marched early in the morning towards Dunfian Castle, which they took by Scalado. Macbeth escaping was pursued by Mac-duffe, who having overtaken him urged him to the combat; to whom the Tyrant, half inborn, returned this Answer, That he did in vain attempt to kill him, it being his destiny never to be slain by any that was born of a Woman. Now then said Mac-duffe, is thy fatal end drawing fast upon thee; for I was never born of Woman, but violently cut out of my Mother's belly: which words so daunted the cruel Tyrant, though otherwise a valiant man and of great performances, that he was very easily slain; and Malcolm Commer, the true Heir of the Crown, seated in the Throne. In the same time Fleance prospered in Wales, that he gained the affection of the Princes Daughter of that Country; and on her begot a Son called Walter, who flying out of Wales, returned into Scotland; and his descent once known, he was not only restored to the Honours and Estates of his Ancestors, but preferred to be Steward of the house of Edgar the son of Malcolm the third, surnamed Commer; the name of Steward, growing hence hereditary unto his Posterity. From this Walter descended that Robert Stewart, who succeeded David Bruce in the Kingdom of Scotland, the Progenitor of nine Kings of the name of Stewart, which have Reigned successively in that Kingdom. But now it is time to leave off particulars, and look into the general Succession of

- 1166 21 William, Brother of Malcolm the fourth.
- 1213 22 Alexander II, Son of William.
- 1250 23 Alexander III, Son of Alexander the 2d, after whose death, dying without any Issue, An, 1285, began that tedious and bloody Quarrel about the succession of this Kingdom, occasioned by sundry Titles and Pretendants to it: principal whereof were Bruce and Balliol, descended from the Daughters of David Earl of Huntingdon, younger Son of William, and Great Uncle of Alexander the third, the last of the Male Issue of Kenneth the 3d, those of nearer Kindred being quite extinct. And when the Scots could not compose the difference among themselves; it was taken into consideration by King Edward the first of England, as the Lord Paramount of that Kingdom: who selecting 12 English gliffand as many of the Scots to advise about it, with the consent of all adjudged it to John Baliol Lord of Galloway, Son of John Baliol and Derwognilla his Wife, Daughter of a Lord of Galloway, and of the Lady Margaret, the eldest Daughter of the said David; who having done his homage to the said King Edward, was admitted King.

1300 24 John Baliol, an English-man, but forgetful both of English birth, and English Favours, invaded the Realm of England in Hostile manner, and was taken prisoner by King Edward. Who following his blow, made himself Master of all Scotland, which he held during the rest of his life, and had here his Chancery, and other Courts. 6.

1306 25 Robert Bruce, Son of Robert Bruce Lord of Annandale (Competitor with Baliol for the Crown of Scotland in Right of Isabel his Mother, the second Daughter of David Earl of Huntingdon, and consequently a degree nearer to the King deceased than Baliol was, though descended from the elder Sister) was crowned King in the life-time of King Edward the first; but not fully possessed thereof until after his death: confirmed therein by the great defeat given to Edward the second, at the fight of Bannock-burn, not far from Sterling, spoken of before. But he being dead, Anno 1332. Edward the third confirmed the Kingdom on 1332 26 Edward Baliol, Son of John Baliol, rejected by the Scots for adhering so firmly to the English; who thereupon harried Scotland with fire and Sword. 10.

27 David Bruce the Son of Robert, restored unto his Fathers Throne by the power of the Scots, and a great enemy to the English. Invading England when King Edward was at the siege of Calice, he was taken prisoner by Q. Philip, the Wife of that King, and brought to Windsor, where he was prisoner for a while with King John of France. Released at last on such conditions as best pleased the Conqueror. 29.

1371 28 Robert II. surnamed Stewart, King of the Scots by descent from the eldest Sister of David Bruce, was extracted also from ancient Princes of Wales (as was said before) restoring thereby the British blood to the Throne of Scotland.

1390 29 Robert III. Son of Robert the second, called John before he came to the Crown; in which most over-awed by his own Brother the Duke of Albany, who had an aim at it for himself. 16.

1406 30 James, Son of Robert the third, taken prisoner by King Henry the fourth of England, as he was crossing the Seas for France, to avoid the practices of his Uncle. Restored unto his Country in the beginning of the Reign of King Henry the sixth, after 18 years absence, he was at last most miserably murdered by the Earl of Arbol, claiming a right unto that Crown. 42.

1448 31 James II. slain by the English at the siege of Roxborough Castle. 24.

1462 32 James III. slain by his own rebellious Subjects. 29.

1491 33 James IV. married Margaret the eldest Daughter of King Henry the seventh, but at the soliciting of the French, against the Peace between the Nations; he invaded England (in the absence of King Henry eighth) with 100000 men: but was by the Earl of Surrey (having 26000 men in his Army) night unto Folden, where he was slain, together with two Bishops, twelve Earls, fourteen Lords, and his whole Army routed. 23.

1514 34 James V. Son of James the fourth, and the Lady Margaret, kept for a time such good correspondence with the English, that in the year 1536, he was created Knight of the Order of the Garter. But afterwards inheriting his Fathers hatred against them, he made their Borders in the Year 1541; and was met by the Lord Wharton, then Ward of the West Marches. The Battle begun ready to join, one Sir Oliver Sinclair the Kings Favourite, though otherwise of no great Parentage, was by the Kings directing proclaimed General: which the Scottish Nobility took in such indignation, that they threw down their Weapons, and suffered themselves to be taken prisoners; there being not one man slain on either side. The principal prisoners were the Earls of Glencarn, and Cassetie; the Barons Marill, Oliphant, Somersell, Flemming, with many others: besides many of the principal Gentry. 28.

1542 35 Mary, the Daughter and only lawfully gotten Child of James the first, succeeded in her Cradle unto the Throne, and was married in Marriage to King Edward the sixth of England, but by the power of the Hot-tens carried into France, where marriage Francis, then Dauphin, afterwards King of the French, of that name the second. And whose death, the married Henry Lord Dally, eldest Son of Matthew Earl of Lennox, Outed of her Dominions by a potent Faction, she was compelled to flee into England, where after a tedious imprisonment, she was put to death in Fotheringhay Castle in Northamptonshire, and interred at Pemburgh, Anno 1586.

1567 36 James VI. the Son of a Mary Queen of Scots, and of Henry Lord Darnley, was crowned King in his Cradle also. He married Anne the Daughter of Christian the third, King of Denmark; was choise of the Order of the Garter, Anno 1590, and succeeded Queen Elizabeth in the Realm of England, March 24. Anno 1602. And here I cannot omit the prudent fore-sight of Henry the seventh, who having two Daughters, bestowed the Eldest (contrary to the mind of his Council) on the King of Scots, and the younger on the King of the French; that so, if his own Issue male should fail, and that a Prince of another Nation must inherit England; then Scotland as the lesser Kingdom must depend upon England, and not England wait on France, as upon the greater. In which succession of the Scots to the Crown of England, the Prophecy of the fatal Stone, spoken of before, did receive accomplishment. And so perhaps might that ascribed in the Poly-historicon to an holy Anchorite living in King Egberts time, which is this, Englishmen, for that they woe themselves to drunkenness, to treason, and to rebelliousness of Gods house, first by Dances, and then by Normans, and the third third time by Scots, whom they holden least worth of all, they shall be overcome. Then the world shall be unstable, and the divers & variable, that the instability of thoughts will be betokened by many manner diversity of Clothing. For on this Union of the Kingdoms, this Prediction seems to have been accomplished; the circumstances mentioned in the same so partly agreeing, and the Scots never subduing England, but by this blessed Victory. Unless perhaps the Accomplishment thereof be still to come; or that it was indeed more literally fulfilled in the great Defeat at Bannock-burn, in which was slain 50000 English, as the Scottish Writers do report, and the name of Scot growing so terrible for a time, that an hundred of the English would flee from three Scots, as before was noted.

The Revenues of this Crown Boterus estimateth at 100000 Crowns, or 30000 sterling, and it is not like that they were much more, if they came to that: here being not commodity in this Kingdom to allure strangers to Traffick: the Demain or Patrimony of the Crown, but mean; the Country in most places barren, and many of the Subjects, those especially of the Out-Isles, and the Western parts, so extremely barbarous, that they add very small improvement to the publick Treasury.

And answerable to the shortness of their standing Revenue, were their Forces also. For though the Country be very populous, and the men generally patient both of cold and hunger, and inured to hardship; yet in regard the Kings hereof were not able to maintain an Army under pay, their Forces seldom held together above 40 days; & then, if not a great deal sooner, did disband themselves. For the Nobility and Gentry being bound by the Tenure of their Lands, to serve the King in his Wars, and to bring with them such and so many of their assails, as the present service did require; used to provide for themselves and their followers, tents, money, victuals, provision of all sorts, and all other necessities; the King supplying them with nothing. Which being spent, they usually disbanded, and went home again, without attending long on the Expedition. Which I conceive to be the reason, why the Scots in the time of hostility betwixt the Nations, made only sudden & tumultuary incursions into England; without any thing of special moment: and that they have not acted any thing elsewhere in the way of Conquest, but only as Mercenaries to the French and other Nations that have hired them. And though it be affirmed that the Army of King James the 4th, when he invaded England in the time of King Henry the Eighth, (being then in France) consisted of 100000 fighting men; yet this I look on only as an argument of their populosity: few of those men being armed or trained up to service, and therefore easily discomfited by a far less Army. It's true that in the year 1643, the Scottish Covenanters raised an Army consisting of 18000 Foot, and 2000 Horse, and 1000 Dragoons; with Arms, Artillery, and Ammunition correspondent to it: which was the gallantest Army, and the best appointed, that ever that Nation did set out in its times foregoing. But then it is as true withal, that this Army was maintained & payed by the two Houses of the Parliament of England, at the rate of 30000 l. per month, and an advance of 100000 l. before-hand, the better to invite them to embrace the action, and prepare necessary for it, without any charge unto themselves. And though the Army which they sent into England above five years after, under James Duke Hamilton of Arran, was little inferior unto this number, but far superior to it both in Horse & Arms, and other necessary appointments: yet it is well known, that the Scots brought nothing but their own bodies to compound that Army; the Horse and Arms being such as they had gotten out of England in the former War.

In point of reputation amongst Foreign Princes, the Kings of the Scots, and their Ambassadors and Agents, had place in all General Councils, and Ecclesiastical Assemblies, before those of Castile: and by the Statists of late times, have been reckoned (with the Kings of England, France, and Spain) for absolute Monarchs. But I conceive that this was only since the first years of King Edward the third, when they had quitted their subjection and vassallage to the Crown of England. For that anciently the Scots were Homagers to the Kings of England, may be apparently demonstrated by these following Arguments. 1. By the Homages, and other services, and duties, done by the Kings of the Scots unto those of England: Malcolm the third doing Homage unto William the Conqueror; as William one of his Successors did to K. Henry the second: and that not only for the three Northern Counties, or the Earldom of Huntingdon (as by some pretended) but for the very Crown it self: Kenneth the third, being also one of those eight Tributary or Vassal Kings, which rowed King Edgar over the Dee, as before was noted. 2ly, By the interposing of King Edward the first, and the submission of the Scots to that interposing, in determining the controversy of succession betwixt Bruce and Baliol: as in like case, Philip the Fair adjudged the title of Artois, which was holden of the Crown of France, and then in question betwixt the Lady Maund, and her Nephew Robert; or as King Edward the third, in the right of the said Crown of France, determined of the controversy betwixt John Earl of Montford, and Charles of Blais, for the Dukedom of Bretagne. 3ly, By the confession and acknowledgement of the Prelates, Peers, and other the Estates of Scotland, subscribed by all their hands and Seals in the Roll of Ragman, wherein they did acknowledge the superiority of the Kings of England, not only in regard of such advantages as the Sword had given him, but as of his original and undoubted right. Which Roll was treacherously delivered into the hands of the Scots, by Roger Mortimer Earl of March, in the beginning of the Reign of King Edward the third. 4ly, By the tacit concession of the Kings themselves, who in their Coins, Commissions, and publick Instruments, assume not to themselves the title of Kings of Scotland, but of Reges Scotorum, or the Kings of the Scots: and thereby intimating that though they are the Kings of the Nation, yet there is some superior Lord (King Paramount as we may call him) who hath the Royalty of the Land. 5ly, By the Judgments and Arrests of the Courts of England, not only in the times of King Edward the first, but in some times since. For when William Wallis a Scotsman by birth, and the best Soldier of that Country, was taken Prisoner and brought to London, he was adjudged to suffer death as a Traitor: which had been an illegal and unrighteous judgment, had he been a Prisoner of War, and not looked on by the Judges as a Subject to the Crown of England. The like done in the case of Simon Frezill, another of that Kingdom in the same Kings Reign. In like manner, in the time of King Edward the third, it was resolved by the Court, in the Lord Beaumonts case, when it was objected that one of the Witnesses was a Scot, and therefore as an Alien not to give his evidence; that his testimony was to be allowed of, because the Scots in the Law of England did not go for Aliens. And when one indicted for a Rape in the 13th of Queen Elizabeths Reign, desired a Medietatem Lingue, because he was a Scotsman, & so to an Alien; it was denied him by the Court, because the Scots were not reputed here as Aliens, but as Subjects rather. So also, when Robert Omfraville, Lord of Kyme was summoned to the Parliament of England, in the Reign of King Edward the third, by the name of Robert Earl of Angus, (which is a dignity in Scotland,) and after in a Write against him was called only by his own name, & Orramville, without any addition of that honor; the Write was judged to abate; which I conceive the learned Judges had not done, if Scotland had not been reputed to be under the Vassalage of the Kings of England, & lastly, by a Charter of Lands and Arms, (which I have in my custody) granted by King Edward the first, in the last year of his Reign, to Peter Dodge of Stopworth in the County of Chester, one of the Ancestors of my Mother in which it is expressed, that the said Lands and Arms were conferred upon him by that King, for his eminent services, encontre son grand Enemy & Rebel, Balaio, Roy d'Escoffe & d'Isle de Angleterre; that is to say, against his great Enemy and Rebel Balaio King of Scotland, and Vassal of England. A thing to clear, that if King James had not been extremely tender of the honour of his native Country, he needed not to have put his Lawyers to the trouble of a new Invention, in hammering the Case of the Post-nati for him; to make the Scots inheritable unto Lands in England. The acknowledgment and Reviver of their old Subjection would have served his turn. But of this argument enough, and perhaps too much. I only add, that upon conference which I once had with an honourable person of that Kingdom of Scotland employed unto the Court in a business of no mean consequence to the peace and quiet of his Country: I found him to be sensible of the inconveniences of their present Government, by reason of the Kings absence, and the frequent divisions and partialities of his Council; there, that he confessed that Nation could be never rich or happy, till they were made a Province of the English Empire; and governed by a Vice-Roy, as Ireland was.

IRELAND.

IRELAND is environed on all sides with the Ocean, parted from Britain by a violent and unruly Sea, called St. Georges Channel. Situate on the West of Britain, next unto it is the biggest Island of Europe, containing in length 300, and in breadth 120 miles; and is parted under the 8th and 10th Climates; the longest day being 16 hours and an half in the Southern, and 17 hours 3 quarters in the Northern parts. It was once called Scotia, from the Scots who did there inhabit; and Scotia Minor, to difference it from Scotland, in the Ile of Britain. But the general name hereof is Ireland; by the Latines called Hibernia, by the Greeks, Iernia. And though some frame a wrested Etymology from Iberus, a Spanish Captain; and some from Irish, once a corrupted Duke hereof; as others, Abherno acre, the Winter-like and inclement air: yet probably the name proceeded from Eriand, which signifieth in their own language a Western land. And yet I must not pretermitt the Eryman given us by Teuchterus, (more near the name than most of his other Fancies) who will have it called Hibernia, from Iernae, a Phenician word, signifying the furthest Habitation: there being no Country known amongst the Ancients, which lay West of Ireland.

Their own Chronicles, or Fables rather, tell us, how Cesair, a Nephew of Noe, inhabited here before the Flood;

The principal Order of Knighthood in this Kingdom was that of St. Andrew, instituted by Humfrid, King of the Scots, to encourage his Subjects in the War against King Arbuthnot of England. The Knights did wear about their necks a Collar, interlaced with Thistles, with the picture of St. Andrew appendant to it: the Motto Nemo me impune lacessit. It took this name because after the Battle, Humfrid and his Souldiers went all barefoot to St. Andrews; and there vowed that they and their Posterity would henceforth use his Cross as their Ensign (which is a Saltire Argent in a Field Azure) whenever they take in hand any war-like Enterprise.

2. But this Order being expired many Ages since, there is now no Order of Knighthood in it, (except Knights Bachelors) but that of Nova Scotia; ordained by King James, An. 1622. for the planting of that Country by the Scots Colonies; in imitation of the Orders of Barons in England, for the plantation of Ulster. Hereditary, as that also is, but the Knights hereof distinguished by a Rib-band of Orange-Tawny.

The Arms are Sol, a Lion Rampant Mars, within a double Tressure counter-floored: which Tressure counter-floored was added to the Lion by Achatus King of the Scots, at what time he contracted the League with France signifying (saith Helior Boetius one of their Historians) Francorum opibus Leovum exinde munimur; that the Scotch Lion should be guarded by the riches of France.

and how 300 years after the Flood, it was subdued by Bartholomaeus, a Scythian, who overcame here I know not what Giants. Afterward Nemethus another Scythian Prince, and Delus a Gracian, came hither: and last of all Gautbel, with his Wife Scota, one of Pharaohs Daughters, who must needs name this Island Scotia. But not to honour such Jepperies with a confutation, doubtfully the first Inhabitants of this Island came out of Britain. For Britain is the nightest Country unto it, and so had a more speedy waiteage hither. Secondly, the ancient Writers call this Island, a British Island: And thirdly, Tacitus, giveth us of this Country this verdict, Solum, celumque cultus & ingenia hominum, band multum a Britannia different: the Soil and Air, the habits and disposition of the people, were not much unlike the Britanni. For further evidence whereof, it was observed, at the reduction of Wales to the Crown of England, by King Edward the first, that many of their Laws and Customs were those of the Irish: which shews, that they did both descend from the same Original. But then we must observe withal, that they were counted far more barbarous & savage by most ancient Writers, than those of Britain are deciphered at the first discovery: said by Strabo to be Man-eaters; accustomed (as Solinus telleth us) to drink the blood of those whom they flew in fight. Nor were the Women, though the softer and more tender Sex, free from such wild and savage Customs, it being a constant course amongst them, when they were delivered of a man-child, to put some meat into the mouth of it, on the point of a Sword, withing therewith it might not dye but in the midst of Arms, and the heat of Cittels. Both sexes used to trim themselves with the Ivory of Fishes, white as the driven Snow, or the polished Ivory; and therein placed the greatest part of their pride an Ibravery.

Nor are the modern Irish much abhorrent from such barbarous customs, as plainly shew from what Original they descend; altered but little by converse with more civil Nations. Of natural constitution generally strong and nimble of body; haughty of heart, careles of their lives, patient in cold and hunger, implacable in enmity, constant in love, light of belief, greedy of glory; and in a word, if they be bad, you shall not where find worse; if they be good, you shall hardly meet with better. The Diet, especially of the meer Irish, is for the most part, on herbs, roots, butter mingled with Oat-flower, milk, and beef-broth: eating flesh many times without bread, which they digest with Ughebaugh; and give their bread-corn to their horses instead of Provender. But more particularly, those of the richer sort in all parts, and of all sorts those which inhabit within the Pale (as they themselves call it) and in such places where the English Discipline hath been entertained; conformable to civility, both in behaviour and apparel: The Kernes (for by that name they call the wild Irish of the poorer and inferior sort) met extremely barbarous; not behaving themselves like Christians, scarcely like men. All of them so tenacious of their ancient customs, that neither power, nor reason, nor the sense of the inconveniences which they suffer by it, can wean them to desert or change them. A pregnant evidence whereof, is their use of Ploughing, not with such gears or harness, as in other places; but by tying the hindmost horses head to the tail of the former; which makes the poor Jades draw in a great deal of pain, makes them unfeverable by the soon losing of their tails, and what is a course of so slow a dispatch, that they cannot break up as much ground in a week as a good Team well handled would perform in a day; yet no perswasion hath been able to prevail upon them for the changing of this hurtful and ridiculous custom. And when the Earl of Stratford, the late Lord Deputy, had damned it by act of Parliament, and laid a penalty on such as should after use it: the people thought it such a grievance, and so injurious to the Nation, that among other things demanded towards a Pacification of the present troubles, their Agents and Commissioners insisted eagerly on the abrogation of this Law. An humour like to this in the point of Husbandry, we shall hereafter meet with in another place. Near of kin to this, is a lazie custom that they have of burning their straw rather than put themselves to the pains to thresh it; by that means to part it from the Corn. From which no reason can dissuade them, nor perswasions win them. They have among them other customs as absurd, though less inconvenient: as placing a green bull, on May-day before their doors; to make their kine yield the more milk; kneeling down to the New Moon as soon as they see it, desiring her to leave them in as good health as she found them; and many others of like nature.

They use a language of their own, but spoken also in the West of Scotland, and the Hebrides or Western Islands which though originally British, or a Dialect of it, by reason of their intermixture with Norwegians, Danes, Essterlings, or Osse-men, and English Saxons; hath no affinity with the Welsh, for ought I can learn. The Christian Faith was first preached among them by St. Patrick, affirmed to be the Nephew of St. Martin of Tours, Anno 435. Reformed in the more civil parts, and the English Colonies, according to the platform of the Church of England: but the Kernes, or natural wild Irish (and many of the better sort of the Nation also) either adhere unto the Pope, or to their own superstitious fancies, as in former times. And to say truth, it is no wonder that they should; there being no care taken to instruct them in the Protestant Religion; either by translating the Bible, or the English Liturgie, into their own Language, as was done in Wales, but forcing them to come to Church to the English Service, which the people understand no more than they do the Mass. By means whereof the Irish are not only kept in continual ignorance, as to the doctrine and devotions of the Church of England, and others of the Protestant Churches; but those of Rome are furnished with an excellent argument, for having the Service of the Church in a Language with the common Hearers do not understand. And therefore I do heartily commend it to the care of the State (when these dissenters are composed) to provide, that they may have the Bible, and all other public means of Christian instruction and devotion in their natural tongue.

The Soil of it is itself abundantly fruitful, but naturally fitter for grafs and pasturage, than it is for Tillage; as may be seen in such places where the industry of man is aiding to the natural goodness of the Soil. But where that wanteth, the Country is either over-grown with Wood, or encumbered with vast Bogs, an unwholesome Mafhes; yielding neither profit nor pleasure unto the Inhabitants. In some places, as in the Country of Armagh, so rank and fertile, that the laying of any foil or compost on it, doth abate its fruitfulness, and proves the worst Husbandry that can be.

It hath been anciently very famous for the Piety and Religious lives of the Monks. Amongst whom I cannot but remember Columbus, and of him this memorable Apophthegm; when offered many preferments to leave his Country, he returned this Answer, It becomes not them to embrace other mens goods, who for Christs sake had forsaken their own. Of no less piety, but more eminent in point of Learning, was Richard Fitz-Rafe, Archbishop of Armagh, commonly called Armacanus, who flourished about the year 1350. A declared enemy of the Errors and corruptions of the Church of Rome.

It is affirmed of this Island, that (amongst other Priviledges which it hath above other Islands) it is softer than venomous Serpent, and that no such will live here; brought from other places. Hence of her self we find her speaking in the Poet.

*Ille ego sum Graiis Glacialis Hibernia dicta;
Cui Deus, & melior rerum nascitur Origo;
Ius commune dedit cum Creta alvace Tonantis,
Angues ne nostris diffundant sibil in oris.*

I am that Island which in times of old
The Greeks did call Hibernia, icy-cold;
Secured by God and Nature from this fear,
Which gift was given to Crete, Joves Mother deare,
That poisonous Snake should never here be bred,
Or dare to hiss, or hurtful venom spread.

The other miracles of this Island are, 1. That there is a Lake in the County of Armagh, into which if one thrust a piece of wood, he shall find that part of it which remaineth in the Mud to be turned Iron; and that which is in the Water, to be turned into a Whet-Stone: richly deferred by him, if the tale be false, who did first report it. 2. That the Kine will yield no milk, if their Calves be not by them; or at least their Calves-skins stufled with straw or hay. It is said also, that all the breed of this Country any civil course of life; the Fathers inflicting an heavy curse on all their posterity, if ever they should sow corn, build houses, or learn the English tongue. To this indispensible of the Irish themselves, let us add the defects of the Kings of England, and Irish Deputies, in matters of civil Policy, as I find them particularly by Sir John Davies, in his worthy and pithy discourse of this Subject: I will only glean a few of them. First, then, such a barbarous Country is like a field overgrown with weeds, which must first be well broken with the Plough, and then immediately sown with good and profitable seed: to mow a wild and uncivil people, be first broken and ploughed up by war, and then presently sown with the seed of good Laws and discipline; left the weeds revive in the one, and ill manners in the other. Here then was the first defect in our English Kings not to tame and take down the Stomachs and pride of this people, though either civil or foreign wars perhaps occasioned this neglect: and also the Irish Deputies, who at such times as the people up on a small discomfiture, were crest-fallen, neglected the keeping of them by severity of Discipline. The second oversight concerneth particularly our Kings, who gave such large possessions and Regalities unto the first Conquerors, that the people knew no Authority in a manner, above their own immediate Lords. The Laws of England were not indifferently communicated to all the Irish, but to some particular Families and Provinces only: inasmuch as there were but five great Lords of the natural Irish, who had the benefit and protection of the Laws of England, that is to say, O Neale in Ulster, O Connors in Connaught, Mac Morrough in Leinster, O Malcolin in Meath, and O Brian in Tycomond; known by the name of Quaque Sanguines in some old Records. By means whereof the rest of the people being in the condition of Out-Laws, or at the best Aliens, had no encouragement either to build, or plant, or manure their Land, or to behave themselves as Subjects. A fourth defect was more particularly in the Deputy or Lords Lieutenants, who having made good and wholesome Laws against the barbarous customs of the Common people, and the mercilefs oppressions of the Lords, never put any of them in execution; as if they had been made for terror, not for reformation. Fifthly, add unto these (which Sir John Davies hath omitted) the little care which was too often taken by the Kings of England in the choice of their Deputies: sometimes conferring that high Office as a Court preferment, without relation unto the merits of the person, and sometimes sending men of weak or broken Fortunes, who attended more their own profit than their Masters service, and were more bent to fleece than to feed this flock. Sixthly, And yet besides these Errors of the Kings and Deputies in point of Government, there was another, and as great in the Planters themselves; who building all their Forts and Castles in the open Countries, abandoned the Woods and Bogs, and other Fastnesses to the natural Irish; the strength whereof not only animated them to Rebel upon all occasions: but served too fitly to continue them in their ancient Barbarism.

In these terms of wildness and non-subjection stood Ireland, till the latter end of Queen Elizabeths reign, at what time the rebellion of Hugh O Neale Earl of Tir-Ond had engaged almost all the Irish in that desperate action which ending in the overthrow of that ingrateful Rebel, and all his partizans, not only crushed the over-much powerableness of the Irish Nobility, but made the final and full conquest of the whole Nation. So true it is, that Every Rebellion when it is suppressed, doth make the Prince stronger, and the Subjects weaker. Ireland thus broken and ploughed up, that glorious Queen died a victor over all her enemies, and left the sowing of it unto her successors.

for King James, who omitted no part of a skillful Seed-planter. Then there was an ewm or Alt of Oblivion made whereby all the offences against the Crown were remitted: by such a limited day the people would sue out their Pardons, and by the same Act all the Irish were committed from the servitude of their Lords, and received to the Kings immediate Protection. 2ly, The whole Kingdom was divided into Shires and Judges Itinerant appointed to circuit them: whereby it hath followed, that the exactions of the Lords are laid aside, the behaviour of the people narrowly looked into, the passages before us known to our Souldiers, are laid open by our Undersheriffs and Bayliffs; and the common people seeing the benefit and security they enjoy by the English Laws, and loth to plead always by an Interpreter, begin to fit their children to School, for the learning of the English tongue. 3ly, The Irish were not rooted out, as in the first plantation in Leinster, and the English only cisted in their rooms: but were only removed from the Woods, Bogs, and Mountains, unto the plain and open Country: that being like wild trees transplanted, they might grow the milder, and bear the better fruit. And 4. whereas there was but one Freeholder in a whole Country, which was the Lord himself, the rest holding in Villenage, and being subject to the Lords immeasurable taxations; whereby they had no encouragement to build or plant, now the Lords Estate was divided into two parts, that which he held in demain to himself, which was still left unto him, and that which was in the hands of his Tenants, whose Estates made in their Possessions, according to the Common course of England, paying instead of uncertain Irish taxations, certain English rents: whereby the people have since for their misdoings on requiring their lands, and manuring their lands, to the great increase of private and publick Revenue.

But that which most advanced the reduction of Ireland to a settled and civil Government, and rooted it into sedition to the Crown of England, was the voluntary flight of the Earls of Tyrone, and Tirconnell, Sir John Oughterby, and other great men of the North, possessed of large Territories and great Jurisdictions. Who being both incapable of Loyalty, and impatient of seeing the Kings Judges, Justices, and other Ministers of State, uphold their Sessions, and execute their Commissions of Oyer and Terminer within the parts where they commanded, without more provocation, or the fear of any danger but a guilty Conscience, forsook the Country, and left their whole Estates to the Kings disposing. By whose directions, their Lands were seized upon and sold to several Purchasers, the City of London interested in a great part of them, a great Plantation made in Ulster of English, Welsh, and Scots, by the united name of a British Plantation; and a new Order of Knights Baronets erected in the Kingdom of England for raising money to advance and assist the work. Which had it been as cordially affected by the English, as it was by the Scots; if more of this Nation had gone thither, and not abandoned so great a part of it to the power of the other, it had been better for both Kingdoms, in the conformity of each to one form of Government (which the Scots, being fadious for another, did not easily brook) and the uniting of both people as one Nation, by the Irish looking on the Scots as their Fellow Subjects, on the English as their old Master or his Fellow Subjects. However, so great a part of the Country (and that which heretofore was the neck of the Rebels) being thus disposed of, it came to pass, that Ireland, which before served only as a grave to bury our best men, and a gulph to swallow our greatest treasures, being governed neither as a Country Free, nor conquered: was brought in some hope, by the prudence and policy of her last Kings and late Lord Deputies, to prove an orderly Commonwealth, civil in it self, profitable to the Prince, and a good strength to the British Empire. For to such Country it was reduced, in a little time that the wayfaring might travel without danger, the Ploughman walk without fear, the Laws administered in every place alike, the men drawn unto Villages, the Woods and Fastnesses left to beasts, and all reduced to that civility, as our Fathers never saw, nor could we well sample out of ancient Histories.

The Revenues of this Kingdom are said by Walsingham in the time of Edward the 3d. to have been yearly 40000 pounds; but his Successors, till of late, have scarce got to much as the keeping of it cost them: King Richard the 2. being by the same Walsingham reported to have spent 30000 marks out of his own purse, over and above the money which he received thence. Whether this Country were so profitable to Edward the 3d. or no, I determine not, though I find good reasons to persuade me, that Walsingham was not well acquainted with the state of that Exchequer. But sure I am, that the Revenues of the Crown are more than double what they were in the said Kings Reign, and more duly paid into the Exchequer of that Kingdom than ever formerly; the profits of the Custom being amounting to 30000 per Annum, in the last year of King James his Reign. Not to say any thing of the great improvements which were made by the Earl of Strafford, in the time of his Government, because they fell together with him.

The strength of this Kingdom consisteth partly in the situation of it, begirt about with difficult and dangerous Seas; partly in the many Castles first built and fortified by the English Planters, and partly in a standing Army continually kept up by the Kings of England, for defence of their hold and interest against the rebellions of the Natives. What Forces it is able to raise both of Horse and Foot, could never be conjectured at, till now of late. For formerly the Kings of England being actually possessed only of those four Counties which they called the Pale, that is to say, the Counties of Dublin, Louth, Kildare, and Meath (which last had since the time of King Henry the 8th been subdivided into three) were not able to raise any great power out of that Estate, but were forced to send Souldiers out of England (as occasion was) to preserve their Sovereignty in Ireland. The greatest Levy which I read of, was that of 1500 Irish, led by the Prior of Kilmainham to King Henry the fifth, then being at the siege of Harlow in Normandy, And on the other side, the great Lords of the natural Irish, & degenerate English, being divided into Factions amongst themselves, & never joined in any one principal of common interest, were more considerable than the weak, but united Forces of the Kings of England. And though most of them at the last were drawn into Confederacy with the Earl of Tir-Ond, to make good his rebellion: yet find I not that their Army did exceed at any time, the number of 8000 men; and those not well appointed neither. So that the best estimate which can be made of the Forces of Ireland, must be measured by the Armies raised in the late Rebellion when the Irish had both time, and leisure, to get themselves some reputation in the World, and make provision for a War. In prosecution of which, he who considers the many Armies they have raised, since the first murdering under the command of Sir Phelim O Neale, the many defeats which have been given them, and those as many new recruits after each defeat; all of them raised out of the bodies of their own people, without supply from other Countries (besides such as have served against them for the King) must needs conclude that they want not men enough for service; nor skill, nor courage to attempt the most difficult enterprises.

The Arms of Ireland are Azure, an Harp Or, stringed Argent. Which Coat King James, (to shew himself the first absolute King of Ireland) first caused to be marshalled with the Royal Arms of Great Britain.

The LESSER ISLANDS.

AND now we come at last to the LESSER ISLANDS, dispersed in several parts of the British Ocean. The chief whereof are, 1. The Orkades, 2. Shetland, 3. The Hebrides, 4. Man, 5. Anglesey, 6. The Island of the Severn Sea, 7. The Sorlings, or Isles of Scilly, 8. Wight, 9. Thame, 10. Sunderland, 11. Holy Island.

I. THE ORKADES or Isles of Orkney are in number 22 situate over against Caithness, the most Northern County of all Scotland, and separate from one another by some narrow Straights. The soil indifferently Fruitful, exceedingly well stored with Barley, and great Herds of Cattel, plentiful in Hares and Conies, as of Cranes and Swans: but destitute of Wheat, and unimproved in both of Woods and Trees. But their chief commodity is their Fish, which the Inhabitants catch upon the Coasts in great abundance. Those of most note in all the cluster, are, 1. Hebr, conceived to be the Oetus of Ptolemy: as 2. Fair Isle, on good reason thought to be the Dumna of Ptolemy the chief Town, or it being still called by the name of Dumna. 3. Hey, taken or mistaken for the Dumna of Ptolemy, but not else observable. 4. Pomona, the chief of all, in length about 26 miles, in breadth, where it is broadest, six. The chief Town of it Kirkwall, honoured with a Bishops See, and strengthened with two Castles. This Island is well stored with Tin and Lead, and is at this day by the Inhabitants called Manland.

The people of these Isles (according to Maginus) are great drinkers but no drunkards, Bibacillimi sunt incolae, vinumque tamen inebriantur. They use the Gothic Language, which they derive from the Norwegians, in whose possession they once were, and of whose qualities they still retain some smack. The selves themselves, in the time of Scythians, were not inhabited; being then overgrown with rustiness (now in a measure, populous and fertile as before was said) and were first discovered by Julius Agricola, the first that ever sailed about Britain. In later times they were possessed by the Normans or Norwegians, who held them till the year 1266, when Magnus King of Norway surrendered them up to Alexander King of Scotland, which Surrender some of the succeeding Kings did afterwards ratify: the claim heretofore being finally relinquished by Christiern the first, King of Denmark and Norway, on the marriage of his daughter Margaret with King James the 3d. A. 1474. some money being added to make good the Contract, without which the Danes would not forgo their pretensions to them.

II. Two days sailing North of these Orkades, lyeth
Q9
SCHET.

Flemings, I know not why, call them the Sorlings. All of them very fruitful in Corn and Herbage, besides the treasures hid within, well flored with Cones, Cranes, Swans, and moft forts of wild Fowl. Ten of them more esteemed than the reft, are called by the names of 1. Armath, 2. Agnes, 3. Samplon, 4. Scilly, 5. Brefar, 6. Rufca, 7. S. Helens, 8. Arthur, 9. S. Maurics, and 10. S. Marics: Of which the moft famous in the account of former times, was that of Scilly, as giving name unto the reft, but in the prefent estimate S. Marics is accounted the chief of all: 8 miles in compafs, fruitful of all neceffaries, and fortified with a very ftrong Caftle built by Queen Elizabeth, well manned and garrifoned, for defence of a large and goodly Harbour made amongst thiefe Iflands, capable of the greateft Navies.

Thiefe Iflands firft difcovered by Hamulo a Carthaginian, fent by that State to fearch into the Weft Cofts of Europe, became of great fame afterwards both in Grece & Italy; by reason of the Mines of Tinne fpooken of before: Sober chief to the Romans, that they ufed to fend hither their condemned Prifoners to work in the Mines, as the beft fervice to be done by their forfeited Lives. And hither amongst others, Infantius, a fierce Procellian, for his factious and feditious carriage, was fent by Maximus, and Silvanus infulam nitra Britanniam deportatus, as Sulpitius faith. After the Romans had forfaken their hold in Britain, they returned again into the power and poffeffion of the Natives: from whom fubdued, and added unto the Engliſh Crown by Aethelane the K. King of England. Now ordered for Civil matters as a part of Cornwall, for military, by their own Captain, fubordinate to the Lord Lieutenant of that County, as for the Tin-Trade, by the Lord Warden and Court of Stanneries. An Officer and Court erected for the benefit and regulating of the Tinners of Cornwall, who by privileges and exemptions more than other Subjects, but of late limited and reſtrained by Acts of Parliament.

VIII. The Ifle of WIGHT lieth over againſt Hampſhire, from which it ſemeth to have been divided, the paſſage betwixt it and Huſh-Caſtle on the oppoſite ſhore, being very narrow, & the name of it intimating ſome ſuch diviſions. For by the Britains it was anciently called Gnith, which ſignifieth a breach or ſeparation, from whence the Engliſh have their Weight, the turning of Guze to Whetting familiar with the Saxons; and all other Dutch people; and from the ſame root probably the Romans had the name of Vetus, Vechi Weight, and Gnith, being words of near reſemblance, that we need not burrow further for an Etymology. The Ifland of Oraval form, 20 miles in length and 12 miles broad about the middle; from thence growing narrower towards each end, to the Eaſt and Weſt. Naturally Fenced about on all ſides, on the South of all, where it looks towards France, on which ſide it is inacceſſible by reaſon of the ſteep and craggy Rocks, the whole length thereof, and not much leſs ſafe on the North-Weſt, where the remainder of the Rocks, (which they call the Shingles, and the Needles) not worn away either at or ſince the ſeparation from the other ſhore, make the paſſage dangerous; 3 except to ſingle Ships, and thoſe not unaccompanied with the Courſe of the Channel. Towards the North-caſt more flat and level, and therefore fortified with the two Caſtles of the Coves and Sandham. There is alſo the Caſtle of Yarmouth in the Weſt of the Ifland and that of Gwalbrook in the middle (but more towards the North) in which laſt there is laid to be Armour for 5000 men, and in each Village (of which here are 37, beſides many Market Towns) a piece of Ordnance. Yet do not of theſe Arms and Caſtles add fo much to the ſtrength of it, as the natural courage of the People, warlike & ſtout, and trained up unto the poſtures of War from their very childhood.

The ſoil hereof abundantly answereth the pains of the Husbandman, fo plentiful of Corn, and all the fruits of good paſſurage, that they have not only enough for themſelves, but furniſh the markets of Southampton and Portsmouth (but the laſt eſpecially) with the greateſt part of all Wheat, Fleſh, Cheefe, and Butter, which is ſpent amongst them. Inform that the Souldiers of Portsmouth depending on the ſtrength of the Town, have been uſed to ſay, That if they had the Ifle of WIGHT to their friend, and the Seas open, they cared not for all the World beſides. Their Sheep here of ſo fine a fleece, that the Wool hereof hath the ſecond eſteem next to that of Leinſter (in the Country of Hereford) and precedency of that of Cotſwold.

Their chief Towns, 1. Yarmouth, on the North-Weſt of the Ifland, ſeated on a convenient Haven, which is ſaid to have ſome reſemblance to that of Rochel, and that Haven defended with a ſtrong Caſtle. 2. Brading, another Market-town. 3. Newton, an ancient Burrough, and privileged, ſending Bregles to the Engliſh Parliament. 4. Garehook, a large Town, and neighbour'd with an ancient Caſtle. 5. Newport, now the chief of all the Ifle, called in the times paſt, Medona, afterwards Novus, Argentum de Medona, at laſt Newport, ſeated upon an Arm of the Sea, capable of Ships of leſſer burden to the very key; and by that means populous, well traded, and inhabited by civil and wealthy people.

The Ifland firſt ſubdued to the Romans by the valour of Velaſianus, (afterwards Emperor of Rome) in the time of Claudius. Extorted from the Britains by Cerdick King of the Weſt-Saxons, and by him given to Stiffa and Whigar, two of that Nation, who had almoſt rooted out the old Inhabitants. It was the laſt Country of the Saxons which received the Gaſpel, and then upon compulſions, forced to it by the power as well as the perſuaſion of Cadwalla the Veſt-Saxon King. Took from the Engliſh in the time of the Norman Conqueror, by William Earl of Hereford, who thereupon was made the firſt Lord thereof. From whoſe Family, by the gift of Henry II. it paſſed to that of Redvers, ſon Rivers, de Biparis than Earl of Devonſhire: and on failing of that Houſe returned to the Crown in the Reign of Edward the firſt. Never ſo much ennobled as by Henry the fifth, who bearing a great affection to Henry Beauchamp Earl of Warwick, in the 23 of his Reign, crowned him King of Wight, An. 1445. Which title ended with his life about two years after.

IX. THANET, is a little Ifland in the North-Eaſt of Kent, not far from Sandwich, environed on three parts by the Sea, into which it ſtooth with a large Promontory called the North-fore-land; the Cantium of the ancient Writers: and towards the Weſt, ſeveyed from the main land of Kent by the River Stour, which is here called Toulade, but ſeveyed fo, that by the benefit of a Caſtle and paſſage for the waters in convenient places, it is united to the Continent or main land of Kent. The quality, ſize, and figure of it, taken in theſe Rhythms (for I dare hardly) call them Verſes extant not long ſince in a Window of the chief Church there, viz.

Infula rotunda Thanatos, quam circum unda, Nobilis & munda, nulli eſt in orbe ſecunda.

That is to ſay,

Thanet is round with circling waters bound,
A neat and noble ground, none like it to be found.

Called by Salinus, Athanatos, in ſome Copies Thanatos from whence the Saxons had their Thamer. Famous, as in other things, ſo in theſe particulars, that it was the place which the Saxons landed at, when they firſt came into Britain; the firſt Livory and Seiſin, which they had of the whole Kingdom, conferred upon them by the impudent bounty of Vortiger, to whoſe aid called in; and the landing place of Auguſtine the Monk, when he brought the Gaſpel to the Saxons. The whole about two miles in length, and four in breadth, was reckoned to contain in thoſe times, 600 Families; now very populous for the ſize, and plentiful of all commodities neceſſary, but of corn eſpecially. The people generally are a kind of Amphibii, able to get their livings both by Sea and Land, well ſkilled as well in ſteering of a ſhip at Sea, as in holding the Plough upon Land; and in both induſtries. Of moſt note in it, 1. Stronar, a Port-town, the uſual landing place of the Saxons; more memorable for the Sepulchre of Vortimer, King of the Britains, who having vanquiſhed the Saxons in many battels, and finally driven them out of the Ifland, deſired to be here interred on a conceit, that his dead corps would fight them from landing any more upon theſe Coaſts. And this perhaps a diſtinct imitation of Scipio African, who having had a Fortiſſime hand againſt thoſe of Carthage, gave order to have his Tomb placed towards Aſiick, to fright the Carthaginians from the Coaſts of Italy.

X. SUNDERLAND is an Ifland only at an high-water, when environed on all ſides with the Sea; at other times joyned unto the Land, or of an eaſie paſſage from thence to the other: pulled by ſome tempeſt, or by the workings of the Sea from the reſt of the Land: whence the name of Sunderland. Situate in the North-Eaſt part of the Biſhoprick of Durham, over againſt the influx of the River Wear. Rich in its inexhaustible mines of Cock, and for that caſe ſeldom without the company of foreign Merchants; or not to have been here reſum'd, but that it hath been thought worthy by our Sovereign Lord King Charles, the ſecond Monarch of Great Britain, to confer the title of Earl to the two Noble Families of the Serpents and Spencers: the firſt in the third year of his Reign, An. 1627; the ſecond in the 18th, An. 1642.

XI. THE HOLY ISLAND lieth upon the Coaſt of Northumberland, not far from Berwick, ſtretched out in length from Eaſt to Weſt, with a narrow point unto the Land, from thence growing broader like a wedge: fortified with a ſtrong Caſtle, and of great ſafety, but more Famous for what it hath been, than for what it is. In the dawning of Chriſtianity amongst the Northumbrians, made a Biſhop See, by S. Aidanus, one of the firſt Apoſtles of that potent Nation. Selected for this dignity by that godly man, for the ſolitude and privacy of it; which made it thought more fit and proper for Devotion. The name then Lindisfarne, but the Religious Lives of ſo many pious Biſhops, Monks, and others of the Clergy as did there inhabit, gained it the name of Holy Island. The See continued there 253 years, that is to ſay, from the year 637 to 990, under 22 Biſhops, hence called Biſhops of Lindisfarne; then removed to Durham: the infidelities of the Danes (who then rag'd terribly on theſe Coaſts) compelling them to abandon that Religious ſolitude.

Thus have we taken a ſurvey of the Britiſh Iflands, and them by what means Ireland and all the leſſer Iflands became united either to the Crown of England or Scotland; and theſe two Kingdoms to each other joyned in the perſon of the ſame King, and the participation of his Favours, though diſtinct ſtill in Laws and ſome forms of Government, as moſt of the Eſtates of Spain, at the preſent time. United alſo in one name, the different Appellations of England and Scotland being ſwallowed up, or incorporated rather in that of GREAT BRITAIN, which it pleaſed King James to own for his ſtile Imperial. And for a memory thereof, to cauſe a piece of Gold to be coined of 20 s. (ſince raiſed to 22 s.) which he called the Unit, ſtamped on the one ſide with his picture, and this Inſcription, JACOBUS D. GR. MAGNÆ BRITANNIÆ FR. ET HIBERNIÆ REX, and on the other ſide with his Arms, crowned with this Motto, AVE CLAM EOS IN GENTEM UNAM. All we have now to do, is to lay down the names of thoſe puſſant Princes, whom God hath raiſed to be

The Monarchs of Britain.

1602 I James, the fixth of that name, King of the Scots, Son of Mary Queen of Scots, Daughter of James the fifth, the Son of James the fourth, and of the Lady Margaret, eldeſt Daughter of Henry the ſeventh of England: which Margaret being after married to Archibald Douglas Earl of Angus, had a Daughter named Margaret alſo (the only child of her Parents) married to Matthew Stewart Earl of Lenox; by whom ſhe was made the Mother of Henry Lord Darnley, the Father of King James the fixth, by the ſaid Mary Queen of Scots. So that King James deſcending from the eldeſt Daughter of Henry the 7th, both by Father and Mother, on the expiring of the Line of Henry the 8th, in the perſon of Queen Elizabeth of Famous memory; was the next heir to the Crown of England, and was accordingly with all joyſul acclamations proclaimed and acknowledged King in the City of London, March 24. An. 1602. (According to the Account of the Church of England.) A learned and Religious Prince, a true Defender of the Faith, a Nurſing Father of the Church, and a lover of Learning. He died at Theobalds, March 27. 1625, having reigned 23 years, and four days over.

1625 2 Charles, ſecond Son of King James, and of Anne of Denmark, (his elder Brother Henry dying long before) the 63d King in deſcent from Cerdick King of the Veſt-Saxons; the 45th King of England, in deſcent from Egbert; the 24th from the Norman Conqueror, the 64th March of the Engliſh, and the ſecond Monarch of Britain. In the beginning of his Reign he married the Princeſſe Henrietta Maria, Daughter of Henry the fourth, and Siſter to Louis the 13th, French Kings; by whom beſt with a Royal Iſſue of Sons and Daughters.

As for the Forces and Revenues of theſe Britiſh Monarchs, we cannot put the eſtimate of them in a better way than by laying together that which hath been delivered of each ſeveral part, out of which Items the ſumma totalis of the whole both in power and treaſure, will be eaſily gathered. For though theſe Monarchs never had any occaſion to muſter and unite the Forces of their ſeveral Kingdoms upon any one Action, yet by conſidering what they have been able to do divided, we may conclude of what they may do, if need be, being now united. And ſo we are to do in marſhalling the Arms of the Britiſh Monarchy, were are 1. Quarterly France and England, 2ly. Scotland, 3ly. Ireland, the fourth as the firſt. I ſhut up this Diſcourſe of the Britiſh Empire, with thoſe words of Scripture (the Motto of another of King James his Coins) QVOD DEUS CONFVNXIT NEMO SEPARAT.

HAVING pursued the Fortunes of the Roman Empire through the four Western Dioceses or Divisions of it, wholly subdued to the command of that conquering State: let us next look on those Countries which lay farther North, and either never felt the force of the Roman Armies, or were but conquered in part, or else were reckoned as the members of some greater Province. Of this last fort was all that Tract which is now called Belgium, or the Netherlands, bounded Eastward with Westphalen, Gulick, Cleve, and the land of Triers, Provinces of the higher Germany; on the West with the main Ocean, which divides it from Britain; on the North with the River Ems, which parts it from East-Friseland; on the South with Picardie and Champagne, two French Provinces; upon the South-east with the Dukedom of Lorrain.

By the Latines (especially of these last times) it is called Belgium, from the Belge, the most potent people of all these parts; and sometimes also Germania inferior or the Lower Germany, (in the same sense as by the English it is called the Low Countries and the Netherlands) from their low situation, and the conformity which they have with the Germans in Laws, Languages, Customs and Manners.

ners. By some it hath been called by the aggregate name of the Seventeen Provinces, from the like number of federal and distinct Estates united under the Command of the King of Spain. The more peculiar name is Flanders, which, though but one of the Seventeen Provinces, hath yet given denomination to all the Netherlands, the people of which were once generally called by the name of Flemmings; and that either for the power of that Province, in regard of the others; or by reason of the great Trade and Traffick formerly driven at the Fairs or Mars of Bruges (a Town thereof) by the Merchants of all parts of Europe, or in respect that lying nearer than the rest to France, Spain, Italy, and England, that name was better known and took notice of. But this was when the whole Country was under the command of many Princes; of which the Earls of Flanders were esteemed most potent. And though this name continued also after the incorporating of most of these Provinces in the House of Burgundy, at which time they were called the Estates of Flanders; yet since the falling off of Holland and the rest of the United Provinces from the Kings of Spain, it hath lost this Honour, the name of Flanders being now restrained within narrower bounds.

But for the name of Belgium, though I find that name most current amongst the Latines of this Age, yet I see little reason for it. For first, old Belgium contained in it many fair and large Estates which are not now within the compass of these Belgick Provinces; that is to say, the Dukedom of Lorraine, Berg, Juliers, and a great part of Cleves, the Bishopsricks of Trier, Mentz, and Colen, and so much of the Kingdom of France as takes up all Picardy, with parts of Champagne and of France specially so called. Secondly, Gallia Belgica extended somewhat farther yet, comprehending a great part of the Lower Palatinate, all Elfsa, the whole County of Burgundy, and so much of Switzerland as lieth on the French side of the Rhene. And thirdly, the whole Provinces of West-Friesland, Groning, Over-Isfel, Zuiphen, together with all North-Holland, and so much of Gelderland, and Utrecht as lieth on the farther side of the middle Channel of the Rhene, were never counted of as parts of either Belgium or of Gallia Belgica (though now within the compass of the Belgick Provinces) but as parts of Germany; clearly without the limits of the ancient Gaul, of which Body Belgium was a limb or member in the Roman estimate.

As for the Belge, from whence we have the names of Belgium and Gallia Belgica, they were originally Germans, who driving out the Gauls, planted themselves within the Rhene, succeeded by Cesar to be the valiantest of the Gaulick Nations for these three Reasons. 1. They were the farthest from Provence, where the Roman Civilities and more affable course of life was embraced. 2. They dwelt on a Sea not then frequented by Merchants; and so wanted those allurements to Effeminacy which are in Countries of traffick. 3. They bordered on the Germans, a warlike Nation, with whom they were continually in Arms. This people seeing the prosperous success of Cesar's Victories in Gaul, joined together in a League, and mustered an Army of 269000 Fighting men against him. But seeing they could not draw him out of his Fortresses, they retired again, and that in such disorder, that three Legions (for no more was Cesar's Army) put them to an infinite slaughter. After this, Cesar, fighting against them feverally, overcame them all and made their Country, and the Country of the bordering Germans, whom he also vanquished, subject unto the Roman Empire. By Constantine the Great it was made part of the Diocess of Gallia, and by him cast into five Provinces: that is to say, 1. Belgica Prima, containing the Dukedom of Lorraine and the Land of Trier, the Metropolis whereof was Tri- ers; 2. Belgica Secunda, comprehending Artois, Picardy, and the Country of Cambray, with parts of Champagne and France special, of which the Metropolis was Rhemes; 3. Germania Prima, comprehending Alsacia, a part of the Palatinate, and the Bishopsrick of Mentz, the Metropolis City of that Province; 4. Germania Secunda, containing Cleveland, Brabant, Gelderland, Utrecht, Holland, Zeland, Flanders, Hainault, Namur, Luxembourg, Limbourg, and the land of Colen, which last was honoured with the title of Metropolis; 5. Maxima Sequanorum, so called of the Sequani, the old Inhabitants thereof, containing the whole County of Burgundy, and so much of Switzerland as lieth on the French side of the Rhene, of which Besancion was the Mother City. But at this time none of the Provinces above specified are comprehended under the acpt and name of Belgium, but such as were possessed in these latter Ages by the House of Burgundy; some petty Seigniories and Estates which properly do belong to Germany being added to it: that is to say, the Lordship of West-Friesland, given to the Earls of Holland by Charles the Bald, the Earldom of Zuiphen united unto that of Gelders by Earl Orto of Nijssay, and finally the Estate of Groning, Over-Isfel, and some part of Utrecht by Charles the fifth. Under which name and notion we do now consider it.

And taking it according to this name and notion, it is in compass 1000 Italian, or 250 German miles; and is situated in the Northern temperate Zone, under the 51. and 52. Climates: the longest day in the midst of the 51st Climate, where it doth begin, being 16 hours; in the beginning of the 52nd Climate increased to 16 hours three quarters, or near 17 hours. The Air in these later days is grown more wholesome than formerly; partly by the wonderful increase of the Inhabitants, and partly by the incredible industry of the people, who, by draining the Marishes, and converting the standing waters into running Streams have purged the Air of many gross and unhealthy Vapours, which did thence usually arise in times foregoing.

The Country is very populous, containing well-nigh three millions of souls; the men being for the most part well-proportioned, great lovers of our English Beer, amindful both of good turns and injuries, of good will inventing, and of a most indefatigable industry for perfecting the rarest Manufactures. For unto them we are indebted for the making of Cloth, which we learnt of the Flemmings; also for Arras-hangings, Dorick Cloths, and the perfection of the Mariner's Compass. They restored Musick, and found out divers Musical Instruments, being naturally good Musicians, and generally so given unto it, and so perfect in it, that therefore (the Art of Musick grew more common) there were not many Great mens houses which had not Musicians to teach their Children. To them belongeth also the invention of Charities, the laying on of Colours with Oyl, the working of Pictures in Glass, and the making of Worsted, Seyes, and Tapestries; the making of which and other Stuffs, being driven out of their Country by the Duke of Alva, they first taught the English. The Women generally are of good complexion, well-proportioned, especially in the Leg and Foot, honours of Vertue, active and familiar. Both within doors, and without they govern all; which, considering the natural desire of Women to bear, rule, maketh them too imperious and burthenfome.

They use for the most part the German and Dutch Language, with a little difference in the Dialect. But in the Provinces adjoining to France, that is to say, Luxembourg, Namur, Artois, Hainault, and some parts of Flanders & Brabant, they use the French; but the same very corruptly and imperfectly, by reason of that mixture which it hath hath of the Dutch or German, yet so that one may easily discern those people to be French originally, or some remainder of the old Gauls, mastered by the French, but not rooted out: from their Language or first Original coming to this day by the name of Wallons, the Germans usually changing G into W, as Warre for Guerre, Warden for Gardian, and in the like cases Wales for Galles, I know there is another Etymology of the name of Wallons, some making them to be of the Burgundian race, who, at their first passing over the Rhene, enquired their way of the Country; people in these words, On allons, i.e. Whither go we which being oft repeated by them occasioning them to be called Wallons: A trim invention doubtless, but of no solidity, nor to be farther honoured with a confutation.

The Country in those parts which lie towards Germany, especially on the South-east bordering upon Cleveland and Lorraine, is somewhat fowled with Hius and over-shaded with Woods, the relics of the great Forest of Ardenne, which once took up a great part thereof. But towards the West and North, where it joins to the Sea, it is plain and level, full of Plains and Marthes, affording very little Corn, but abounding in Palturage, which yields a great increase of Butter and Cheese, good store of Bees and Horses of more than ordi ary bigness. By reason of which low and level situation, and the neighbourhood of a troublefome and unruly Sea, it hath been formerly much subject to Inundations; inasmuch as in the time of King Henry the 2. Flanders was so overflowed, that many thousands of people, whose dwellings the Sea had devoured, came into England to beg new teats, and were by that King first placed Tork-Spire, and then removed to Pembroke. Since that, it hath in Zeland swallowed eight of the Islands, and in them 300 Towns and Villages: many of whose Churches and strong buildings are at a dead low water to be seen. And as once Ovid said of Helice and Buris, Cities of Achaia, so may we of these,

*Invenies sub aquis, & adhuc offendere nante
Inclinata solent cum manibus oppida verſa.*

That is to say,

The waters hide them, and the Sailors show
The ruin'd Walls and Steeples as they row.

The chief Commodities which they vent into their Countries are Linen, Scarlets, Worsted, Seyes, Silks, Velvets, and the like rich Stuffs; together with great quantities of Armour, Ropes, Cables, Butter, Cheese, &c. Of which excepting Cheese and Butter, there is nothing of the natural growth of the Country: the rest being Manufactures which they make out of such materials as they fetch out of Foreign Regions. But the Commodity which yieldeth them most benefit is that of fish, not caught upon their own Coast neither, but either in the Northern Seas or the coast of England; the very Herings which they catch on the shoars of England (to the no small dishonour of English Nation) bringing them a Revenue (besides what is purſued up by the Adventurers) of 440000 pounds per annum; and that of Cod-fish, which they catch on the Coasts of Friesland, amounting to 1500000, sterling yearly.

Captains of note and eminence it hath bred but few. The people living till of late in perpetual peace. The chief of those whose names have been transmitted to us are, 1. Crovis, a Prince of the Butavians, for subduing of it compared to Hannibal and Sertorius: of which in the long War against the Romans, in the time of Vespasian, he gave very good proof. In the middle times, 2. William Earl of Holland, elected Emperor of Germany, 3. Baldwin Earl of Flanders, Emperor of Constantinople, 4. Philip the Good, and 5. Charles the Wallace, Dukes of Burgundy. 6. Charles the Fifth Emperor and King of Spain. And of late times the Princes of the House of Nassau and Orange, transplanted hither in the Regency Maximilian out of higher Germany. And to say the truth their Genius doth not lie so much for Land service as it doth for the Seas, in which they have been very famous and not less fortunate. For of this Nation was Oliver Vander Noorde, the fourth that compassed the world, Jacob le Maire, the first discoverer of the Straight or Fretum, which now beareth his name, besides divers others. And generally the people are so expert in Navigation, (especially these bordering on or near the Coasts) that they seem born for and to the Seas: many of which, being born on Ship-board and bred up at Sea, know no other Country, and brook the Land as ill as a Fifth doth the dry ground. Which natural inclination to it, and the necessity they have of employing themselves that way, (the Country not being otherwise able to provide subsistence for those multitudes of men which it doth about it) hath so exceedingly increased their Shipping, that it is thought that they are masters of more Vessels of all sorts, taking one with another, than almost all the rest of Europe.

Scholars of note it hath bred many. 1. Erasmus, the great restorer of Learning in these parts of the World. 2. Johann Lipsius, as eminent a reviver of the Latine Education. 3. Johann Scaliger, the Son of Jubius, a man of great Learning, but of equal Arrogance. 4. Rudolphus Agricola. 5. Levinus Lemnius. 6. 7. Janus Donsa, the Father and the Son. 8. Abraham Ortelius, and 9. Gerard Mercator, the Geographers. 10. Geo. Cassander, 11. Dr. James Hermin, 12. Gerard Vossius, eminent Divines. And 13. Hugo Grotius, of as great parts (but seasoned with more modesty and moderation) as the famous Scaliger. 14. Janfenius, and 15. Pamelius, two right learned Men, but of the Pontifician party.

As much unfortunate it hath been in some wretched Heretics, in none more than in David George, born at Delf in Holland who called himself Christ and King immortal. Flying from Delf to Basil with his Wife and children, An. 1545, he there taught his Doctrine, viz. 1. That the Law and Gospel were unprofitable for the attaining of Heaven; but his Doctrine able to save such as received it. 2. That he was the true Christ and Messias. 3. That he was not to restore the House of Israel by Death or Tribulation, but by Love and Grace of the Spirit. 4. That he had been till that present kept in a place unknown to all the Saints. And that this last point might obtain the easier credit amongst the people, he bound his Disciples, first to conceal his name; secondly, not to reveal of what Condition he had been, thirdly, not to discover the Articles of his Doctrine to any man in Basil without his permission. But for all this great care of his within three days after his death (which happened in the year 1566,) his Doctrines, being made known, were condemned by the Senate & Church of Basil, his goods confiscated, and his Bones most deservently taken up and burnt. Of somewhat less impiety, but of no less perversity, was 2. Joh. de Leyden, (another Town of the same Province) who from a Tailor was made King of the Anabaptists, when they had ragged in Amster, and there we shall hear farther of him. 3. Cappianus, and 4. Quintinus, both Flemmings, the joint Authors and Co-founders of the Sect of the Libertines.

The Christian Religion was planted in several Provinces by several men: in Holland, Zealand, and Friesland, by Willibrord an English man, the first Bishop of Utrecht, whence by degrees it gained on the rest of the Country; these being the first people of the Franks, or *German*s, converted totally to the Gospel. In tract of time it fell from the Primitive Purity, participating of the Errors and Corruptions of the Church of Rome; from which when they desired to reclaim themselves, they were there in opposed by the King of Spain and his Ministers. Hence the beginning of the Troubles, enlarged afterwards on pretence of Civil rights invaded and infringed by the Spaniards affecting a more absolute Dominion over them than their Laws admitted. At this time, as the Country doth stand divided betwixt the States; and the Spaniards, so stands it with Religion also: the Spaniards permitting only the Religion of the Church of Rome within the Provinces and Estates under his command; and the States General indulging the free use of all Religions (even the very Jews); but countenancing only that of the Reformed Churches, according to the Platform laid down by Calvin.

Chief Forests of this Country are: 1. That of Ardenne, which in the time of Cesar extended from the banks of Rhene as far as Tonny one way, and Champagne another way, and was in compass 500 miles in the least account. In which circuit there was comprehended the Southern parts of Brabant and Flanders, all Limbourg, Luxemburg, Luyckland, Namur, and Hainault, together with the land of Gulick in the higher Germany, as some Writers say. At this time, though the greatest of all Gaul Belgic, it reacheth but from Liege, to Theowille, 30 leagues in length, and yet not all that Woodland neither, though within the Verge of the Forest: there being much Tillage and many Villages in that tract of ground, the principal of which is the Town of S. Hubert, situate almost in the midst of it. 2. Niepe, and 3. Nonnen, in the Earldom of Flanders; the first extending to the banks of the River Lis, the other coming up close to Tpres. 4. Pondsberg, in the Confines of Hainault and Flanders, near unto Mont-Gervais. All these were parts of this great forest of Ardenne, which once overshadowed all this Country. 5. Normant, in Hainault, in which is much Charcoal made; supposed for that reason to be a part of that Forest which the old French called La Charboniere. 6. Echterwald, in Gelderland, near Arnhem, &c.

The chief Rivers are, 1. Rhene, which ariseth out of two Springs in the Leopontian Alps amongst the Grisons, united into one stream near Chur: thence passing by the Cities of Constance, Basil, Spire, Wormes, Metz, and Colen, it is again divided about the confines of Gelderland into four Branches or Channels. Of which the first is called the Wael, which running through Gelderland by Nimwegen and Bommel, loseth it self in the Muse. The second, which keeps the name of the Rhene, passeth by Arnhem, from thence in a contracted channel to Utrecht, and so through Holland unto Leyden. The third, called the Leck, taketh his course through the Provinces of Utrecht and Holland, and so into the Sea betwixt Dort and Rotterdam. And the fourth called the Tijdel, which passing by the Towns of Zurph and Deventer betwixt Gelderland and Over-Yssel, emptieth it self into the Ocean near Amsterdam. And of these Branches I have given the exacter reckoning, partly because the course of that famous River is otherwise not easie to be observed; and partly because the knowledge of a great part of these Provinces dependeth on the knowledge of the course of this River, it being the middle branch of the Rhene (that which goeth by Leyden) which anciently divided Germany from Gallia Belgica. A River of such reputation in the ancient times, that into it the old Belge used to cast the children which they suspected to be illegitimate: For were they born of law full bed, they floated on the waters; if of unlawful, they sank immediately. Whereunto Claudian alluding faith, Nascentes explorat gurgite Rhenu. But the great number of Antiquities, Pestifera, is of opinion, that thereby they only injured their Children to hardness, and made trial of their strength; Adultery being rarely found among them, and so these kinds of experiments needless. 2. Mosa, the Maas, as the Dutch or the Mettis, as the French men call it, which springing from the Mountains of Vange in the confines of Lorrain and not far from the Fountains of the Seine and Marne, runneth through Lorrain, Luxemburg, Luyckland and Namur; from thence by Kuremond and Venlo, two known Towns of Gelderland, where turning towards the West, it taketh in a part of the Rhene, and from thence passing by Maasick, divideth Brabant from Holland, watering the Town of Grave in the one, and of Dort in the other; and falleth into the Sea not far from Brill with so great a violence, that the waters of it for a long space continue fresh. 3. Emis, in Latine called Amisus, dividing the two *Frisland*s; of which more in Germany. 4. Scaldis, which arising in Picardy, and running through Artois, and between Hainault and Brabant, meeteth with the Sea a little above Antwerp. And 5. Lis or Loys, which runneth quite through Flanders. Besides which Rivers, and others of inferior note, (which we shall meet withal in their proper places) here are great flocks of Lakes, Pools and Marshes, which do both fortifie the Country, and provide it of Fish: besides many navigable Channels made by the hand of man from one River to another, for the convenience of passage, and the more easie transport of their Commodities.

The Shoar of this Country hath been much worn out by the Sea, especially that of the Islands of Zeeland, and such as lie scattered about Holland; where they are defended with Banks and Ramparts, painfully made, and chargeably maintained. These Banks are about ten times in height, and twenty five in breadth at the bottom: they are made of the hardest clay that may be gotten, in the inside stufled with wood and stone, on the outside covered with mats strong and thick made.

The former Inhabitants were divers, and were as differently disposed of in their several Countries. That is to say, the Atrebrates in the greatest part of Artois; the Moringi the rest of Artois; and those parts of Flanders which make up the Imperial and Dutch Flanders; the Nervi in Hainault; Namur, and Flanders Gallican; the Batavi in South-Holland, and so much of Gelderland and Utrecht as lies on the South-side of the Rhene, with the Menapii intermixt in the Dukedom of Gelders; the Mattiaci in the Isles of Zeeland; the Adriatici and part of the Tungri in the Dukedom of Brabant, with part of the Frisi in Luxemburg, and of the Eburones in Luyckland and the Dukedom of Limburg: all which were Belgic Nations, and therefore anciently accounted of as parts of Gallia. Then on the Northern side of the middle Channel of the Rhene there dwelt the Frisi minor in North-Holland, and so much of the District of Utrecht as lies on the farther side of that channel; the Frisi major in West-Friesland and the State of Groning; some parts of the Sicambri in the Earldom of Zurph and the rest of Gelderland, with part of the Bructeri in Over-Yssel all German Nations, and properly not within the reckoning of Gallia Belgica. Those which passed under the account and name of Belge being subdued, together with other Tribes of that numerous Nation; by the valour and good fortune of Julius Caesar, continued subject to the

Romans

Romans, with any notable disturbance unto their affairs but the Rebellion raised against them by Civilis Prince of the Batavians in the time of Vespasian. In the declining of the Empire they were possessed by the French, under whom they made a part of the Kingdom of Metz, or Offenreich, united by Childerick the third to the rest of France, and made a member of that Kingdom; as they continued till the time of Lewis the Godly, Son of Charles the Great. In the division of whose Empire amongst his Children, the Countries of Flanders and Artois being laid to France, the residue of these Countries on this side of the Rhene made up a special part of the Kingdom of Lorrain. Those on the farther side of the middle Channel of that River, being German Nations, gained to the vast Empire of the French by Charles the Great, in the division of the spoil spoken of before fell to the share of Lewis surnamed the Ancient, the first King of Germany, and after his decease to his Successors in that Estate, whether King or Emperours. And so we have the whole divided betwixt the three great Kings of France, Lorrain and Germany, by that means subdivided into lesser parcels, (no fewer than nineteen in all) we shall see anon.

In the mean time we are to know, that in the beginning of the French Conquests in the rest of Gallia, there started up intellectual two great Estates, founded by Auberan, Regnant and Ranchaire, Sons of Cleodion, the second King of the French; who being disinherited of their Fathers Kingdom by Mervoe Master of his Horse, to whose Tuition and Guardianship they had been committed, betook themselves to the most defensible places of the great Forest of Ardenne, and the Countries on the banks of the River Moselle; where they founded the two great Earldoms from thence denominated. That of Ardenne (for of the Earldom of Moselle we shall speak elsewhere) contained part of the modern Flanders, and some part of Brabant, together with all Hainault, Namur, Limburg, Luxemburg, and the Dukedom of Bouillon. Grown to this greatness by the withdrawing of the French forces into richer Conquests, and diminishing of that Empire into many Kingdoms, and trusting too much to that greatness, they drew upon themselves the jealousy of those mightier Princes: occasioning Clotaire the second to give their Country unto Dagobert his eldest Son, then King of Metz, whom he furnished with convenient Forces for the conquest of it, Brunnulp, the then Prince hereof, being by him discomfited and slain in Battle. By Sigebert, who succeeded his Father Dagobert in the Kingdom of Metz, the Earldom of Hainault is taken out of it, and given to Albert, one of the youngest Sons of Brunnulp. By Dagobert himself succeeding in the Realm of France, (and whilst he lived foiking of the French) the parts of Flanders and Brabant, formerly belonging to these Princes, were diminished from it, and laid unto two new Estates of his own creating. And probable it is, that either to weaken this great House, or to comply with the customs of those times, the Earldom of Namur might be taken out of it at the same time also, for the portion of some other of the younger Brethren. The rest of the Estate, with the title of Earl of Ardenne, remained unto the eldest Son: whose posterity, notwithstanding this great diminution, grew to such esteem, that Judith, the Widow of Ban, and Sister of Boson, Earls of Ardenne, was thought a fit Wife for Charles the Bald, King of France and Emperour, by whom (the more to honour his Family) the said Boson was created King of Arles and Burgundy. During the Empire of Otho the first, the Earldom of Luxemburg was divided from it, and given to Sigefrid, one of the younger Sons of Ricinus the preceding Prince, and Esperatus was Limbourg also for another of them. The rest remained to Godfrey the eldest Son, who by

Matilda, a Daughter to Otho the second, was father of another Godfrey, who succeeded after Charles and Otho, the third Duke of Lorrain: that Dukedom being ever since enjoyed by the House of Ardenne, and there we shall hear farther of it. This said, and so much of the Story opened as concerns the general, we will proceed to a particular Survey of the modern Belgium, divided at the present into seventeen Provinces, besides the two great Bishopricks of Liege and Cambray, which being always under the protection of the Belgic Princes, partakers of their fortunes, either good or ill, and lying intermixt among their Estates, shall have their turn in the description of these Countries, divided generally into	2 Bishopricks	1 Liege or Luyck , 2 Cambray .

	4 Dukedoms	1 Limbourg , 2 Luxemburg , 3 Gelderland , 4 Brabant .
	1 Marquissate	viz. of the Holy Empire.
	7 Earldoms,	1 Flanders , 2 Artois , 3 Hainault , 4 Namur , 5 Zurph , 6 Holland , 7 Zeeland .
	5 Baronies,	1 West-Friesland , 2 Utrecht , 3 Over-Yssel , 4 Muslin , 5 Groning .

Of these nineteen, two only did acknowledge the Sovereignty of the Kings of France, viz. Flanders and Artois; the Earls whereof were Homagers unto that Crown, but seldom did defend so low as to do their Homage, quitted at last to Philip the second King of Spain and his Successors, by King Henry the second of France in the Treaty at Cambray, Anno 1558. The rest were held originally of the German Emperour, and by Maximilian Emperour of Germany, and Regent of those Countries for his Son Philip, (who had a purpose to subject them to the Empire again) were made the tenth Circle of the Empire, called the Circle of Burgundy. But neither since nor before that time; would the Princes of the House of Burgundy, acknowledge any such subjection, but governed these Estates as absolute Princes, without relation to the Empire, or Subordination to the Emperour or Imperial Officers; never appearing at the Diets, nor contributing to any Taxes there imposed, not holding themselves bound by any Constitutions which were made therein. So that the several Relations being out of use, we must behold it at this time as it stands divided betwixt the Spaniards and the States: being, first with those Spaniards which belong to the Spaniards, the true Proprietary of the whole; and therein first with Flanders, as of most esteem.

1. FLANDERS, and 2. ARTOIS.

These two I have thought fit to join together, because at first but one Estate; and though divided for a time; yet after five or six Descents again united, and have so continued ever since.

FLANDERS is bounded on the East with the East with Hainault and Brabant, on the West with the English or German Ocean, on the North with the Seas of Zeeland and a branch of the Scheld, and on the South with part of Picardy in France, interposing betwixt Calise and Greenwich. So called, as some say, a Fland, because it lieth open to the winds; as others say, from Flanther, the Son of Bilestia, Daughter of Cleodion, the second King of the French. Some fetch it from a Town of this name, situate in that part of the Country where now Ardenburg stands; so long since ruined, that very few except themselves could ever hear of it: and others (which I think most probable) from Flandrina the Wife of Lideric the second, the first who governed in these parts by the name of Forsfere.

The Soil is indifferently fruitful in Corn and Pasture, the Air healthful, temperate and pleasant. The whole Country not in length above 90 miles, and in breadth but 60, and yet containing in that compass above thirty Cities, (for they reckon all Cities which be walled) and 1154 Villages, which stand so thick, (as needs they must in so narrow a compass) that the Spaniards, at their first coming in with King Philip the second, took the whole Province for one Town. Divided commonly into 1 Imperial, 2 Gallican, and 3 Tenonican; or 1 Flanders Imperial, 2 Flanders Gallican, and 3 Flanders Flammengant.

1. FLANDERS FLAMMENGANT, which is the greatest of the three, is bounded on the East with Imperial Flanders and the River Scheld, on the West with the English Ocean, on the North with the Seas of Zeland, and on the South with Artois and Flanders Gallican. The chief Towns of it, 1. Caen, in Latine called Gandavum, seven miles in compass, but taking the Suburbs, which are great and large, the whole circuit is ten miles at least. One of the greatest Cities in Europe for extent of ground but not so populous as many of a less capacity; there being much waste ground even within the Walls. Commonly seated on the banks of the Scheld, and the Ley, both which run through it, and make in it 26 Islands, joined together by 98 Bridges; and had not her many Seditions ruined her Beauties, she might have been the Queen of Europe. In this Town were born John Duke of Lancaster, commonly called John Gant, and Charles the fifth Emperor, and King of Spain; which last, to restrain the people from their old Seditions, which had been very troublesome to his Predecessors, (the Gantois) taking on them many times to rule and over rule their Princes) built a strong Citadel in the place where stood the Abbey of Saint Bavon. For Churches, Monasteries, and other places of Devotion, there were numbered in it 55, all of them answerable to the grandeur and renown of the City; the private Buildings being also very stately, if not majestic. But now it is much fallen from its former glories, the often Seditions of this people drawing upon themselves the vengeance of their angry Prince; and their Wealth much impaired by the long Wars, and the diversion of their Trading by the Hollanders, who command the Seas. 2. Bruges, or Brugge, more within the land. A Town that hath neither Port nor River, yet formerly of such Wealth, and the people in those times so willing to shew it, that Queen Jean, the Wife of Philip the Fair, having been there, and marked the pomp of the Women, complained that She was not Queen alone. The Town of four miles circuit within the Walls, wonderfully well peopled; the Buildings fair & sumptuous, (amongst which 60 Churches and Religious houses) the Streets large and straight, and a spacious Market place, from which the 6 principal Streets of the City do pass directly on to as many gates, which is very pleasant to behold. And though the Town hath neither Port nor River as before was said, yet was it anciently of so great Trading, that it was accounted one of the four Marc Towns of Christendom; flourishing chiefly by the benefit of the English Cloth, and sensibly decaying when the English Traffick was removed hence to Antwerp. It was called by Earl Baldwin, Ann 890, is distant three leagues from the Sea, and seated on a fair and deep Channel made by Art, and filled with the waters of all the adjoining Fountains and Rivulets; which artificial Channels are in these Countries very frequent, to the great enriching of the whole State. 3. Ypres, a Town feared very strongly, and almost impregnable, on a small River so named: a reasonable rich Town, and well built, though most of the Houses be of Timber, very well served with Water, conveyed into every house almost in leaden Pipes, of which there is so great a number, that the Foundations of it seem to be laid in Lead. 4. Bourbourg, a fine strong Town, but little pertaining to the French King in the right of the house of Bourbon. 5. Comines, on the River Lis, or Ley, beautified with a strong Castle, and an excellent Library; but more in being the Birth-place of Philip de Comines, than notable States-man and Historian. 6. Contra, on the same River of Ley, one of the ancientest Towns in Flanders, yet still continueth well built of very great strength both by Art and Nature, famous for a great Overthrow given the French, Ann 1301, for which the Town was called of long time the Sepulchre of the Frenchmen. 7. Ardenburg, (called in times past Rodemburg) a pretty Town enriched every year with a great Horse-fair every June, and beautified with one of the goodliest Churches in all this Province: the principal Town of that part thereof which properly is called Flanders; that name being first given to the parts hereunto adjoining, as some conceive, and after by degrees communicated to the rest of the Country. 8. Bicrollet, both a Town and Island, and furnished with a good and commodious Haven; yet not to be mentioned in this place, but that the falling of Heings was here first invented by one William Bachelme, who died Ann 1397. 9. Winockberg, so called of a goodly Abbey built upon a Hill in the honor of St. Winock an English man of an holy life, sacked by the French, Ann 1518, but since re-edified, and made more beautiful than it was before. 10. Greveling, on the Sea-side, which, since the taking of Calice by the French, hath been made the strongest Town in the Low-Countries. 11. Oudenard, seated on the Scheld, a fair strong Town and of very great Traffick, especially for Tapestry and the finest Linens, which are here made: the Birth-place of Margaret, Dutchess of Parma, and Mother to Alexander Prince of Parma, the renowned Souldier.

The principal Ports of Flanders, being four in number are all of them seated in this part. 1. Dunkirk, a small but safe Port, belonging to the French King (as doth Graveling also) in the right of the House of Vendism, strongly garrisoned by the Spaniards, even in times of Peace, because of the importance of their situation both by Sea and Land. Most memorable in these days for that the people of it in the times of War so infested the Seas. 2. Schuyt, seated at the mouth of the Channel of Bruges, beautified with a very fair Haven able to contain 500 good Ships; and is now subject to the States, who enjoy any safe and large Harbors so near unto them. Over against it lieth the Isle of Cassand, famous for the birth of George Cassander, a moderate and learned Papist formerly as big again as it is at the present, having then a fair Town in it and many rich Villages, of which there is but one remaining, (of the same name with the Island) the rest all swallowed by the Sea. 3. Nesport a pretty Town, with a very strong Castle, built on a well frequented Haven, but not very safe, and therefore not much used by the men of War, nor made rich by Pirates, as Dunkirk. Near to this Town, Ann 1603, was fought the Field-battle betwixt the Archduke Albert and the States; the Victory, next under God being gotten for the States by the valour of the English, and the excellent Conduct of the Vere. 4. Offend, not walled till only, the Low-country Wars, and then but with a mud-wall only, and that not finished till the Arch-duke fate down before it: inasmuch as the Arch-dutchess Isabel is said to have sworn, that she would not shift her smock till the Town were were taken; who, had he kept that rash Oath, had been very lowly; the Town (then garrisoned with English) holding out against the said Arch-duke a Siege of three years and as many months.

2. IMPERIAL FLANDERS so called, because it was long under the obedience of Emperours, is severed from Brabant by the River Dender, and from the English Flanders by the River Scheld, about Oudenard. It was sometimes called Kyancant, of a Castle of that name, destroyed by Baldwin le Debonaire, Earl of Flanders; and is now called the County of Alost, from the chief Town thereof so named, the Jurisdiction whereof, containing 170 Villages, extendeth as far as to the Walls of Gant and the Gates of Oudenard. The Town is strong, and indifferently fair, situate on the River Dender, most famous in these times for a Fair of Hops which is kept there yearly. 2. Helf, a walled Town, and the chief of the four Towns in the County of Wass; the other three being, 3. Axle. 4. Munchant. 5. Affened; of which little memorable, but that they were all taken from the Empire by the said Baldwin le Debonaire in the time of the Emperour Henry the Fourth. 6. Dendermonde, situate at the mouth of the Dender where it entereth into the Scheld, a strong Town both by Art and Nature, and much enriched by making Fustians, and a weekly Market of Flax. A distinct Seigniorie of it self, with many rich Villages belonging to it, incorporated into the Earldom of Flanders by the Marriage of Earl Lewis de Malaine with the Lady Margaret of Brabant, to which house it formerly appertained, 7. Rupelmond, on the mouth of the River Rupel, where it falleth into the Scheld: Famous in former time for an ancient Castle, in which were kept the Monuments and Records of the Earls of Flanders; more in late times for being the Birth-place of Mercator, that renowned Cosmographer. 8. Mont-Gorbard, called by the French Gandemont, a fine and pleasant Town seated on the Dender, where three last Towns, together with Bornhem, a Fair large Village, having some Jurisdiction on the parts adjoining, made up that Estate which was called the Proper or Domaine of Flanders, because not held of the Empire or the Kings of France, but in the Sovereignty alone of the Earls thereof.

3. FLANDERS GALLICANT, so called from the French language there spoken, lieth on the South of Flanders Flammengant; having Hainault on the East, Artois on the West, and the Country of Cambray on the South. The chief Towns of it are, 1. Lille, in Latine, Insula, so called from its Island-like situation, among Ponds, Pools, Muffles, dried up and made firm land by Earl Baldwin de Barin, who built the Town, Ann 1007, which afterwards was called by Baldwin de Lisle, his Son (born in this Town, and hence so named) Ann 1066. The Town made rich by Manufactures and resort of Merchants, accompanied the bell Town of Traffick next Amsterdam and Antwerp, in all the Netherlands. Not far from which are to be seen the Ruines of an ancient Castle called Brug, the Seat or Manor-house of the ancient Forsfere, who had the Government of this Country for the Kings of France. 2. Douray, (Duarum in Latine) a fair and strong Town seated on the Scharp, having many Fountains, good Buildings, and a great number of Churches, made an University by King Philip the second of Spain, who built therein a Seminary or College for English Fugitives. 3. Orchier, a pleasant Town, and well traded for the making of Serges, which, with the other two, make up the three Estates of this part of Flanders. 4. Armentiers, an unwalled Town, but of very great Trading, there being yearly 20000 pieces of Cloth hence to Italy, and thence to Constantinople, 5. Tournay, (or Dornick, as the Dutch call it) a great, rich, mighty and strong Town, seated on the Scheld, well built, and full of stately and magnificent Churches and Religious Houses, and anciently honoured with a See Episcopal. A Town of great importance, and much contended for betwixt the Flemmings and the French; but finally fell unto the French, as the more puissant Prince; taken from them by Henry the eighth of England, Ann 1513, to whom the Citizens paid 100000 Ducats for their present Ranfome, restored by him unto the French, Ann 1518, for the sum of 600000 Crowns; and finally from them recovered by Charles the fifth, who restored it to the body of Flanders, from which it had been long dismembered; but so that it is governed as a State apart, and is called the Seigniorie of Tournest, having a goodly Jurisdiction over the County thereof about it. 6. S. Amand, in the Country of Tournest, pleasantly seated on the Scharp, in which is one of the richest Abbies in all Flanders; the Abbot thereof having the temporal and spiritual Jurisdiction over it and the parts about it. And so much for the Geography of the Earldom of Flanders, inhabited by the Nervii and Morini in the time of Cesar.

4. ARTOIS is bounded on the East with Flanders Gallican and the Country of Cambray on the South and West with Picardy, on the North with Flanders Flammengant and the River Lis. The name is derived from the Archevates, the old Inhabitants thereof: the Air exceeding temperate, and the Soil so fruitful, that it serveth as a Granary to a great part both of Flanders and Brabant.

On the West part hereof towards France lieth the Earldom of S. Paul, so called from the chief Town thereof, a goodly Seigniorie, and of great Jurisdiction and Revenue, containing besides many Villages, the good Town of Pern, a walled Town, and of great importance. The Earls hereof were lineally derived from Walteran, brother of Henry the 7. Emperour of Germany and Earl of Luxemburg; the last of which was Lewis of Luxemburg, made Constable of France by King Lewis the eleventh, with whom, as also with Edward the 4. of England, and Charles Duke of Burgundy, he paid so many cross tricks, that having long deluded them all, and kept them in a continual jealousy of one another, he was at last by Duke Charles taken and beheaded. After whose death this goodly Seigniorie fell to the House of Vendisme in France, by the Marriage of Francis Earl of Vendisme with Mary the Daughter of this Lewis, to whom it was adjudged by the power and favour of the French King's, the Heirs-males being made incapable of Succession in it by the Attainder and Confiscation of the said laid Earl. By means whereof the House of Vendisme was intitled to many fair Estates in Artois, Flanders, Hainault, and much goods Lands in France, which they were possessed of, Francis the 2. Son of that Francis, and Francis the only Son of this being intitled, whilst they lived, Earl of S. Paul, and Dukes of Tureville.

The Arms of these Earls were Argent, a Lion Gules armed and crowned Or, his tail forked of the second.

As for the residue of Artois, the Towns of most importance in it are, 1. Arras, in Latine Atrebatum civitas, the chief City of the Archevates the old Inhabitants hereof in the time of Cesar, and still the chief City of this Province; a large, populous and well-fortified City, anciently honoured with a See Episcopal, and stocked with an industrious people, the first makers of the Cloth of Artois, which took name from hence: divided into two distinct Towns, both of them walled, and called by two several names; the lesser called La Cite, subject to the Bishop, beautified with a Fair and stately Cathedral Church, and a Library containing many excellent Manuscripts; the lesser called La Ville, subject to the Prince, having large Streets, and a rich Monastery of the yearly Revenue of 20000 crowns. By Proseley it is called Regnum, seated within a bow-shot of the River

River Scarp, and heretofore the Metropolitan Town of Flanders, till Artois was dismembered from it; since which time the chief City of this Province, as before is said. 2. S. Omar, a fair Town, and well peopled, seated upon the River Aa, some eight Dutch miles from the Ocean; so called from S. Omar, or Adomarus, Bishop of the Morins; who built a Monastery in this place, from which grew the Town, the second of esteem and rank in all the Country. Near to it is a goodly Lake of fresh water, in which are many little Islands affording good Pasturage for Cattel: of which Lewis Guicciardin reporteth, that by fastning a Cord unto the bulwarks which grow in them, a man may draw them which way he will; and that under them there are found great numbers of Fishes, who hid themselves there for shelter against the Weather. 3. Bethune, a strong Town; and seated amongst excellent Pastures, of which the people make great plenty of the best Cheese: which, with the Territory hereof, fell to Guy of Damiette, Earl of Flanders, in right of Maud his Wife, Daughter and Heir of Daniel the Lord of this Town, honoured in that regard with the birth of their eldest Son, who from this place had the name of Robert de Bethune. 4. Ayres, on the Lis, a strong Town, with a Castle of great Antiquity. 5. Bapaume, a little, but well Fortified Town; and yet more strong, because it cannot be besieged for want of fresh water, which is not to be had within three leagues of it. 6. Remy, an unvalleyed Town, but Fenced with a very strong Castle, besieged by the French, Anno 1554, but being overcome in a few Days by Charles the fifth, they were fain to raise a Siege and go home again. 7. Hesdin, on the confluence of two little Rivers, Blangis and Canche; a Frontier-town on the edge of France, one of the strongest and most defensible places of all the Netherlands, built by Charles the fifth out of the ruins of old Hesdin, which having taken from the French, he commanded it to be razed as no longer servicable, and raised this Town in stead thereof, somewhat nearer France. 8. Terwin, or Tervan, the Tervan of Ptolemy, and Civitas Morinorum of Antoninus, a Frontier-town, held for a long time by the French, by whom thought impregnable, till taken by King Henry the eighth, Anno 1513, they changed their opinion. A Siege not only memorable for the issue of it, but for two other matters of great moment. The one, that the Emperor Maximilian came and served in person under the colours of S. George, with the English Cross upon his breast: the other, that the French intending to victual the Town, had so great an overthrow, that had the English followed their Fortune, they had opened a fair way to have made themselves masters of all France; the French King being so astonished at the news hereof, that he prepared to fly into Bretaign. But the English more minded the Spoils and riches of Terwin, than the sequel of an absolute Victory, Et frui maluerunt victoria, quam uti, as the Historian said of Hannibal. It is now after many changes of Fortunes in the hands of the French, and by some reckoned and accounted of as part of Picardy. There are, besides these, two Battered Towns more, that is to say, Lillers, Lenz, and La Walles, of which little memorable; and to the number of 854 Villages.

These Countries of Flanders and Artois were anciently, if not a part, (as the parts hereof about Tourney met undoubtedly were) yet much of the same nature with the great forest of Ardenne, nothing but a continual waste of Woods and Defarts, till the Conquest of it by the French; the Sea-coasts being then unpeopled for fear of the Danes, who by their frequent Piracies did much vex those Shores and the inland Countries meanly planted, for want of Corn and other necessaries for the life of man: subject in part to the great Princesses of Ardenne, till the discomfiture of Earl Brunepluch by Dagobert sole King of the French, by whom about the year 621 this wild Country, extending then as far as the River Somme, and comprehending besides Artois and Flanders, a good part of Picardy, was given unto one Lideric de Buque with the title of Forrester, to be held under the Sovereign of that Crown. In whose posterity it continued with the title of Forrester till the time of Baldwin the first, the son of Odoacer, the seventh of the Forresters, whose names occur upon record; there being a long intermission of their names and memories during the Ravagements and Depredations of the Danes and Normans. This Baldwin having first ravished, and afterwards married, Judith, Sister to Charles the Bald, King of France and Emperor, was by him created Earl of Flanders, the Sovereignty thereof reserved as before it was: in whose Issue it remained intire, till Philip the first Earl of that name gave unto Philip Augustus, King of France, the Country of Artois, with the Earldom or Country of Veromandois, part of Picardy, in Marriage with Isabel his Niece, Daughter of Baldwin Earl of Hainault. By Lewis the eighth, Son and Successor of Philip Augustus, Artois was given in Portion to his youngest Son Robert, made the first Earl of Artois by King Lewis the 9. An. 1234. And by the Marriage of Lewis the first of Flanders with Margaret the Heir of Artois and of the Earldom of Burgundy, both these Estates were added unto this Flanders, now made far mightier than before. And yet before this great accession of estate it was accounted the prime Earldom, as Milane was the prime Dukedom of Europe: these Earls being privileged to write themselves Dei gratia, all others Dei clemencia only; and Flanders being now grown abroad to so great esteem, that it was generally used for all the Netherlands. Finally, the Marriage of Margaret, Daughter of Lewis de Malin, Earl of Flanders, to Philip the Hardy, Duke of Burgundy, this great Estate became united to that House, and afterwards was conveyed to that of Austria, as shall be seen hereafter in due time and place. In the mean season us take a brief survey of

- 1331 5. Endes, Duke of Burgundy, Earl of Burgundy and Artois in right of Joan his Wife, the eldest Daughter of Philip.
- 1361 6. Philip, the only Son of Endes, in right of his Mother, Earl of Artois, and so called in his Father's life time.
- 1349 7. Philip III. Son of Philip II. and Nephew of Endes, Duke and Earl of Burgundy, and Earl of Artois, who died young and without issue, Anno 1361.
- 1361 8. Margaret, Daughter of Philip of France, and of Joan Countess of Artois and Burgundy, married to Lewis Earl of Flanders, &c. succeeded Philip 3. (being then a Widow) in the Earldoms of Burgundy and Artois, Anno 1361.

The Arms of Flanders are Or, a Lion Sable, langued and armed Gules. Those of Artois being Semé of Flower-de-Luces Or, in a field Azure, a File of three Labels Gules charged with as many Castles of the first.

HAINAULT is bounded on the East with Namur, on the West with Flanders, on the North with Brabant, on the South with Picardy and Champaigne in France. It was anciently called Salutis Carvenerius, from the abundance of Charcoal made in the Woods and Forests of it; by some Writers of the middle times, the Lower Picardy; by the Latine Writers of these times called Hannonia. It seemeth to have taken this new name from the River Haine, or Hania, which passeth through it, and the word Holt, signifying a Wood, as being over-spread in a manner with the Forests of Normault, St. Amant de Eignand, and that of Poodberg. and then Hainault will be quasi Haine holt, i. e. a Country of Woods and Forests on the River Haine. Thus called originally by the French (as the word importeth) but by the Dutch best known by the name of Hagenow, i. e. the Country bordering on the Haine, as the name signifieth in that language.

The length thereof is 60 miles, 48 the breadth; comprehending in that compass 950 Villages, and 24 Towns; in and amongst which there is reckoned one Principate, 10 Earldoms, 12 Peermors or Pairies, 2 Baronies, 26 Abbeyes, one Lord Marthall, (besides other Officers of the Prince) descending by inheritance to the Lords of this Province.

The Air hereof is very good, and the Soil Fruitful, by reason the Country is watered with so many Rivers, as the Scheld, the Sambre, the Dender, and several lesser Streams, besides divers Lakes, Marshes, Ponds and Pools, which do much enrich it, the Country abounding in moist places with fresh Meadows and sweet Pastures, good Fruits, and profitable Trees, but especially with great plenty of Corn. There are also in some parts of it notable Mines of Iron and Lead, and excellent Quarries of the best Stone, fit for all kind of Buildings.

The principal of these Towns are, 1. Mons, situate at the confluence of Haine and a little River called Trulle, which gives a good natural strength unto it; fortified besides with a very strong Wall, three large deep Ditches, and an ancient Castle. The Town is great, beautiful and rich, adorned with sumptuous buildings, both private and publick, and replenished with wealthy Merchants and men of Trade; the principal of all the Province, erected into an Earldom by Charles the Great, and sometimes used for the style of Earls of Hainault. In this Town is the noble Nunnery of S.V. aldrake, once a Dutche of Lorraine, the Nuns whereof are to be Ladies and Gentlewomen of Noble Families, in the morning apparelled in white, like Nuns, in the afternoons according to their Birth and Qualities, who when they please may leave the Cloister and be married. The Abbess hath Jurisdiction both in the Town and Country about it, and anciently did put the Earls of Hainault into possession of the State.

Another Nunnery like this (but not of such large Revenues) there is at 2. Mechingen on the Sambre, a good Town of Merchandise, 3. Valechinnes, seated on the Scheld, and a little River called Ruette, which make not only in it many pleasant Isles, but pass almost under every man's house to the great benefit and delight of the place and people. The site hereof is so strong by Nature (besides the Fortifications of Art) that on the one side it may be easily made unapproachable by water, and on the other side is so defended by Hills, that it can hardly be besieged but by three Armies at once. A goodly, large and beautiful Town, especially for publick Building: the Chief whereof are the Church of our Lady, built after the ancient manner manner of Architecture, with sumptuous Arches and goodly Pillars of Marble and Porphyry, the Earl's Palace, and the Town-hall, Buildings of great magnificence and excellent workmanship. The Birth-place of Henry the 2th, Emperour of Germany, of Mary Daughter of Charles the Warlike, and of Froissart the great French Historian. Finally a Town which, for the eminence thereof, is governed as a State apart by itself, having under the Jurisdiction of it 3 Towns, 132 Villages, which on occasion of Appeal resort not to the Provincial Council at Monti, but the great Council at Mechlin. 4. Chimay, upon the River Blanche, near a pleasant Forc, which gives the title of a Prince to the eldest Son of the Duke of Aerschot, one of the principal Lords of Brabant, who hath here a very good Palace. 5. Halle, seated on the Sinne, which runs through it, a place of great credit amongst the Papists, by reason of an Image of the blessed Virgin famed for many Miracles. Of which see Lippin on this Subject. 6. Beauvais or Bavay, an old Town, at a Pillar whereof begin all the ways leading to France, made of Pavestones by Brumhault, the Wife of Sigbert King of Metz, and Anfrasia, who with Frideric the Wife of Chilperick, and Katharine Medice, the Wife of Henry the 2d, are said to be the three Furies of France. 7. Landrevic, on the River Sambre, famous for the notable resistance which it made to Charles the 5th, 1543. 8. Marienburg, built by Mary Queen of Hungary, Governors here for the said Charles, An. 1524, to serve as a Bulwark against France, on which it fronteth. 9. Philip-Ville, built and well fortified for the same reason by K. Philip the 2d. 10. Bonchain, upon the Scheld, in the County of Offstrand, which County is the Title of the first Son of Hainault: and by that name William the eldest Son of Albert Earl of Hainault and Holland, was admitted Knight of the Garter by King Richard the 2d. 11. Conde, a good little Town seated on the Scheld, the moiety whereof belonged heretofore to the House of Montpensier in France, as 12. Enghein, a Town of great Trade for Tappetry to the House of Vendoupe: from whence the Princes of Conde, and Dukes of Enghein do derive their Titles. 13. Beaumont, upon the knap of a goodly Hill, whence it hath the name; belonging at the present to the Dukes of Aerschot, but anciently the Partage of the second Son of the Earls of Hainault. 14. Bini, or Binche, on a branch of the River Hain, one of the Joindre Towns of the Countesses of Hainault, much beautified and made a place of pleasures by Mary Queen of Hungary, to whom it was given by Charles the fifth, (commonly called the Queen's Paradise) but burnt and utterly destroyed by the French, An. 1544. 15. Aisne, seated on both sides of the Dender, a little, but a pleasant and wealthy Town; here being held the Staple of Linen for all this Country, and the Cloth here fold amounting to 200000 Crowns per annum.

As for the History of Hainault, the ancient Inhabitants thereof were the Nervi, the most valiant and most potent people of all the Gauls, possessed not only of this Province, but of the whole Earldom of Namur, and some part of Flanders; able to bring, and de facto did bring into the Field, when the Belgæ mustered up their united forces against Julius Cæsar, no fewer than 50000 fighting men. Wone from the Romans by the French, they became a part of the great Earldom of Ardeine, continuing so till the death of Barnolph, discomfited and slain in battle by Dagobert sole King of the French, whom his Father in his life-time had made Duke of Ardeine, and designed unto the conquest of it. But the fury of the War being over, the parts of Flanders and Brabant which belonged unto it, offered upon other Houses, and the rest allotted out amongst his Children, Alberic, firnamed the Orphelein, one of his younger Sons, was by Sigbert King of Metz or
